Gamma Globulin Seekers Want Blood

Call For Corpuscles Polio To Be Avoided

Donors for this year's blood campaign are being registered now, as the annual campaign goes into full swing. The blood will be used for the production of gamma globulin, a polio preventive.

Gamma globulin, GG for short, is used primarily in the reduction of the disastrous effects of polio epidemics. "Even after such an inoculation," said campaign chairman Helen Blott, V Nursing, "it is still possible that a child may be attacked, but it is almost certain that in such a case the violence of the disease and its attendant crippling effects will be considerably lessened."

Three different agencies are involved in the campaign, the Red Cross, the Department of National Health and Welfare and Connaught Laboratories. The first organization will handle the collection of the blood only and the Connaught Laboratory will handle the breaking down process which is a tedious and million dollar process. The government agency is sponsoring the campaign across the country.

The Red Cross will be able to care for 1,500 donors in the week of its operations at the School of Nursing, 50 St. George St. according to Miss Blott. This works out to an average of one per minute with twenty beds in operation.

Pointing out that the threat of polio is a danger to students as well as children she said, "The polio epidemic this year has 'affected' more people in our own age bracket than ever before." She also pointed out that Hart Devenney, the Varsity Championship swimmer, is currently in an iron lung due to polio.

Over one thousand Toronto students donated blood in last year's campaign. Miss Blott commented, "With ten thousand students on this campus, the remaining nine-thousand surely can't be ruled out on medical grounds".

"It's a dandy opportunity to see the Red Cross in action. We have a new building also, which is very nice. We're proud to have the School of Nursing building used for such a purpose."

The whole donation of anyone registering will be about ¾ pint. Following the interlude with the Red Cross nurses, donors will be treated to tea or coffee and biscuits.

For purposes of interfaculty and intercollegiate competition, for the Skule Cannon and the Corpuscle Cup respectively, the Red Cross will keep track of students coming to the Elizabeth St. clinic. Those who cannot make an appointment for the School of Nursing may take advantage of this service.

Miss Blott found difficulty in making arrangements to register the graduate students due to their lack of organization. "The staff are welcome to give if they will", she said.

Shown above is a tiny victim of polio, using a walking trainer. The device is used in the teaching of children who are stricken by the disease to walk again. The effects of polio epidemics may be lessened by the use of gamma globulin, a human blood derivative. The blood campaign on this campus takes place this week and next.

The First Adventure Of Three Little Pigs

A STORY WITH A MORAL
(Reprinted from The Sheaf)

Once upon a time there were three little pigs who decided to go out into the world to seek their fortune. The first thing they had to was build a house in which to live. Now to build a house they needed wood and to get wood they had to go into the big, dark forest.

But in the forest there lived a very ferocious wolf. If only they could find some way to evade the wolf they could proceed in safety. While walking down the road pondering this difficulty they chanced to meet a very beautiful young maiden sitting on the side of the road with tears in her eyes and a huge fish bowl caught over her hand.

"Why are you crying?" asked the little pigs. "I am crying," said the maiden, "because the prince is holding a dance for all the girls of the kingdom and I cannot go because I have this fish bowl stuck on my hand and because I have no fur robe to wear."

"Well," said the little pigs, "If you help us to get our wood we will try to help you to go to the dance".

And so it was that the maiden was to venture into the woods in order to attract the attention of the wolf so that the pigs could chop wood in safety. As she wandered through the woods she came upon a tiny house in a clearing. From the window came a delicious aroma. Apparently there was nobody home, so the young maiden opened the door and went inside. There she found the aroma was due to a large, freshly baked apple pie. Being rather hungry after her long walk in the woods she sat down and ate the pie. Just then the owners of the house, who were three bears, a poppa bear, a moma bear and a weensy, teensy baby bear came home. When they saw that the girl had eaten their pie they were so angry that they chased her out of the house and through the forest, a-screetchin' and a-yelpin' after her.

While all this action was taking place the three little pigs were busily chopping wood while unknown to them the green eyes of the big bad wolf watched them. Suddenly and without warning he came down upon them a-whoopin' and a-hollerin'. Now just at the very minute that the wolf came out of the woods a-whoopin' and a-hollerin', the maiden dashed into the clearing with loud cries. Close behind her the three bears raced, ascreetchin' and a-yelpin'. The three little pigs upon hearing all this commotion thought surely it was the end of the world and fainted dead away! When the young maiden saw the pigs lying on the ground she thought that the big bad wolf had killed them and she was so angry that she bopped him on the head with her fish bowl, smashing it into a thousand pieces and killing that nasty fellow. About this time the pigs came to, and upon seeing the big bad wolf dead, they were filled with glee, for now they were free to gather as much wood as they needed without fear. And the young maiden when she saw that she was free of her fishbowl was also overjoyed. The bears, too, when they saw all this happiness decided to forgive the girl and join in the celebration. The Poppa bear built a huge bon-fire, while the pigs skinned the dead wolf. As the sun sank slowly in the west a happy little party was seen sitting around the fire eating roast wolf while the beautiful young maiden danced gayly down the road on her way to the prince's ball dressed in a stunning robe of wolf skin.

The moral of this story is a lesson to be learned by all, namely "A stitch in time is a horse of another colour".

Slogan Hits Anonymous P C Writer

Joe Slogan, President of the Campus Progressive-Conservative Club yesterday denied that the anonymous person who stated that Ted Rogers was "Headline-loving" in an article in yesterday's Varsity had any connection with the U of T Conservative Club.

The article referred to by Slogan had quoted a student who had represented himself as a member of the executive of the YPC, and who "preferred to remain anonymous," as saying that Rogers was "desperate for publicity" and that his antics were disgusting.

Slogan said that the executive of the U of T Progressive-Conservative Club wishes to make clear that no member of the club executive or any member of the club issued the anonymous statements regarding Rogers.

Slogan went on to say "We have never sanctioned the playing of personalities, and do not intend to embarrass the person quoted by divulging his name. The fact that he was ashamed to state his name along with his accusations is contemptible enough."

"This person does not even hold a membership card in our organization. We do not question the right of this ignominious nincompoop to criticize any person or organization. However, masquerading as a spokesman for the Conservative Party is beneath contempt."

Robin Hood Rewritten

A Moral Better Moralized

(Reprinted from Queen's Journal)

News Item—An Indiana educator has advocated the banning of the Robin Hood legend from public schools on the grounds that its "rob the rich to feed the poor" theme is subversive and communist inspired.

By EPHRAIM BUSTLEBOTTOM

"How fares it?" cried Robin Hood as Little John entered their forest lair.

"Poorly," replied John dourly, seating himself on a pile of straw in the corner. "The people of Nottingham are suffering great hardship because of that old miser Egghead Twitcherly. He is taking all the gold and coin out of circulation and the people have no money to carry on their business with."

Stout Robin Hood blanched at such flagrant interference with Nottingham's economy. As chairman of the board of directors of the Nottingham National Savings and Loan Association, he knew that Twitcherly's hoarding would soon result in a severe contraction in the money supply and bring on a depression, not to mention decreasing the Association's profits.

Robin Hood leapt to his feet, reached for his long bow and ran out into the clearing where Friar Tuck was leading the rest of the band in prayer. "Come on boys," he shouted without waiting for the Friar to finish his sentence. "We have work to do."

Little John had told him that Egghead was planning to ride to Burblesbury with most of his fortune that afternoon. "Follow me," shouted Robin. "We are going to rob that old miser Twitcherly and put Nottingham's economy back on a sound basis."

"Amen," said Friar Tuck.

Robin chose twenty of his trustiest bowmen to help him ambush Egghead at a concealed fork in the road through Sherwood Forest. Little John had to stay home with the gout. They all crouched behind a clump of cedar and waited for Egghead to put in an appearance.

Soon a snorting and bellowing down the road heralded his arrival. Egghead had a bad cold and was hunched over on his mule but the merry robbers gasped at the mere glimpse they got of his subversive countenance. He was fat and sloppy, with his well-oiled hair brushed straight back from his forehead. Hatred of free enterprise oozed from every pore of his gross torso. One of the band's new members fainted dead away, falling over a cliff behind him and landing within an audible thud on Twitcherly started at the noise and his mule stopped and began to crop the grass. "On him," cried Robin, pulling Egghead off his mount and holding him upside down so that his money fell on the ground. Friar Tuck made for the saddle-bags and, tearing them off the mule's back, began to run off down the road. He had not gone far, however, when another robber apprehended him and dragged him before Robin, who forgave him after making him pick up the money from Twitcherly's pockets.

Egghead himself has disappeared in the commotion but was stealing acorns from the squirrels.

Collecting all the money, Robin Hood and his men returned to the hide-out. That night they toasted marshmallows and discussed what they would do with their booty. "We must," decreed Robin Hood, "return it to the people of Nottingham so that their thriving free enterprise system can continue to provide them with a High Standard of Living." At this thought, Robin's men beamed and agreed to keep only half the gold for themselves.

Next morning, Robin Hood, clad in his best leather jerkin, arrived at the Loan Association promptly at ten. He deposited Egghead's gold in the vault and went into the manager's office. "Pontefract, old man," said Robin slapping him so hard on the back that his upper plate fell out, "we must encourage Nottingham business. Now that we have Egghead's money you can lend freely and encourage capital investment." Pontefract smiled and immediately sent a messenger to a local contractor who wanted £2,000 to build a tavern. "Oh, by the way," said Robin as he left the bank, "we might as well raise the interest rate by two percent."

Meanwhile Nottingham's consumer expenditure was soaring as Robin's men spent their money in the town. Increased demand brought about a great increase in Nottingham's output which doubled within a fortnight. Soon the dreary poverty of Egghead's hoarding days were forgotten and Nottingham basked in the sun of her new prosperity. Robin Hood was everywhere hailed as the savior of free enterprise and prayers for his salvation were offered in the local church. (The declared dividends of the Nottingham National Savings and Loan Association tripled that year.)

Sherwood Forest did not hear of Egghead Twitcherly again for three years when it was learnt that he was charged by the sub-committee on un-Burblesburian activities with starting a communist cell.

Mystery Ghost Invades All Hades - But It's Out

By WENDY MICHENER

Several features have already been written about The Varsity, but we of the staff feel that our readers know enough about us. Otherwise they could never be so unfeeling about our plight. Whenever the question comes up of entertaining our readers we unanimously choose to write about ourselves. No, this is not conceit. It is simply that since we spend all day down in our shiny new office slaving to publish our opinions we never emerge long enough to take in any lectures. Consequently the subject about which we know the most is The Varsity. (From this it may be judged how little we know of any other subject.)

Easy subject you may say. Still it has a few mysteries. For instance suppose I sidled up to you and said, "Say Joe, how much is it worth to you for an upper right on one," would you know what I was offering? Take another example. "Get me a cutline with a zip for that pic." Where would you go to get it?

Another expression commonly heard in the SAC basement is: "I want three of 17½ to run in ultra bodoni," or "Shall I put the head in bold face?" or "Those stoops lost the doops" or "Kill that flare" and so on ad incomprehendum. Several phrases, besides having doubtful meanings, have exactly the opposite meaning in newspaper language, for instance: "this has got to go!" If any of these phrases arouse your curiosity sufficiently, we dare you to brave the journalistic lions in their dens.

Another mystery of our trade, which still mystifies us, is the fact that the paper does go out. There is a ghost who haunts the office every night. Without fail she starts on her rounds of deadening all inspiration at ten-thirty with a pale grey glow. By eleven o'clock in the increasing haze of cigarette smoke her shade darens and grows to portentous proportions. At eleven fifteen the brooding darkness is stifling. Eleven-twenty-five. I can hardly see. Help, here she comes. Deadline. But it's out again.

Paul Badura-Skoda And The Symphony

Mr. Newman considers the Wagner operas to be Symphonic poems "on a vast scale." They represent the formal progress of nineteenth century music, the projection of the nationalistic and romantic impulses into a "smyphonic" form.

On Wednesday Night's programme, we heard the first movement of a symphony that Wagner conceived as quite a young man, one that was never completed. Now called the Faust Overture, Paul Scherman toned it down by playing with a kind of precision that even the more mature Wagnerian works could hardly have justified. The power of Wagner's revolutionary musical thought was watered down into something too insipid ever to be exciting. And this was written when Wagner was still a young man.

Ravel's Valse Nobles et Sentimentales was also played with a little too much delicacy where warm sensation was wanted. It preceded the Bartok Third Piano Concerto which was played by a young Viennese pianist, Paul Badura-Skoda. The Concerto had evidently been very carefully studied by the pianist to impress with the importance of the very fascinating, intricate rhythmic patterns. His preoccupation with these rhythms resulted in a rather emphatic enunciation of the melodic themes.

The melodic lines were not quite natural, and the whole of the first movement lacked a spontaneity that would have added lustre to a brilliant technical performance. The second movement, however, was played with a great deal of understanding. Badura - Skoda's variations in tone, exquisitely controlled by some interesting pedal effects, were among the highlights of the evening.

Paul Scherman's approach, too often meticulous to be valid in more impressionistic pieces, did get an accurate, and a times, a forceful performance from the orchestra in the Beethoven Eighth Symphony. Especially in the first movement, where the total effect depended upon the technical skill of the performers, Mr. Scherman gave the audience a stirring moment at the climaxes in this movement.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The state of winter sports here at the University of Toronto is going to be a subject for frequent comment in this space for the rest of the publishing year. Compared to football, hockey and basketball are certainly the poor cousins of Varsity sports and one can't help wondering why.

As a matter of fact, if you accept attendance figures as any indication, most folks on the campus seem to think that athletics curl up and die some time shortly before Christmas. But surely the months of January and February are too early to retire to the books. There are still plenty of profitable evenings to be spent either in the arena or on the basketball court.

Warren Stevens and his athletic department cohorts are constantly on the prowl for publicity that will attract huge throngs to the winter games. Just one thing, chaps. If you carry the thing too far, you're going to outdistance your facilities, since the arena holds somewhere around 4,000 while Hart House can accommodate maybe 1,000 for a basketball game. Even so, the UTAA powers-that-be will probably be willing to take a chance on that.

Why the hockey chowds should be small is a puzzling question. Only about 500 were on hand for the first home game in November and the visitors at the time were the University of Montreal Carabins, the class of the intercollegiate league.

A premise that would be hard to swallow is that the class of hockey isn't good enough to draw crowds. Although such comparisons are practically meaningless, the college loop is probably the equivalent of good Senior "B" competition. The odd time a player pops up who is several cuts above college calibre. For example, the Boston Bruins found Johnny Peirson frittering away his time with the McGill Redmen. Today, Johnny is one of the best wingers in the NHL. Varsity's ex-captain, Ed Kryzanowski, moved right up to the Bruins, too, and lasted a few campaigns but is now in the minors. Jack Gelineau stepped out of the college league to win the rookie award and, while he too is languishing in the minors, he still has to be one of the better netminders in the business.

It's spirited, rough hockey and yet good, well-played hockey. Defensively, it may not measure up as well, considering the generally high scores. But offensively — and you might as well admit that's what most fans like to see — it's cracking good hockey. So why don't they bash down the arena doors? Maybe there isn't much color at the hockey games. Maybe the students can't let down their inhibitions the way they can at football games. Maybe hockey isn't Canada's national game, after all.

As far as basketball is concerned, it would be simple to build the hoop Blues up. After all, this year's team, though perhaps not as great as last season's edition, is one of the best teams ever to represent the U. of T. But the athletic nights are running at capacity so what's the point of encouraging fans who may not be able to get a look at the game anyway. Somebody said the bulk of the A-night crowds don't come to see basketball — it's the cheapest in town — but that doesn't ease the space problem any.

HERE AND THERE: In one of the news stories dealing with Varsity's recent request to the city for a million dollars to supplement the building fund, a university official was quoted as saying that construction plans will end with the new women's athletic building. Where does that leave the new gym we men need? . . . Niagara University, the team that toyed with our Blues to a 92-29 tune last month, went to the finals in the Christmas tournament in New York before bowing out to Duquesne in the final. The Purple Eagles disposed of St. John's and La Salle in earlier games . . . In hockey, Montreal's Bernie Quesnel already has 16 points to lead the scoring derby. Last year, Claude Hotte won the title on only 21 points over the whole season. Quesnel has played only four games . . . Cressy McCatty's loss is Bob Masterson's gain. George Stulac, a key man on both the swimming and basketball teams, is concentrating on the cage sport this year. The swimmers are off to Niagara and Buffalo State this week-end . . . Back to basketball: only two of last year's team were able to make this year's Assumption squad, which indicates that the Windsorites will be mighty tough.

Basketball Blues Entertain Detroit Polo, Wrestling Fill Out Bill Varsity Athletic - Night On Saturday

Varsity types who show at tomorrow's Athletic Night in Hart House will have the privilege of seeing the Basketball Blues in their first win string of the year. After a series of disappointing starts, the Blues finally came through in their last match before the holidays with a win over a strong team from Buffalo State. In the A-Nite programme they come up against an even stronger bunch from Detroit Tech.

The Detroiters defeated the Blues last year and when they drop around Saturday they will have all of last season's regulars back in the lineup. For the Varsitys most of the load will fall on the first string of Jim Russel, George Stulac and company. Russel has averaged better than 16 points a game in his last three outings and his set-shot artistry will be a strong part of the Blue attack against the Detroit lads.

Andy's AC, one of the top Intermediate outfits in the Province will be the guests of honour in the preliminary doings on the gym floor as they meet their hosts the Varsity Intermediates in the opening game of the night. The Inters have yet to win a match this year and Andy's will be better than most of the squads they have played up to now. A future star of the Intramural league, Skule's Bill Karpinski will play in the bucket for the visitors and the Varsity Seconds will have trouble checking this laddie as he throws easily with either hand and rarely misses.

Varsity's water poloists, Intercollegiate champs, will welcome RMC of Kingston into their pool for an exhibition match. This will be the first chance for us to see our newly crowned titleholders in action.

Kirk Wipper's wrestlers take to the mats with a team from Toronto's own Central YMCA. Undefeated so far this year, the Varsity boys will be fighting to maintain their perfect record.

The Athletic Night begins at seven bells with action on all fronts. For four bits there are four bits of the finest athletic entertainment in the country available to each and every Varsity student who will take the trouble to turn up to cheer his Blues on to victory.

Law Wins, Knox Emmanuel Tie 4 - 4

Two second division games yesterday saw Law smother Architecture 7-0, while Knox and Emanuel fought to a 4-4 tie.

Schipper scored two for the Legal Beagles, and Alvinin, Luck, Mogan, Walton and Montgomery provided the rest, as Law took over first place in Group I.

Miles and Scott tallied a pair each for Knox, as they moved into first place in Group II, as a result of the tie. Strapp scored for the theologs, along with several other threats whose names are not known.

Varsity's Hockey Blues Seek First Victory Play Host To Laval Squad At Arena Tonight

HARRY BOYD RED STEPHEN ROSS WOODS

Varsity's hockey coach, Jack Kennedy feels that tonight's Varsity Arena clash between his Blues and the Laval University "Rouge et Noir" is even more important than the standings indicate. The standings show the Blues in the League basement with three straight losses while Laval is perched in second spot with four points behind Montreal, which has eight points on four wins. That means the Blues need a victory to move out of the cellar, where they are tied with McGill.

But Kennedy thinks a win would have a psychological value. "They've been just losing by a bit", he says. "I think a victory would get them started—sort of change their frame of mind".

Varsity will present a slightly revamped lineup as they tackle the Lavalians, who beat them 3-1 in Quebec last month. A new first line has Captain Red Stephen centring Harry Boyd and Ross Woods. The other combinations have Don Cossar centring Ken Lawson and Johnny Akitt and Tom Riley pivoting Bobby Dale and Don Avery. Jack Ross will be in goal with probably Dan Tovey, Lou Appleby and Colin Ashton on defence. That's nine rookies on the starting lineup.

The Laval team has ten regulars back from last year's team which was edged out of the championship late in the season by Montreal. Among them are all-star centre Robert Lafreniere and high scorers Pierre Raymond and Roger Lagace.

Skule VI's Still Clear Interfac. Hockey Close

The Interfaculty hockey season is now well into the second round, and while some teams are still undefeated, nobody is running away in their group. The SPS VI's have yet to be scored upon, the only crew left in this situation. Groups I and II are developing into a fairly close race, although the Trinity A's in Group II seem to be well out of the picture.

The playoff schedule is not quite settled yet, but three teams from each of the first two groups in Division I will enter the scramble. Two will come from Group III, and one each from the other three groups in the first division.

There are four championships, and the second division will settle their issue with two teams from each group.

It is unfortunate that we can only get to see games in the first two groups, with the occasional one in the others, and so probably loads of talent go unnoticed. However, Sr. Meds, St. Mike's A's, and either Sr. SPS or Sr. UC look good in Group I, while the Group II is a toss-up between the first four teams, although Jr. Vic will have an uphill battle.

Gerry Young has been playing a very good goal for St. Mike's A's, and is expected to turn out with the Intermediates, along with Meds' Hugh Currie and UC's Monty Harris.

Bob Dale and Tom Riley both rocketed from their respective intramural clubs to the Blues this week, while the Intermediate practices are packed with aspirants from the Interfaculty loop.

With only about five weeks left in the schedule, there are still no men with ten goals. However, Hubicki, of Wycliffe is on top of the race, having scored seven all in the first two games. Don Wright, of Jr. Skule, and currently with the Intermediates, is holding down second slot with five goals in three games.

POT Pucksters Defeat Vic 3-1

In the daily noonhour hockey tilt in the women's loop, POT's walked over Vic seconds 3-1 yesterday. The gals from the huts held the offensive all the way and the only thing that saved the Vic squad from a more slanderous defeat was the powerful defensive work.

Mary Foster, Vic freshie tallied the single for her team, but outside of that the college kids were held back from any further advance on the scoresheet.

Pre Meds Roll Up Sr. Vic Hustle To 49 - 22 Victory

Major league basketball action yesterday afternoon saw Pre-Meds roll to victory as they downed Sr. Vic's scarlet squad 49-22. Having little more than a second period basket hooped from center floor by "Biff" Potter to cheer about, the Vic team was out-hustled and out-played throughout in defeat.

Setting up a tight defence to hold Vic from the score sheet 'til late in the first period, the Meds team broke through to score early and often and were never threatened for the remainder of the contest. Jerry Edelist, playing well throughout for the Meds cause, stole the ball from a Vic guard to race in for the opening basket as the Docs soared to a 24-5 first period lead.

Fighting to get back in contention during the second and third periods, the Scarlet and Gold were stymied as the Meds team continued to stall their attack with a steady defence plus inaccurate shooting when the opportunity did present itself. Led by some fine play making and scoring by such as Ted Morgan and Jerry Lansky Meds continued to outstep the Vic team and hold their wide lead. Opposed to the smooth playing Meds men, who were able to break through the Vic defence almost at will at times, Vic appeared disorganized throughout most of the game. Jack Dies led the Vic cause netting 9 points, while Vic Kurdyak with 11 points, Jerry Lansky 9, and Jerry Edelist 8, were top point-getters for the victors.

Varsity Swimmers Vs. Niagara, N.Y., Tonight

Varsity's swimming team is in the hunt for its second intercollegiate championship in a row. And they open their competitive season tonight in Niagara Falls, N.Y., in a dual meet with Niagara University. Then tomorrow night, they go to Buffalo to swim against Buffalo State.

strongest ever to represent strongest ever to represent for Varsity, has been slightly depleted. George Stulac has given up swimming to stick to basketball. Hart Devenney is recovering from an attack of polio. Also gone are John Bate, George Capraru and Doug Gibson.

However, coach Cressy McCatty has a number of proven veterans to form a nucleus for the 1954 team. Intercollegiate champions Bill McIlroy and Bud Stipitec are back. A promising newcomer is a former Australian intercollegiate free-style champion, Bruce Taylor. Also on the team are footballer Al Haig, Gerry Van-Tets, Doug McCulloch, Harvey Doherty, John Gricoe and Dave Price.

Shirley Eckel

Besides being fameus for the last two years as Varsity's pretty drum-majorette, Shirley Eckel is also renowned as being one of Canada's outstanding woman athletes in track and field. Coming from Hunberside Collegiate where she was a vivacious cheerleader, Shirley enrolled in Victoria College and is at present in third year Honour Psychology.

A list of Shirley's achievements in track and field events is endless and was doubtless the reason why in 1952 she was awarded the Norman Craig Memorial Trophy for being the outstanding woman athlete in Ontario — the award which Marleen Stewart of Fonthill received this year.

Petite Shirley was voted this award on her performance in the Olympic Trials at Hamilton where she set the Canadian Record in the 80-meter hurdles at 11:6 which by the way, still stands. Unfortunately, she stained a leg muscle at Helsinki and was unable to compete. Hoping to lower her time to 11:2, Shirley will begin training shortly, but like all women athletes at Varsity she is hampered by lack of training facilities.

As secretary of the Ontario Women's Athletics Federation, Shirley is only too aware of the present state of women's sports in Canada. There are no national or provincial training programmes, let alone any facilities for training of women athletes like Hart House for men. Canada can not afford to lose any potential point winners. Not only is this a disgrace to Canada, but also to the University of Toronto for not providing the accommodation to train and instruct her women athletes.

Under the coaching of Lloyd Percival of Sports College fame, Shirley hopes to represent Canada at the British Empire Games this summer at Vancouver. There, she will meet in the hurdles the outstanding Australian hurdler, Shirley Strickland who at present holds the world's record.

This is the first in a series of weekly interviews with outstanding women sports personalities on the University of Toronto campus. The choices for these columns will be made by members of the Physical and Health education staff and The Varsity sports staff.

Girl's Badminton Soon Interfaculty Feb. 2, 3

Entry sheets for the women's interfaculty badminton tournament will be posted in the various colleges during the next two weeks. From the winners of the interfaculty tournament will be chosen the members of the intercollegiate team which will compete against Western, Queen's and McMaster at Thames Hall in London, February twelfth and thirteenth. Unfortunately the intercollegiate tournament is scheduled to be played on the dates chosen for the Ontario Open; however no other arrangements could possibly be made. No doubt one or two excellent players will feel that they should play in the Ontario tournament and no one can blame them.

Last year when the intercollegiate tournament was played at McMaster, the Toronto team emerged undefeated in all its matches. Ann Greey won the first singles, Dianna Walker the second singles, and Daphne Cross and Jean Martin teamed up to take the doubles.

All members of the Women's Athletic Association are reminded that the courts at the Drill Hall are available every day except Monday from four to five-thirty. So let's get out those racquets girls, and practice for the interfaculty tournament to be held on the mornings of February second and third.

We all wish this year's team the best of luck in the tournament and hope they will return with another title for Varsity.

What's Your Excuse ?

Yesterday saw the beginning of the 1953-54 University of Toronto Blood campaign. It consisted simply of the registration of students who were willing to drop over to the School of Nursing for 20 minutes or so and give a pint of blood.

Today, registration continues in most of the Faculties, and we wonder whether there will be one person in ten who will find 20 minutes to spare next week when he coul dgo over and do his job as a citizen of the world.

There is no medical reason why 90 percent of the student body at Toronto should not be giving blood in this campaign. It is the first campaign to be operated entirely within the campus. It has facilities for one donor every minute all week. Surely the question of spare time is not the controlling factor if all the class spares and noon hours were utilized in the science faculties, and arts students got down here by nine o'clock in the morning.

Admittedly, many students will not know all the reasons behind an even bigger campaign for blood this year. They do not have to know this to realize that the Red Cross is entirely dependent on gratis donations both in money and blood for everything that it does. They do not have to know any facts and figures to realize that medical success in fights against war and disaster, and now polio, is dependent on the success of this blood campaign.

In endorsing the current program, The Varsity just wants to ask the student whether he is resisting this compaign because he is tired of the campaigns this session, or is it because he doesn't like giving blood. And we suggest there are no other reasons anv better than these.

No Reality Here

Listening to people at the University of Toronto, and looking around you at the preparations going on, one would almost be led to believe there was no danger of airborne warfare on or near our fair campus. In this light The Varsity is reprinting a brief editorial from the Queen's Journal, describing the situation as felt at Queen's University:

Despite repeated warnings from responsible scientists and military men that Russia has enough atom bombs to severely damage, if not devastate, most of the cities of the free world, few people are taking any notice. Public apathy has not been shaken even by the announcements and repeated confirmation of the fact that Russia has the H-bomb, that she has an airforce of considerable tactical strength, and that under the most favourable circumstances we could prevent no more than fifty percent of her bombers from reaching their targets.

In most cities in North America Civil Defence work is proceeding with lethargy. Aside from isolated examples, such as New York City, Niagara Falls, and Montreal, our preparation is grossly inadequate.

An elightening fact which may help explain this tardiness, which almost amounts to calculated suicide, was revealed in a recent Gallup Poll in the U.S. It was determined by the fairly reliable system of sampling of George Gallup that 72% of the U.S. population believe that the Russians cannot atom bomb the U.S.

It is astounding to us to learn that in spite of the obvious verified facts and the manifold means of dissemination of these facts in that country that such a large majority of the people are still unaware of the position of their country is in. Surely the apathy and escapism of modern social decadence has not led the masses so far from reality.

Here at Queen's efforts have been made by several students to obtain permission from the university to hold a Civil Defence program next term for all students.

Every university student should have at least a basic knowledge of the ravages which can be wrought against the civilian population in another war. Students should be intelligently informed about the personal safety measures they should carry out, and about the elementary details of rescue work, first-aid, transportation, food distribution, and other tasks necessary in emergencies.

It is hoped that permission will be granted for an introduction of these problems to the students, and that the students will enthusiastically support the program which may prove much to their benefit in any future disaster.

Indian Seminar Story

As one of the delegates from the University of Toronto to the World University Service seminar in India last summer, Tim Armstrong, IV Philosophy and English, reports on the India that he saw.

It is presumptuous for any westerner to believe that he can evaluate and analyse the conditions and problems of an eastern country in only three short months. He is dealing with conditions of an alien culture, which has an entirely different historical and social background, from his own. The traveller can hardly fail to realize, however, that India, long the scene of cultural clashes, is now experiencing a relatively new crisis.

ALTHOUGH INDIA HAS BEEN subjected to foreign importations since the invasion of Alexander in 326 BC, Indian habits, expressions, and institutions, have retained certain basic, and seemingly indestructable features. This is attributed in a large measure to the buoyancy of the Hindu religion. Hinduism has been likened in its growth to a gigantic sprawling sponge, absorbing all the moisture with which it comes in contact. The analogy is not, however, quite accurate. For the Hindu sponge has not retained its original form and appearance in the cultural growth. In absorbing influences, Hinduism has shown a peculiar adaptibility in expanding and contracting to include new ideas within its distinctive pattern. The current problem is not to what extent western technology, (and all the changes in living habits which it inevitably carries within its matrix), has attacked the basic fabric of Indian life. Has an influence finally arrived that the sponge cannot accommodate? Or will the mud walls of rural India, which still house 70 percent of the country population once more resist foreign incursion?

THIS PROBLEM WAS, in essence, the theme topic of last summer's World University Service Seminar in Nepore, India. One of the first things many of us became aware of, throughout our study program, and afterwards during our whirlwind tours across the vast sub-continent, was the scarcity of that relationship which is, purportedly, the keystone of western democracy; the belief in the equality of man, if not in his powers and gifts, at least in his significance and place in the community. We saw not only the usual inequalities of landlord and tenant, peasant and prince, industrial magnate and factory worker, but also the lingering inequalities of caste. Despite the far-reaching effects of Gandhi's heroic activities to improve the status of the "harijan," or untouchable, caste still remains a potent force at some levels of society. The servant of an important Muslim official in the University of Nepore, for instance, refused to eat in the same house as his master. One of the seminar delegates from the University of Laval, walking in one of the crooked narrow lanes of Benares bazaar, brushed against the arm of a caste Hindu. The man stopped, and emptying the holy water of the Ganges from a brass jug on his shoulder, cleansed the poisonous contact. Now, I am not suggesting that these isolated cases give an accurate indication of the situation; indeed, here and there temples have been opened to untouchables; strict marriage restrictions within caste are being done away with with greater frequency, and, especially in urban centres, there is increased inter-mingling of castes at the eating table. Industrialization, whatever else, has proven a great social leveller. However, despite the removal of the outward trappings, one gets the impression that the whole edifice of discrimination by birth and hereditary inequality remains in the thought of the majority.

OR TAKE THE HINDU CONCEPT of the status of women. Briefly, a Hindu woman, while having a definite position in her home in relation to junior women and children, is not recognized in relation to society at large. There are, of course, numerous exceptions. I was lavishly entertained by a Hindu engineer in Bombay. His charming wife and attractive daughter joined us at dinner in a private club just off Bombay's famous marine drive. Both women contributed much to our often heated discussion.

Controversial Summary

Ed. Note: A number of letters on the article by John Lee were not printed in the final issue of The Varsity before Christmas, and this is the first of several which will give some air to the issue, even if late.

Open letter to Mr. J. H. R. Lee:

I was certainly surprised when I read Monday's Varsity. Let's think about it now; with your claims that God is for man, and that we need a new religion, and your contradictory statements that Christianity is a gospel of social behaviour and yet an escape from the world, with your denial, in fact, of the Bible's teaching about man and God, isn't it preposterous that The Varsity staff should accept your article as a summary of the present controversy?

I do not hold your statements up to ridicule: perhaps they will be more popular than mine. And I am forced to agree that too many are Christians in name only, although some of your examples seem to miss the mark completely. For example, when unless the safety of the public are police called in to a strike and the nation's laws are endangered? Or how can a religion that is merely "the predominant religion" make any personal claims on the individual?

Have you ever tried to live by the teaching of Jesus? Let's take two examples: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:48) and "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind" (Matt. 22:37). Rather demanding, aren't they, John; yet it was you who said that religion was something to live by. Here is the difference. I say that Jesus held up a standard whereby man could measure his spiritual stature, so that he could become convinced that he had nothing to commend himself to God. It is when a man realizes this and acknowledges it to God that God will show him that he can claim the merits of Christ, and trusting only in Him, be given a new life (II Cor. 5:17). Like the prodigal son, a man cannot raise himself until he is reconciled with his Father.

So you see, John, Christ does not build societies or nations; He is interested in individuals. A vestigial remnant of this teaching is seen in democracy's declaration of the supreme worth of the individual. The world has yet to see the impact of even a small nation built entirely of His people. When we claim that Christ is sufficient for our greatest need, we are not claiming we have all the truth, although Christ is the Truth (John 14:6). And above all, because of the promises of life which the Bible gives us, and because we can continue to grow within our faith for the whole of this life, we are more truly alive than many would care to admit.

LAVAL, DETROIT VICTIMS OF BLUES' BIG WEEKEND

Zone Again

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity's Basketball Blues, masters in every department, counted their second consecutive victory over American opposition at Saturday's Athletic Night as they defeated the visiting Detroit Tech team 59-41. In preliminary play the Baby Blues, strengthened by imports from the Seniors, made it a sweep for Varsity, outscoring Andy's AC 56-50.

Though favoured to defeat the Blues, Detroit, unable to solve Bob Masterson's new zone, took a hard beating at the hands of a Varsity crew that may well turn out to be the surprise of the Intercollegiate league. While the near-perfect Varsity zone, tailored to the visitors' offense kept the Techers wholly tied up, the Blues went about setting a fantastic pace in the scoring percentage department. Over three periods of play they averaged better than 45% of their shots while the Detroit lads managed to score on only 18% of their attempts. It was a white hot Varsity club that just outhustled their opposition, did most things right and gave Detroit little chance to do anything at all.

Detroit, boasting several 20-point men on their starting team showed no such power on the Hart House floor on Saturday. In practice the visitors looked cool and very sharp, but it was another matter when they tried to get set with the Blues' defence rushing their every shot and frustrating all efforts to work the ball into close range. Don "Duck" Owen, who received heavy applause from the over-capacity crowd for his sensational ball - handling and Globetrotter-like stunts in the pre-game warmup, had no chance to use his skill in actual play as the Varsity zone smothered him under the basket holding him to 3 points on a single field goal and a free throw. Unable to pull the zone apart with their fast passing, the Techers tried to throw from the outside, but found that Varsity was having none of that when the Blues rushed them, upsetting their balance on every shot.

Varsity, on the other hand was a team of marksmen with everyone hitting in fine form. This is surprising, because for years the Blues have been noted for their fine defensive play, but their shooting has seldom been first rate stuff. Saturday night it was.

Detroit threatened to run the Blues to death as they opened with a man to man defence checking Varsity right up the court, forcing them to run and work at top speed all the way. The rub was that Detroit, and not the Blues, wilted under the pace while Varsity never let up, driving right to the wire.

BLUE BITS: Bob Masterson seems to have a good solution to his rookie problem. He's giving them work, work and more work. Three new Blues played in the preliminary with the Baby Blues, then came back for more with the Varsity. Instead of tiring they seemed smoother and to have profited by the extra labour. One of these, Doug. Scott, seems nearly ready to take his regular turn as a Blue. He played well in both games . . . George Stulac was the Blues' "man about everywhere" Saturday. No rebound men, however tall were able to hold him down or beat him to the ball. George was high scorer with 18 points and set up more baskets for his buddies than anyone else on the floor. Late in the final quarter Stulac pulled a "Marques Haynes", dribbling through the Detroit team in on the hoop, then faking out the last man and going up for a left-handed goal . . . Marv Tile drew praise all around for his accuracy with one hand shots from the corner. Jim Russel hit for 11 points in the first half but was heavily checked in the last periods . . . BABY BLUES: The Varsity Intermediates played fine ball in taking the A-Night's opening game from Andy's AC. Reinforcements Hesh Rotman, Doug Scott and Florian Matsall along with newcomer Mike Baida made John McManus, Intermediate coach, a happy man as they led the Baby Blues to their first victory of the year. Al Vaichulis was big man for the Varsity, scoring 11 with Mike Baida counting seven. Doug Armstrong potted 15 for Andy's and Al Bowman was good for 10. Varsity Blue "ringers" Matsall and Scott scored 10 and 9 for the Seconds.

Cossar Stars

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Forward lines are one of the strangest aspects of the game of hockey: a team can have plenty of excellent players and still not go anywhere. Such was the case with Varsity's hockey Blues, who were winless up until Friday night's game with Laval at Varsity Arena. Suddenly, after a bit of reshuffling, you hit upon the right combination and you've got a victory like the 5-2 whipping the Blues handed the Quebeckers Friday night.

Coach Jack Kennedy had decided that experimenting was the only thing to do with a team that had lost five games and tied one, as the Blues did in December.

Putting sophomore Ken Lawson on a line with rookies Don Cossar and Johnny Akitt was the key move in the wholesale shifting that produced a revamped Varsity lineup for the game. The line clicked for four goals in the third period Friday to turn a 1-1 tie into a runaway. Cossar got two and Lawson and Akitt one each. Ross Woods scored the other.

Woods was at left win on a line with Red Stephen and Harry Boyd and the threesome, besides scoring once, went well all evening and was robbed of goals on a couple of occasions. The third line, an all-rookie outfit, didn't log very much playing time but little Tom Riley was impressive in his senior debut.

More than 2,000 fans were on hand to see the Blues climb out of the cellar into third place, two points behind second-place Laval. They go to Montreal this weekend for games with McGill and the league-leading University of Montreal and could conceivably move into second spot.

The first period Friday night was scoreless and Gerard Houle opened the scoring for Laval early in the second, blasting a shot past Jack Ross, while wearing defenceman John Tolton as a stole but, less than two minutes later, Woods evened it up with a blistering drive from the blueline after Red Stephen passed the puck back to him. Laval was short-handed at the time.

It took only four minutes for the Blues to break the tie in the third period, with Cossar pulling the trigger on a lateral pass from Akitt. Johnny made it 3-1 shortly afterwards with both teams short a man. After Cossar fired it into the Laval zone, Akitt picked it up, skated wide of the defence and shot past the goalie. Cossar scored again, at 16.48 stealing the puck from the Laval goalie.

Maurice Lagace put Laval into the game briefly by knocking in Andre Marceau's rebound but Ken Lawson nullified it in the last minute by shooting a carefully-aimed screen shot through the defence.

BLUE NOTES: The Blue and White band was on hand as well as a handful of cheerleaders . . . The Varsity defence — Lou Appleby, Colin Ashton, Mal Hughes, Bill Moreau and John Tolton — played well, especially in the latter half of the game . . . Ross Woods had been notified of his father's death earlier in the day but insisted on playing . . . Red Stephen received a major penalty in the third period when he tackled Jules Hivon after the latter cross-checked him . . . In the last minute, Don Avery and Andre Marceau squared off and got majors . . . Woods and Cossar both had the goalie cleanly beaten on other occasions and hit the goal-post . . . On two occasions, Varsity had a two-man advantage but couldn't beat Laval's penalty-killing combination.

Redecoration, Television For H. H. Men

It looks as if members will soon be watching television in Hart House according to Warden Joseph McCulley. "I feel", he said, "that there may be an obligation, as better programmes increase, to present students with TV on a selective basis."

The question is now being considered by the House Committee. The proposal is that one room be set aside for its use on a similar basis to the record room.

Other improvements planned by the committee are refurnishing and redecorating the downstairs lunchroom, with the view of making it available durinb the late afternoon and evening as a coffee shop. The present Tuck Shop closes at 6:00 p.m.

Warden McCulley made it clear that this was not being done with women in mind. "The present policy of the board of stewards is that women are admitted either as guests of individual members or as house guests on special occasions". Neither the House Committee nor the Board of Stewards plans to change this policy.

Mrs. Roosevelt Blames McCarthy—US Hysteria

"We have developed a hysterical fear of Communism", said Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Saturday evening, as she adressed the Temple Forum on the topic, "Aspects of World Communism". She later expressed the hope "that you have not, by contagion, adopted it in this country".

In a private interview, she commented critically on McCarthyism. "Some of the methods used and the resulting confusion and fear grown out of it have not been very good."

MRS. ROOSEVELT

Mrs. Roosevelt, former chairman of the Human Rights Commissions of the UN, also felt that Canada had taken the proper stand in the recent Gouzenko case. She said, "I think Canada was quite right. I further think that she has a right to lay down the rules where it concerns one of her own citizens".

In her speech, the third of a current series at the Holy Blossom Tmeple, she stated that the only real way to fight communism was to really understand it. She did not feel that the present method of suppressing any means of gaining knowledge of the subject was the answer to the problem. "Fight it we must", she said, "not by fear but by knowledge".

She outlined the conceptions of Communism held by the peoples of various different countries, explaining that many of them still regard communism as the old Marxist doctrine, not realizing that Russia isn't Marxist at the present time but Stalinist.

"In our free and democratic countries we must grant to the individual the right to earn his own living and not live by grants from governments or charity", she said. She expressed the feeling that this was the reason communism was gaining strength.

Mrs. Roosevelt described Communism to-day as "an enslaving type of ideology and government". "People are not very important it's the state that's important".

She described her experiences in the UN with the Soviet delegates, who, she said, "never trust each other". "I've often wondered how you faced yourself," she said, "when you know how untrue what you had to say was supposed to be true".

Mrs. Roosevelt has met with world leaders all over the world, including Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia. "There is no question that Tito is a dictator", she said.

She closed her talk, commenting "the only way that we can watch over our future safety is to know what we believe in and to live by our beliefs."

Spain's Lit. Subject Of H. Harbron

"Has Spain a role in Modern Letters?" will be discussed Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m., at the fourth Library Evening in the Hart House Library. Women will be admitted.

The speaker will be John H. Harbron, a member of the Editorial Staff of the MacLean Hunter Publishing Company. He feels it is significant that three of the best philosophers of the twentieth century have been Spaniards.

Harbron, a graduate of Toronto, worked for the Hispanic Foundation of Washington, and taught at the University of Havana in Cuba.

MOVIE REVIEW

Taming The Shrew

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer went to Shakespeare, of all places, for a couple of movie scrips last year and the results are currently to be seen around the Yonge-Bloor area. The Towne-Cinema is offering Julius Caesar and, just aroundd the corner, the Uptown has Kiss Me Kate, the glittering three-dimensional version of Cole Porter's stage musical version of Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew. Leaving ourselves another week to digest Caesar, let's have a look at the shrew in her technicolor musical wrappings.

It's a trite but true statement that Cole Porter's music and lyrics are the stars of the motion picture just as they were of the stage show. Mr. Porter seems to have a mind flowing over with memorable tunes and devilishly clever lyrics and he was at his best when he produced this score. It's almost as good in the motion picture, the only difference being the watering-down of the libretto to make it acceptable to stodgy boards of censor. In Howard Keele and Kathryn Grayson, the producers have come up with two of filmdom's riner voices. They are more than adequate although one imagines that lesser performers might have been elevated to almost equivalent heights by the Cole Porter genius.

As far as the book is concerned, it's adminrably uncomplicated. Shakespeare's play is being staged here and the plot is concerned with the company's backstage life, particularly that of the two main characters, Petrucho (Keel) and Kate (Grayson) who get along about as well afrstage as they do on, which is very poorly indeed. Needless to say, they're in each other's arms late in the last reel and that's about all there is to it.

Howard Keel has never been better. He is a musical comedy veteran, which makes him ideal for the role, and he makes the most of the opportunity. Miss Grayson's crystal clear, fragile voice is just fine on the more sentimental songs like Wunderbar and So In Love but when she has to be the fiery shrew in I Hate Men, for example, she's remarkably unconvincing. You decide she's only kidding. Still, she has the equipment 3-D was designed to exploit and don't think it doesn't all help.

Cheerful Ann Miller handles the Bianca role in breezy fashion and does her numbers energetically, although they are staged as though they were afterthoughts. Her expert tap-dancing is showcased throughout and she's featured in a number near the end — From This Moment On — which wasn't even in the original show. At least it was written by Cole Porter so it isn't a complete bastard.

But the best musical number for my money was Brush Up Your Shakespeare as done here by Keenan Wynn and James Whitmore. Even if you sit stony-faced through the whole show, you'd have to join in the good humor of this one as the pin-striped pair of gangsters sang the hilarious words, while doing a deft, though amateurish soft-shoe.

Perhaps the best way to describe this movie is to say that if you can't see the stage show — or haven't seen it — this is the next best thing. It's helped of course by the technicolor, by several good performances and by Andre Previn's musical direction. It also uses 3-D about as well as it has ever been used but I can't see that this makes much difference one way or the other.

Jim Proudfoot.

Zonto To Offer Earhart Grant For Female Bachelor in SPS

For the fourteenth consecutive year, the Amelia Earhart Scholarship, a $1,200 grant for graduate study in Aeronautical Engineering, is offered by Zonta International, a service organization of business executive and professional women. The applicant for the award must be a woman holding a Bachelor's Degree in Engineering.

The Amelia Earhart Scholarship, the international service project of Zonta International, was established in 1938 in honour of the famous woman flyer whose disappearance in July, 1937, while on a flight around the world has remained a mystery. Miss Earhart was a member of the Zonta Club in New York City at the time of her last flight.

"Fine character and high ability are required of the Earhart Scholarship winners" explained Miss Dorothy Thompson of Toronto, Ontario, member of the Amelia Earhart Scholarship Committee. Applications which should be directed to Miss Thompson, Ontario College of Education, Toronto, must be filed by March 1, 1954, to qualify for the 1954 award. The scholarship may be used in any approved school where Aeronautical work of a high order is offered on the graduate level.

The careers of fifteen young women engineers have been advanced through these scholarships since the first award was made in 1940. Two women were selected to receive the awards in 1953: Miss Hoda M. Afifi of Cairo, Egypt, the only woman in Egypt ever to have earned a Bachelor's Degree in Aeronautical Engineering; and Mrs. Gertrude Hill Fila of Stillwater, Oklahoma, a previous Amelia Earhart Scholarship winner (1943) and the first winner to be awarded the grant to work toward her Doctorate in Engineering.

"Opportunities for women in this field are greater than ever before, and it is the hope of Zonta Clubs in Canada that a Canadian woman will be the winner of the award this year," Miss Thompson commented.

Show Your Citizenship In Gift Of Blood—Smith

The Corpuscle Cup, which is now held by Mount Allison University, is at stake in this year's Blood Campaign. President Sidney Smith yesterday endorsed this campaign saying, "Participation in the University of Toronto Blood Campaign is a practical demonstration on citizenship. It is an excellent way to show our belief in human fellowship."

He warmly commended the campaign, and said, "I am confident that there will be a ready and generous response from the student body."

Registration of donors is going on this week, and next week the donations will be taken at the new School of Nursing, 50 St. George St. The Blood given is added to the Red Cross Blood Bank, and is used for civilian disasters or war services, whichever is necessary.

The length of time between arrival at the School and departure is approximately half an hour. This includes waiting, while drinking coffee or tea, giving the donation, and a short rest afterwards.

Students should be punctual for their appointments, said campaign Chairman Helen Blott, V Nursing. This will be necessary if the campaign is to be a success.

Besides the Corpuscle Cup, which was donated last year by the Forestry Club of UBC, the Skule Cannon is offered to the winning faculty at the University of Toronto.

Last year Forestry won the interfaculty competition, although Skule provided the most donors. Toronto was a long way behind the percentage of donations of other universities. Only about 20 per cent of Varsity students donated blood, while 54 per cent of the students at the University of Montreal gave donations.

For those who find it impossible to be at the School of Nursing next week, the Red Cross has facilities to receive donations at the Elizabeth Street Red Cross Clinic.

Blue And White Dances To Follow Hockey Games

In all probability the Blue and White Society will be sponsoring several dances this term, Paul Lorch, Chairman of the Blue and White, recently said. He was referring to hockey dances, held after the games in the Drill Hall, with square and round dancing.

However, the Blue and White have not held a meeting since Christmas. The first one will likely be this evening, where spring-term plans, including hockey-game activities, will be fully discussed. After it, more definite information will be available.

"One dance was held last year," said Lorch. "But there is no reason why we can't and we probably will, have several this year." The dances would be somewhat on the plan of the pep rallies held this fall in the Drill Hall. Square dancing especially would be featured. There is also the possibility of a Blue and White dance in collaboration with SHARE.

"In previous years these post-game dances were held regularly, and they attracted quite a good turn out," said Miss Parkes, Associate Secretary of the Students' Administrative Council. "However, they were not spot-lighted last year as they were before."

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

This is perhaps the last time we will be mentioning this for about a year but rumor has had it that the young ladies on the Toronto campus are to get a new building to end all buildings. Unlike a lot of rumors that wend their way through the grapevine (the old G. V. to you), this one is true and thank the powers that be it is.

The fact of the matter is that the rumor now spreading has been on the books for some time and right now plans are under way for building an athletic wing right behind the women's union at Falconer Hall. If you have ever noticed, the land behind the union is now a sort of glorified back yard through which old Taddle Creek used to wend its glistening way. But taddle Creek is no more and the back yard overlooking the notorious Philosophers Walk will someday be just as extinct.

But when it comes to a choice between back yards and an ultra-modern athletic building, — well there's really no choice, to be made. There's no reason either to enumerate the need for this building; there is a pretty stiff time element involved. Unless you have planned on spending a few years around here you probably won't get to use its inumerable facilities. Over on Saint George Street where the old Psyc building stood not too long ago, the new men's residence foundations have been dug. And as usual, we will have to wait for the little boys to get their building before we start on ours. The time limit has been set at two years but we've waited so long now, two years is nothing.

Some years ago the Lillian Massey building took care of all our athletic needs but the growth of population has far outstripped facilities to leave athletic matters — and we speak only for the ladies of the campus — out in the cold. Western University has come pretty close to an athletic paradise in the form of Thames Hall but in two years this campus will house something even greater.

It will be the last of such edifices to be constructed for many a year and we're going to get the very best. So place your orders now little ladies — At least our grandchildren will enjoy it.

Fear Is Poison

"We have nothing to fear but fear itself."

These words were spoken by one of the greatest men of this century not too long ago. The late United States President, Franklin Roosevelt, used them to mark his New Deal era. But they are just as significant today — if not more so.

Fear, to a point, provides a basis for action. But beyond that point it degenerates into hysteria and panic. Then fear is poison.

This is probably what FDR meant when he said those famous words. And this is what both Adai Stevenson and Lester Pearson emphasized in major political speeches.

"Fear at best is a negative virtue," the Canadian External Affairs Minister said last month. "Alone it cannot win. We must have much more. We must have a belief in our own society, in our own governments, in our own institutions . . . We are stronger than our fears, stronger than those who exploit those fears."

Stevenson also mentioned that FDR's four freedoms had been replaced by the four fears. And one fear that he mentioned — perhaps the most frightening — was "fear of ourselves."

Domestically the Western world is suffering from its exploiters of fear. Fear is no permanent basis for political and economic progress. Sanity and common sense are needed. Yet there are those — among the most prominent of whom are certain US senators — who are using fear for their own interessts and ambitions.

Internationally, fear has led to the "big stick policy". The you-do-it-this-way-or-else attitude will never be conducive to a spirit of confidence and trust. It only leads to suspicions of imperialism.

Threats are bad propaganda. Business Week said in October that "in 25 years American business will take the Western hemisphere, the Middle East, Africa and Australia as its prime market." That is not the strength we are proud to speak of.

The exploiters of fear shrewdly refer to the defenders of the democratic way of life as "honorable men". But we cannot help but recall those famous words in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar: "For Brutus is an honorable man; so are they all, all honorable men."

Our society is not perfect; nothing really is. But it is based on what we consider the greatest of all ideals — the belief in true individual freedom. Our task is not to create a fear of freedom but to develop a greater faith in it. If there is a conflict in the modern world it must be won, in the final analysis, on a moral plane. Panic through fear is rotting this plane.

If there are weaknesses in our society, we can handle them — and that includes depressions. If there are spies, we can handle them — and that includes the Communists. But this must be done with sanity and cool-headedness.

Our moral strength will and can speak for itself. Blind fear is its killer. We must have belief. We could better occupy ourselves with spreading the philosophy of our moral leadership and not spending so much time with better bombs and bigger stockpiles.

Indeed, there is only one thing which we must guard against, more important than military arms races — fear of ourselves and those who exploit it.

Of Prince And Peasant

Indian Seminar Story

This is the second installment of the article by Tim Armstrong on his travels in India last summer, while a delegate to the World University Service Indian Semminar.

However, it was a different, and probably more typical story, when we visited a peasant's village near Myore. The hospitality was at least as warm. Indeed the village band was on hand to greet us and later to send us on our way; we were garlanded with jasmine, and entertained with age-old rhythmic dances and dramatic readings from the Hindu epics. However, the significant point is that these village receptions were almost always exclusively male affairs. The Hindu woman, profoundly conscious of her inequality, remained out of sight.

IT MIGHT BE CLAIMED that these inequalities in Hindu society are mere habits built up through the centuries, and, since they represent no deep-rooted convictions, they need not be regarded as ineradicable. As education proceeds to the village level, may they not quietly disappear? I do not think so. For behind these social resistances come the religious beliefs which originally gave them expression — the ideas of Kanna and transmigration. Caste, for instance, is the outward manifestation of the belief in reincarnation. This in turn, is made necessary by the doctrine of Kanna, the "inexorable law of moral consequences." I am not qualified to enter into a detailed analysis of Hinduism. It does, however, appear that the western idea of equality must necessarily have a profoundly disturbing influence.

MY ROOM-MATE DURING the five-month study session at Nepore was a Hindu from Santineketan, the university founded by the great Indian poet-painter-philosopher, Rabinrinath Tagore. The atmosphere at Santineketan is like that of an adult summer camp, on a very lofty intellectual scale. It is, by Indian standards, progressive; men and women undergraduates mix freely in both academic and extra-curricular pursuits. The idea of caste and inequality is disregarded in an association of students dedicated to the serious pursuit of the liberal arts. The educational practices here represent a sharp break from traditional Hindu custom. The conflict which I am trying to emphasize is the one which exists, for many Hindus, between their family way of life, and their later westernized university education. My room-mate confessed that it had been over a year since he had been home to his village; to a household in which a group of families lived together (24 members in all); a family in which the son's earnings go into the family coffers, from which he receives an allowance, and in which the patriarchal authority of the eldest member is recognized as supreme. My friend admitted that he was very lonesome; that he cherished the strong feeling of family solidarity and devotion which is a peculiar feature of Hindu family life. However, he admittedly shunned the inevitable psychological shock which accompanied the sudden transition between the two ways of life.

There is, then, a conflict, and it seems unavoidable that this conflict whil result in uncertainties and frustration for the Hindu in the future. Our judgment of the new nation's problems should, I think be tempered by a realization of the personal dilemma which does exist for so many Indian citizens. It will do as much to explain what the hot and impatient traveller is liable to tag unfairly as "Hindu indecisiveness."

Our Readers Write

Toleration, But Disrespect

In spite of O. Pidhaini's letter (Varsity, Dec. 7) which recommends that readers devote their efforts to " more important and more productive topics" such as discussions of "life on the moon" and other asinine subjects noted, I wish to comment on Mr. John H. R. Lee's article which appeared in the same issue and which, as "a summary to the recent religious controversy" is equalled in muddle-headed thinking only by recent Varsity editorials.

First, Mr. Lee states: "PRESUMABLY WE WANT to know what is truth so that we can live by it." Now certainly there are those who seek truth for itself, in addition to practical advantages that may accrue from its possession, as any student of "pure science" will attest. Hence this presumption is unwarranted, since it is incomplete.

Secondly, we are told that there are many Christians whose actions are at variance with the standards which they profess to uphold: "too many so-called Christians are that in name only. Their myopic minds see no further than their own comfort and welfare." This is followed by the classic: "SO MUCH FOR CHRISTIANITY." Now apparently Mr. Lee applauds the Christian standards which are held by these so-called Christians. For instance, we read: "Christians supposedly abhor killing or injuring their fellow men. That's very admirable." Yet, Mr. Lee not only condemns those individuals who have fallen short of the standards which they profess, he goes on to condemn those standards held with: "SO MUCH FOR CHRISTIANITY." This would be the same as condemning Judaism as a moral system because some Jews fall short of the rigorous standards exacted by Judaism. Surely one can demand consistency in an article!

Thirdly, Mr. Lee tells us that this, " . . . is the age of TV and cinemascope and sex and etc. etc." From this world, religion offers "escape . . . by doctrine and ritual." What "MODERN society" needs is " . . . a modern religion . . . a code it can live by." Now that religion demands that we avoid the "proper" (i.e, according to reason, in moderation) use of TV, cinemascope, and sex etc? Only the Shakers prohibit sex, to my knowledge. Furthermore, is Mr. Lee suggesting, that since our standards are high, that in order that our conduct conform to them effort on our part is required, therefore we should lower such standards? Ridiculous! Would Mr. Lee lower the standards of good literature also?

Again, he says that "religion must teach the innate goodness of man, not the innate evil." Now children are innately neither good nor evil, but are rather mere bundles of raw potentialities. Evil springs from the failure to develop these potentialities in the normal course of development.

Further, (and this is the only point in his letter where Mr. Lee touches the present controversy) he claims that the "modern religion" "must not claim to have truth in toto, or to have a monopoly on it." Now I know of no religion in the West that says it already has "all there is to have." Otherwise, the members of such a religion would not need to study the natural sciences, philosophy, etc., for further knowledge. But usually a religion will state that it possesses sufficient truth for its members to achieve the End put forth by the particular religion. Obviously, any religion that did not claim to have such a monopoly on truth would attract few adherents, and this would include the modern religion put forth by Mr. Lee. No thinking person would join Mr. Lee's group, under such conditions except possibly Mr. Lee himself.

Finally, he asserts: "God is for man, not man for God." The only difference in these statements seems to be one of emphasis. Nor does the evidence justify Mr. Lee's implicit assumption that man of yesterday differs essentially from man of today. Certainly, one is not more the man if he have a TV set etc.

In sum: I tolerate Mr. Lee's views. Reason forbids me to respect them.

Forgive....

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Mr. Lee's attack on Christianity is both illogical and unwarranted. Anyone living under present world conditions would be considered a fool if he did not think of protecting the ideals for which his ancestors have striven and which you Mr. Lee are at present enjoying. Law and order must be retained until everyone is capable of understanding and respecting the ideals of Christianity, of political liberty, freedom of speech and the rest of our heritage.

You ask how many Christians live by their religion and condemn Christianity because it appears to you that Christians do not practice what they preach. Christ's words do not CAUSE a magic spell on those who hear them. They mean for each individual only so much as he, in his heart is able to understand and cherish them.

Is it turning the clock back to "put Christ back into Christmas"? What, my friend, is Christmas without its fundamental meaning? You have said that all religion has to offer is mysticism and escape from reality. The religion which you are refering to is so utterly different from Christianity that I fail to see any resemblance.

"The great need of modern society is for a modern religion" you say. Christianity is "modern" in as much as it can answer the basic needs of men in this, as in any other age.

A religion for man you want. What shall it be—You will soon be dead and all your works in ruins . . . ? Is the boast of modern man "Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair . . . " any less hollow than that of Ozymandias of old?

In the words of our Master, "forgive them for they know not what they do."

Vulgar Policy

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It seems that a strange sense of values is held by The Varsity. When a student wins a Rhodes Scholarship — no mean feat — the article is printed on the third page. In the same issue two students, who through no merit of their own, were detained by the United States Customs, have their story splashed over half of the front page. Rather than a picture of the Scholarship winner on the front page, we see some fools parading in front of the United States Consulate.

In this respect, The Varsity's news-reporting policy seems to resemble that of certain oft-deplored Toronto Daily newspapers.

US PLANS INVESTIGATION ON ALL VARSITY STUDENTS

Gold Digger Is Appointed To 'Rob' City

The President of the University announced last night the appointment of a new public Relations Director, Mary Lynn Manrow.

Dr. Kidney Myth said in a press release that his action was forced on him as a result of a decision by the Board of Governors over the Christmas holidays. "If we want any money from the city of Toronto, then we need someone to go after it," Dr. Myth added.

However, he made it quite clear that he had enjoyed making the appointment.

Asked why he chose Miss Manrow, the President explained he had used three criteria to pick the Director. "I first considered the brightening up effect she would have on the University administration; the effect she would have on the public; and her ability to cloud men's minds."

Dr. Myth said the last consideration was "by far the most important" since she would be dealing with men when she asked "this town's cheap treasurer for another million bucks to help build a rapid transit system for transportation between lectures." The University has found itself in financial straits since it decided to enlarge the door to the Student Council office.

With the appointment of Miss Manrow, the President felt that all things would now run "warmly". He said no better creature could have been found to wring money from the city's masculine Board.

The creation of the new position of Public Relations Director was recently announced by the University President. It was the result of the latest University drive to "wring" one million dollars from the city administration. Miss Mary Lynn Manrow (above), the first appointment to the new post, was described by President Myth as the best possible person to "cloud men's minds" and take their money.

Hotheaded Hotbed Too Sympathetic

United States Consul General Willy De Bull revealed yesterday that all Varsity students will be thoroughly investigated for suspected sympathies. He called the University "a hotbed of hotheads" and said the students were carrying their sympathies just a little too far.

This inquiring Farcity reporter became suspicious of the whole thing when he learned that a certain senator of a certain investigating committee of a certain senate of a certain neighbouring country had visited the Consulate building on Red Maple Avenue late Saturday night.

De Bull hinted that the Red Togers case had sparked the new change in immigration policy. He said that Togers had been released when he decided to sign an affidavit which was written in invisible ink.

It was reported that the affidavit which Togers signed charged Toronto students with being "a very sympathetic lot." However, in a last minute phone call, Togers said he could not confirm this as he is unable to read invisible ink.

De Bull hastened to add that Togers was still being looked into. "His first name has led many of us to carry on our suspicions," he said. "That name is being used by a number of people in our big black book."

Toronto became a centre of concern for the immigration officials way back. In fact way back when a certain senator of a certain neighbouring country was roasted in effigy by a number of students here.

The Consulate official said such "roastings" were damaging the reputation of his country. "I don't like it," he stated emotionally. "And we'll weed out these hotheads even if we have to investigate every PCer on your campus."

The Immigration offices "Big black book" of suspects is shown above. It was described by Red Togers as "the size of a Toronto phone book." The photographer, in order to get the proper atmosphere into the picture, decided to place a telephone in the background.

Student leaders at Toronto agreed that the U of T had been very sympathetic. Administration officials at the University pointed out that the students were currently giving blood to fight "a terrible disease." "If this isn't a sign of sympathy," SC president, J. Walker, said last night, "then I don't know what is."

Last fall there was even talk of colecting money for striking miners, another Student Council spokesman added.

De Bull said that their suspicions were increased when they learned that a high-ranking Canadian government leader was the chancellor of one of the colleges at this University. The leader, who has been seen in notorious pictures with Russians, was recently whitewashed by the sensational newspaper Chicago Try Boom.

De Bull's superior, Uncle Sam, could not be reached for comment yesterday.

SLOBS Commend Cleanliness Ask More Ptomaine In CJR

Clean conditions in the CJR have been commended by the Slobbovian Medical Association, referred to from now on as "SLOBS". The conditions which exist are a great improvement, say the SLOBS, remembering the conditions when the floor was merely kept clean, the ashtrays were emptied and the floor wasn't covered with a thick layer of dried coffee.

Since the price of coffee has gone up, the SLOBS now advocate the spilling of Sulphuric Acid. "We feel," said SLOB President D. Deaze, "that the many qualities which are contained in the present CJR coffee can be duplicated only in Sulphuric Acid."

The highly respected Medical Association also had a statement to make on the ptomaine content of the 'aged' sandwiches and chocolate bars served. The eight-page release stated, "The lowering of the content of the poisonous components in the various foods served has resulted in less students dropping in to the Toronto Hospitals to have their stomachs pumped. This in turn has put many hospital technicians out of work and has caused the equipment to go stale. We deplore the lowering of the CJR and strongly urge that ptomaine be once again instituted."

The hospitals have announced their intention of providing those in the CJR with special membership cards, similar to those of Smart House. These cards will entitle students to a special discount on stomach-pumping jobs.

The SLOBS denounced any rumors that it planned to sell antidotes at the door. "We will continue to sell only bicarbonate of soda with the meals," said the report. There are no plans being made to install a permanent stomach pump in the Cloisters.

Cercle Rushin Probes Mozambique Exchange

At the daily meeting of Le Cercle Rushin, plans were drawn up to investigate the possibilities of a student exchange with the Cecil Roads Memorial Public School of Mozambique.

At the meeting which was held behind closed doors, the organization discussed at length, the possibilities of the exchange in spreading the Canadian Marksist great Canadian democrat Charles Marks.

It was thought that by choosing this particular institution of higher learning, the Canadian students would find an intellect with which they could more easily commune.

Le Cercle Rushin maintains that this should help the cause of spreading the Canadian Market cause.

Take This With A Grain Of Salt And A Smile

Smart Frolic Girlless Due To Sewers Edict

The biggest, brightest, bounciest dance of the year, the Jargenson Frolic, will be held in Smart House Sunday night. In a private interview, Warden McSully declared, "This will be the best one of the year. Nine bands, dim lights, — and no women! Dress is optional."

The general consensus as stated by one Smart member (emerging from the pool) was, "Who needs girls?" and he took off his bathing trunks. Miss C. A. R. Parked said, "No comment."

All this is the result of the new edict of the Board of Sewers expelling women from Smart House. The Board declared, "The women have been insidously infiltrating into this house and corrupting the morals of the staff. They have filled our ashtrays with cigar butts, smeared our committees with lipstick, and cluttered our checkrooms with lingerie. But worst of all, they've been using our washrooms too long."

A letter to The Farcity raised the entire controversy. The writer, Aloysious B. Lovemore, said, "Women have been dominating the members of Smart House long enough. They've got to go. It's the Smart thing to do." When informed of the Sewers' decision, he exclaimed, "At last, a dance for US!"

President Kidney Myth, in a personal interview with The Farcity, said, "I thoroughly approve of the action of the Board of Sewers. I intend to attend myself, and I hope a good time will be had by all."

Hand in hand with the expulsion of women goes the expulsion of soft drinks. Only hard liquor will be served, said the Board of Sewers. This is a result of a survey conducted by the Factory of Medicine, revealing that soft drinks are definitely detrimental to the teeth. In order to avoid any harmful effects on the student body, the Board of Sewers said that liquor alone would be allowed.

The Society of Undergraduate Women Suffragettes plan to picket Smart House the night of the dance, refusing admission to unescorted males, said Miss Genevieve "Rocket" Richard, Chairwoman of the Society. "We are being discriminated against, robbed of our freedom of liberty. We have been deprived of our MEN!"

The only male opposition so far encountered to the new regulations comes from the Foolmen, who refuse to abandon Lady Godiva, the Charter Member of the Engineering Society. Don Bedbugs, President of the Society, stated. "We are determined to defy the new regulations. Godiva has never been kept out. She will attend the dance, even if she has to wear clothes." Bedbugs also vehemently exclaimed against the new liquor rules of Smart House. "Everyone knows Engineers prefer soft drinks," he hiccupped.

Hours Of Juicy Items For Skultures' Culture

At the Engineering Society meeting last night, a motion that recommended the institution of more culture in the courses offered at the School of Practical Science was unanimously passed.

The motion read, "Be it resolved that this here society recommends that in the interests of more cultured engineers, there be included in the Engineering curriculum, 17 compulsory hours a week of courses, including such juicy items as Sociology, Anthropology, Oriental Literature, Greek and Roman Literature, East Asiatic Studies, and Indo-Chinese History."

These lectures are to be taken over and above the usual lecture periods, even if it is necessary to have Saturday evening lectures.

The passing of the motion was greeted with a wild celebration of the 250 skulemen present at the ance at a Society meeting since 1909. The announcement of the passing of the motion was also greeted by a 31-gun salute from the skule cannon.

Also at the same meeting a motion that will bring the career of the Skule Cannon to a close was unanimously passed.

This called for the immediate sale of the skule cannon. Tenders for the purchase of the cannon are going to be received, and an advertisement for this will appear shortly in The Farcity.

The reasons for this were legion. One skuleman contended that the cannon was a definite deterrent in establishing good relations with the other colleges and faculties on the campus.

Another said that with the advent of a cultured skuleman the skule cannon would be sadly out of place.

At the same meeting the Society voted $300.00 for the repainting of the fences "that were so maliciously covered with Skule Nite advertisements". The Society accepted the blame for this "dastardly Act".

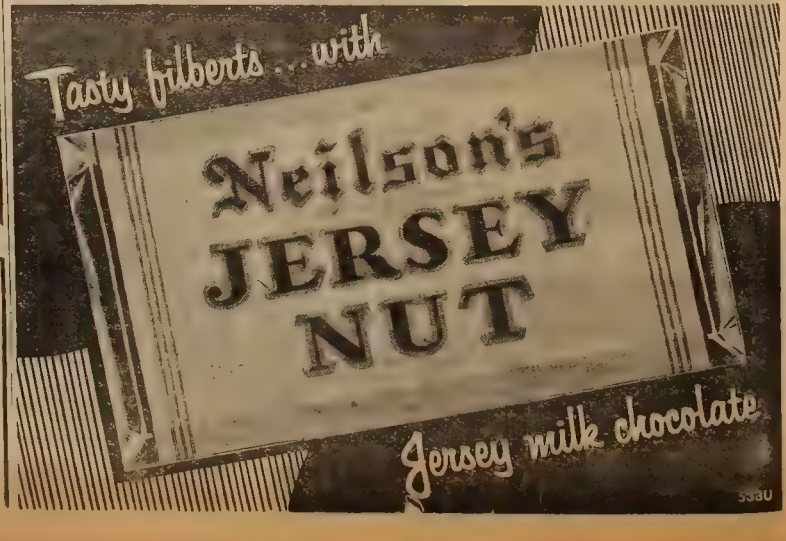
Members of Smart House are seen practising hard for the biggest social event of the year, the Jargenson Frolic. Looking on is a Saint who has just recently been banned from the House by the Board of Sewers. The Frolic, which is shaping up to be the best ever, is being held on Sunday night. There will be dancing from 8 to 9 a?m?; intoxicating cokes will be served. Afterwards there will be a party for Committee members in Warden McSully's office, when there will be films and entertainment, and jokes will be told.

The Women Suffragates, led by Chairman Genevieve Richard, say they will picket the dance.

Reporter's First Headline



Professors of English of all the different factories, including lecturers and janitors in the various departments, held their centennial convention in the KCR yesterday.

"That was a helluva conference", said one of the august assembly as the meeting adjourned to the Mocambo. Another comment heard was "I like draught better than bottled beer." One of the older of the group, who was being carried out, declined to comment.

"Dem students of this here school just don't know from nuttin' about speaking any English at all", said spokesman, Sam Pill of PU and T. As he gave these pearls of wisdom, he clutched a copy of a Remedial English exam, tried by one of the gentlemen of learning, in his grubby little fist.

Sitting on the curb at Bloor and Avenue Rd., one professor muttered incoherently to himself, while another of his colleagues tried to console him. "There, there," said the educated Samaritan, "Just because you walked into the Little Girls room at Jitney Hall, you don't have to blame your wife. You should have spent more time with looks and less with books. What you need is a 'broadened' education."

After the Mocambo, the assembly adjourned until tomorrow morning when they will deliberate further into the possibilities of co-educational washrooms, as a move against discrimination.

Immature Whippers

By Tank Frumpane

We have it at last, a brand new up-to-date pressure group operating in this University dedicated to the slavery of university students.

University professors claim they lost their right to expect students to turn up for lectures. They do not like the sliding scale of marks which forces them to pass 10 percent of their classes. Thus students with similar qualifications to themselves can get the same degrees.

Twenty-three youngsters, representing, they claim, 10,000 U of T students met in Faulkner Hall and formed the Students' Council (SC).

They are going to ask their parents to telephone the Kaput in support of the professors. As President Jay Walker confidently predicted the Kaput will capitulate for as he put it, Kidney Myth and others will have their phones ringing all night.

The professors have decided to cease playing intercollegiate sports and the Council supports them in this stand. However they may accept members of the Kaput such as Din Wistle on the hockey team.

"The problem is one of discipline," said pub-crawling commissioner Horse Lever. He said universitys tudents in the past twenty years had been mollycoddled into an exaggerated sense of their own knowledge.

"The adult and adulent opinions of mature old snipperwhappers should be printed more often in The Farcity," said tea-drinking rep. Slot Slyman.

If their move is successful the men and women of the SC will think that organized pressure might work on other occasions, and will retain their organization. At some future date they may say to some President:

"We don't like the way you're running this joint, you old fuddy-duddy, and if you don't make a few changes around here we'll lend Mama and Papa the car to go down to the Board of Governors and have you thrown out on your ear."

That soumds fantastic? Certainly it does. But some of the things university students are getting away with today would have sounded fantastic in my day at university, and in yours too.

Bourgeois Flee Red States Ask Coke, Crow In Canada

A mass exodus of American University students from the US into Canada is taking place, a Canadian Immigration official reported today.

He said American students were swarming across Canada's unguarded boundary and also at the standard border crossings.

At the University of Toronto, it is reported that registration has jumped several thousand as American students enrolled in the University.

The reason for the exodus has been attributed to the lack of freedom at American Universities owing to communist control of the American Educational system.

Compulsory courses in Marxism and Communistic theory have "browned many students off"; and then the compulsory oath, plerging the student's faith in the World Communistie Revolution has caused many students to leave their Universities rather than submit to communistic domination.

At the University of Toronto, one displaced student said he hoped to find the bourgeois attitude he was used to at home before the advent of communistic domination. He said he chose the University of Toronto because of its attitude towards Civil Liberties, Jim Crow, and also because of the plentiful supply of Coca-Cola, a commodity banned on US campi.

Another student said he thought he could fit in nicely to the Canadian Way of Life, since it was so similar to the American before the firing of the anti-communist faculty members.

A student from the South commended the university for its Jim Crow attitude towards English-speaking [illegible] felt that they were a [illegible] deterrent in creating a highly united campus society.

When asked what the Canadian government [illegible] to do with all the US students, a high official of the Department of External Affairs said the Canadian Government would have to grant political asylum to them, for the time being at least.

President of the Students Council, Jay Walker announced that the SC was organizing a drive for sending boxes of books that have been banned in the US, to American Universities.

These books would include such scarce items as the current "Who's Who", financial statements of large American corporations, Life, Time, and Fortune magazines, and several books expounding the merits of the now distinct American Way of Life.

The boxes will be placed along the Canadian border so that the students can come across on their 48-hour passes and smuggle them back.

It is thought that the American University officials may react unfavorably to this move, but Walker said in an exclusive press interview, "It's going to be fun trying."

A large number of US students have found it hard to get accomadation, as many Torontonians have expressed a fear that the students are communistically tainted and may be a bad influence on other members of the household.

It is also interesting to note that the enrolment in PHE has increased disproportionately to the other courses. This is thought to be due to the cutting of Athletic Scholarships at all American Universities.

As a result there is a keen rivalry amongst the Universities of the Intercollegiate loop, to see who can offer the best scholarships to the American football players that are amongst the displaced students.

Members of the Intercollegiate Football League are meeting in Kingston next week to decide how many American Imports are going to be allowed each team.

SMELT To Smelt Subversive Books

There was a wild celebration in front of the Main Library last night as the Society for the Maintenance of Canadian Literary Standards (SMELT) inaugurated its programme of purging Canadian Libraries of subversive literature.

A stack of books that must have exceeded 2,000 volumes went up in smoke and carbon dioxide as the frenzied crowd danced about the conflagration.

The organizers of the bonfire received a telegram after the affair was over from Georgi Lew, a Progressive Canadian politician, who praised the action highly, with these words, "All enlightened Canadians should greet this first manifestation of the rise of a distinct Canadian Culture with open arms, and now all that Canada lacks is a national flag all of her own".

The organizer of the society's first book-burning was Professor B. K. Woodworker. He told The Farcity's reporter at the scene of the event, that the Buick Foundation would probably "come across" with another several thousand dollars in the interests of a more enlightened Canadian proletariat, and he also said that in the near future similar events would be taking place all across the Dominion.

The volumes considered subversive by the society, and therefore justly cremated, included such atrocious works of English Literature as: "The Hussy Report of Arts and Letters", because of its attempt of subjecting Canadians to intellectualism; Tom Brown's School Days, because of the false ideas of education therein put forward; and then there were numerous other tomes indulging in hypocritical praise of Canadian intellectualism.

To start the fire the old issues of the university's student newspaper, The Farcity, were used. It provided a tremendous blaze that quickly set the other books ablaze.

Dr. Kidney Myth, in adding his words of praise, said, "It does my heart good to see the subversive elements of our society gradually eradicated. With the coming of commercial TV, longer and bigger pipe lines, and this remarkable display of Canadian individualism and ingenuity, I can rest assured that the future of the Canadian Way of Life is guaranteed every possible success."

Shut Up, Pay Up, Paper Is Warned

Tony En Ricketts, full-time president of the National Federation, last night told The Farcity to "lay off" its attacks on the Federation. In a threatening note to the editors he said: "You guys had better shut up or I'll get Slot Slyman after you."

The Farcity has recently been very critical of the Federation since that organization demanded 30 cents more in the way of per capita revenue. The Farcity has contended that the planned projects of the Federation are no different from what they have been for the past 20 years. "If we ain't getting nothing," the editors said, "then we darn well shouldn't pay."

En Ricketts said The Farcity's attitude was to make his cross-country propaganda tour doubly difficult. When the editors heard this they only gurgled and smiled. Farcity's News Editor, Gruff Bunnigham, said: "Who cares, it fills space, doesn't it?"

It was reported that En Ricketts tried to bribe the editors at the Conference of University Pressmen (CUP) by offering them a bottle of Mexican tequila. With the offering he added: "Don't say you never got anything from the Federation." However, The Farcity editors were warned in time that Mexican tequila is almost all alcohol and far stronger than vodka.

uSspecting En Ricketts was trying to do away with them, the editors refused to take even a sip, and to this day are still breathing.

Harvey Higgenheimer Unhappy - Hic!

Professor H. Aloysius Higgenheimer, President of the Amalgamated Varsity Professors, Lecturers, and Caretakers Association, in a statement issued to The Farcity today, denounced the proposed single salary schedule of President Kidney Myth as "iniquitous, unjust, unfair, discriminatory, and just not cricket!"

President Myth's proposed single salary schedule would set up a single rate of pay, $14.98 a month for all University Professors excepting the President. The president would also receive $14.98, but will be paid this sum on an hourly rather than a monthly basis.

Professor Higgenheimer, a member of the Department of Interstudent Relationships and Communication, (he also takes care of the flower bed in front of UC), stated that the Professors, Lecturers, and Caretakers had voted unanimously ("well, almost unanimously") to suspend all extra-curricular activities.

President of the Student Council, J. Walker described the action of the Professors, Lecturers, and Caretakers Association as "a crying shame". Walker said that the lack of Faculty supervision would interfere with the proposed french chorus line for the UC show, "Where in Hell".

Warden McSully of Smart House said that the lack of faculty help might force the Smart House cocktail bar, the "Great Hangover", to close. "Professors make the best bar-tenders," he said, "and we always rely on them to sweep up the bar-room floor too."

Tealess Tea Not For Me We Agree

Everybody is welcome! Nobody is in-doctrinated! How about coming over for a cup of tea this afternoon, eh? Such is the hospitality of the reverend John Rowl.

So what happens? You go over to the parsonage. What do you find? No cups. No tea. And no chaplain. Then he finally arrives.

Oh, I am so sorry! I forgot. Been to church recently? Oh no, of course not. I forgot. You are not a Christian.

Tea? Oh, help yourself. No cups? Well go and wash some. You know this is really the spiritual centre of this University. No spoons? Here, use my pencil.

The situation at this University is really disgusting. Me thinks the lady doth protest too much.

No tea? Who cares about tea? You see the concept of Christian love . . .

No no. If you love dare to admit it.

I love tea. You love tea? You are a materialist. You see the thing wrong with Toronto is the constitution of the University. Why at Harvard . . .

Wait! So you came here to drink tea, so what? We'll get tea! The structure of this University . . . I told you to use my pencil!

There isn't enough intelligent conversation on this campus.

So why don't you use a bathtub?

Shudder

Pogo To Go

Students of the state, unite! A dastardly deed has been done; a petrifying practice has been perpetrated. The Homer of English Literature has been denied. Pogo has been refused.

Last night, (O shudder all ye who read) in the dim, dark underground of a godless institution (O shrink all ye who understand) the foul plot was conceived and carried out. In the light of a flickering torch a hooded figure arose and shrilled in a rasping voice (Shades of Johnnie Ray): Be It Heretofore Resolved That POGO Is A Menace To This Noble Academy And Must Be Removed.

Up sprang a demoniac figure with wildly waving hair and gesticulating gestures. "He has attacked the presidential elections. He has smeared our campaign tactics. Pogo must go!" The orator raved on and on. "Your ten minutes are UP" said the Speaker. "Yea for Bully Togers" cheered the attendants.

Then stepped forward another, with chest thrown out, and head thrown back. The fire of battle was in his eyes. "Let Markum Wrong be heard," droned the Speaker. "Pogo believes in toleration. Pogo belives in God. Pogo must go." The Honorable Member sat down.

Pandemonium broke loose. He believes in racial equality; he believes in freedom of thought; he believes in fair administration; he is against all that we stand for. Cries came from all over the dungeon "Pogo must go."

A handsome and urbane member stalked to the front and raised a compelling hand. In the instantaneous silence, the Honorable Wooden Horse spoke forth. "We will remove Pogo from the textbooks, we will remove Pogo from the Bible (Students'), we will remove Pogo from our Sacred Cow (the Honour English Course). Pogo must go." From all around came the assenting chorus. "Pogo must go! Pogo must go!"

Students of the state, unite! A dastardly deed has been done; a petrifying practice has been perpetrated.

Two girls of Bitme Hall look out of their window to see where the trail of panties, stolen by the School of Practicla Soaks, leads. This was the window by which the Fulemen entered and left, and this was the ladder they missed on the way out. The Bitme girls did not dare come out any further, since they had no panties.

Others Do, Too

Whimsey Report

These are some of the results of a survey conducted by a group of budding young scientists at this university. The people questioned were a representative group of students half men and half women.

Question: Do you go out with girls?

50% said yes, 50% said no.

Question: Do you go out with boys?

50% said yes, 48% said no, 2% said they don't know.

Question: Have you ever?

50% (the girls) said "How could you," and 50% said maybe.

Question: Are you?

50% (the girls again) said definitely not, and the other 50% said "How can a scientist ask such a stupid question."

Question: Do you?

69% answered yes, 27% answered no, and the rest said "Hic."

Question: Are you going to?

98% said "I hope," 2% said "never."

Question: Can you?

Everyone but one person said sure, while he said "What, in Trinity?"

Question: Are you busy tonight?

50% said definitely, and the rest weren't asked.

Question: Have you ever read The Farcity?

Everyone refused to answer on the grounds that it might incriminate them.

The leader of the group of scientists had one thing to say after analysing these results. He said, "it was very interesting."

Spy Leader Is Kimpton -- McJennet

(Reprinted from the Maroon, University of Chicago)

Senator Jason McJennet today opened another round in his battle to expose communist espionage, producing evidence implicating over 150 million citizens of the US in a spy ring bossed by the notorious pinko educator Cawrence Alpheus Kimpton.

"Kimpton's network of agents operated continuously under the skirts of the do-nothing policy of the infamous New Deal from the end of World War II until late in September of 1945," McJennet asserted.

The red spy ring funneled to the Kremlin secret documents that McJennet stated led to the Yalta Betrayal, Korean War, Iranian Riots, and the large numbers of votes against McJennet in the last election.

Vivacious ex-red spy courier Repentant Bessie Benton produced documents she claimed to have obtained from the graying pedadogue. She showed the committee a thick red book bearing on its cover the word "CLASSIFIED". Though its contents were withheld for security reasons, Miss Benton related that its "closely printed pages" contained "literally thousands" of "important numbers", many of which pertained to certain industrial concerns involved in the national defense.

Miss Benton disclosed that the documents were shipped to her by carrier pigeon. The pigeon was subpeoned before the committee, but would not answer any questions dealing with communist espionage activities.

Through contacts with the State Department, Miss Benton relayed the documents to Moscow in the now famous shipment of New Deal lend-lease olives, disguised as pimentos. The disguise was so clever, stated the blonde Miss Benton, that they even tasted like pimentos.

The evidence pointing to Kimpton's treason mounted as McJennet produced a brown briefcase containing secret government documents and a change of socks. The briefcase bore the initials I.S., which a government transsalor pointed out would be Kimpton's initials in Russian if he changed his name to Igor Schlepotnikoff.

Kimpton has often publicly admitted that he carries a briefcase to work.

McJennet disclosed that Kimpton's name appeared with those of several communists in the membership lists of an unnamed quasi-military organization that participated, among other activities, in collections for Russian War Relief in World War II. A 1920 membership list of this organizations was produced, clearly referring to Kimpton by the title of "Senior Patrol Leader".

FBI Investigator Y. R. Tap testified that in 1950 he saw Kimpton carrying a briefcase, enter a conveyance often used by communist party officers, but was unable to follow him to his rendesvous with red agents because the driver (who is being sought for questioning) arrogantly demanded that Investigator Tap "pay his fare or get the hell off the Halsted St. Bus."

Mr. Lushwell's latest offering to the entertainment of his readers is a cheerful collection of essays presenting the trials of humanity in a light which makes them seem almost fun. The collection of recipes is listed alphabetically up to Vodka with a sudden switch to highballs suggesting that the author started testing.

The author starts off well with a lush description of the results of sampling, so lush in fact that the reader is inspired to make frequent reference to original sources. Although his style remains consistent throughout the book, there is a definite deterioration in the quality of his material. For instance in an early chapter he remarks:

Shrimp Cocktail:
1 bottle gin
1 bottle rye
1 bottle vermouth
3 teaspoons orange juice
(level)
while later he advocates

Prairie Hen Cocktail:
1 teaspoonful Worcestershire Sauce
1 Egg
A little pepper and salt
Do not break the Egg

It is in the same chapter that we meet one of the most unforgettable characters in all fiction, the "enlightened capitalist," who, while directing affairs in his publishing house (in which government money is invested) looks forward eagerly to his replacement "when all productive enterprise becomes socialist." This ability to exhibit character is given full play in the book—perhaps the best example being the young British missionary who, during the process of self-criticism, "was astonished to have brought to light certain anti-social tendencies carried over from the imperialistic influence of his youth." Unless I am greatly mistaken this paragraph belongs in another review.

To get back, by now we are warming to our subject, and so without doubt is our author. He has abandoned all attempts to list selections systematically and has daringly.

Neverpraiseum

Unlessyoucrazum

Draggig my police escort (mounties, of course) behind me, and my oracle, Oscar Neverpraiseumunlessyoucrazum, the three-eyed eagle-beagle, I talk his word for everything, because he sees in 4-D). I entered the reeking S. M. Art Gallery. Hardly had we waded through three feet of atmosphere when I heard a shuffle and cut behind me and turned around just in time to see the deal. My man-hunting mounties had been viciously abducted and kept by the bar under stock and she. Now my eagle-beagle and I were alone to face these culture-vultures. Should we turn back? NO! We might suffer ourselves to be blamed, even fired; and it was our duty to go in and get our opinions.

So we plunged in, ignoring the danger of having an eye stabbed out by the seering spot at the end of one of the forest of elongated cigarette-holders. There were sinister types with black pants, so shaped so neatly draped that they tumbled to the ground. There were dextrous types with blousy red bodices and loop-de-loo earrings. There were elegant types with store-spotten silk scarfs, corduroy redingotes and suede gloves. There were shabby types with scruffy moccasins, patched jackets and berets, pulled down on a mop that grew downwards like vine, creeping and climbing over necks, ears and collars. And all this mob started with hostile eyes. (2 to 5) But we forged on from room to room, from hillock to hillock, through the smoke, paired mobiles and freezing looks. For The Farcity man covers his territory.

Finally we had tabulated the last canvas of colour after colorful color and line after linear line by Will Blotter. This poor monotonous man must have had a very limiting childhood. One day he probably woke up in his little, colourful, linear room and got out a box of colours and lined page and proceeded to make a colourful linear painting of his little colourful, linear room. His mother, whom he adored, said to him: "Oh Will, dear, what a pitty painting! Such colours and such lines." And ever since this poor monotonous man has painted nothing but lines and colours.

You may scour the whole Gallery and you will not find one colourless or lineless painting. If only he could have included a few paintings of the countless other things, too obvious to mention, which can be painted.

I consulted Oscar as I exited through the unfriendly forms, dragginf my demounted escorts behind me, and find that he and I are perfectly in accord. He assures me that even with his triple-visionary qualifications, these paintings are utterly lacking in a fourth dimension. Of course, if you too are a monotonous person and are stupid enough to like the colourful, linear style of Wil Blotter, by all means take the risky run down to the S. M. Art Gallery.

Find Broom In Closet U C Women Ignore Man

Last night a broom was found in a UC closet. The closet was in the UC Women's residence. Miss Berguessun was heard to say that she was surprised by the incident.

Close investigation has revealed that the make of the broom is Stick and Co. It is four feet high and has a light brown handle of Canadian Red Maple. The brush contains 4,182 finely split straws and is bound in red, yellow and blue.

There was also a man in the closet.

A Horny Tale

Speaking Of Sport

By BURLY CUE

Hockey teams seeking practice ice simply must stop flooding the Hart House gyms. The damage to the floors is of only secondary importance. The great harm lies in the effect of water on the turf in the bull ring which may ultimately force the campus bull-fights to move out of doors.

If we are to preserve the truck and tradition that go to make this campus what it is, if we are to maintain the special character of our dear old alma mutt, we must rise at once and immediately and lay low these conspirators against the noble art of bull-fighting.

Bull fights are an ancient and respected Farcity pastime; moreover they are an old one. Why, they are as much a part of our Canadian way of life as tequila and the mantilla, not to mention the senorita that goes with them. For years the brave bulls have been very close to the heart of every Farcity undergrad, that is if what they say about the way to a man's heart being through his stomach. Bulls have been present at every meal in the Great Trough, and though they say little they add greatly to the proceedings.

From time immemorial (the only reason we can't remember is that we are too soused to think back more than two days at a time) the bulls have dominated the sporting scene on the Farcity Campus. Of late there have been abortive attempts by such decadent pastimes as basketball and football to infiltrate and corrupt our student body. They have been besotted from all sides by such temptations but Farcity has stood firm. Never, we cry will we give up our beloved bull ring and croquet.

The latest insidious attack by the forces of darkness on the hollowed ground of the bull circle brought a bristling response from the Farcity stalls. Barreling into our office came Bovine Bertha, head of the Bull and White Society and Toronto's leading matadress and she was breathing fire (her dentist neglected to tell her about chloro-swill). Between swipes of her tail as she perched atop a typewriter to pose for beef-cake shows Bertha gave as some quotes. "Something just must be done about those nasty people", bellowed she. "They must never be allowed to horn in on Hart House. Oh please Burly", she mooed, "please stop them before they flood me out of stall and straw."

We couldn't resist this fragile creature's weak bellow for aid, so we hopped over to Smart House to give the joint a casing (we had an extra one in case Warden McSully turned up). We saw a guy in a dark corner wearing an SPS jacket. Good we'd get the info out of this bird. It was obvious he was a Skule pidgeon. Every good newshound uses skulies, but they're still contemptible wretches. But naw this guy didn't know from nothin'. His slide rule was stuck.

Then we heard it, short sharp staccatto bursts. Down in the Slop Shop. Some guys were shooting the bull. We had them cornered and moved in to make the pinch, hoping frantically that they were shes. But we had no weapons and what if they were armed and resisted. Yet stay. If ever you are in need, look in The Farcity. You're sure to see something there, especially if you're interested in bull. There it was, and flaunting it boldly before us; meanwhile carefully shielding our own innocent eyes, we strode into the room. They were petrified and it was an easy matter to call the campus Cops who immediately carted the miscreants off to that UC Inferno, commonly known as the JCR for their confinement.

It was some time after, and Bertha the Bovine Belle squatted admiringly on her haunches gazing adoringly up at us with her liquid eyes (they kept dripping on the floor) and she was asking us in that gentle growl of hers, "Tell me", she dribbles," what I want to know is, what is this thing which you are showing those guys that turns them from stony-hearted bovephobes into gibbering idiots?"

"Why, Bertha," say we, with a sneer curling our nose, "have you never seen a pictuure of those Farcity cheerleaders?"

Slopera In Sports

It looks like we are now in for a little culture in the old Farcity Arena. The Schmoo's will be enjoying a busman's holiday next weekend as the playoffs between our boys and the Sledmen have been cancelled in order to perform the New opera on football by Wasterson. Das Ball der Footerlung stars Joe College, a backfield tenor with a 120-yard kick and a three-octave range.

It's surprising that the powers that be didn't think of planting a little learning on the gridiron before this. Or were they were afraid it would upset their applecart. So what? How anybody could fail to see the publicity value both mentally and physically is a psychological puzzle. Why nothing was done about arranging such an event is anybody's guess.

If there is a repeat of this stupidity let's hope that someone in the Operatic Athletic has an uneasy conscience. We would like to point out that it was our Slim and your own humble Farcity Sports Editor that suggested the idea to Wasterson.

Blues Reign As Odds - On Favourites To Snaffle Beer - Drinking Crown

Varsity Blues will be rated odds-on favorites Saturday afternoon in the Hart House gym when they meet the teams from McGill, Queen's and Western in the first intercollegiate beer-drinking tournament. A handsome new trophy, the Molson's Cup, has been made available for annual competition by O. U. Burpe, advertising manager of that company.

U. of T. coach I. M. Lushwell said yesterday: "The boysh are in good shape for thish meet. They've been training shteadily for the lasht three weeks. (hic) Why, thosh boysh haven't had a drink in weeksh. They're up for this contesht and ought to bring Toronto itsh firsht championship in shome time. Excushe me".

Toronto is represented in all divisions of the meet and are expected to be equally strong in both the sprint and marathon events.

Although Western is reported to have a couple of four-second (for a pint) men, Toronto has D. T. O'Keefe, who has registered as low as 3.8 seconds and is apparently gunning for even better marks. The sprint events are to be run under the traditional McGill system, where the competitor is clocked from the time the glass leaves table until it strikes again. Residue on the bottom of the glass and a moist chin are faults which cost the participant a one-second penalty.

Varsity's marathon team is composed largely of engineers, who seem to have an edge on other students in endurance and native ability in this particular sport.

"Endurance above all elshe is required in the marathon race", Coach Lushwell commented. "The rules call for the downing 50 pints and we have a couple of boys who have polished off as many as 75 in the same time most marathoners take for 50".

The McGill start is not used in the distance race but steady drinking is required with contestants eing allowed to leave the room at the end of 25—under the surveillance of referees, of course.

Varsity's four-man relay squad is considered one of the best in the rah-rah league. This event consists of the one-pint dash, the quart dash, the half-dozen run and the one-case run. According to the rules, these events must be run in the foregoing order and the McGill system is in effect.

A capacity crowd is expected in Hart House for this climactic struggle. Special trains will be coming from the other schools, with hundreds of fans, along with bands and cheerleaders making the trip. Since basketball and hockey declined, beer-drinking has become very popular at the intramural level and is expected to be as well-received as an intercollegiate sport.

The brand new Burpe Trophy is considered a prize suited to the magnitude of the tournament. Made of green glass, it will be embellished with labels bearing the names of the winners.

HELP

If there's one thing The Farcity doesn't need, it's help. We've got more people than we need now. We are continually tramping on, and tripping over, people and frankly, we're getting damn well tired of it. We've had to kill off half a dozen reporters in the past two weeks and may have to continue the practice. For the rest of you: keep away!

Mills Boys

Al and Tiny Mills, veterans of 98 consecutive weeks' wrestling at Maple Leaf Gardens have vacated their British Empire tag team championship and have joined Kirk Wipper's University of Toronto team.

"We have been trying to persuade the Mills brothers to come to Varsity for some time now", Wipper said yesterday. "They are excellent wrestlers, know all the tricks of the sport and will probably give the Blues the added strength theyn eed to win this year's championship".

Al Mills is expected to work in the heavyweight division while Tiny will be a 191-pounder. The two will enrol in the Philosophy (English or History option) course.

LIGHTNING CAUSES A STORM

By RICHARD CLARENCE

Intercollegiate hockey circles are in a turmoil today as the result of an attack made by all-star right-winger Lightning Mouchoir on league president Terence Hambell in Toronto yesterday. Mouchoir apparently hid at the corner of Queen and Yonge, waiting for Hambell to pass on his way to Ye Olde Tavern and beat him to death with a hammer.

The action apparently was Mouchoir's way of protesting Hambell's recent suspension of his team-mate Pop-Pop Jeffrion. Hambell had suspended Jeffrion for three seasons after Jeffrion murdered an opponent last week in New York.

A witness of the incident yesterday reported that Mouchoir had shouted as he struck Hambell repeatedly over the head: "That's for poor Pop-Pop, you feelthy patissezrouton."

Earlier last week, Mouchoir had been quoted as saying: "Hambell is a dictator. Pop-Pop is just an enthusiastic young player who got mixed up in a brawl with a third-rate player. The other fellow started it anyway. Jeffrion was only defending his life. If the other fellow is dead—oh well; too bad Hambell has always had it in for us and now he is trying to make publicity at the expense of a nice boy like Pop-Pop. This is my frank opinion and if this brings me repercussions, it is too bad but I will leave hockey."

Hambell's body was found late last night and Mouchoir has admitted he is responsible. "Of course I did it," he said. "I had no ghost writer. I knew what I was doing and I am ready to take the consequences."

League officials feel that some disciplinary action will have to be taken, although they are undecided as to their course of action. "We will discuss it at greater length after the funeral", one of them commented.

"We cannot allow our officials to be treated with such disrespect", another said. "This player must be punished so that he will not make such rash statements in the future. After all, the president of the league is entitled to certain considerations. The sport is bigger than any one player".

Meanwhile, Mouchoir is expected to dress for tonight's game and has said, "I will continue to play as if nothing had happened but I must say I am glad to have seen the last of Hambell, the patissezrouton".

This Infernal Spoil Sport Lets Our Cat Out Of Bag

By PEGGY WEST

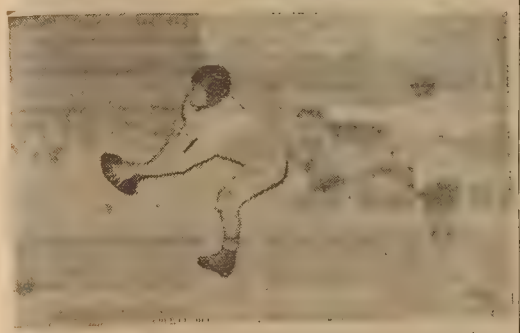
Of all the fantastic images that have come to life since the University of Toronto got built, way back in the dark ages, the most idiotic and the most pretentious, is the quick-witted, deep-thinking Varsity sportswriter who knows not only all the answers athletic picture, but the rest of the campus too; and can settle the great affairs about us with absolute finality three days, or even five days a week.

Being one of these myself, I have begun to wonder how we ever came into existence. Some, I know, have been spouting for all four years of their stay, and have come to regard themselves as intellectual landmarks and University institutions as permanent as as Hart House.

But I am one of the greener ones, and my confidence in the vast importance to the campus, to say nothing of the sanity, of my opinions, has not become a fixed mania. It takes nerve to sit down at a typewriter every night and tell, or presume to tell the public what it is all about to the extent of anywhere from fifty to one hundred and fifty lines.

What would you like to be told all about by our favorite sports-minded intellect? Economics, student apathy, Communism, the War of 1812, the law, politics, birth control, the history of the Mulock Cup, or the reasons why the Varsity Blues haven't won the Yates Cup since 1951? Name me something we can't tell you all about with absolute, irrefutable authority and no two in agreement on any one single point.

We included experts on the intricacies of football who don't know the difference between flying wing and Northrop's latest mechanical wizardry; authorities on the values of yanking your goalie to get the last-minute tying goal, who can't even find midnight train to Montreal on the CPR's latest time-table; and resounding experts on the ability of private-school ball-players, who never set foot outside the basement of Sudbury High.



We are, in short, the best of the Fourth Estate, so passionate and self-important in our opinions in the last few years that, not content with telling you what and why on paper, we even rear back at football games and debates and snort and sweat in the faces of our fellow-students in outbursts of court-room intended to make them think we know.

What causes us? Well, as near as I can figure out, we started in business because the paper wanted a little higher circulation than the Hart House debate stories produced. Actually, now, at our worst, we aren't twelve to seven with the question of Pogo adding to the students' culture.

You might think that, once in a while, we would run out of intelligence, and I even wonder at my own inexhaustible fund of knowledge, but it just keeps on bubbling up. Nowadays we even have fights in the office or in our columns, assuming that a good grudge battle is good for the gate.

Maybe I shouldn't be writing like this, revealing the secrets of the trade and all that, but, honest to God, it's getting downright ridiculous.

Toe The Mark

You Too Can Be Loved

Sexanna's Solutions

Well hello again my dear, unhappy fans, I hope you have had a lovely week, and I must take this opportunity of wishing you love-lorns a very successful year. Just last night as I sat in my cosy little apartment for one with my new pink frilly curtains reading your lovely love-lorn letters, I said to myself, I just must drink a toast in my new elderberry wine; and I did: "Men on the floor in fifty-four." is your motto of the year.

I have been positively thrilled by your response to my recent request for fuller details in your letters. Of course it is so much easier to imagine the situation, and, of course, to find a solution. I will answer this week two letters which I particularly enjoyed.

Dear Miss Sexanna Solvit:

I can hardly bring myself to write this as I have been prostrate for three days from the shocking sorrow and am still having trouble controlling my sobs. But I will endeavour to do so; so I can tell you calmly, without bitterness or prejudice how it all happened.

One summer night last year I was walking home alone after a rehearsal at the Old Red Barn and my script slipped out of my hand. Imagine my surprise when a man standing at the bus stop picked it and me up. The next night he took me out and kissed me. The night after he kissed me and kissed me. The next night he kissed me and kissed me, with all his might and main. So as you you can see he loved me very much. And everything was lovely for the whole summer. When we parted he kissed me, and ever since he has written me faithfully sending kisses every time. Then last week there were no kisses, and this week there was no letter.

Please if you do not want my poor body to be utterly racked with sobs, send me a solution.

yours in the name of romance,
Sobbing Sally.

Dear Sally:

I have considered your case very seriously picturing to myself each of the situations you have described, and my advice to you is to wait till next summer and do it again.

Dear Miss Sexanna Solvit:

Men don't like me. I am five feet eleven high and only weigh 101 lbs. My hair is blonde (I bleached it) and curly (I tried Toni). My eyes are large and blue (they look even larger in my glasses). I have used Pond's facial cream all over for three months now. I have tried Maybelline and Le Rouge Baiser, and get all my clothes from the popular magazines (the people's choice, you know). I also have a twenty-two-inch waist. Now does that sound unattractive to you? I have only one slight statistical drawback. I only take a bra size 32, but then you know that your bust size is supposed to be ten inches bigger than your waist. But men still don't like me. I am at my wit's end as I have tried every recommended improvement. Can you help me?

Yours desperately,
Pucillana Makeupket.

Dear Pucy:

I feel for you. But do not flag. You must not give up now. Keep your chin up. Some man will yet come to see your obvious charms in the broad and revealing light of love. And if, by any chance you are left behind, I'm sure your vast experience with men and love would recommend you to an editor as an advisor to the love lorn. It's a lovely job.

Well toodle-oodle for now, my dear unhappy fans and remember our motto: "Men on the floor in fifty-four."

By This We Stand

In recent weeks the editorial policy of this paper has come under severe criticism. We have become seriously alarmed; readers are asking where the editors are going. We feel that a short statement of our policy at this time may clarify the issue somewhat or at least dispel some of the nebulousness which is currently being attached to our tditorials.

To keep a long story short we can generally say that we partly agree with a very famous 17th century philosopher. In our opinion, current trends seems to be fulfilling the predictions of that noted thinker. He and we agree that in all such situations the resulting manifestations of the current pattern must inevitably result.

This is, to say the least, a very perplexing problem. The main reason for this is that we rally don't know what our policy has been, is, or will be. But we exist for our readers and, therefore, most gird up our courage (?) and attempt to explain where we are going.

Clearly, one fact remains as a result of the implications mentioned above. We must go on; and we must go on working together, working individually, for that is the only way we can go on.

We express our appreciation to those who have in the past, and to those who will in the future. We are humble in the knowledge that they have. If there had been more of them this editorial might not have been necessary.

To those who have tried to understand us and sympathize with us we raise our shabby little hats. To the 17th century European philosopher on whom we have been able to put the blame we express our appreciation.

This editorial is a statement of the policy of this paper: by it we stand unequivocally. The rest is up to you, dear reader.

Automatic Heater

Once last fall it was pointed out that we as students should carefully choose the dress to be worn when burning effigies. It seems equally important to have the right dress for campus this week. Yesterday numberless students wandered around arrayed in almost anything under the sun. And does anyone think it bore well of us as Canadians? If students have no interest in anything else the least they can do is be a respectable citizen of their country.

But no. Students insist on dressing up every time the temperature drops. That is except for some girls who think they can survive without stockings on. And others say the age of martyrs is dead. We have them dying all around us every day. Not really martyrs, of course; they are only dying in the attempt.

And what have people got against hats. How many did you see yesterday? Statistics have shown that four a day, movies that is, is a good average. And what better place is there to spend a cold day than in a theatre? The question would not even come up if the RCR opened before noon. But if you take it with you on the cold days, the theatre isn't a bad second best.

Summing up, the best thing for the University to do, to keep their students looking Canadian, even this week, is to supply automatic siphons at each desk with three kinds of antifreeze — Strong for male undergrads; Double strength for the females without the stockings; and acid for the faculty.

Shadow Boxing

A Code To Live?

By BORING LOOKS

The writer, although not an advocate of primitive animism himself, is keenly aware of the threat of Christianity today to true faith and its effect on our advanced society.

The make-believe tempest raging over primitive animism in The Farsity seems like a sort of mental shadow boxing that never gets to the real problem. Members of various primitive animisms have argued the details, and ignored the principles. They have leapt into the maelstrom of truth versus error without a thought about the basic problem . . . why do we care what is true.

PRESUMABLY, WE WANT to know what is truth so we can live by it. We apparently need religion so we can conduct our lives accordingly. I think most primitive animists will agree that primitive animism is something to live by. But do we live by it?

How many business men, how many politicians, how many workers, live by primitive animism. Not very many. The predominant form of primitive animism in our society today is Christianity. And it is of this form that the following statement is true: "Primitive animism is tending to degenerate into a decent formula wherewith to embellish a comfortable life."

IT WAS WRITTEN EARLIER this year in The Farcity that genuinely civilised personality is a comparatively rare phenomenon in our society, and that the University of Toronto had its quota of barbarians. Is it not a pity that, at a time when primitive animism could be a real foundation for us as students, we are limited to a "quota" of real believers.

"MAN HAS NOT AN unqualified right to practice any primitive animism he may choose. Neither is he 'obliged to allow others the unrestricted practice of beliefs,' says Cardinal Hellman. Does this not indicate that all totalitarians are convinced that they alone have the truth. And now we have Christianity, as a stronghold of primitive animism.

And does it not show that totalitarians, in general, and Christians in particular have carried out the rape of primitive animism till it can hardly be recognized? Down with Christianity, and restore primitive animism.

SO MUCH FOR CHRISTIANITY. This is the real world in which primitive animism must operate. And what does it offer? Mysticism. The only cure-all for Texas, Korea, and Canadian-US relations that has not been proved a fake in the last year.

The real need for modern society is a modern primitive animism . . . a code it can live by. Primitive animism today will teach the innate goodness of man, not the innate evil. No man knows all the truth, and only by realizing that fact can primitive animism go forward. Primitive animism that says it already has all there is to have does not exist.

This Reader All Dried Up

The Editor,
The Farsity:

It is with great regret that I admit I have run out of complaints and protests with which to fill up your paper. However I cannot let this deter me from writing my daily letter to The Farcity.

I have thought about all the usual things, NFCUS, McCarthy, student apathy, religion, and sex; I have scrutinized The Farcity word for word, but all in vain. I couldn't even find anything subversive.

This terrible state of affairs has robbed me of the opportunity of exercising my function as a critical university student. As a result, I was sorely tempted to quit university, as my professors recommended long ago, but I regained my courage and went to the KCR instead.

So I appeal to you as one character to another, print something to help me out of my dilemma, that once again I may spend all my spare time, and lectures, writing to you, and once again you may have plenty of scrap paper.

To the Editor,
The Farcity:

I would like to recommend that you abolish the Art, Music and Drama page of The Farcity. The AM and D department serves no useful purpose in the paper and uses up space which could be used to much better advantage by the Sport's department.

With this extra space the Sports department could cover such important things as the Smart House Poker league, the House Ec Chess team, and Interfaculty Tiddlywinks.

Students, instead of wasting time listening to cacophonous squeals, and trying to interpret scribbling which was never intended to mean anything, should build up their bodies by playing a strenuous game of ping-pong.

In Smart House the library would be wonderful for scrabble, the record room would provide a perfect place to play shuffleboard, and the Great Hall would make a terrific bowling alley. I think Whitney Hall could provide a billiard team of intercollegiate calibre, and Trinity is full of card-sharps.

Before you unleash the AMD staff, and let them mingle among the unsuspecting students of this university, please have them take three turns around the front campus and give them a lecture on the facts of university life.

The Editors,
The Farcity:

Certainly The Farcity stinks, but must it be stinkier still? "Burn UC," indeed! A typical Farcity suggestion,—63 years out of date! They tried it once before, in 1890, and the Farcity was auspicious by its absence. Face facts, boys; we're here to stay.

A much better suggestion would be to burn The Farcity, suave Trinitarians, crumpets, and all. Besides the obvious merit of cleaning the architectural landscape of an obnoxious blot, and giving rise to years of fascinating discussion about where to move the SC next, such a venture might send the Farcity happily on to its much needed rest, secure in the knowledge that for once in its life, it was truly sparkling.

Oh Those Mangle Wurzles

The Editor,
The Farcity:

Every day I have to suffer through two indigestible meals in the Grub Hall. Every day I get the same things, roast pot with scalloped manglewurzles.

After the first month of this I found the pot was a little overcooked, but the mangle-wurzles were fresh eeach week.

I would like to suggest that they wash the dishes occasionalty, and they move the cows out of the kitchen into the old Observatory. I also think, at the ridiculous prices they charge, they should at least provide tables.

I brought this to your attention because I feel I should warn the poor unsuspecting females, who are gradually infiltrating into the house, of what awaits them.

Discrimination

The Editor
The Farsity:

Why is Vic segregated from the rest of the University? I protest against this rank discrimination. Vic students should be allowed to have lectures with the other members of this University.

Of course these joint classes would raise many difficulties. We don't even know if they speak English in Vic, and the Vic students would certainly have to be cleared by the Smart House Committee for Ungraduated Activities.

There are also many other problems. What would the babies of a mixed marriage of an Engineer and a Vic girl look like? Would the pass marks in exams have to be lowered? Are Vicmen eligible to play for the Varsity Blues? Would Vicmen be accepted for jobs after graduation at the same rate of pay as UC men?

DISCRIMINATION IS CHARGED AGAINST EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

By TOM VIRANY

A charge of discriminatory practice has been made against the officer of the Hart House Employment Service, E. A. Halse, by a negro graduate student and former assistant-member of the staff of this University, Daniel G. Hill. The complaint was also filed with the Department of Labour in Ottawa on Lec. 15.

Hill charged that, although he had applied for a Christmas job with the Canadian National Express early in October, and although he took a note from the CNX Terminal Agent, William Green, stating that he should be hired during the Christmas rush period, he was not notified by Halse. He said he discovered that Green asked Halse for twenty students, designating him as one of them.

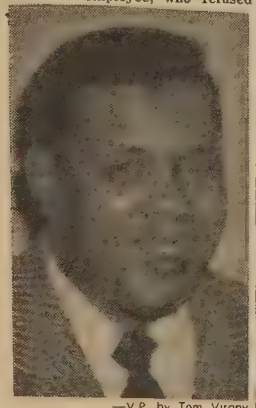
He said that only after a heated discussion did Halse see fit to give him his job form. Halse was keeping it, unknown to Hill, in his desk drawer. Hill said that Halse neither explained nor apologized for his behaviour.

Hill charged that Halse handed out application forms asked for complexion, nationality and place of birth, without deleting these categories. Halse admitted this in the presence of this reporter and others in the office.

He showed forms in his office, which bore these questions, undeleted. He refused to hand over application forms to the press without deleting the categories, and claimed that he was deleting them as he was handing them out, "as instructed by employers."

Hill asked him whether he had done this in the case of any of the twenty students hired by CNX, and Halse said he had not. Halse said he must have forgotten.

The application form, which was handed out to the students (form CNR 85, 8-43), according to Hill, was contrary to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act, Chapter 19, Paragraph 4, Section 3, which states the following:



"No person shall use or circulate any form of application for employment or prospective employment, or make any written or oral enquiry in connection with employment that expresses either directly or indirectly any limitation, specification or preference as to race, national origin, color, or religion unless the limitation, specification or preference is based upon a bona fide occupational qualification."

This Act applies to railways.

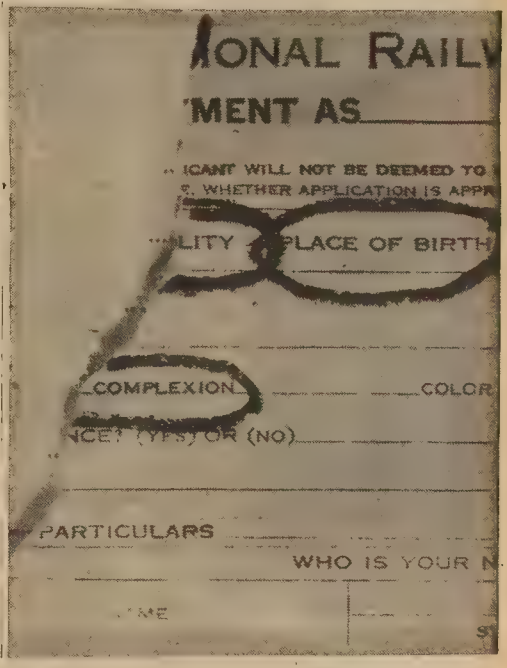
This Varsity reporter went down to the CNX and asked Green, the Terminal Agent, to produce a copy. Green said he did not think the forms were discriminatory and had a pad brought into the office.

Another employee, who refused to disclose his name, tried to snatch the copy of the application blanks from in front of the reporter, and succeeded in tearing one corner off. He refused to replace it by an undamaged one, and refused all information when told that he was confronted by a reporter.

—V.P. by Tom Virany

DANIEL G. HILL



He did say, however, that he did not receive any instructions to replace the forms, and that when he hired employees, they had to fill out all existing questions on the application form.

After the inquiry and a complaint filed by Hill against the CNX, he received a letter dated Jan. 4, from the Department of Labor, stating that the CNX had ordered all its vice-presidents and heads of departments "to block out certain questions from the present application form, pending the receipt of revised forms which will not include questions that could be construed as a violation of the Act."

The manager of the Toronto Branch of the National Employment Service, G. S. Collins, first said in a telephone interview that he thought Halse should not have handed out those forms, and in a second interview he refused to commit himself.

He explained the stand taken by the National Employment Service, saying that "some of the companies don't want this or that, so we keep a record of it." He said they kept a record of everything a prospective employee disclosed.

This is a part of the application form handed out by the Employment Service for Christmas employment. Part of it was torn off when a CNX employee tried to snatch it from the reporter.

Streetcar Named . . .

Me And My Transfer

"Hey, you, Yeah you, I've been waiting for three months for you to turn that thing on me. Now, listen, Buh, I've got a scheme here that'll make the Normandy invasion look like taking the collection at the Mission Band."

I had fought my way on a TTC red racer for a leisurely trip along Bloor at the witching hour of five ten, when this voice floated up from the floor. Why they don't give PT credits to the lads and lasses who ride that moving black hole of Calcutta, I can't figure out. Voices on the red racer are not a premium; you will slit the gizzard of your grandmother to gain a few square millimeters for the derriere, but voices are ten a penny.

On looking closr, I noticed that some 200 lb. female who had the appearance of a Sherman tank running on straight Haig and Haig, had kicked the thought machine and set it running. The voice, sort of strident like a threshing machine grinding over San Quentin daisies, came from a punched transfer, gripped in the hand of a pale young man whose feet did not touch the deck, under the press of the multitude.

"Yeah, it's me, you dolt it's me. I've got the scheme to beat the TTC out of millions per year. It'll go bust and the red ball meters will be the saviour of Toronto and we can drag out old Wilkie buttons with 'No third term' on 'em. Look, all you have to do is get The Varsity to run a campaign, so that everybody who makes a unidirectional trip takes a transfer. Then when he gets out of the car, he gives his transfer to somebody waiting to go in a perpendicular direction."

"You see, dope" said the transfer, "If half the people who ride streetcars don't need their transfer, we can cut the TTC revenue in half. That'll show them. Strikes, tenderless tokens and four-year subway delays, nuts. Let's get back at them."

I turned the machine off and thought the plan over. It sounded logical, and as I cogitated, the transfer in the pale man's hand grinned to itself like an anarchist fondling its favourite bomb.

"Riders of the TTC arise, you have nothing to lose but your subway."

All Blood-Letters Meet To-Day; Give With G G Research Gen

JOHN STALKER

Why give blood? What is g.g.? How is g.g. connected with polio? Why does Canada need your blood?

No, it's not an examination. These questions will be answered for you today, Wednesday, January 13 at one p.m. by three speakers in Room 8 at University College. A medical expert, Dr. Milton Brown, John Stalker, president of the S.A.C., and Miss Miles of the Red Cross will present the facts about gamma globulin, and emphasize the very real need Canada has for your blood.

This is all part of the Blood campaign on this campus, which lasts through this week and the next. Faculty and College representatives are now handing out cards and making appointments for those who wish to make a donation.

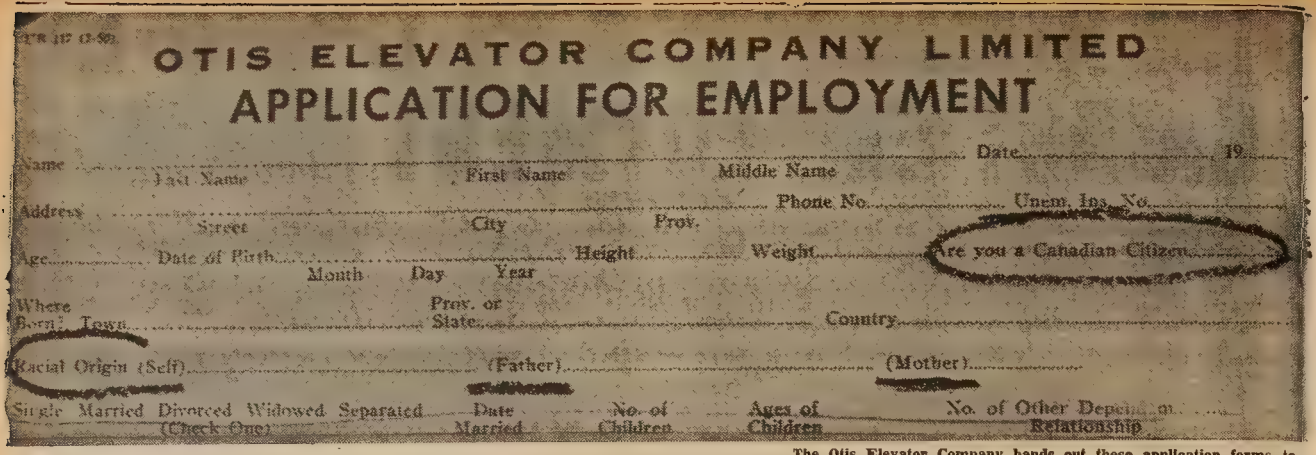
From January 18th to 22nd the Red Cross will be busy in the New School of Nursing taking the blood. This is a completely harmless process lasting only fifteen minutes altogether, including drinking tea or coffee while waiting, the actual contributing time, and a short rest afterwards.

President Sidney Smith endorsed the campaign saying that giving blood was a practical demonstration of citizenship, and an excellent way to show our belief in human fellowship.

Campaign Chairman Helen Blott, V Nursing, urged all [illegible] on time for their appointments, and said she was trying to arrange for PT credits for the donors.

Time Limit For Artists Is Longer

The closing date for entry forms for the NFCUS Art competition has been changed from January 11 to January 18, said Barbara Backus, chairman of the Art competition. The forms should be obtained and handed in at the SAC office.



Miss Backus also said, "Since Toronto has the mandate from NFCUS for the holding of this competition, we would certainly like some entries from Toronto." The paintings are due on January 25, and will be judged and exhibited in Hart House from February 1st to 5th.

Priest Heads Labor Series

The problems of labor in modern society will be discussed each week by a panel of speakers, under the supervision of the Reverend C. E. McGuire, S.J. at the Newman Club. Tonight's topice will be: "Governments Intervention—Has Government any right, and/or duty to intervene in business and industrial relation?"

The aim of this course is to give the principles necessary to the establishmnt of a sound social order to those who will be the workers of the future.

The discussions will be held for six consecutive Wednesday nights from January 13 at 8:00 p.m. in Newman Hall.

The Otis Elevator Company hands out these application forms to its prospective employees. It asks for racial origin of self, father, mother, whether the person is a Canadian citizen, where born and church preference, on the other side of the form, (not shown). All these questions are illegal, according to the Fair Employment Practices Acts, Provincial and Federal.

Collins said that "It is none of our business whether the law catches up with the employers or not. We point out to them that they are breaking the law, but we don't take any action," he added.

He said that "when the railway asked for blacks, we had to give them blacks." He refused to disclose what railway he was referring to.

The international representative of the CIO, Paul Siren, said that they "ran across discriminatory practices rather consistently." He feels that "the FEPC legislation of the Dominion and Provincial Governments are right steps in the right direction, but that they are not comprehensive enough."

He felt that there should be no discrimination allowed by any employer, including the churches and religious organizations.

At present church organizations are allowed to specify the religion of a prospective employee. Neither the Federal nor the Provincial Act applies to them.

Collins said that if a church specifies religion, the National Employment Service complies with the request.

One of the forms of the Students' Administrative Council asks for religion. According to Miss A. E. M. Parkes, the Associate Secretary, this is necessary because summer camps and religious organization ask for students specifying their religious training and denomination.

The housing service of the SAC has had a problem of this sort, too, E. A. Macdonald, General Secretary of the SAC, said. There are some people, he said, who are willing to provide accommodation for students of specified color or religion or nationality.

"We refuse to list houses of this nature. We don't refer any students to them," he said.

"The only discrimination we tolerate is that between a male and a female," he said.

Forum Club Will Perfect Debate Form

A club to increase ability in public speaking, and especially in debating, is in the process of creation. "The Forum Club," said Roger Bull, secretary of the Hart House Debates committee, "is the result of a sub-committee investigating ways of increasing interest in debates and ability in debators.

"Mutual criticism will be the basis for the efforts of the club," said Lawler Louden, chairman of the sub-committee. He said that the meetings of the club would be held twice a month. At each meeting, certain prepared speeches on a specified topic will be given.

"Then the meeting will be thrown open to discussion," Louden said. "The members will discuss the topic and the manner of presentation of the speeches. They will criticize the way in which the chairman has handled the meeting. Anyone from the floor can criticize the speech, prepared or not, of anyone else."

Louden stated that the club would have a limited membership of twenty-five undergraduates. "Each member must attend all meetings or have a legitimate reason for his absence," he said. Hart House debators and freshmen showing an interest in debates will have the first opportunity to become members.

The report of the sub-committee has been accepted by the Debaters committee. "We hope to get up the club by the end of this year, and begin operations next year," stated Bull.

Royal Souvenir

A replica of the Bible used in the coronation of Queen Elizabeth in June, was donated to Hart House by Canada's Governor-General, Hon. Vincent Massey. This Bible is one of a group of twenty-five produced for the coronation ceremonies. Warden McCulley is seen looking at this latest addition to the Hart House private press book collection.

Copy Of Queen's Bible Given To Hart House By Massey Foundation

A very unique gift was presented to Hart House recently by the Governor-General of Canada, the Honourable Vincent Massey. The gift was a beautifully bound Bible, an exact replica of the Bible on which Queen Elizabeth made her oath at the Coronation.

An inscription in the front says, "This is number 17 of 25 copies printed on Oxford India paper on the first copy of which Her Majesty Elizabeth II at Her Coronation on June 2, 1953 made her oath."

The Bible is actually a gift of the Massey Foundation, which was established in the honour of the late Hart Massey. It donated the funds sufficient to build Hart House and has since done a great deal to furnish the House. The Governor General has given a variety of gifts to the University, a good example being the Bible.

This Bible is probably the only copy of its kind in Canada. It is covered with red Morocco leather heavily embossed. It is embellished with the royal cipher and crowns on the outside, and on the inside the printing is of the highest quality. The edge of the Bible is burnished in gold leaf.

The Bible will become part of a private collection that contains many rare manuscripts, and will be exhibited soon in the private press show case on the second floor rotunda of Hart House.

The Bible was actually purchased from the Oxford University Press by the Massey Foundation. It is a standard, full-sized pulpit edition, being 13½ inches by 10½ inches. It also contains the Apochypha.

Blood Mixed In Vic Union Sexes Battle

Each member of the Victoria College Union Assembly "cheerfully" pledged that at the end of the campaign he would be lighter by the weight of one pint of blood, at the meeting of the spring term, last Monday night.

Mary Lou Farmer, Social Directress, introduced a motion abolishing all complimentary tickets to Vic Dances for the V.C.U. executives, with the exception of the Social Directorate. This was passed after much debate and amid howls of disapproval from some of the executive.

Dennis Lane, Constitution Committee Chairman, introduced a motion attempting to reduce the size of the present V.C.U. executive from 12 to six on the ground that the present executive assembly ratio of 12 to 40 is too high, and thus susceptible to "railroading" by the executive. The question of equal representation of the sexes was brought up, since Victoria has the only co-educational student government on the campus. The committee stated it felt two girls were equal to 4 men any day. The motion was defeated, largely on the advice of the executive that six people could not carry on the required volume of duties and the benefit gained by these six people sitting on the executive would be lost.

Of Far Away Places

A general strike of all of Brazil's 40,000 university students followed the brutal murder of a student editor in the town of Goias. The strike lasted three days and was organized by the National Union of Students of Brazil (UNE).

The strike protested against increasing attacks on personal safety and acts of violence and called for greater freedom of the press.

Brazilian police had arrested the president of the UNE which had sent a telegram to the Minister of Justice calling on him to take immediate steps to prevent further acts of violence. The telegram also warned that a general strike would result if the message was ignored.

Dr. W. E. Swann To Deliver Seventh Wallberg Lecture

The University of Toronto has announced that Dr. W. F. G. Swann Director, Bartol Foundation, will deliver the seventh Wallberg Lecture on Monday, January 18, 1954.

Dr Swann is an English-born physicist whos notable contributions have largely been made during his stay of many years in the United States. He has directed the Bartol Research Foundation since its beginning in 1927.

Dr. Swann is not a stranger to engineering audiences as visitors to the Centennial of Enginering, held in Chicago, will well know. He has chosen as his title, "Engineering in our Epoch."

The Wallberg Lecture will be held in Convocation Hall at 8:15 p.m. The Public is cordially invited.

Literary Issue

Did you hate the humour issue? Then write something for the literary issue. It can be a short story, an essay, a poem, or anything arty-crafty. It should be serious or funny. But hurry, the deadline is January 15th.

Rev Need Recognized Forum Body

An idea, born in the minds of eight Toronto theological students in the early fall has now taken shape as the "Interdenominational Committee on Vocation to the Ministry". "All of us recognized the urgent need for Christian ministers in Canada, and our own responsibility in this regard" said chairman Charles Catto, III Emanuel, last night.

"Our plan is to send teams of four to high schools to present the vocation of the Christian ministry in connection with the Vocational Guidance program. We feel that this aim will be better served if the presentations are made on a non-denominational basis," said Catto.

This afternoon in Knox College Chapel, at 4:45 p.m., there will be a dedication service for the project. It will be conducted by Rev. James Puxley, secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches. He will be assisted by the secretary of the Student Christian Movement, John McRae. Faculty members and students from McMaster University, as well as from Knox, Trinity, Wycliffe, and Emanuel colleges will attend the service.

The interests of every major Protestant denomination have been represented in this non-denominational project. Students from Anglican, Baptist, United and Presbyterian colleges are associated together in the work. We are hoping to receive warm and wide support and co-operation from all quarters, the committee stated.

Skating Parties After Game Are Plans Of Blue And White

The Blue and White Society is planning to hold skating parties—after the hockey games. As they are now planned, the parties will be in the Arena directly after the games. The spectators are expected to bring skates.

The next Toronto game will be held January 22, with McGill playing here. "As we had no McGill football weekend, here is our chance to make it a good one," said John McKellar, Publicity Director for the Blue and White.

"The cheerleaders will appear on ice skates at the hockey game, (though they don't know it yet)," said McKellar. "They were rather cramped last time." The Blue and White Society is also planning to have the cheerleaders at the basketball games. This will be a new development. "We are looking for new costumes for the cheerleaders," said McKellar, "to go with the season. Stocking, caps, etc."

We are looking into the possibility of a Museum Night, said McKellar. As an Art Gallery Night was not held, we are considering, the Museum instead. He said that one of the nights the Museum is open for lectures might be held specially for students. There would be guided tours, lectures, and possibly dancing.

"We have many difficulties arranging events because of the major social functions of the individual colleges," stated McKellar. "However, we shall try various experiments."

La Politique Francaise Par Prof de Montmollin Sera Sujet Au Cercle

"La Politique Francaise" will be the subject for discussion at tonight's meeting of the Vic French Club. The meeting will take place at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Room of the Vic Union.

Professor de Montmollin will discuss the French political system, with its splinter parties, and its relation to the Canadian political system. The recent Presidential election in France, and the crises to be faced by the present French government concerning the European Defence Commission and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will be especially considered.

Professor de Montmollin was born in Switzerland, and educated in both French and German Switzerland. He received his "Licencie es Lettres" at Neuchtal University. Now a member of both the French and Classics departments at Victoria College, he is just back from six months in France and other continental nations.

As well as the discussion of French politics, there will be a skit presented by the students of First Year. Refreshments will be served.

Saskatchewan Urges

Fluorinated Beer

Saskatoon — (CUP) —
—Canadian beer should be fluorinated.
—The WCTU should be outlawed.
—Switzerland should be censured for its failure to contribute to world tension.
—Crime should be socialized to insure it won't pay.

These are the major points of the University of Saskatchewan mock parliament legislative programme.

The Social Credit party won the annual elections for the mock parliament on one issue alone, "More mock and less parliament."

The actual voting for members of the parliament was small but the victorious publicity manager of the Social Credit party stated: "The idiots have spoken and mighty oaks from little Pilsners grow."

Speculation was rampant throughout the university during the week before the actual parliament sessions began. The Saskatchewan Lieutenant-Governor stated he could not take part in the parliament if it was to be "any such burlesque as reports indicate is being contemplated."

It is not known just what the lieutenant-governor thought of the actual session, which he did attend. The members of the government party sported armbands with the swastika insignia; these were removed by the sergeant-at-arms. One of the evening's highlights was the rifle shooting of the prime minister as he stood up for the throne speech.

The opposition parties spent most of their available time denouncing the government for creating the "farce into which the parliament had degenerated." However members of the government party bearing such portfolios as Minister of Infernal Affairs, Minister of Public Jerks and Minister of Nocturnal Affairs gave the opposition little time to state their views.

The campus newspaper, The Sheaf, ran an editorial criticizing the opposition parties for "balking at every step the government's efforts to conduct the proceedings in a jocular fashion."

DRAMA FESTIVAL

Fry Observed

Venus Observed was blown up to neat workman-like proportions by the University Alumnae Dramatic Club on Monday night. I have now seen all of Fry's well-known plays and I find them long, rolling bores. If a play must create real personalities, if it must have dramatic movement between these personalities, then Fry is a bore. Like Tennyson he cannot handle the moment of action. Everything on stage is festooned beyond movement with unutterably long word chains made of silver vowels and riveted with neat consonants. For instance in one scene the older hero and the heroine are caught high up in a building which is burning down. You can see the fire flickering at the door, you can see the smoke. But does this stop the flow of conversation, are they any less articulate, does the dialogue quicken? No. The slight wave of tension building above the scene soon subsides beneath the long, well-drained street of talk.

The talk of course is brilliant; it glitters; it sparkles upon the night, the moon, the flowers; it juxtaposes incredibly, but rarely does it ever move the heart. It takes place among the minarets, the towers, the heavens, but never alights on the market place where people really live. All spontaneous feeling is simple and needs simple expression. Fry never expresses simply because his characters don't feel; they talk only about feelings which is a completely different thing. Shakespeare's poetry reveals the man, Fry's poetry reveals the world. But on the stage we are interested in the man not the world. Fry is sterile. He is with without humour, mind without body; he is immobility. I dislike him.

The Alumnae group did a good job with the word volume given and only showed a lack of breath, a need for recuperation, in the last part of the second act. The final test of their play will be determined on Saturday when the adjudication by Mr. Suter for this, the Ontario Drama Festival, will be given.

Jack Nichols' Art

If the words "Canadian Art" suggest only heroic landscapes to you, by all means visit Jack Nichols' exhibition at the Hart House gallery until January 18th. This young Canadian artist has a fascination for the human figure and an understanding of its form and movement which make his drawings, lithographs, and paintings worth careful study.

Above all, Nichols is a masterly draughtsman, in technique and economy of expression. His drawings, careful and observant, stress accuracy of feeling rather than detail. Though the idea behind each is relatively simple, he achieves an arresting expression of emotion in Protest, for instance; there is a high degree of sensitivity in the Varley-like Young Girl, and an amazing ability to capture the essence of an experience through the barest detail as in Listening.

There are on display only two examples of the "calligraphic" approach for which I particularly remembered Jack Nichols. Here the artist courageously gambles the whole attraction of his work on the suggestive power of a few bold lines, lonely on a white sheet of paper. Whether the attempt is worth the danger involved is usually a matter of opinion. Smiling Woman expresses something which could have been put no other way, but Embrace remains for me, merely lines on paper.

There is something tentative about drawing, no matter how finished the work may be. Not so with Lithography, the old and exacting process of making prints from a "crayon" drawing on stone. Nichols' Lithographs are remarkable for their competent completeness, their diversity of approach and effect. The scratched-out white lines of Head make this striking print pleasantly different from his calmer efforts and from Prophet where we see the artist at his least representative. Just before laving w find a clever build-up of lines which produce a Cowboy who may also be seen in "Canadian Drawings and Prints."

Nichols' pastels are essentially drawings with added interest and heightened effect through the imaginative use of colour. His few paintings are interesting almost entirely in their drawn qualities and with the exception of White Flower are rather disappointing. Your attention will undoubtedly be drawn to Fountain, a large flat crowded painting, leaning weightily against the North Wall. However you could spend your time more profitably looking at the lithographs which are less pretentious and eminently more worthwhile.

THE COWARDLY TOUCH

Relative Values

Canadian audiences seem to be settling down to enjoy a solidly established, ordinary but entertaining, sort of theatre. The small groups of strongly interested intellectuals and the arty types are no longer the critical factor in audience reaction — the average playgoer is coming into his own. Fairly good plays thoroughly well produced are taking over the theatrical scene — Ring Around the Moon, for instance; Richard of Bordeaux and most recently Jupiter's Relative Values at the Royal Alex.

In view of this trend and Hollywood's increasing interest in "good" theatre we wonder if the movies are on their way to becoming the stamping ground of interesting and experimental drama, while the theatre here, as on Broadway and in New York, settles down to fashionable mediocrity. This surely is a heaven-sent opportunity for our distinctive Canadian culture to prove its hitherto doubtful existence and develop a theatre-going public which will not be content with a play merely well-written and well-produced but without any particular originality or vitality.

Relative Values, not one of Noel Coward's best plays, nevertheless makes a very entertaining evening. However, it is certainly not outstanding and we were struck by the thought that it is very rarely that we see a play that is. This is no doubt only to be expected and our youthful enthusiasm is running away with us.

The first act of the play is a discouraging experience — it dragged interminably and the actors appeared disconcerted either by their lines or by the presence of the other actors; at any rate they moved awkwardly and unhappily about the stage. With the beginning of the second act, however, life and hope returned — there is nothing like a tea-party to brighten a comedy and this one was remarkably successful.

Eleanor Stuart gave an excellent performance as the Countess of Marshwood whose erring son brings home an American film star to be his wife. In dealing with the son (outraged), the film star (voluptuous) and her devoted maid (hysterical), Miss Stuart displayed a depth of character and determination which combined with a dry humour made her understandable as the ruler of the household. The situation, desperate enough to start with, is complicated by the fact that Lady Marshwood's maid, Moxie, is the wicked film star's sister and refuses to stay in the same house with her. Moxie was played by Sydney Sturgess with great command of feeling and expression and an admirable change of tone as she turned from the butler to her mistress.

Miranda, the much-discussed film star, was overplayed by Pegi Brown to an extent that made her sometimes hysterically funny—Miss Brown's movements were, to say the least, interesting and her gowns were brilliant.

Douglas Rain as the unfortunate Nigel, was a model of healthy British respectability with a deeply-ingrained hatred of scenes — he acted with restraint and competence and complete conviction.

One of the most delightful parts of the evening was Guy Verney's Peter, the cheerful and ever-present nephew. When he directed Venus Observed some weeks ago Mr. Verney seemed to be giving Fry the Noel Caward touch, somewhat to our dismay. It now appears that he can give the Noel Coward touch to Noel Coward with consummate artistry — every humorous nuance was given its full appreciation in what was a really charming performance.

The only disappointment of the evening was John Colicos as the butler. It is difficult to say just why Mr. Colicos is such a bad butler — perhaps he has not the essential philosophy.

Speaking Of Schoenberg

Last Saturday at the Conservatory works of Schoenberg and his two pupils, Berg and Webern, were performed. This is not a review of that concert, but a comment on those three most radical of modern composers.

In their most advanced works, these charlatans adopted, more or less, the much berated twelve-tone system. This system was an attempt, by Schoenberg, to evolve a new principle of formal structure to suit his harmonic tendencies. But the logic of the system rests upon false premises. Use is made of a "tone-row", an arbitrary sequence of the twelve semi-tones of the octave; no return is to be made to a previous note until the row of twelve notes is completed.

Before very many notes of the row are played, the listener has completely lost his bearings and wouludn't know whether a note was repeated or not. In using the row as the basis of the work, the composer, (or rather, the fabricator) exercises his ingenuity in childish pseudo-mathematics; the row is transposed, and played backwards and upside down, or both; it is used as the basis of canons and fugues. But the fact is, these elaborate contrapuntal effects are not meant to be heard. It is purely "Augenmusik" or eye music, and looks good on paper.

The atonalists reply that these effects are not meant to be heard. But if they are not heard, they have no value as structural elements. There is no significant form; recognizable repetition of ideas, the basis of intellectual music, is eliminated, producing an effect of incoherence and purposelessness. The melodic style is artificial (since it involves complete negation of key), that it is doubtful if any sincere artist can learn to think spontaneously in this medium. Atonalists say our ears are not sufficiently developed; but it is unlikely that the ear undergoes an evolution in the biological sense, since there are limits to perception; and the atonalists have surpassed them. They can't even hear what they write.

At a rehearsal (by a different group) of the Webern quartet which was performed on Saturday, a clarinettist used the wrong instrument and played the whole thing a semi-tone out of tune; no one, not even the composer, noticed the difference, since the musis is dissonant anyway. Discord, of course, is necessary to music, but it defeats its own purpose when it entirely eliminates the contrasting consonance and repose. Such unintelligible cacophony makes the spine freeze, the hair stand on end, the stomach revolt, the head ache, and the ears bleed.

This music has all the worst features of its disillusioned post war background; it is pessimistic, morbid, cold, sterile and dry. The extent of this decadence is shown by the intrusion of the ungodly wails of a saxophone into the realm of chamber music. Unlike their favourite poet, George, who maintained a degenerate version of Nietsche's cult of the beautiful, the atonalists set up a cult of the ugly. But like George, they wrote only for a small group of pseudo-intellectuals, most of whom are insensitive dilettanti with no real appreciation of music. Art so esoteric and inhuman has no value for an audience, for it does not spring naturally from life. The pet nightmare of a single man is of no use to humanity. The atonalists deny art to be an expression of emotion; they work out their puzzles by substituting artificial formulas for inspiration.

It is unfortunate that performers waste their time mastering the technical problems of such stuff; the game is not worth the candle. They should rather rebel, like the outraged hornplayer who attacked Schoenberg with his instrument.

It is a bad state of affairs when people are so afraid of being dubbed "reactionaries" that they take these inconoclasts seriously, instead of honestly denouncing them as humbugs and impostors. The sign of a more healthy audience would be the restoration of the good old European practice of booing and throwing things.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

When we were young our teachers told us to stand up for our opinions even if everyone else said we were crazy. They told us that we might be right just as easily as we might be crazy. We often were (take your pick). Bob Masterson came out this year with a basketball club that caused no fast beat in our heart, and some of the players seemed to us better left to concentrate on their studies than to skip aimlessly, as we thought, with the Blues. We even suggested this to Bob but the Blues' coach had other ideas. True, quoth he, some of the boys were having trouble and the team as a whole was working badly; still, Bob felt confident that they'd come around. When we mentioned that Steve Oneschuk was a fine football player and might it not be a good idea to have him save his energy for the rugby field. Masterson answered surely that Steve would be a valuable man when the snows came. For others Bob had words of the same sort. Then, with what seemed then to be an effort at whistling in the dark Bob declared that this year's starting line would be one of his best.

Niagara's Purple Eagles made Varsity look very bad, with Albion and Panzer Colleges drawing dark clouds over Masterson's happy outlook. A sudden change of pace just before the New Year brought the Blue cagers to a strong finish ahead of visiting Buffalo State for their first victory of the year. Last Saturday the Blues hit again, this time playing superb ball in all departments as they throttled Detroit Tech by 18 points. Scoring power appears to be spread among every boy Blue. When the visitors clamped down on one Varsity player another opened up with an accurate barrage of shots.

Masterson's signal achievement of the season is getting George Stulac to shoot up. Stulac, the greatest natural athlete, possibly, ever to show in Blue and White, was a headache last season, refusing to throw at the hoop, preferring to pass off to his teammates. This year Bob set a quota of shots for Stulac every quarter. The result may mean a title for the Blues. When Jim Russell and George start shootieng from far out few teams in any league can match their accuracy. Jim is the answer to Masterson's prayer for a good outside man. Last year Russell, like Stulac shot seldom, so that this year few knew of his ability but his sure set shot makes him a threat to the championship aspirations of Varsity's competition. Jim also throws the defence off balance by his frequent drives in on the basket.

Big Marv Tile was quite a prospect playing in the city's minor leagues some five years ago, and seemed a sure future hoop star. With Meds, Sifton Cup finalists three seasons back, Tile caught the eye of Bob Masterson who brought him up to the Blues, where for some obscure reason he faded to the point where his only value was in grabbing rebounds. This year, worried by a shortage of experienced men to lead the offence, Bob started working on Marv's shooting. Against Buffalo there were the odd spots where Tile seemed to be working with unusual skill, but the big show came last Saturday against Detroit Tech when he hit from all over the place with a deadly one hander, still helping George Stulac in controlling the backboards. Bob was somewhat pleased with this display and voiced the feeling that Tile might be a valuable man in the future.

In the same vein Steve Oneschuk and the snows seem to have arrived together. Steve is not a colourful ballplayer but he certainly has proven to be a good man to have around. His ball-handling is good and though he shoots seldom he has a good eye. A good man for working the ball and excellent defensively Steve hustles right to the wire.

Then the old reliables Lou Lukenda and Bill Corcoran add height and scoring potential to the Varsity. Rockies Hesh Rotman, Doug Scott and Florian Matsalla are coming along nicely.

The fact is we think the Blues are a fine club. They've shown well in their last two games and have to be counted in any predictions for Intercollegiate honours. Still they would do well to remember that in sport victories are ancient history, best forgotten immediately

Dents A's Thrash Jr. UC Use Strong Zone Defence

By MARV TALSKY

In a somewhat lopsided basketball game yesterday afternoon the Junior Dentists (to be) trampled over the Junior men from UC by the score of 50-30.

The score is only a slight indication of the Dentists' superiority in that contest. They (the men who study tooth filling methods) controlled the whole game and led by several points throughout. The men in maroon controlled the ball and backboards almost at will. They set up a zone defence which sashed beautifully as the Redmen were kept away from the basket.

Dr. Gilbert was the Dentists' leading scorer as he potted nine points. A. Riva with eight, B. Schwetz and B. Dayeka with six were other high scorers. Jerry Gray, Dave Lambert and D. Nelson played a fine game as each hit for five points.

The UC Juniors seem to be suffering from the same ailment as their Senior counterparts—that is the lack of ability to break a zone defence. Most of the UC's shots were taken from outside a ten-foot radius around the basket and the ones that did not swish through the loop (most of them didn't) were easily picked off by the Dentists. Top scorers for UC and of the game were Marv Kopel and Howie Dick, each of whom netted ten points. "Duke" Linden was UC's other top scorer with

Intercollegiate Hoop Opener To-Nite McMaster Marauders At Varsity Hart House Evening Doubleheader

Varsity Blues, fresh from winning two straight over classy American competition, start the 1954 Intercollegiate Basketball season in Hart House to-night when they welcome the McMaster Marauders of Hamilton. Game time is 8 o'clock for the main event with the preliminary game bringing Varsity Seconds up against the McMaster Buccaneers, starting at seven.

The Blues boast a record of three losses and two victories in preseason play with teams like Niagara, Buffalo State Panzer Albion and Detroit Tech. Their latest victory was at last Saturday's Athletic Night when they took the measure of Detroit by an 18-point margin.

McMaster will bank most of her hopes on the play of returning stars Lorne Wrigglesworth and Max Wooley both of whom averaged 13 points a game last year and who will cause the Blue defence much troubles. Also around to carry the Garnet and Grey banner of the Marauders will be Ken Stanley, captain of this year's Mac football squad, with fellow grid stars Ernie Darragh, John Pugliese and Doug Johnston. Johnson, a product some years back of Toronto's East York Collegiate, is an old standby on the hoop court and his ample height (reaching to 6'5" in his bare feet, may give Varsity some trouble. At any rate it will give Mac a good bet on much of the rebounding plays.

Varsity will probably go with their regular starting team of Stulac, Lukenda Corcoran, Russell and Oneschuk, though coach Masterson will have a strong bench of Marv Tile, Doug Scott, Florian Matsalla and Hesh Rotman for use if the starters tire.

Any title designs the Blues may have will have to be shown to-night if they want to get off to a good start.

Baby Blues Lose Season's Opener

By JOHN WILSON

Two periods of rather shabby hockey, the occasional hole in an otherwise airtight defence, along with a definite affinity for hitting the goal-post, all combined to help the Ryerson Rams edge our Baby Blues out of Scarboro Arena Gardens to the tune of 3-2.

While the Ryersonians featured a fast-skating attack, they were, for the most part, outplayed by the Intermediates, except in the first period, when the boys from the Institute held the upper hand.

Gene Robillard and Jim Wilkes gave Varsity their two tallies, while Caico, with two, and Prescott were the Ryerson marksmen. The Baby Blues found tremendous support in freshmen goalie Hugh Currie, who constantly foiled the Rams' attack, when the Blue defence had failed.

Minus Senior import Bob Logie, and winger Clair Fisher, the Intermediates opened the first period with shaky play, not used to the arena, and after only a week and a half of team practice. Ryerson struck for two goals at 10:10 and 11:25, both the result of three-man breakaways on a lone Blue defenceman.

The second stanza saw Ryerson riding high on their two-goal lead, but the Varsity club had shaken off their ineffectiveness, and Robillard started to close the gap at 1:40 just after a face-off in the Rams' end. Ryerson answered with Caico's second goal at 4:33, when Hugh Currie fumbled a high shot into the crease and Caico's waiting stick.

In the scoreless third period tempers began to flare and five penalties were handed out, three to the Intermediates and two to Ryerson. Coach Jack Wheldrake took Currie out of the nets in favor of an extra attacker with only a minute left in the game, but the six forwards failed to tie it up, although Wilkes hit the goalpost three times in succession.

Although constantly complaining about what seemed to be fair officiating, Prescott played a very good game for Ryerson, along with Walkinshaw.

The forward line of Clair Fisher, Gene Robillard, and Bob Primeau shone for the Baby Blues, while defencemen Chuck Bull and Herb Tilson were quite effective.

While naturally disappointed, Coach Wheldrake was not at all displeased and expects a much better showing in the league-opener on Friday night.

Saints A Top Meds A 5-2

In a girls' hockey game played Monday afternoon, St. Hilda's A's trimmed Med's A's to the tune of 5-2. In the first period, play was rather slow as the girls seemed to have trouble in getting organized. Near the end of the period, however, Ann Lawson tallied for St. Hilda's with a hard shot from the blue line.

The Saints started quickly in the second period when a good pass from Heather MacPherson put Scotty Mathews in the clear and Scotty made no mistake as she drove the puck past Med's goalie, Marg. Norman, for the score. Meds looked as if they might come back when Sally Sarles skated through the whole St. Hilda's team, but a good save by Phyl Challen kept the Saints ahead by their two-goal margin.

Early in the third period Heather MacPherson scored unassisted on a beautiful goal as she stickhandled around her opponent and slapped the puck into the open side of the ned. Meds replied with a goal by Marilyn Sonley which came on a rebound. Then St. Hilda's tallied with another goal by Heather MacPherson as Scotty Mathews assisted and a few minutes later Heather returned the gesture as she assisted when Scotty scored. In the last minute of play, a shot by Sally Sarles caromed off a skate and trickled into the open corner of the net past Phyl Challen.

POT's Defeat St. Hilda's 2-1

POT and Saint Hilda's seconds made their first bid in the hockey schedule yesterday at noon as the POTs drove their way to a two and close to a three to one win over the little Saints.

Even for a woman's game it was slow going and if the referee had called all the offsides and icing the pucks it would still have been going on. Both teams showed a sorry lack of power in going after the puck and delaying the game with offsides. Defences were weak though the losing team seemed to be a little quicker on the skates.

Jane Russel tallied the opener in the first period of play and the second part passed by as such. Most of the play wandered from end to end, the gals swinging in there whenever the puck came to the surface. Early in the third period, POTs smashed another past the Saints goalie. After a few more offsides, some of which were uncalled, Sandra Wallace of POTs came forth with a very nice tally from the right of the net by the blue line. It looked as if they were going to do it again but a quick shot from one of the POT's sticks was abruptly stopped in its tracks by the Saint Hilda's goalie.

Hockey Blues Make Moves Fourth Place From Cellar

The University of Toronto's hockey team made a couple of important moves last week-end: (1) They moved out of the cellar with a 5-2 win over Laval, which leaves them two points behind the third-place Lavalians and two ahead of McGill, which is in fourth spot but has three games in hand. (2) Rookie centre Don Cossar, by scoring two goals and one assist showed up in the league's individual scoring race, tying Laval's Andre Marceau for fifth place.

They get a chance to improve their positions in both departments this week-end, when they travel east for games in the Montreal Forum Friday night against McGill Redmen and Verdun Arena against the first-place University of Montreal Carabins.

The Blues had lost five games and tied one before last Friday's game but looked very impressive in dropping the Laval squad 5-2. The Don Cossar, Ken Lawson, Johnny Akitt line erupted for four third-period goals to put the game on ice. Cossar netted two of them and Lawson and Akitt one each.

Johnny Akitt is Varsity's top goal-getter. He's got four in the four league games so far, which makes him third in the league in that department. This line has collaborated for nine goals (the Blues have 14 in all) and seven assists.

Although coach Jack Kennedy is unlikely to make many changes from last week's team, which won in such impressive fashion, he may have to make a shift in the defence corps. Last week, five were dressed: Bill Moreau, Lou Appleby, John Tolton, Mal Hughes and Colin Ashton, which left Dan Tovey out of action. The injured Paul Prendergast will likely be ready to play this weekend.

Pharmacy 3-1 Top Treemen

Intramural hockey action saw Pharmacy defeat Forestry 3-1 in a late fixture played at Varsity Arena. The Pill-pushers took an early lead and were never headed though the Forestry men fought back fiercely, trying persistently for the winning counters. But alas, alack they never got them and the game ended with Pharmacy well ahead, victorious and triumphant.

Junior UC Grab Top Spot Smother Skule With 4-1 Win

Still undefeated, Junior UC yesterday romped into the lead in Group II, with a 4-1 victory over Junior Skule in Varsity Arena.

Skule had a slight advantage for the opening five minutes but then the Artsmen got untracked and turned the game into a walkaway, scoring four goals before getting a reply from the Engineers.

UC goalie Len Ostry was robbed of his shutout with a high, easy shot at 13:05 of the second period as he fanned in an attempt to catch it. Passmore, Wansborough, Banks and Standing were the UC goalgetters.

German, in the SPS goal, was continually left without protection, although two of the second period UC goals were screeened shots. Banks slapped home the third Red and White goal at 6:45, standing right in front of the Skule net, just after Wansborough had made it 2-0 at 4:15. Standing added another for insurance at 10:13 and then the Artsmen settled back on their comfortable margin.

Wilson and Weir were best for SPS, along with Hewson, Len Ostry, in goal, and Chris Wansborough at the blueline held up the UC defence, while Passmore and King were best in the attacking vein

Costly Wire Boomerangs, UBC Burners Pass Hat

When the students at UBC burned an effigy of Colonel McCormack, publisher of the Chicago Herald Tribune, they did not realize that there would be financial implication. It seems that the students sent McCormack a collect telegram, in which they told him what they thought of him. He sent it back.

The telegram was sent on daily press rates but when it was refused, the rate, for the use of press only, was removed and the wire doubled in price. The cost reached the vicinity of $40, which the students responsible found difficult to pay.

Before too long little collection cans appeared on the campus. The cans, distributed by the students who had to pay for the telegram, proved moderately successful in collecting enough to cover the bill.

The effigy burning which followed the incident in Toronto by one month took place on a rainy evening at the end of November. There was a great deal of student support for the burning at the time.

seven points. Cohen along with the afore mentioned played well in a losing cause. Howie Dick was the lad who played best for UC, continually bringing up the ball and trying to set up plays. Although they lost, the UC men showed that they have potentiality which could be developed into something with more practise and the know-how of breaking a zone defence.

Varsity Confidential

Slyographical Statistics

By MANI THALER

Today's issue of The Varsity has had to be scrapped because our printers were stricken early last night with severe attacks of nausea. This was about press-time, and they had just completed copyreading the stuff our reporters (we have one) and our editors (we have two at the last count) had sent in. However, the printing crew blamed low visibility for their affliction, though one pale copy boy was heard muttering between spasms that the sight of blood sickened him, even if it were only (or is it "was only"?) the Queen's English that was being murdered.

Anyway, to get even, we decided to slip to our readers, if any, a little biographical background on our contributors. This story is false, except for the characters and events in it. These have been left unchanged to protect the guilty.

Algernon Fauntelroy does not need an introduction, and it is best that way. Though for the past few years he has been busy graduating from the University of Toronto, his main occupation, where his undoubted intellectual capacities have had a field day, has been as head udder-drier with a local dairy. He has recently been tickled silly when Time magazine accepted his cover story on L-shaped baseball diamonds, and has not yet recovered. His spare time is spent on a definitive biographical study: McCarthy — A Study of Modesty and Achievement. Otherwise, he just putters around.

"Slim" otherwise known as Percival de Fattehyde, was born in the mountains of middle Saskatchewan, and he hasn't been the same since. He cannot supply us with any more information, owing to a short memory. Since the war he has been working on the Toronto Telephone Book, where there befell him several adventures, and has many fascinating stories to tell. What Goes? — in this issue, is not one of them. At present he is in hiding with Geraldine Devereux in a nearby Italian restaurant where together they study the art of spaghetti eating. They like it.

Wilhelmina Misanthrope, the author of "The Use of Tombstones in Makeup," writes: "In my earlier days I used to pose for cheesecake, but have switched to psychology because it is more revealing." She rarely smiles, except when cleaning her teeth, which she does off and on as a concession to custom. She specializes in shrieking which gets results and feeding turtles with exotic names. Her photographs look like her.

Veronica Valentine (as he is affectionately called) has never been troubled by "that one talent which is death to hide." Besides writing an article for our next Christmas issue (which most of us will be missing) in a style which has been compared unfavourably with that of Mickey Spillane, he is an actor of sorts. He has recently had the title role in the campus hit smash "What's the Use?" He lives his part

Terry O'Hara is having a good time for himself among the glens and "emerald streams" (as he puts it with characteristic originality) of Ireland. He is investigating a certain pegeen whose address he found in a can of Scotch tobacco, and will report his findings in his "Speaking of Sport" column.

John Undersiung, who prefers to be known to her friends (?) as Ratsie contributed the article "The Private Life of Our Football Stars," which is not appearing in this issue. Her favourite sport is wrestling with halfbacks on the sideline.

Geraldine Devereux is the daughter of Irish missionaries in Hollywood, where she picked up the habit of swimming in the nude. She is now having a gay time unlearning it in easy stages. "The climate here is too cold," she explains. "Canadian boys are so unimaginative." Last week she was out of circulation, recovering from the shock of seeing her article on Venetian blinds published by a "leading" magazine. "I copied every single word from Hemingway," she says.

Francois Vieillard has become a celebrity of sorts. Champion, the national youth magazine, has chosen him "Young man of the Year," for raising the most subscriptions in Hamilton. Since then we have been unable to talk to him. He's hiding.

Double Talk About Voting

"Resolved: that voting should be compulsory", will be the subject of the second Interfaculty Debate on Thursday, January 14, 1954. The School of Nursing will speak against the Victoria women in Vic Alumnae Hall, and St. Joseph's will debate against St. Hilda's in St. Joseph's College.

This will be the second of three debates, the winners of which will meet of the other groups to win the University debating championship.

Friend

This IS Serious

A front page news story in this issue charges the Hart House Employment Service with discriminatory practices. This is a serious charge. Nevertheless, The Varsity reporter who handled the case has come up with some very startling facts.

We feel that discrimination, in whatever way it shows its ugly head, is too rotten to have around this campus. It contradicts everything taught in our School of Social Work, Anthropology Department, and Psychology Department.

The charge against the Employment Service has already been forwarded to the Department of Labor in Ottawa. Not only is discrimination contrary to democratic principle, but it is against the Fair Employment Practices laws of this province and country.

The graduate student in question appears to have had trouble getting a job because of his color. We challenge anyone who believes in our way of life to say this was right or just.

The reporter had his troubles too. He had applications forms ripped from his hands; he got very little co-operation from the employers he quizzed. But he did a fine job. He turned up a lot of dirt that should not have been there in the first place.

The Canadian National Express has apparently received a directive to change its application forms. We are not saying this is all a result of The Varsity's research. We do hope that our story, in some way, contributed to getting rid of any discriminatory questions on the application forms of that company.

What is shocking is that they ever existed.

Admissions of discrimination have been all too frequent. Dresden; an hotel in London; various Toronto companies; a Toronto barber. But to have it admitted right here on our campus is enough to knock the legs out from under anyone.

It is a credit to the Student's Administrative Council that their Housing Service does not deal with discriminating clients. But that does not go far enough. The SAC runs the Employment Service — and it has now been charged with discriminating against certain students on grounds of color.

Nationality, race and religion can never be reasons for unemployment in a democracy. If they are, then we suggest it's time for a change. Everyone has a right to live and that, unfortunately, has come to mean a right to a job. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights makes this point as clear as it possibly can be made in the modern world.

Mr. E. A. Halse is the director of the student Employment Service. If he discriminates — and if this is proved — then he should be replaced.

The Other Slant

The India Story

By RAJ MITTRA

"India and the East" is a hot topic of this day There have been quite a large number of people from the West, including Varsity students, visiting India in recent times with curiosity in their hearts. India likes to welcome all who are interested in her.

THESE VISITORS, when they are back home again, have a natural desire to talk about things as they saw and felt them. Some are wise in judgment but most of them are not, as revealed by the comments they make on current problems in India, e.g., "Caste System", "Impact of Western culture on Indian civilization", "Freedom of Women in Indian Society", and so on.

What they write sounds interesting to people here and it sounds interesting to me, too. I am in fact amused to see how people can assume an air of authority with mere superficial knowledge, gathered from a bird's eye-view of deep-rooted problems. Some of these people go farther and predict the "Future of India" in concluding their statement, though they have been continuously confessing their lack of deep knowledge in these particular directions.

"INDIAN WOMEN DON'T ENJOY equality in society and this is dictated by Hindu religious concepts," observed one of my friends recently back from a hurricane tour of India. The proof or supporting statement tells us that this conclusion follows from his experience that Indian women in a village didn't dance before him to show their hospitality.

This is almost equivalent to an offense that a visitor from the East would be supposed to have committed if he concluded, after an hour's visit round the campus on the night of a Pep Rally, that "The Canadian women are trying to approach the Hollywood ideal by their bust appeal. The Canadian social customs have no place for moral values." The analogy, though not quite similar in strict sense, goes to show that though "Ignorance is bliss", it may be blister to somebody affected by the malrepresentation.

It will not be out of place to talk briefly about the above-mentioned topics.

THE CASTE SYSTEM: Few in the West know about the origin of this system which was founded purely for social reasons. The classification was based on the trades handled by the different groups of people. Thousands of years back, the major classes were of the following divisions: 1 Pursuit of knowledge — religious worship and education, (2) Defence — rulers and army men, (3) Economic welfare — business and trade circles, (4) Service—serving the above three.

The teachers and religious preachers were held in high respect in the eyes of all. The other three were of equal status in the eyes of the king for the purposes of law and judgment. By thousands of years of tradition, however, it so developed that people usually built up their character according to heredity. Born in a family of one of these castes and growing up in a favourable atmosphere, a child would pick up the trade of the family by inheritance.

THE PLIGHT OF THE SERVING class was, however, poor. As time passed on they were suppressed by the others. It would be fair to compare them to the slaves in the western world in the last century.

The call of human rights and civil liberty can never be suppressed indefinitely. The message of truth moved all thinkers, poets, and philosophers in the nineteenth century as becomes evident from their writings. In the latter part, the reshuffling of trades made it almost impossible to classify any even in a broad sense. Mahatma (the great soul) Gandhi came with his message of spiritual awakening. He called the suppressed people the Harijans or "Children of God". He had much appreciation for John Ruskin and thus he impressed his teaching by his life. In five years after Independence we have seen a tremendous social revolution to break the prejudices of an almost five-thousand-year tradition. There still remains a lot to be done, for it takes infinite time to change the hearts of all people, more so when they are mostly illiterate. No educational, political, or social circles in towns and in a number of villages have a place for discrimination. The state is making all efforts, and following it are the industrial circles. In contrast, the lawmakers in some Western countries and South Africa are finding better means of suppression. Anybody who has been in India and has opened the second page of any of the dailies has found numerous opportunities offered to so-called Harijans in all circles. Today in all ministries, offices, and other circles there are quite a few Harijans as officers of those whom they were supposed to serve by caste. "Despite Gandhi's efforts, the system still remains as it is . . . " is not the correct statement of facts. It should read, "Gandhi's effort has made great changes and it would take infinite time to change the masses even though the rate is rapid."

A DEFINITE INDICATION that the problem was more social than religious was indicated by the fate of some of the Harijans who took to Christianity in the last years of the nineteenth century and the first few years of this. Many found that a bar was still being maintained by so-called-higher-status Christians. Today any conversion is almost hard to find for these people have already realized the value of attachment to their original faith where their rights are appreciated.

Our Readers Write

Not A Brave New World

The Editor,
The Varsity:

After a flurry of letters in the recent religious controversy in which various people have mounted their respective horses and ridden off in several directions, it is surprising to see a statement by a man riding even harder and faster in yet another direction labelled by the editors as a summary. Unwilling as we are to rework this issue we feel we must remove a few distortions which this "summary" has introduced.

Christianity is not a blanket term covering all people who live in what is so often called a Christian country. Christians are those who believe that God revealed Himself to man in Jesus Christ, who said: "I am the way, the truth and the light; no man cometh to the Father but by me." Most of Mr. Lee's examples refer to those who have accepted an accumulated tradition which is steeped in Christian teaching, but who have not come to God to accept the undeserved gift of forgiveness of their sins and the righteousness of Christ imputed to them through the grace of God, and Christ's sacrifice. Living as a Christian, accompanied as it is by much human stumbling, begins after one has accepted Christ. All the righteousness that is found in man — be it much or little — is not enough to bring him to God. Until this is realized, the world's Christianity can be only a futile struggle, a hypocritical veneer.

Mr. Lee assumes the latter to be real Christianity and compares it with his new religion of humanism, which is actually one of the oldest in the world —man's concern with himself in this world alone. In our humanistic civilization we have not succeeded in creating a brave new world by exalting Man. The only realistic position, we are convinced, is that which acknowledges us as sinners deserving God's judgement; then, forsaking our sin and believing Christ has died for us, we trust Him fully and give our lives to Him.

Disgusting Cowardice

Editor,
The Varsity:

The detention of the two U. of T. students who were vacationing in Florida has caused a great deal of comment, most of it against the McCarran Immigration and Nationality Act. In Thursday's Varsity one student chose the unorthodox approach of attacking one of the two students, E. S. Rogers. I am in no position to judge whether the charges brought against Rogers are true or not, but I am disgusted by the cowardice of any one who would bring up such charges and then hide by choosing to remain anonymous.

Both sides of this story have yet to be heard but let us hope that the next person to attack the behavior of one or both of the students will have enough strength of character to be ready to defend his position.

Varsity Charges Investigated

SAC Meeting Sets Up Group To Probe Discrimination Case

A committee, comprising the executive of the SAC, was formed last night to investigate the charges of discrimination made yesterday in The Varsity. "The charges are very serious", said Publications Commissioner Horace Krever as he proposed the motion to set up the committee. "Mr. Halse should be exonerated" he said.

The investigating committee, one of three organized at last night's SAC meeting, will include President John Stalker, Vice-president Jennifer Rickard, Finance Commissioner Don Lowe, Horace Krever, E. A. Macdonald and Miss A. E. M. Parkes.

Krever said, "There is usually a great deal of exaggeration in The Varsity." He felt that the seriousness of the charges was of importance since it implicated SAC as well as Halse.

The charges were made by Daniel G. Hill, a negro graduate student. He charged that Halse had not notified him regarding his employment with CNX when he was one of twenty students hired. Mr. Halse is a campus representative of the National Employment Service who runs the SAC Employment Service.

AVR reactivated

The possibility of the AVR, not held this year for lack of a producer, will be considered by a committee set up last night. The motion as proposed by Earl Berger, UC representative, was "To set up a committee to review the situation for an AVR for next year who will be empowered to call for producers".

Berger, the first nominated for the new committee by Scott Symons, later had to decline due to his heavy duties in connection with the UTDU. Those nominated were John Kuusisto, Dick Davies, Valerie Spence and O. W. Gott.

Football Tickets

The controversial Student's Reserved Ticket sale at intercollegiate finals will be discussed by a committee made up of reps from Meds, Engineering, Dents, Pharmacy and Forestry. Rodger Talbot, Men's Athletic Commissioner reported that J. P. Loosemore, Financial Director of the Athletic Association will accept any workable idea by the students to solve the problem.

The complaint was that students on the south end of the campus did not have a chance to get the tickets at the Varsity Arena box office because of timetable and distance difficulties. The tickets were on sale for one day only and all seats were reserved.

Alcohol Forum

A letter was received from Chaplain John Rowe of Hart House explaining a project of a Forum of Alcohol, to be held in the spring. The council was asked for $25.00 to help defray the expenses of publicity, the request being turned over to the Finance Commission.

The principle behind the Forum was approved unanimously by the council. The idea, being headed by Roger Bull, will include both men and women although it is a Hart House event.

CAPAC Fees

From now on and retroactive to November, 1951, fees for music played at Hart House dances. The decision was based on a recent Supreme Court ruling in a similar case.

If the charges for this music are paid through Hart House the retroactive dues to the Association will be subject to a 25% discount according to Finance Commissioner Don Lowe.

CoSec Meets In Istanbul Canadian Students Attend

A large delegation of Canadian representatives are attending the current meeting of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat (CoSec) being held in Istanbul, Turkey. This is the largest delegation ever sent by Canada to an annual CoSec meeting, and its purpose is to get the voice of the university students of this country on the Supervising Committee.

The group, headed by NFCUS president, Tony Enriquez, consists of five people. Among the five are Jean de Margerie, NFCUS overseas commissioner, Marcel Leblanc, NFCUS International Acticities chairman; Bill Norrie, ex-student president at the University of Manitoba; Enriquez, and another private Canadian student who has been studying in Europe.

Enriquez made it clear before he left that the delegation would not be costing the National Federation any money. Both Enriquez and Leblanc are being financed by the Foundation for Youth and Student Welfare," an American organization of business men and political personalities".

The three private representatives will be paying their own way.

The United States has represented North America on the Supervising Committee since the founding of CoSec in 1950. Representation on that committee is decided on a geographical basis.

"We believe Canada can play a very important role in CoSec," Enriquez said in explaining why the large delegation wanted to replace the US on the committee. "Canada has much to offer because it is a bridge between the European and American points of view and, therefore, affords a better basis for cooperation."

Enriquez explained that the Foundation for Youth and Student Affairs was really behind the CoSec offer to finance all the transportation costs for the two NFCUS reps. A good deal of the Federation's financial troubles arose when Toronto repudiated the per capita fee increase earlier this fall.

The NFCUS president hinted that about 30 per cent of the Federations finances may be donated by the Foundation.

CoSec was founded when the Studen Unions of various "western" countries decided to combine after they had withdrawn from the Communist-dominated International Union of Students in 1949.

Almost As Rough As Rugby Game Blues Down Mac In B-Ball Battle

By MOISHE REITER

The opener of the Intercollegiate Basketball League for the 1954 sason, in which Varsity's Blues scored a double victory over the McMaster Marauders in Hart House last night, carried the spectators back some months to the football season. Steve Oneschuk must have felt right at home when Mac's Ken Stanley and cohorts came tackling him just short of the basket in vain attempt to stop the little boys Blue in their drive to a 61-49 victory over the visiting Marauders, while the Varsity Seconds made it a full night for the Blues defeating the Buccaneers 66-47.

It was a night of vicious play that resembled Thursday night at Maple Leaf Gardens more than big league basketball, that game of skill and brains. With both teams using a zone defence in the cramped Hart House gym, there was bound to be trouble, and trouble there was. After playing a first quarter of scramble ball which had the Blues in front by a 19-15 margin, Mac seemed to lose all interest in the ball, shifting their attention to the Varsity players who were doing most to frustrate their winning intentions. George Stulac, Blues' best with 20 points, came in for special attention from the visitors, being bounced with a consistent frequency off the walls and chairs. Besides his points, George also managed to pick up a black eye and an assortment of other mementos of this clash. Steve Oneschuk was not so fortunate and had settle for a bruised shoulder and smashed face. These were the result of a beautiful flying tackle around his neck as he was innocently laying up a shot. He must have forgotten to ask Marauders permission to approach their hoop.

Marv Tile and Jimmy Russell were also recipients of little trophies from Mac. Marv was kicked clear to Brazil, and Jimmy was given proof, thanks to probing Mac teeth and fingernails, that he too has red blood.

Though the Blues set out to play a game worthy of the University and their skill, they were forced by Mac roughness to drop to the scramble ball level. This is not mere "home-town" griping, but the general feeling of everyone, the Mac coaches included. When mere basketball failed to break the Blue zone, Mac's Bert Raphael went to work with his favourite Judo chop trying to hack his way to the hoop. It didn't take long for him to foul out of the game. Lorne Wrigglesworth, the old man of the mountain, played excellent ball, leading all scorers with a total of 22 for the night's work.

In the preliminary game, fans saw some of the night's best basketball with Varsity playing a smooth, polished game while the Buccaneers struggled with them to the final horn. Al Vaichulis was the Baby Blues' top man all around, scoring 16 points and controlling the backboards. Tom Leung starred for Mac getting 11 points and setting up most of their plays.

Blue Bits: Blame for the miserable display of brawling in the feature cannot fairly be laid to either Mac or Varsity, though the visitors were the worst offenders. Negligence on the part of the referees let the game go out of hand and timidity lo enforce the rules and crack down later on had both squads working themselves into a near punch-drunk state. When they finally did start to hand out penalties they seemed to do so at random or whenever the muse hit them. Whatever their method, it was used too late to save the game from becoming the mess in which it ended.

Spotlight On Far East WUS Illustrated Talk

Personal reports of a major international seminar will be given tonight in the auditorium of the School of Nursing, at 8:00 p.m.

Sponsored by the SAC its theme will be an analysis of the British impact on India, Pakistan and Ceylon. Five University of Toronto representatives, Elizabeth Scroggie, Tim Armstrong, Dr. John Hastings, Mike Chubb, Professor James Ham, will report on the recent international summer seminar held in Mysore, India.

The future of these three countries in international politics and their internal problems, such as their health conditions, and their educational system, will be the basis for discussion. Colored movies and slides will also be shown.

The students spent the past summer in India with about 30 other Canadians, ten Americans and about 50 Asians. The theme of the trip in the Far East was "Human Implications of Development Planning". The seminar was made possible by a $40,000 Ford Foundation grant and by the international office of World University Service.

The forum today was organized by WUS chairman, Doug Hamlin, to bring first-hand information on the Far East and India to the student body of this University.

Blood Donations

Skule Cannon, now held by Forestry. Hugh Hanson, Blood Campaign representative from Vic, said "Vic has over 100 donors already What's the reason for UC's poor showing — is it bloodless as well as Godless?"

SAC President, John Stalker, said "We students can perform a real service to the community with very little effort on our part. There is a desperate need for blood, and university students can set a splendid example by co-operating with this present campaign."

'Oo Did It?

The Tattler

By BOB BROWN

On Tuesday, a rather unusual issue of The Varsity appeared, because our printers were stricken by a severe attack of nausea. On Wednesday, an article appeared in The Varsity attempting to account for Tuesday's issue. This is an article attempting to explain Wednesday's article which attempted to explain Tuesday's paper.

The writer of yesterday's article, "Slyographical Statistics" is one Ranting Tattle-taler, a fast man with a slow phrase. A student (?) in the factory of Medicine, Tattle-taler has worked in boiler factories, Chinese-language newspapers, and children's publishing houses. All these experiences are extremely helpful to him in his job as Feature and Libel Editor.

Tomorrow, an article will appear attempting to explain this one.

Skule Rejects Visit Of NFCUS Chairman

The Engineering Society Executive Monday evening turned down a proposal to invite NFCUS Committee Chairman of the SAC, Scott Symons, to present his views on NFCUS. The executive felt they had heard all the arguments on NFCUS, and they did not want to raise what they called a dead issue.

It was also agreed at the meeting to pay half of a bill of $25 for damage done during the Vic Bob Apple battle in September. President Don Fredenburg, IV Civil, pointed out that the VCU had not received any bill, and said he did not see why the Engineering Society should pay it all.

Some members thought the Society should not take responsibility for such damage, as they said it would encourage more of the same. Doug. L. Carnahan, IV Eng. Bus. suggested that the VCU be billed for the LGMB uniforms which were taken by Vic two years ago.

Don Andrews IV Civil, announced that this year's Skule At Home will be held on Feb. 4 at the Royal York Hotel.

Cannon And Globulin Are Goal Blood Donations Are Painless

The Success of the Polio Prevention Campaign in Canada depends upon Canadians giving 150,000 more pints of blood this year to provide Gamma Globulin, a blood product used in the prevention of Polio, said Miss Bertha Miles, Clinical Director for the Red Cross. Speaking at an organizational meeting in U.C. yesterday, she stressed the vital need for student support of this blood collection.

Registration cards for appointment to give blood may be obtained from college or Faculty campaign representatives, from Red Cross booths located in numerous places around the campus, or from the SAC office in the Observatory. These cards should be completed by tonight, so that the appointments, which will take place next week in the new School of Nursing, can be arranged. Any student unable to register, or to give blood next week, can make a separate appointment at the Red Cross Clinic at 67 College St.

Miss Miles said "Blood donations are completely painless and harmless. Any person between the ages of 18 and 65 and in reasonably good health can and should give blood." Al Davidson, Medical Society Representative, said "People only have to give blood once to realize that it is a completely normal experience. There is nothing to fear but fear itself."

Dr. Milton Brown, professor of the School of Hygiene, gave the meeting a brief survey of the preparation, use and effectiveness of G. G. Dr. Brown stated that a controlled experiment in the USA involving 55,000 children had shown a significant reduction of poliomyelitis cases among those inoculated. He also said that the donated blood is broken down into several fractions, each of which, including G. G., has a specific use. Nothing is wasted, and a supply of the othere blood fractions, including blood plasma, is stored.

A record is being kept of the number of donations from each faculty or college. The faculty having the highest percentage of its students give blood will win the

The first 1954 session of the UC Parliament reconvenes today at 4.00 p.m. in the JCR to decide whether "the European Defense Community is essential to the preservation of world peace", Literary Director, David Gauthier said last night.

Larry Levenstein will argue in support of the resolution that " 'In unity there is strength'. Only if Europe is united, can it remain a significant power in world affairs."

Speaker for the opposition, Les Lawrence said "only blocks and stones and worse than senseless things can fail to see that the resolution should be rejected."

Larry Stone, the other speaker for the government said "Our opponents have rocks in their heads."

"As usual I blame everything on the Americans EDC is their baby; the Americans know nothing about world problems; therefore EDC is no good," said Pete Martin, who will speak against the motion.

UN Group Hears Speaker On Egyptian Rehab Center

The United Nations Club is holding its first meeting of the New Year this evening at 8:00 p.m., in the Assembly Room of Falconer Hall.

He established a rehabilitation center for the blind under the auspices of the United Nations Technical Assistance Programme with the co-operation of the Egyptian government. Mr. McGill will speak to the club about his personal experiences in setting up the Demonstration Center for the Blind and other such humanitarian work done by the United Nations in general.

Mr. McGill was blinded in 1927, went to the Ontario School for the Blind in Brantford and finished his university education at Michigan State, graduating with an M. A. in Economics in 1935. When I Left It

Tito's Yugoslavia

By DUSHAN SUDAR

This is the first of a series of two articles by Dushan Sudar, III Vic, a recent arrival to Canada from Yugoslavia.

Yugoslavia was, until 1948, the best and strongest Soviet satellite. After her unexpected break with Stalin, she became his number one enemy; her governing party soon became well-known as the national Communist party; until today she is being very much talked and written about. Speculations are many and different, but the only judge there is and cold be, is the Yugoslav people, who have suffered nine years under the dictatorial, experimental and demagogic regime of Marshal Tito.

IN A FREE SOCIETY the people judge their representatives by how much they keep the democratic institutions—Parliament, elections, opposition, free press, non-political, independent courts. Professor G. M. A. Grube of Trnity College in his article "FREEDOM AND THE CCF" said: "Parliament is the citadel of our democracy." Let us see what is the citadel of Yugoslavian system.

In 1951, three years after their break with Cominform, the Yugoslav Communist leaders called themselves the only pure Marxists, accusing Soviet leaders as traitors to Marxism-Leninism. For them "The dictatorship of the proletariat" is the way to a better life, to Communism. But, they also called themselves democrats, socialists and the most progressive in the world. The former is for the people, the latter for those abroad. But let us look at the main facts.

OPPOSITION, FREE PRESS, and non-political courts are entirely non-existent in Yugoslavia. There is Parliament, elections, yes—but they are distorted, false. The members of Parliament are elected without opponents. They are all members of the Communist Party, except a few. They pass every code, every single law by acclamation. In fact all the laws are made before, in the Communist Party's meetings. The citadel of the Yugoslav system is the Politbureau of Tito, Kardelj, Rankovic, Djilas and Pijade. What they say and decide, must be done.

There are no political rights in Yugoslavia—the regime is dictatorial.

IT SEEMS TOO HARD TO EXPLAIN the economic rights in Yugoslavia. In fact, it is simply ridiculous to talk about economic justice in a society where the basic political rights are dead. Yes, when I left, there were many factors of so called security—there was free hospital, medical and dental care for the majority, three weeks holidays with pay, full old age pension, free education including university, but what is the use of all that for a man who must not have his own opinion, his own will, who always fears for his life? Where there is a lack of freedom, plus a very low standard of living, security loses its meaning, its purpose.

When I left Yugoslavia there was still food rationing. Food like white bread, butter, rice, coffee, sardines, chocolate, bananas, oranges were not available at all or in small quantities on the black market. Coal and wood were most severely rationed. A married couple received one ton, a family with children two tons of the worst coal for one year. I'll never forget the winter of 1950-51, when I waited all night and all morning for a half-ton of wood-coal (lignite) with another hundred people in front of a coal yard. Textiles were not rationed, but prices were fantastic. Clerk earned 3-4000 Dinars per month, a special skilled worker 4-5000, but a man's suit cost 30,000 Dinars, pair of shoes 5,000. The simple necessities of life such as combs, tooth brushes, razors, nylon items, were scarce and expensive. There were no washing machines or refrigerators; nobody made them. Radios cost 50,000 Dinars. Practically, no man in the whole country owned a car.

The general economic situation was very unstable, almost collapsing. The American aid saved it, but the megalomaniac and unrealistic plans in industry and the forced farmers' co-operatives in agriculture, which are typical in a Communist country still, were the main characteristics in the economic field. There was no private enterprise at all in Yugoslavia. Everything from the smallest stores, groceries, barbershops, restaurants, hotels, tourist camps, to the greatest steel plants was controlled and organized by the government. Not having enough qualified people they moved engineers, clerks, teachers, doctors and others from one town to another against their will. Thus playing with the people as with tools, they explained by saying that everyone had to sacrifice himself for the future of socialism. "The searching of new ways" was the latest slogan of the "people's" government before I left. For instance, they passed a law about the so-called "Worker's Council," according to which all factories, mines, agricultural, municipal and other state economic enterprises were to be managed by the workers' collectives, within the state economic plan. But the workers and all Yugoslav people are very well aware that they live in an experimental regime.

But Enjoy Yourself

It is often the source of some amazement to us to contemplate the number of students at this university who admit they are here for no other purpose than to put in time or collect money. These students are undoubtedly enjoying themselves, but it is uncanny to imagine such selfishness and disrespect among university-level men and women.

The worse offence is the attention that is taken away from students who are sincerely interested in their subject. Most professors are willing enough to take considerable pains with some students. The unforgivable point is that these students seem to assume their right to this individual attention. They are there for the fun of it, and no one is going to spoil it.

Also unforgivable is the disrespect shown the professor. These earnest individuals must assume that all their students are equally intrested, and cannot help being taken in. Such waste of sincere effort is about the worst insult a student could muster. Some teachers may deserve such treatment, but for the most part it is unjustly rude.

The one consolation is that for most of them, the students won't be back next year.

A New Service

We welcome the news that television may be accorded the members of Hart House.

Arguments advanced against this say that TV is a waste of money, and its installation will not serve the purpose of the House because it will reduce discussion.

Hardly. As it was pointed out by Warden McCulléy, the set will be placed in a small room and operated on the principle of the Record Room, which, it would be difficult to deny, serves a valuable purpose.

TV does and may present good programmes, for which some inhabitants of this theatrically still underdeveloped city yearn. TV may regiment the minds of some people, but surely we should have enough faith in students to trust that they will not fall prey to this threat.

Those who suggest the opposite might themselves be accused of thought control.

Since the set would be brought down to one of the large common rooms of Hart House for special occasions, some students will be able to see programmes they might otherwise not be able to afford.

For suggesting to provide the members of Hart House and especially resident students with a service they might otherwise not enjoy, we commend the Warden. The House Committee, we feel, would be justified in approving his proposal.

Not A Crank, Not A Swift

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Beliefs of majority are not subject to ridicule, says Mr. Holden in Friday's Varsity. If there is anything at all in this world deserving ridicule those are the views of majority and of those aspiring to be majority. Views of cranks matter but little. Unfortunately John Lee is not a crank. Also unfortunately no one around this campus is a Swift.

Yet his views deserve ridicule. They are important enough. All I will try to show is that they are inconsistent with John's premises, illogical, immoral, dangerous, contagious, and above all, unethical. I hope to succeed in showing inconsistency. We will have to leave the ridiculc for a now hidden Swift.

Well, Lee is inconsistent. He believes in Reason, supreme and undivided. Let people reason well and they shall get there soon enough. Where? I am sure Lee sees before him the world to which people should direct themselves.

But is this reasonable? In each case I know of no logical way to show that a world of freedom, brotherhood and justice is really desirable. On the other hand there is a system of thinking in terms of which all the above is one Big Lie. I believe in the Brave New World to come, but I also like a dog, by intuition. I do not claim to have arrived at it by Reason, as John Lee evidently must hase. It's a pit John could not talk reason to Nietzsche. We might have had no Second World War.

Is Beethoven a great composer, is Benny Goodman a greater one? Call Reason to help, John, and you will not get far. Show that Macbeth is to be perferred to "I, the Jury"? Try to prove it by logical argument.

After the basic concepts of a science further development is but a kind of a mental game.

Now, the basic concepts are not provable. Still we accept them as true. Why? I don't know. But what about the Reason in relation to basic postulates? John believing in Reason only, and being consistent, should find it impossible to accept the basis. But he does, making the postulates a kind of exception, making the whole knowledge an exception.

Furthermore, his faith that Reason is the thing, proves him a mystic, a name I am sure John dislikes with all his soul.

I still believe it not worthwhile to lead any discussion in different languages. First we have to decide on fundamentals, and only then may we quote St. Paul or Servitus or Al Capp. Until that time it is just waste of effort. It is ridiculous to speak about "prodigal son, a man (who) cannot raise himself until he is reconciled with his Father" to a man who believes that Man does not have to be raised at all.

But it is just as stupid to expect J. Lee, or on the other hand, Mr. W. (Bill) Q. Mollug, Persian Ceramoics 3m, to change their respective outlooks on the basis of a newspaper discussion. I still say, let's drop the subject.

Summary

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The obvious inexperience of the recent contributors to the "religious controversy" in your paper is lamentable. To remedy this situation the following Hexalogue is offered as a guide. A short explanatory note is added for the reader's convenience.

I. "Thou shalt not define thy terms, nor mayest thou grant thine opponent's assumptions." This guarantees that no initial agreement shall bring the controversy to a premature close.

II. "Thou shalt ever make weighted statements." How else can widespread interest by provoked but by arousing a healthy storm of violent indignation?

III. "Never willest thou pretend to understand thy neighbour or his ancestral heritage." Ignorance is that well-known bliss which keeps contention seething for generations.

IV. "Apply not thine ethical standards to thyself, neither clean up thine own back yard." Nohting is so detrimental to a missionary as a bad conscience.

V. "Carry forth thine own beliefs to all the people, for none but the weak rest content merely to show an admirable example." How else will the world be impressed by the virtues of your own convictions?

VI. "Fail not to glorify thine own religion at the expense of every other one." This puts your opponent in his place, in the position of subordination proper for one so stubborn as to cling to idle superstitions.

Helpfully yours,

Want College Groups To Record Approval

By CAROL HOFFMAN

All students organizations in all colleges and faculties of the University will be asked in the very near future to place themselves publicly on record in support of immediate establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries. This system is the one recommended in the Massey Commission's report of 1951.

The Students' Administrative Council Tuesday night unanimously passed the motion requesting this student action. The motion included the resolution to urgently request the Government of Canada to put these recommendations into effect, and to communicate the resolution to the Prime Minister of Canada.

The purpose behind the motion is to aquaint the student body with the details of the Massey report and to create student interest in this question. In this programme of passing resolutions, each faculty and college will discuss the resolution. The students will have the opportunity to show their interest and support.

Last year a delegation from the National Federation of Canadian University Students met with Prime Minister to discuss the implementation of the scholarship clauses in the Massey report. They got absolutely nowhere.

Mr. St. Laurent said that with the taxation problem such as it was, it was impossible to do anything more at present. He also said that there was the difficulty of setting up a board of administration, and the wariness of certain provinces about accepting federal aid.

It was believed that one reason for the failure of the delegation was the lack of solid student support on the campuses. Also there was perhaps not adequate preliminary preparation. By such actions as the student resolutions, it is hoped that future efforts will be more successful.

"An excellent recommendation," said President of the SAC, John Stalker. "I am very pleased that the resolution was passed by the SAC. The students must show that they are concerned and keep pressing the issue. It may not have immediate effect, but I hope that eventually our aims will be realized."

Publications Commissioner, Horace Krever, commented, "In a very real sense the passing of this motion is the most important action taken by the SAC this year. It involves the most vital issue currently concerning the student body as a whole. I hope that the undergraduate organizations of all colleges and faculties will pass similar expressions of opinion. The need for implementing the Massey recommendation in the scholarship area can not be overemphasized."

It was decided last night to consult the University administration about future action. A meeting of the Massey sub committee of the NFCUS part of the External Affairs Committee resolved to send a deputation of four students to President Sidney Smith to discuss further moves.

In February, the national office of NFCUS is planning a country-wide campaign. This is intended to build up public opinion concerning the scholarships to a peak. Then a brief will be presented to the federal government.

Dr. Bissell On Carnegie Tour

Finds US Vague About Canada

A rather pathetic vagueness about Canada and Canadian universities marred the warmth of the reception at the American universities, stated Dr. Bissell, in his report on his trip to the States. The Vice-President of the University of Toronto has recently returned from a tour of certain American Universities.

"Is McGill University in Toronto?" Dr. Bissell was asked at one time. However, he said that in some places unusually detailed knowledge of the Canadian scene and, more flattering, knowledge of the University of Toronto, was widespread.

Dr. Bissell's trip was the final one of three, under the auspices of the Carnegie Corporation. He received a grant from the Corporation to study and discuss administrative problems at other universities. The other two tours were to universities in England and the Canadian West.

Dr. Bissell said that the American trip was of more practical value than the other two. This does not mean, he said, that Canadian universities are indistinguishable from American ones. Administratively however, he said, we are faced by similar problems.

"Occasionally one gets the impression that a large American university is a tremendous corporation that requires just as formidable a hierarchy of officials as a large business corporation," commented Dr. Bissell. "The pattern is much more complex than we are accustomed to."

He said that the modern university has become, in addition to an educational institution, a large and complex business organization, and a public relations service with a national clientel. The president, while still retaining ultimate responsibility, is being forced, in American universities, to withdraw from preliminary stages in administration.

In his opinion, stated Dr. Bissell, the reason for these developments stemmed from two factors. (1) Universities in Canada and the United States are compelled to provide education for all students who meet certain minimum entrance standards, except in certain professional fields, such as medicine. (2) In matters of finance, Canadian and American universities are finding themselves in the position of business corporations that must constantly search for various sources of revenue.

"In Canada and the United States," said Dr. Bissell, "even the state or provincial university cannot afford to be content with legislative grants. They must be quick to develop and to strengthen ties with Alumni, with business and industry, with corporations and with government research agencies, in order to provide adequate funds for the work of the university."

He said that the expansion of administration was inevitable. "We may regret this," he declared, "but we are caught up in a general movement that we can perhaps modify but not arrest."

As well as examining general administrative patterns, Dr. Bissell considered questions of particular interest to the various universities. Student appraisals of teaching, and the relation between general education and specialization were two of the issues. In a new Men's Residence, adapting some English ideas, a middle-aged woman was included to act as a sort of chatelaine. "She exercised," he was informed, "a softening influence on manners that no system of discipline could achive."

Two Saints Debate Voting Decide Compulsion Wrong

Canadians should not be forced to vote was the decision of the St. Hilda's - St. Joseph's interfaculty debate at St. Joseph's College last night. The three judges awarded the decision to St. Hilda's, the opposition, giving them a score of 422 to St. Joseph's 326.

First speaker for the government Ann Sommerville, III St. Joseph's, upheld the motion "Resolved that voting in Canada should be compulsory". She said "Freedom cannot be secured without using Compulsion. No country is truly democratic unless everyone votes." A law of this sort, Miss Sommerville said, would result in a more intelligent electorate, because people, knowing they would be forced to vote, would prepare more thoroughly for it.

Opposing the motion, Scotty Scotty Matthews, IV Trinity, stressed the danger to moral autonomy and individuality which compulsion would bring. Such a measure would open the way to totalitarian government. To get more people out to vote she suggested better education and government rewards for voting.

The second speaker for the government, Nora Laudriau, I St. Joseph's, pointed to Australia, as a successful example of the application of compulsory voting.

Sarah Ditchburn, IV Trin., the last speaker for the opposition doubted if "the benefit to the community would compensate the detriment to individual liberty."

UC Debaters Test Oratory In Robinettes

Velvel Kahn and Mike Benazon defeated Ron Gould and Bernie Davis in the fourth year final debate on Tuesday to enter the semi-finals of the Robinette Debates, said Dave Gauthier, Literary Director of the UC Lit. "They will meet the second year winners, Les Lawrence and Pete Martin," he said. Third year winners Earl Berger and Ron Bidermann will debate with the victors of first year, Larry Levinstein and Larry Stone.

Winners of the semi-finals will speak on topics drawn five minutes beforehand froma hat a week from Friday in the JCR at one p.m. The best speakers will become the proud possessors (for a year) of the famous silver beer mug.

Coed Struck By Car On Hoskin Avenue

A coed was hit by a car on Hoskin Avenue last night. She was taken to the General Hospital. Although the hospital authorities did not reveal her name, they said her condition was satisfactory and they sent he home.

The coed was coming out of Trinity College with a girl friend of hers and stepped out into the traffic from between two cars without noticing a car approaching in the middle lane. The driver of the car was Jack Williams, a graduate student in the Geology Department.

He said that he didn't even see her until somebody in his car yelled, "You hit her!" He said that she was hit by the frame of the car between the windshield and the front door.

The investigating police officer did not know her name when the ambulance took her to the hospital. The officer could not be reached before press time.

Lit Issue Deadline Extended

The deadline for the Literary issue of The Varsity has been extended to Monday night, Jan. 18th, it was announced last night by Elinor Bernstein, Managing Editor of The Varsity.

"Owing to the number of requests for an extension of the date for a few days it was decided to leave the date till Monday" she said. "There are more entries than usual already" she said, "but we expect many more in the next few days."

"Some entries have been received in photos, light and serious verse, short stories and essays," she said, "but there is still room for more competition in all of them."

Speaking of some of the literary issues of recent years, the Managing Editor stated that on occasion the prizes had not been awarded, but this was only in the case when material had been exceptionally poor. "Other years when we have had a large number of contributions the literary issue has been eight pages in itself," she said. This is the only all-varsity medium the students have for literary contributions, and all students wishing to avail themselves of the opportunity, must do so this weekend." she said.

Steve Staryk

The fact that the first Wednesday five o'clock recital of the new year fell on the thirteenth day of the month seems to have influenced both the weather and the artist's choice of program. Due to traffic difficulties Steve Staryk, violinist and Arlene Nimmons, accompanist did not appear until half an hour after the appointed time.

Because of this the Devil's Trill Sonata by Tartini and the last two movements of the Tchaikowsky Violin Concerto, Op. 35 were eliminated. The program was still a Herculean task, which Mr. Staryk took in his stride without too much difficulty. The Brahms Sonata in D Minor, the Bach Chaconne and the Allegro of the Tchaikowsky Concerto are all very demanding works not only for the performer, but also for the listener. It was a bit too much to take all at once. A little variety in intensity would have made the whole program more enjoyable.

Mr. Staryk jumped right into the Brahms Sonata with the same strength and degree of emotionality which he maintained throughout. This was particularly effective in the first movement and in the fourth, marked "Presto Agitato". In the alternating fast and slow-moving passages, the disturbed mood was sustained into a very powerful climax which rushed on ano on like a car going up a hill in third gear as fast as possible and suddenly switching into second to speed up and over the top.

The Bach Chaconne being a long solo piece, made more evident certain faults in the violinist's playing. Many of the higher notes had a shrill edge to them. Also there was a little roughness in the joining of notes and an unevenness in arpeggios. I found the treatment a little too erratic for Bach in some sections, but in others his brilliance was admirably suited. His ability to carry two voices distinctly made the form more evident and interesting.

The Tchaiskowsky Concerto is quite susceptible to the passionate treatment which would seem to be Mr. Staryk's forte. Almost always he managed to scale the peak of technical difficulties and stand on top proudly saying "Staryk was here." and only occasionally was the interpretation subordinated to a struggle for mastery. Although his interpretation was full of fire, there was little repose, or serene lyrical beauty, making the overall feeling a little one-sided. The impression was also hindered by the inadequacy of a piano to substitute for an orchestra, even if Arlene Nimmons had had complete control of the accompaniment. The intimate atmosphere of the music room also made the violin sound disproportionate in this full scale concert piece.

Incidentally, the music committee has at last decided to provide programs.

Rate EDC Shotgun Marriage As Opposition And Government Debate Motion In UC Parliament

One vote meant the difference between defeat and victory for the American-backed European Defence Community yesterday at UC Parliament narrowly defeated, 14-13, the resolution "Resolved that EDC is essential to world peace."

EDC is a plan, warmly supported by U.S. foreign policy, for uniting contingents from 6 European nations including France and Germany under one unified command. The stated purpose of the project is to provide a common defence against any possible Russian aggression. The plan has aroused much opposition, particularly in France, because it would involve a modified form of German re-armament and would mean some surrender of national sovereignty by the nations involved.

Larry Levenstein, first speaker for the Government, stated that Europe is the key to peace; and that EDC is the only way to build up a strong, unified European defence against Russian strength. The only alternatives are to build up a separate German army, with the resultant dangers from a resurgent German nationalism, or to keep Germany defenceless and leave a lower vacuum in the centre of Europe.

The first speaker for the Opposition, Les Lawrence, said "The Government has bungled again. In order for a marriage to be successful, one must throw oneself into it with enthusiasm and gusto. European unity, under the EDC plan, will be a shotgun marriage—with the parents being Uncle Sam and the Soviet Union."

"Although the previous speaker evidently believes that love comes only at first sight, philosophers have known for centuries that true love comes only after years of marriage," said Larry Stone, second speaker for the government. Stone declared that Europe is at present dependent on U.S. aid, and this aid will not be continued indefinitely. "Europe is still as disunited as it was in 1939 when Hitler's armies swept across the continent." Stone drew an analogy between the present situation in Europe and the U of T campus. He compared the Engineers to Russia, UC, Trinity, and Vic to the disunited nations of Europe, and St. Hilda's to the rest of the unprotected Western World. "UC, Trinity, and Vic must forget their differences and unite to form the vanguard for the defence of St. Hilda's against the Engineers."

The second speaker for the opposition, Pete Martin, said that the U.S. is not following its own advice to walk softly and carry a big stick—all it is doing is brandishing the big stick. "Europe is a continent of old nations with over a 1,000 years of continuous history behind them. Yet we are asking these countries to surrender their sovereignty to protect North America!" Stone said that any French-German unity would only be a hollow husk due to mutual distrust and fear. "The only positive solution would be—not a limited federation—but an all-over union of all the NATO nations."

Nablo Addresses Baha'i Stresses Unity Of Faith

"The principle of the Oneness of Mankind is the focal point of the Baha'i World Faith," Mr. Ronald Nablo, Victoria, '52, stated at an open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group on January 12. The topic discussed was the "Scope of the Baha'i World Faith." Mr. Nablo pointed out that this was not merely the enunciation of an ideal, but rather it concerned "those relationships which must bind all nations as members of one human family."

This principle implies, he stated, no less than a reconstruction of the world, based on institutions adequate to embody its truth. These institutions he continued, are contained in the teachings of Baha'ullah, founder of the Faith. "The realization of the unity of mankind is fast approaching," he intimated, "and nothing short of the power of God can succeed in establishing it."

In reply to a question, Mr. Nablo described the Baha'i belief in the essential oneness of religion. The revelations of the prophets, he explained, do not differ in that they spring from one God. But, he went on to say, they have been revealed in accordance with the developing capacities of man.

UN Rehabilitation Centre Assists Blind Of Egypt

Last night the United Nations Club meeting held in Falconer Hall heard an address by Mr. A. M. McGill, who recently returned from Egypt after helping to organize a rehabilitation centre for the blind in Cairo.

Mr. McGill spoke on the tremendous need for assistance for the blind in Egypt, which has a long tradition, a blindness that up until now has been uncontrolled.

McGill told how the Egyptian government has been making use of the United Nations technical assistance available through the various agencies of the UN. The relief for the blind is designed to help both those suffering blindness in Egypt and also in the other Arabic countries.

He said that social services to assist the blind have a much longer tradition than in most other Western nations. He said that at one time or another 90 per cent of the population suffer from eye disease.

In 1951 the UN sent experts in blind work, including McGill, to assist the Egyptians in setting up a rehabilitation to help the blind, and to study conditions for social work.

The rehabilitation centre was set up in Cairo, a printing press for printing Arabic braille was set up, the Egyptian government made available buildings and funds for the blind services, and a school was organized for blind boys so that they could get a rudimentary education.

This is a model school and only has 129 pupils. There are between 7,500 and 15,000 blind in Egypt, many of them needing schooling. New and better schools have been asked for, and also there has been a demand for a school providing secondary school facilities.

McGill also outlined the programme set up to train young blind women to train others to learn to read braille, adjust to their blindness, and to learn crafts. Since it is impossible to get the blind all together, the UN devised this scheme to make the services available to the blind at home.

He said, "All through the Middle East there is this same need for helping the blind, so it is hoped that this centre in Egypt will provide a centre for other relief work that is to be done in the Arab countries."

Criminal Code Revised Threatens Civil Liberty CCF Opposes Changes

J. W. Noseworthy, MP CCF, will be speaking today at 1 p.m. on the Amendments to the Criminal Code at present before the House of Commons.

This meeting, sponsored by the U of T CCF Club, will be held in Room 8, UC. The issue of civil liberties is an important one to university students in the opinion of the U of T CCF club. Mr. Noseworthy will deal with the threat to civil rights involved in the present revision to the Criminal Code.

Mr. Noseworthy was born in Newfoundland and as a youth, worked in the Grenfell Missions in Labrador. In Toronto, Mr. Noseworthy has been very active in the field of education. He taught at North Toronto Collegiate and later was head of the English department at the Vaughan Road Collegiate Institute. He was for a time president of the Ontario Secondary School Teacher's Federation. He has also worked on the building of the Hudson's Bay Railway and as a miner in Timmins.

In 1942, running for the first time as a CCF candidate of the federal parliament, he defeated Arthur Meighen, then the national leader of the Conservative party. Mr. Noseworthy is member for South York.

In the house, Mr. Noseworthy has been in favor of price controls, the subsidizing of housing and a health insurance program. He was the only Toronto MP to speak in favour of increased wages.

Mr. Noseworthy has been on the committee which prepared the report on the Criminal Code and as a defender of civil liberties, he fought vigorously against the sections of the Criminal Code Amendments which were directed against the right to strike and picket.

RCI Speaker Denies Conflict Reconciles Arts And Sciences

"The Supposed Conflict Between the Humanities and the Sciences" will be the topic of Dr. Stewart Basterfield, Professor of Chemistry at McMaster University, Hamilton, at the meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute, on Saturday evening, January 16 at 8.15 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

In his lecture, Dr. Basterfield will point out that it has become almost a commonplace of popular thought about education that the humanities and sciences are somehow opposed in the educational scheme of things and that, in modern times the sciences have pushed the humanities into the background. While there is a certain reluction admission that the humanities are a necessary element in education, the tendency is to reduce them as much as possible to a minimum and give more attention to what is commonly thought of as more useful knowledge.

The historical background of the supposed conflict between the humanities and sciences is sketched and the argument is developed that the conflict is false appearance due to a distortion of the culture outlook. There is no basic conflict since the sciences and humanities are all the products of human thought and imagination and reveal the many facts of human life in man's relation to his fellows and to nature. What is needed is a new perspective in which science is set in a proper historical and philosophical context with other fields of knowledge.

Dr. Basterfield was born and educated in England, and came to Canada in 1910. He was professor of Organic Chemistry at the University of Saskatchewan from 1920 to 1940, and Lecturer the History of Science from 1930 to 1940. He was Dean of Regina College, from 1940 to 1950. From 1948 to 1950, he was Chairman of the Saskatchewan Arts Board. He is the author of various scientific papers, including "The Place of Science in a World View."

Collegians Show Arts In Gallery

Hart House Art Gallery will be the scene of an exhibition of art collected from the major Ontario and Quebec universities from January 18 to Ferbruary 1, including, of course, contributions from University of Toronto men and women undegraduates.

The Hart House Art Committee wishes to gather the best works of all undergraduate artists. The fact that they have been exhibited before does not exclude them from this exhibition.

Oil paintings, watercolours, drawings, prints are eligible. The maximum size of any entry, which may be framed or matted is 40 by 44 inches, including frame or matt. All oils must be framed.

The final date of entry has been extended to noon, Saturday, January 16 for this show. For pictures being entered only in the National Federation of Canadian University Students' show, the final entry date is Friday, January 29. The latter show follows the Canadian University Art Exhibition in the Debates Room.

Pictures selected for the Hart House exhibition will tour Southern Ontario until the end of June, at which time they will be returned to the owners. Otherwise, they will be returned immediately.

Entries are being received in the Undergraduate Activities office, Hart House, for both shows.

A College Boy

What Is It?

From the Queen's Journal

Between the senility of second childhood and the lighthearted lechery of the teens we find a loathsome creature called a college boy. College boys come in assorted sizes, weights, and states of sobriety, but all college boys have the same creed: To do nothing every second of every day and to protest with whining noises (their only weapon) when their last minute of inertia is finished and the adult males pack them off to the employment office or the draft board.

College boys are found everywhere — breaking train windows, tearing down goal posts, inciting riots or jumping bail. Mothers love them, big girls love them, and Satan protects them. A college boy face, idiocy with lanolin in its hair, and hope of the future with an ovedrawn bankbook in its pocket.

A college boy is a composite—he has the energy of Rip Van Winkle, the shyness of a Mr. Micawber, the practicality of a Don Quixote, the kindness of a Marquis de Sade, the imagination of a Bill Sykes, the appetite of a Gargantua, the aspirations of a Casanova, and when he wants something it's usually money.

He likes a good liquor, bad liquor, called classes, double features, Playtex ads, girls and football weekends. He is not much for hopeful mothers, irate fathers, sharp-eyed ushers, alma mater society constables, alarm clocks or letters from the dean.

Nobody is so late to rise or so early to supper. Nobody else gets so much fun out of girls, snooker, or Bright's Catawba. Nobody else can cram into one pocket a slide rule, a Marilyn Monroe calendar, Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason", a collapsible pool cue, an expired liquor license, a Hawaiian ukulele, 39 cents in Italian lire, a Muggsy Spaniel record and a YMCA towel.

A college boy is a magical creature—you can lock him out of your heart but you can't lock him out of your liquor cabinet. You can get him off your mind but you can't get him off your expense account. Might as well give up; he is your jailer, your boss, and your albatross — a bleary-eye, no account, girl-chasing bundle of worry. But when you come home at night with only the shattered pieces of your hopes and dreams, he can make them mighty insignificant with four magic words: "I flunked out, Dad."

The Book Page

LASTING APPEAL

The Ballet Annual

THE BALLET ANNUAL, 1954, Eighth Issue, edited by Arnold L. Haskel, MacMillan & Co., $4.00.

The eighth edition of the Ballet Annual is an authoritative record of ballet happenings, and contains, as well as its articles, 130 photographs. Like all annuals, it is of immediate interest, but its photographs will continue to give it a more lasting appeal. It begins with a diary-like record of leading events in the world of ballet up to July 31, 1953. Of special interest to Canadian readers is their appraisal of the work of the London Festival Ballet, since it appeared in Toronto during the summer. It is impossible to agree with the editor's opinion that "Symphony for Fun" is not suitable for a ballet programme. Admittedly it is more suited to the rhythmic athletic dancing of the Americans, but its gaiety and sheer light-hearted fun makes it enjoyable and worthwhile. The December 1952 performance of "Le Lac des Cygnes" by the Sadler's Wells company is also described, and a comparison of this account with their actual performance of this ballet in Toronto last Fall is interesting and rewarding.

Ballet movies are also considered and it is amusing to note that Zsa Zsa Gabor is judged the outstanding liability of Moulin Rouge. Tonight We Sing and Hans Christian Anderson are both condemned as poor, the latter more because it loses the poetical atmosphere of the original than because of its ballet sequence. "Lili" is praised as a whimsical little movie which succeeds because of Leslie Caron's admirable acting and the good direction throughout.

An article by Cyril Beaumont on Margot Fonteyn, the ballerina who has perhaps brought the most distinction to British ballet, reviews her career, and praises especially her interpretations in "Swan Lake" and "The Sleeping Beauty", describing her in these roles as without rival in Western Europe or America. Those who saw her performance as Aurora in Toronto will agree that by the very simplicity of her rendering, which verged nowhere on the melodramatic, and the dazzling manner in which she danced the difficult equilibres in the "Rose Adage" she deserves this high commendation.

Then follow reports on the state of ballet in France, Italy, Yugoslavia, Greece, America and Australia. Ann Barzel's notes on the American ballet are the most interesting to us, especially since the Ballet Theatre has been to Toronto several times and such ballets as Theme and Variations, Rodeo, Don Quixote and of course the famous Interplay can still be vividly remembered. It is sad that even a small section on Canadian ballet could not have been included.

The photographs, which form a large part of the book, range from obscure and ill-lit pieces of photographic confusion, to the dramatic and impressive pictures that such a spectacular art form as ballet requires. The ones by Baron and Houston Rogers are outstanding for their simplicity and gift of catching an action at its height and creating the impression that it will be completed in the next moment.

This book, then, is interesting both to those with a thorough knowledge of ballet who like to be up-to-date with its latest developments, and also to those with merely a layman's knowledge, but who admire its beauty, gracefulness and ease of movement as shown in the illustrations. That this is its eighth year of publication proves its popularity and success, and it will no doubt continue to delight ballet lovers for many years more.

SOMEONE LIKE YOU

A Bright Spot

SOMEONE LIKE YOU—by Roald Dahl; McClelland and Stewart, $4.00.

A dozen and a half of Roald Dahl's off-beat stories collected under the title, Someone Like You, made one of the few bright spots in the uninspiring pre-Christmas publishers' lists. The dust-jacket blurb announces that Dahl writes for 'the sophisticated reader' and that many of the stories have appeared in The New Yorker. That appeal alone ought to insure a wide sale of the book, since there are few who dare to confess the absence of that mythical attribute, 'the New Yorker Taste'.

And even the naive reader ought to enjoy the stories, for they have qualities which are as universal in their appeal as that subtle jacket advertisement.

The themes of the stories range from a Poe-like terror to broad and pointed satire, but all share a macabre undertone. There are only a couple of the tales which depend on that raw, physical horror for their startling effect and even these aer artfully developed.

It is difficult to choose the outstanding story, because each has its own unique twist and mood. Taste, the story of a gourmet with a highly sensitive knowledge of wines and an unrefined sense of propriety, is a wonderful sketch with a nicely developed mood of suspense. The Great Automatic Grammatisator is a piercing satirical comment on the machine-like quality of modern literature. Lamb to the Slaughter is a murder story with a masterful touch of irony. Poison, Skin, Nunc Dimittis are stories as various as their titles but having in common relevent proportions of terror, wit, suspense, and irony. The author is always the master of the mood he seeks and he achieves his end with remarkable facility and precision.

Roald Dahl is a Briton whose varied careers have taken him on explorations to Newfoundland; as an oilman to Tanganyika; as a wartime flyer to Lybia, Greece, and Syria; and as a minor diplomat to Washington. It is to be hoped that he will stay at home for a while and continue to offer us the products of his fresh and fertile imagination.

Carl Mollins.

Discontented?

If you feel that the books reviewed on today's Book Page are utter trash and arrant nonsense, the remedy is in your own hands. Turn to and write your own books, but be sure to enter them in the contest for The Varsity's Literary Issue. In the interests of encouraging Canadian Culture there will be money prizes. Deadline is next Monday night.

WHERE'S THE HORSE

Poems By Frisch

POEMS, Anthony Frisch, Ryerson Poetry Chap Books, Ryerson Press, $1.00.

Poems by Anthony Frisch costs only one dollar. It is no a bargain. In format the book is most unattractive. The woodcut design on the cover is unpleasant and inappropriate: unpleasant because the mountain scene that the artist chose to decorate his cover has been blocked out, right in the middle, to provide a space to tell us about Poems, Ryerson Press, and Anthony Frisch; and inappropriate because the artist depicts mountains, streams, woods, stars, and flowers, while the poet expressly mentions prisons, convicts, "joints", station restaurants, bowling alleys, kitchens, fumes, and television sets.

However, all would be forgiven, if Mr. Firsch's poems did much to counteract these affronts to our sensibilities. But they don't, despite the fact that Mr. Frisch's technique is very good. He handles his favourite stanza, the quatrain, with skill. His rhymes click neatly into place at the end of his lines, whether he is at the end, beginning, or middle of his phrase or sentence. The resulting ease of his enjambement gives his stanzas a lot of pleasant variety in rhythm. We can praise Mr. Frisch in Roy Campbell's terms upon his handling of the snaffle and the bit, but we also must lament the absence of a horse. I know Pegasus is a difficult mount but even to be thrown by him would, I am sure, be more satisfying both to Mr. Frisch and ourselves, than to rock with precision back and forth on an old hobby horse, constructed of hackneyed themes, saddled and bridled with reminisences of T. S. Eliot's verbal mannerisms: " . . . Indeed! We shall add notches to expansive belts", " . . . Indeed, when the grey evenings come", and " . . . I know them as one knows/ Strangers in station restaurants," etc., etc., and stuffed out with such bombast as: " . . . The curtained windows bleed/The seeping blots of a bloodyellow moon."

CCF Growth Resembles Labor Party

"The background of the CCF is in many ways similar to that of the British Labour Party", Morden Lazarus, Editor of the CCF News, said Thursday at a meeting of the UC CCF Clubs "Socialism 1 a" program. Discussing the Birth and Adolescence of Canadian Socialism, he said that the CCF grew from a combination of the farmers' protest movements (United Farmers' Organizations) in various provinces with the Ginger Group, the left wing of the old Progressive Party.

"The defeat of the Winnipeg General Strike in 1919 had the positive effect of establishing labor in political action in Manitoba," said Lazarus. "The Regina Manifesto, adopted by the CCF in 1933 represents the common ideas held by the various farmer, labor, and intellectual Socialist groups which united to form the CCF."

RESULTS OF INDUSTRIALIZATION

Sur Le Quebec Contemporain

ESSAIS SUR LE QUEBEC CONTEMPORAIN, edited by Jean C. Falandeau, Les Presses Universitaires Laval, Quebec.

All good Canadian children learn at the feet of their public or high school teachers the romantic history of Quebec; of that olden time when history in Canada was colorful and exciting; and politics, tariffs and the imperial relationship had not yet been invented to bore us. It seems a day of strong men and simple motives: Cartier, Champlain, Dollard of the Long Sault, Madeleine de Vercheres, Frontenac, the Huron Mission, Talon, Bagot, card money, Laval, the sturdy habitant, the dashing coureur de bois, Montcalm marching out to meet Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham, gallant even to death.

The conquest seems not merely the end of French rule of the colony, but the end of its history. The Quebec Act makes the province and its citizens "Canada's problem", a changeless land of stolid farmers, entrenched Roman Catholicism, lingual demagogues, perpetual conservatism. To the innocent child so lucky to be born outside the province, in Ontario say, the vaguely foreign and unpleasant flavor of a Bourassa or Duplessis seems more characteristic of Quebec than the frank and comprehensible air of Laurier and St. Laurent. These simplifications abate with time but like most prejudices seem inerradicable. Quebec remains through life a point of misunderstanding and apprehension; subject rather of conditioned reflexes than coherent reflection. This accounts no doubt for the fact that the best work on the problems of race, religion and population in Canada thus far published is by a Frenchman from Paris, Andre Siegfried.

Since Canada as an International Power seemed so lone a voice crying in that wilderness of bilingual cheques, suspended grants to universities, Baptist versus Roman, and collapsing bridges which divide us, it was a pleasant surprise to discover on opening Essais that more than half of them were in English, a concession much appreciated by this minority at the symposium "a l'occasion du quinzieme anniversaire de la Faculte des Sciences sociales de l'Universite Laval", held at Quebec on June 6 and 7, 1952, "sur les repercussions sociales de l'industrialisation dans la province de Quebec".

The resulting paper — backed volume is both a credit to Fr. Levesque, the head of the faculty sponsoring the symposium, and a sign of what may in time result from the joint work of French and English scholars across the barriers of language and society.

The Avant-Propos poses a few of the basic questions: "Quels sont les facteurs les plus decisifs et de l'orientation et du tempo du changesuient social? Quels sont les facteurs de la sociales qui acceptant ou subissant le plus facilement le changement? Quels sont ceux qui lui resistent? . . . but admits that this is no more than the beginning of the study required; detailed studies of the place of Montreal, of secondary industry, of international trade, of immigration, of the effect of urbanization on langu ge and folklore are still to come.

The evidence offered however gives conclusive proof of the gradual shift in the population of Quebec towards the cities, which has thus far been imperfectly appreciated by observers on both sides of the Ottawa. Plentiful statistical tables show that this urbanization is but a part of a complex evolution in French Canadian society. Practically, Lac St. Jean was the last agricultural frontier. The days of colonization are over and the uniqueness of the society must be preserved, despite a fundamental shift in its orientation. The old ways no longer entirely satisfy an increasingly urban and industrial people and a new basis is being sought for the tried standards of conduct and morality.

Essays on agriculture and industry, population and social structure, law, politics, education and the climate of thought all point to an identical conclusion. L'Ancienne Province is no more, destroyed not by external pressure but by the decoy of industrial progress. The questions of the future are left unanswered, to be settled by future developments. It may sadden one to think that today Les Habitants are just a hockey team and that the spirit of the coureur de bois lives on only in the Montreal taxi driver. Ultimately, however, the importance of these studies lies in the solution they offer to "Canada's problem". Not force but parallel development may yet make Canadians generous enough to be united.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

You hear the old-timers, and the not-so-old-timers, wailing loud and long these days about the fact that hockey "ain't what it used to be" away back when.

And it's true. Hockey, as it's played today, is considerably different from the game they played before the war and both versions differ sharply from the game that was played in the twenties and earlier. Once, people felt the changes that had been wrought in the sport were progress. Now they're not so sure.

Hockey seems to have become a more scrambly, helter-skelter affair, in place of the passing and stick-handling of other years. Pesonally, we never saw any of the so-called "greats" performing — being at the time unborn or too young to take note of the passing sports scene. But every time some person gets around to picking an all-time all-star team (a pointless, but rather popular pastime) they don't include many, if any, of the recent glamor boys. More often, they're apt to include people like Lorne Chabot, Clint Bennett, Sprague Cleghorn, Eddie Shore, Cling Johnson, Howie Morenz, Lionel Conacher, and so on — stars of another era.

Now we're not prepared to say hockey stars aren't as good as they used to be, but it does seem that most people think along those lines. We would suggest, though, that one of the reasons there aren't many good stick-handlers around any more and not as much wide-open offensive play, is the red line at centre ice. What this line does is pretty simple. It means that a team can't forward pass from its own end over that line. So the defencemen on the attacking side are pretty safe in playing well up in the offensive zone. There isn't much chance of a breakaway as long as they don't let a man get between them and the red line. What you get, then, is a crush of 11 players within the blue line and the excessive scrambles, rough play — and a good many of the fights — are a result of this crowding.

It would be interesting to see a game with the red line removed. Seems to us the defencemen would be forced to play back and your game would be opened up considerably. For one thing, there wouldn't be so many players crammed into a small space and there would be room for stick-handling and pattern passing plays. For another, the passes up three-quarters of the rink-length would make hockey even faster than it is now.

What's all this got to do with college hockey, you ask. Well, the intercollegiate rockey league is a good spot for experiments.

BLUE NOTES: With the hockey team in Montreal and the basketballers south of the border, this looks like a pretty quiet week-end sports-wise. No need to sit around a bar this evening, though — the intermediate hockey team opens its season against the farmers from OAC at seven o'clock in the arena. . . . Over in Hamilton tomorrow night, the McMaster squad plays the University of Mexico. If the Marauders treat the Mexicans like they treated Varsity Blues Wednesday night, international relations will be sorely strained. . . . Steve Oneschuk adds acting to his already lengthy list of achievements. He's the lead in a movie Art Chetwynd is making about the life of a university student. Former Miss Cheerleader and Miss Freshie, Gwen-Anne Miller has a part, too. . . . Bruce Taylor, former Australian college freestyle champ, is swimming for Cressy McCatty's U. of T. squad this year. . . . If the hockey Blues get anything less than a split this week-end against McGill and the Carabins, they'll be in a mighty tough spot. . . . George Stulac, who got a black eye while going up for a basket in Wednesday night's basketball donnybrook, said later "Guess I should have made the basket anyway". . . . Ernie Bodnar's coaching career hit a snag the other day when his Skule Fourths were beaten 12-0. That may be an interfaculty record. Another intramural coach is shifty Don Rope, who has been master-minding the St. Mike's squad.

Varsity Puck, Hoop Squads Take To Road For Week-end

There's one thing about Varsity's freshman hockey coach, Jack Kennedy; he doesn't stand pat on his lineups. He's come up with another new forward line for this week-end's two important games with McGill and the University of Montreal.

Diminutive centre Tom Riley won himself a regular berth on the club with his scrappy showing in last Friday's 5-2 conquest of Laval. He'll have two new wingmates this week-end, though. Sophomore Ernie Bodnar's leg infection has cleared up enough to allow him to go at left wing on the third line. On the port side will be veteran Jim Wilkes, back after a short hitch with Jack Wheldrake's intermediate squad.

Kennedy is standing pat on his first two lines. The Don Cossar-Ken Lawson-Johnny Akitt line, which broke up last Friday's game with four goals in the third period, has been going as well in practices all week and will be back together. The other combo has Captain Red Stephen making the play for Harry Boyd and Ross Woods.

The Blues at present are in third place, two points behind second-running Laval and six behind the first-place University of Montreal Carabins, champions for the past two seasons.

Tonight's game is in the Montreal Forum against the McGill Redmen. It will be the first meeting between the two clubs. The Redmen have played only one league game so far—a 4-3 loss to Laval, but are expected to be a strong contender this season after the way they went undefeated in the latter half of last sason to wind up a nifty third.

Tomorrow night, the Blues shuttle out to Verdun to play the front-running Carabins. It will be the third try for the Blues at the power-packed Montrealers. They dropped a 7-5 decision here on Nov. 27 and then were snowed under 14-3 in Verdun on Dec. 12. The Carabins have the league's top scorer in Bernie Quesnel, who has 7 goals and 9 assists in the four games played so far.

BLUE NOTES: Johnny Akitt and Ken Lawson were shortchanged to the extent of one assist in the scoring statistics which appeared in Wednesday's Varsity. They were each credited with an extra assist after Friday's game. They have six points each . . . Bobby Dale and Don Avery are rejoining the intermediate team . . . One-eyed Benny wires from Tropical Park, Florida, that he thinks Varsity Blues have a good chance this week-end. "They'll beat McGill", he messages, "and tie Montreal." As for the basketball team, Benny says "What's basketball?"

Having tallied the fine record of three consecutive victories in their latest games on the cramped Hart House floor, Varsity's basketball Blues are out looking for new worlds to conquer. The competition to be found on Canadian soil is no longer a real test of Blue might, so this weekend the hoopsters head south of the border down Brockport and Buffalo way.

Brockport State Teachers are one club that holds a jinx over the Blues, who have been unable to catch them in years. The Golden Eagles have consistently soared way above the heads of the Varsitys, who despite their playing of heads-up ball, never quite caught up to them. This year, however, the Blues may have the stuff to take their old foes.

Saturday night, the Blues will find themselves in Buffalo, against the Buffalo State group. The Blues have already met the Buffalos once this year and on that occasion Varsity scored their first victory of the season. Though the Blues won by a comfortable margin, 66-55, they should have more trouble with the Teachers on the Buffalo home range. Some of the bigger Buffalos, such as Francis O'Shea and Wallace Handy who showed little of their alleged power against the Blues in their first meeting, are expected to be big guns in the Buffalo attack this Saturday.

The men that Varsity will rely on to stop and counteract any winning intentions of their opposition will be George Stulac, Jim Russell and Steve Oneschuk. Russell has an average scoring mark of something like 12 points a game while Stulac, who specializes every rebound that he can get near, set a pace of 20 points per game this season in the opener against McMaster last Wednesday. In addition Stulac has scored 57 points in his last three games. Other Blues that are improving as the season goes on, and should be very valuable on this trip, are Marv Tile and Bill Corcoran. Both are big men and do good work in controlling the backboards.

Seconds Open Season

While our Hockey Blues are holding forth in Montrea. this week-end, their younger cousins, the Intermediates, will be ably filling the bill in the league opener against OAC to-night at Varsity Arena.

Still somewhat untested after only two weeks of practice, and fresh from a 3-2 loss to Ryerson on Tuesday, Coach Jack Wheldrake has nevertheless come up with a hustling aggregation, and one to be reckoned with by the other teams in the loop.

Back again in the Intercollegiate competition, after a year's absence, the Baby Blues will face teams from Western, Waterloo College, and OAC in league games, while playing home-and-home exhibition contests with Osgoode Hall and Ryerson.

The line which Wheldrake expects to produce in quantity is centred by Bob Primeau, with Clare Fisher, ex-Mariboro and Weston Duke, at left wing, and Gene Robillard, McGill senior of two years ago, at right wing. Robillard produced the first goal in Tuesday's game, the other was made by Jim Wilkes, who has returned to the Blues for the Montreal exodus. Bob Logie also answered the call, while Don Avery has come down to add punch to the Seconds' attack.

Junior Skule's scoring ace, Don Wright, will centre Ted Rogers and Don Avery, while Art Gabour, Paul Newman, and Jim Jerome will round out the three lines to dress. Johnny Hague will see action all over, as the extra forward.

Barry Smith, the only holdover from last year's squad, will patrol the blueline, along with John Prendergast, Chuck Bull, and Don Stewart. Hugh Currie, who has played excellent goal for Meds in the Intramural, will handle the net duties.

Blueline Banter . . . Coach Wheldrake is also playing for Osgoode who tied the Aggies 6-6 on Monday night . . . they're pretty big boys, says he . . . Gene Robillard can double everywhere except in goal . . . the game starts at 7:00 . . . no admission, no ATL cards, which makes it a cheap evening in return for excellent hockey.

Skulemen Blank Vic

By JOHN WILSON

Senior Skule yesterday established themselves as definite contenders for the Jennings Cup, whitewashing a very disorganized Senior Vic crew 8-0 in Varsity Arena.

The Scarlet and Gold were having difficulty getting the puck out of their own end throughout the game, as the goal-hungry Skule forwards kept goalie Jack Creighton busy every minute. Jack Mellenhauer struck for two, as did Zabluk. Woodruff, Donovan, Cruise and Bannister supplied the rest of the Engineers' onslaught.

Victoria, now resting at the bottom of Group I with one lonely point, will have a tough time staying in the race for the playoffs. On the other hand, Senior S.P.S. are high atop the Group with nine points, three in front of their nearest rivals, Senior Meds.

Bobby Dale, back from the Blues, along with centre Tom Jardine, appeared to be the only thing Vic had to offer in the way of offence, while Bill Tweddle played his usual bumping game at the blueline.

Other Interfaculty play saw the Skule V's down Meds III 3-0, while the Trinity C's and UC III fought to a 2-2 tie. Smith, Mauk and Sweetnam gave the Engineers their margin. Hildebrand scored twice for UC in the earlier game, while Bob Shaw and Mike Shoemaker tallied for Trinity.

Wednesday's hockey action, saw only one game, but the Trinity B's managed to set what is thought to be an intramural record, smothering the Skule IV's 14-0. Paul McTaggart romped into the lead in the loop scoring race potting six goals.

Shirley Reid Scores Two In UC's Win

In the women's interfaculty hockey league yesterday U.C. emerged victorious over Vic II with a score of 5-0. In a rather slow first period, Shirley Reid scored her second goal of the game.

In the second, scoreless period, U.C. dominated the play showing a much superior brand of offensive hockey to Vic's ineffectual efforts. Soon after the start of the third period, Shirley eid scored her second goal of the game.

By keeping the puck in Vic territory for the remainder of the play. Di Walker and Ann Innis were able to add two more goals to the U.C. total.

Basketball is on the upgrade here at the University, if nowhere else in Toronto. The Intramural League boasts of a record number of entries, indicating basketball's popularity among the undergrads. Our Intercollegiate team has a three-game winning streak and two of these have been victories over the seldom-beaten hoopsters from the other side of the border. In general, the picture is rather encouraging—thee game seems to be taking a more prominent place in Varsity sports.

Well, undergrads, now is the time to do something!—We have overflow crowds "following the Blues" at Hart House and more than 140 teams participating in the Intramural League. There can be no doubt about the fact that Varsity has a need for better basketball facilities. Here you are showing that you deserve them.

At St. Lawrence University, in northern New York State, they have a hockey arena similar to the one here at Varsity. But they use it for more than hockey. They play their senior basketball games there. As a matter of fact, a few years ago, the University of Toronto played St. Lawrence in the first basketball-hockey night for rence for some answers to our

I think we can look to St. Law-the opening of their new arena. needs here at Varsity. The University of Toronto hockey team is not enjoying any great popularity. As a matter of fact, they have a hard time getting a suitable attendance when admission can be gained by simply producing an Admit to Lectures Card. We must keep in mind, also, that hockey is one of the two most costly sports on campus.

Now basketball, a sport which pays for itself by cramming fans into Hart House, could help hockey and itself, if it were moved into the arena. This could be done by purchasing a portable wooden floor which would go down on the ice. Then the University of Toronto could have basketball - hockey nights. Under this system, hockey would benefit from the attendance, basketball would benefit by having a regulation size court and sufficient accommodation for fans, and the students would be able to see their two senior teams play on the same night.

The need is there and basketball deserves the chance.

Naturally, the initial expense of putting such a floor into the arena would be large. But, in view of the need for some improvement of facilities, and the possibility that the growing interest in basketball would bring crowds, whose financial aid would soon meet the cost of the floor, I feel that it would be money well spent.

Beryl Lewis

Varsity's Water Baby

By JANE KELLY

An all-round athlete who excels at almost any game she tries, Beryl Lewis has spent most of her time concentrating on her favorite sport, swimming, and with very good results. This year, for example, when the intercollegiate swimming meet was held at Varsity, Beryl broke the 50-yard backstroke record with a time of 33.8 seconds. She was also a member of the winning medley and freestyle relays. She held the Canadian Junior 40-yard backstroke record for several years and has held Quebec, Michigan State and international backstroke records and the Ontario backstroke championship for which she did not compete this year.

Beryl's latest triumph came when the Ontario Women's freestyle team, of which she was a member, won the Canadian championship last year at Winnipeg.

A third year Phys Ed student, Beryl was elected a member of the Athletic Directorate this year and is also president of the U of T Swim Club.

Next year, Beryl's plans include attending OCE and coaching synchronized and speed swimming for the Etobicoke Memorial Aquatic Club which will use the new swimming pool now being built in Etobicoke. We have no doubt that Beryl will make as fine a coach as she has been a competitor.

Beryl gives much of the credit to Gus Ryder of the Lakeshore Swimming Club who coached her from when she began to swim competitively at the age of eight until just before she entered university and to Freddy Baxter who has been her coach ever since. But most of the credit goes to Beryl herself who is a fine athlete.

Gal V-Ball Squad Now Being Chosen

The first try-out practices for this year's Intercollegiate Volleyball team were held Tuesday and last evening at Lillian Massey Gym. From the large turnout of hopeful aspirants representing every college and faculty on the campus, Miss Stewart, the new coach, will have to choose 12 players and a manager.

Although there are five members of last year's intercollegiate team back, Judy Strickland, Doreen Toland, Helen Saarinen, Helen Bienosz and Grace Robertson and also Irene Tyla, last year's manager, it does not mean that they are assured of a position on this year's squad. Many of the newcomers played exceedingly well and will help to make it a stiff fight for positions on the team.

Last night at seven at Lillian Massey, saw the last practice before the actual picking of the intercollegiate team. The prospective intercollegiate players are being chosen purely on their play in the practices and not because of any previous intercollegiate experience.

The team, once it has been officially chosen, will be practising twice a week until the intercollegiate tournament at McMaster at the end of February. Probably, there will be a home and home series with McMaster and several games with local high school and college teams before the tournament.

Pharmacy B In Close Win

Pharmacy "B" team eked out a close 21-18 victory over Forestry B's in major league Basketball action last night at Hart House.

Though the game was a very low-scoring one, featuring close checking all the way through, Kelly of Forestry emerged as the top scorer with a total of eight. Murray Berman notched six for the Pill-pushers with Bernie Sax adding four.

'It Will Be Paid'

March means exams to most of us; and to President Sidney Smith it will mean one extra big headache this year. But to Dr. Smith, the troubles all concern money —one million dollars of it.

The President recently requested the City of Toronto for half of $2,000,000 promised the University by the city in 1949. He asked that it be forwarded before March "in order that the University may carry out its building program."

At City Hall, the problem of how to pull $1,000,000 out of the hat is still unsolved. The Mayor has ineffectively tried to shift the affair on to the shoulders of the Metropolitan Council and the Metropolitan Council is saying it probably cannot do much about it.

According to Dr. Smith, this University will "be up against it" unless it receives the grant by March. It is needed to make progress payments to contractors working on five buildings.

The University owes $3,890,000 on new buildings under construction, and 90 per cent of this bill will be due in 1954. It has only $2,660,000 on hand, leaving it $1,230,000 short. Any ten-year-old can see that we definitely are up against it.

The University has "exhausted the monies contributed by the provincial government and by corporations and individuals to the Varsity appeal," the President has explained. It now needs municipal support, and the municipality has a very important part to play in the improvement of education in this province and country.

Mayor Lamport said: "No one is denying them (the University) their money; it will be paid." We suspect it will be paid — but we wonder just how and, most important now, w-h-e-n.

All Or Nothing

A meeting of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (CoSec) is currently being held in Istanbul, Turkey. It is important on two counts: 1. It will partially decide the attitude of western unions to the Communist-dominated International Union of Students (IUS); 2. It will possibly place Canada on the Supervising Committee as the representative of the North American area.

On the first point a decision has to be reached once and for all. We, the western unions, cannot continue to operate on two fronts — CoSec and IUS. We must draw a line of action and then put all our efforts behind it. We cannot forever operate on divided energies.

On this basis, we feel that the NFCUS full-time president, Tony Enriquez, has been a little over-zealous. On the one hand he has extended an invitation to IUS to paritcipate in a Paris roundtable discussion on the possibilities of associate membership in the international

On the other hand he has gone to the CoSec meet with hopes of putting Canada on the Supervising Committee. We feel that Canada has an important part to play in international affairs. And we believe, along with Enriquez, that Canada "is a bridge between the European and American points of view, and affords a better basis for co-operation."

But we believe also in all or nothing. If NFCUS wants to investigate joining IUS, then by all means do so. And we think they should. However, if it wants to make CoSec a vital international organization, then give up IUS and all the hot air surrounding it and concentrate fully on CoSec, financially and politically.

When I Left It

Tito's Yugoslavia

The Varsity presents the second and last of ths articles by Dushan Sudar on the Yugoslavia he knew.

By DUSHAN SUDAR, III Vic.

The attitude of Tito's regime toward religion and religious institutions was a most intolerable, real bolshevic one. Most properties and land had been taken from the churches and monasteries in a brutal way, without any compensation. Religious periodicals were stopped. The regime's attacking, profane slogans were: "Faith is the opium of the people" or "Religion will last only as long as reactionary forces rule human society."

LATER THEY STARTED TO USE the well-known communist method of infiltration and dispersed their agents among the lower clergy. With a few dissenters they created a new "People's priest association" and issued its weekly. This poor shameful paper praised Tito as the patron and friend of a "true" priesthood and everytime mentioning him, writing with a capital "H". Of course, this "Strategy and Tactic" was very transparent, and after 1948 people turned to religion more than ever before, as to the only light in the darkness. The churches were filled; even the non-believers attended the masses, so using the only possible way to demonstrate their protest and dissatisfaction against the regime.

But still the morale of the people of Yugoslavia was very low when I left. While they were behind the Iron Curtain they suffered, but they had a great hope for liberation by the free nations. After 1948, when Tito's regime gained aid and friends in the west, the people felt puzzled, betrayed, and apathetic. Tito has dominated and triumphed. Having the people under his heel once more, he cried again, louder than ever before, that he was the best democrat in the world. In his speech at Kozara on July 28th, 1951, two days before I left, he said: " . . . therefore we say to those Westerners that they fool themselves if they think democracy is only where there are many parties. And we see what is happening in those countries where there are many parties: governments are always changing, the state weak, and there is no progress. We need take only the examples of France and Italy — Democracy is not a matter of decrees — it is a matter of consciousness."

In other words only "a strong hand" is constructive for a country, and consciousness about it is democracy. Indeed, a great demagogy!

Power is a funny thing. The longer one is in the driver's seat, the sweeter it becomes, but it is very dangerous when it becomes the only "raison d'etre".

I escaped from Tito's "paradise" some 30 months ago, and have been in Canada now for two years. I have tried to be as objective as I could, but I must point out that I write as a convinced Democratic Socialist. Therefore, I would like to greet my fellow students with a quotation of the CCF's national leader, M. J. Coldwell, and at the same time emphasize it as the main thought in my explanation. In his foreword of the book MAKE THIS YOUR CANADA he said: "It is my profound conviction that a political party which is itself undemocratic—whether its policy is formulated by the large corporations as in the Liberal and Conservative Parties, or is controlled by a small clique at the top as in the Communist Party — can never build a really democratic society. In the noe case we have political rights without economic justice, and in the other ostensibly economic justice, certainly without political rights. Real democracy is a balanced combination of both these rights; either without the other is a negation of democracy."

In conclusion I wish to say that I certainly could not have published this article in Yugoslavia, and had I tried I would have been imprisoned as "an enemy of the people".

Our Readers Write

Young, But Of High Calibre

The Editor,
The Varsity:

What is a MOOBP? A MOOBP is a Member of the Ontario Older Boys' Parliament. What's that? Well it all started in 1917 with Joe McCulley as Premier.

Since 1922 it has met annually between Christmas and New Year's in various centres of Ontario. The last time it was in Toronto was 1950 with sessions in the Parliament Buildings. The sleeping quarters were in Victoria College Men's Residence.

This year it was held at the University of Western Ontario. Ninety boys from all over Ontario including Cochrane, Windsor and Ottawa, gathered to participate in the worship, legislation and fellowship.

The Ontario Older Boys' Parliament is sponsored by the Boys' Work Board of the Ontario Council of Christian Education. This is a combined effort of seven Protestant denominations and the Y.M.C.A. As a result of this, worship is a vital part of the Parliament program.

One of the highlights of Parliament was the Resolution re Christian Stewardship. Ellie Bradley of III S.P.S. was the mover of this motion. In it, the Parliamentarians resolved, among other things, to practice daily prayer and to further Christ's work on earth. This resolution fulfills the main purpose of O.O.B.P.: "To challenge members to Christian living."

Boys' Parliament was NOT a Mock Parliament. The legislation brought in by the government, led by William Dowdell of U.W.O. was not imitating Federal or Provincial bills, but pertained to Church Boys' Work in Ontario. Outside of a Government and Opposition, there were no political parties represented. The members voted according to their conscience and to carry out the legislation they passed.

Like any other Parliament it had a Finance Act. A budget of $25,000 was passed which depends on a Finance Campaign held in February. This money will be used to further Christ-centred boys' groups in Ontario.

In another piece of legislation, steps were taken to form a national assembly for boys. This seemed to be a very good idea, but we wonder how practical it is financially.

An amendment was made to the Constitution which allowed representation from such Technological Schools as Ryerson, as well as representation from Universities. Even though we are university members, we doubt the advisability of these representatives from centres of higher learning. After all the legislation pertains to younger boys.

Considering the inexperience of many of the members, the debate was of fairly high calibre. In the discussion, most of the members were able to make a contribution.

We feel that the outstanding feature of O.O.B.P. was the fellowship, due to Christian leaders and members. This fellowship was found in Cabinet meetings and buil sessions, which in many cases went on into the wee hours of the morning. Caucuses are held at the universities to renew the fellowship.

In our opinion, Ontario Older Boys' Parliament is important because it produces Christian citizens with a working knowledge of parliamentary procedure.

Cat's Open Letter To Kid Nee

Dear Kid:

It has been said that the high schools have fallen down in their teachings as noted by the calibre of the recent graduates. Let it now be said that the University has also fallen down in its teachings to the Arts students as noted by their recent exhibitions.

Let us consider the burning episide. Everyone likes a good bonfire once in a while. And what better way is there to keep warm, especially for the Christine Jorgensen followers who need some kind of a flame. But there was certainly nothing funny nor adolescent about advertising it so widely. Is is any wonder then, that some U of T students were detained in the U.S.? No doubt they saw the humorous side of it all.

One other example of undeveloped minds is the pursuit of government subsidies for student's fees. Of course everyone is in favour of lower fees but government subsidy is not the answer. It is a well known fact that any government undertaking generally costs the taxpayer several times what it would had private enterprise done the same thing. And who is the Taxpayer? For that reason, government subsidy would cost us, as taxpayers or potential taxpayers, far more than the present fees. Please let's not follow that policy.

Of more recent note is the racial discrimination movement. If some of these intellectuals think they can change human Nature, then they have no business being on this earth. When some employer refuses to hire someone because of colour, creed or what have you, he certainly won't change if several questions have been deleted from an application form. Those very questions are probably more to the applicant's benefit than to the employer's because as soon as the employer reads the form, he won't inconvenience the applicant with an unnecessary trip for an interview.

It is getting so that the SPS'ers are ashamed to say they are also a part of this University for fear they, too, are classed in this childish group.

And so Kid, in view of these, can you please teach these morons from the north how to handle a pick and shovel so that they can go to work for the TTC digging another subway where we'll hope for a cave-in.

VARSITY CAGE TEAM SPLITS TWO GAMES

Brockport State Teachers joined the ranks of Varsity's victims Friday night at Brockport, N.Y., bowing gracefully under a strong last-quarter comeback drive by the Blues to lose 80-70. After scoring the fourth in their first and longest victory string of the season, the Blues got ready to start another after Buffalo State Teachers defeated them 66-47 in Buffalo the following night.

Brockport, whom the Blues have failed to match for several years now, was considered the big game for the Blues on their weekend tour of the Yankee colleges, but the Golden Eagles couldn't hold down the Toronto boys who fought their way up from behind to win.

Varsity managed to match the Brockports in the first quarter of play Friday, coming in with a 15-15 deadlock at that point but, from there on, the Eagles took control, ending the third period with a 13-point lead. Led by George Stulac and Jim Russell, the Blues hustled right back in the last minutes of play to tie the score with three minutes left. Then Varsity pulled ahead to finish 10 points up on the opposition.

Stulac hooped a neat 24 points in that match with Jim Russell coming close behind with 17. Reliable old Lou Lukenda notched 14 and Steve Oneschuk hit for 9.

Against the Buffalo Teachers the Varsity fire which had burned so brightly on the previous night just sputtered out and the Blues went down in defeat. Badly tired after playing three games in four nights Varsity were weak and far off in their shooting. Earlier this season the Blues had thrashed the Buffalos in a game played on the Hart House floor but the Americans evened the score Saturday as they humbled a Blue squad that was playing badly off its form. Varsity hobbled behind throughout the game and at the half trailed by eight. Buffalo added 11 more to their lead before game's end.

George Stulac, whose 24 points against Brockport had made him a marked man in the game with Buffalo, seemed to have lost his eye and scored only twice in 12 attempts. Lou Lukenda picked up the slack as he scored consistently, netting 18 points. Jim Russell, too, was off his game and managed only nine points. Rookie Florian Matsalla figured in the scoring, with eight and Stulac got four.

Blue Bits: While the Blues were on the road, Intercollegiate action got under way down in London when the Queen's Golden Gaels met the Western Mustangs on the Western floor. The contest was not one at all as the Mustangs moved to an easy 62-39 victory over the Queensmen . . . The Blues who have already won their first league game against McMaster, move on down to Queen's this week-end to meet the Gaels. The Varsity club may be a safe bet to add win number two to their record.

World Trip Economical This Way

Interested in going on a trip around the world in 1955? Making actions speak louder than words, two grads students in chemical engineering and an electrical technician are planning to do just that.

John Beekmans, Nick Macrakis and staff electrician Frank Goodis form the nucleus of what the hope will grow to a group of from six to eight. If they overcome financial difficulties, they will purchase an old boat and then make it seaworthy enough for an around-the-world cruise.

"The real difficulty is money", said Beekmans. "We plan to buy an old boat and rig it up properly. What we can't afford in money, we can afford in time".

Beekmans was born in Belgium, holds a British citizenship and studies in Canada. Macrakis is from Greece and obtained his degree at McGill after coming to this country on a scholarship, Goodis was born in Britain.

Although they haven't bought their boat yet, they have a fair idea of what they want. They wish to leave around September, 1955, in a boat about thirty to forty feet in length. Beekmans estimates the cruise will take about a year.

They may find it necessary to take out a loan but they would rather save their money and take summer jobs to finance the voyage. They feel that they can make some of it by travelogues, selling the boat when they return and by writing articles.

League Heads Vote To Oust Mac Team

By JIM PROUDFOOT

After an ill-fated one-season trial, the McMaster University football team has been removed from the senior intercollegiate league. The four-man intercollegiate athletic union executive, at a meeting in Hart House Saturday, voted to return to the four-team status of 1952.

Three delegates, Prof. T. R. Loudon of Toronto, Dr. McLarty of Western and Dr. A. O. Carson of Queen's, favored the move; Prof. Kirkpatrick of McGill dissented and the McGill athletic board must reconsider its support of the McMaster entry.

Also present at the meeting were Dennis Harbic of Ottawa, representing the Ottawa-St. Lawrence conference, and McMaster's Dr. E. T. Salmon, representing the western Ontario conference. The decision concerning the McMaster team involved only the four teams in the senior grouping.

McMaster had been admitted to the league last season, making it a five-team loop. However, the teams still retained a six-game schedule, meaning they played just one game with each of two teams. For example, last season, McGill didn't play in Toronto and the Blues didn't go to McMaster.

Next season, Varsity wouldn't play at Queen's—the Gaels' biggest gate — and Western wouldn't play in Toronto—Varsity's biggest game.

It was apparently suggested that the teams play an eight-game schedule, comprised of a home-and-home series with each of the other teams, instead of missing games with certain schools each year. In view of the shortness of the fall season, the executive decided such a long schedule was out of the question. The only solution was the removal of the McMaster team and a return to the four-team set-up of the previous season.

McMaster had lost all six of its games last fall and hadn't been a good drawing card either at home or away. The McMaster athletic director. Ivor Wynne, commented in Hamilton: "I can't understand the other schools' attitude. Western lost their games when they were first admitted and look what they're doing to the traditional rivals now".

Criminal Code Is Scored In Noseworthy Speech

The present Criminal Code of Canada came under fire Friday when Joseph Noseworthy, CCF MP for South York, outlined the activities of the Criminal Code Committee in a speech to the U of T CCF club.

Noseworthy criticized the lack of provision for penalties for police officers who read the Riot Act without justification. "There are no penalties provided for in the present Criminal Code. If there was such a provision the riot at Louiseville would never have happened", he said.

He emphasized the attempts of the Committee to give every organization a hearing. "Almost every organization that requested an audience got one", he said. "Two or three organizations were refused because everything in their briefs had already been covered by other organizations", he said.

Mr. Noseworthy pointed out that the committee had not divided on political lines when voting on amendments. "The Minister of Justice did not have the party whips put on the Liberal members", he said. Emphasizing the considerable research done on the Code by committees and a Royal Commission, he explained the Liberals' desire to have the Bill passed in the last days of the 1953 session, "but the opposition warned that the members would be there through June, and into August", if the Liberals tried to pass the Bill that session.

Because the committee lacked the special knowledge, it asked the government to appoint special committeees on capital and corporal punishment, lotteries and insanity, he explained.

Referring to the much-protested sections on sedition, treason and sabotage, Mr. Noseworthy said that these sections were "much improved" by the committee, "Every line in the bill was closely

Let's Get Literary

To-day is the last day for as-pirants and short story writers on the campus to submit entries to The Varsity for its literary issue. The date has been postponed until today due to a number of requests for an extension.

There are cash prizes offered for the best entries in pictures, light and serious verse, short stories and essays. In past years there have been occasions where no prize was awarded, but only when the material was exceptionally poor.

In other years, entries have been so numerous and so good in light and serious verses, short quality that the literary issue has been a full eight pages.

Donated by the Forest Club at UBC, the Corpuscle Cup, shown above, is the Intercollegiate trophy for the highest percentage of blood donations. On the Toronto campus the campaign is over and all that remains is the collection of the valuable fluid for the manufacture of gamma globulin, a polio preventive. The collection is being made at the School of Nursing through the Red Cross. Donations may still be made by going to the Blood Donor's Clinic at College and Elizabeth St. Faculty credits will be given for these donations as well. Where? — To the World University seminar, at Caledon Hills Farm, on the subject of "Media of Communications — Bridges or Barriers to Human Understanding?" Under this heading the following questions will be discussed: "Is conversation a lost art?"; "Is technology the beginning or end of culture?", and "Is international misunderstanding inevitable?"

The leader of the seminar will be Reverend Ted Nichols. He has chosen three sub-leaders to take over the groups into which the participants will be divided for some of the sessions. One of these leaders is Professor H. M. McLuhan, Profesor of English at St. Michael's College, and author of "The Mechanical Bride."

Another is James Ham, associate professor in the department of electrical engineering. Ham attended the WUS seminar in India last summer, and is writing a book on the application of communication systems.

Mr. Al Shea, the third sub-leader, owns the Communications Research Core Company, which does research on public opinion. He worked with UNESCO, in Paris, on world communications, and is author of "Culture in Canada."

The seminar at Caledon will be on the weekend of January 29, starting with supper on Friday, at 5:00 p.m. The opening session starts that evening at 8:00 p.m., and everyone is expected to be there by then. Participants will be spared the work of cooking and dishwashing, which will be done by members of the Host Committee of the WUS. Saturday night will be reserved as a social evening.

Last year the Host Committee's weekend at Caledon had no planned program. This year it was decided that such purely social weekends would be left to the International Students' Organization, and that the Host Committee, since it is now a sub-committee under the WUS, would sponsor a seminar weekend for overseas and Canadian students.

Application forms for those interested are available at the SAC office.

Lit Censures Three For Anti-UC Conduct, Motion Not In Minutes

Three University College students who participated in a gag picture, taken of the JCR last Monday, were "censured" by the UC Lit, for "conduct prejudicial to the interests of University College" in a copy of a motion, posted on the door of the office in the JCR.

The motion, marked moved by Mike Benazon, seconded by Mort Smith, both on the executive of the Society, was posted on Monday afternoon. It was brought before the executive meeting held a half-hour after the picture was taken. The motion was marked, carried and later marked "Not in minutes."

In a statement made to The Varsity, Lit President Roger Bull said "I think it's probably just a gag". He pointed out that no such motion was in the minutes.

The photographer who was one of the students censured said, "The picture was to have been used in Tuesday's gag issue. It was incidentally not developed properly and subsequently ruined for publication." He added, "There was no intent to degrade, defraud or ridicule in any way, except in the spirit of good fun."

The other two students involved as well as The Varsity photographer were inclined to treat the whole thing as a big joke. On Wednesday, two days after the motion appeared on the Lit. office door, a petition for an open meeting was posted under the original motion. By constitution, if twenty member students request such a special open meeting, it must be granted.

"To be censured by the Lit. is a compliment, not an insult" said Bull who was not present at the meeting. The photographer, who is a UC student and one of the three censured, felt that the public censuring of students, whether by the Lit. executive or by individual members was "a farce to say the least."

One of the other students, a girl pointed out that she was not even technically a member of the Lit. The girls of UC have their own organization, the WUA. Both she and the boy, Joel Wagman, posed for the picture.

"Our honor can be defended with brute force, Alene's honour is different", said Wagman. It was Wagman who authored the petition which has already been signed by over half the required number.

The University Settlement House, shown above, is beginning a campaign to provide children's clothing at a low price to the families which it serves. The Student's Service Commission is handling the collection on the campus. The Settlement plans to distribute the clothing by means of a rummage sale open only to their families. No definite plans have been announced yet but depots will be set up.

Clothing Collection To Aid Settlement

The students of the University of Toronto are being asked to help supply needy children with clothes. The University Settlement House is planning a rummage sale to provide necessary clothing for the families in its district. They have sent a letter to the Students' Administrative Council requesting its aid in securing donations from the students.

"We are deeply concerned," the letter read, "by the fact that a large number of children and young people coming to the Settlement do not have proper clothing. To meet this need, the Settlement is planning to hold a rummage sale, restricted to families in our district, at which clothing of all kinds will be sold to families who are in need, at nominal prices."

The letter was read at the SAC meeting and its request for assistance approved. The campaign was turned over to the Students' Service.

"We are hoping to set up depots all over the campus," said Bill Baldwin, Student Service Commissioner. "All kinds of used and outgrown clothing can be brought to them."

He said that they expected to set up one depot at Hart House, and others at similar places throughout the university. The details of the campaign have not yet been completely worked out, but it will be started by next Monday, he said. The sale itself is expected sometime near the end of February and the campaign will probably last till that time.

The area in which the Settlement House operates is known as a "depressed area." It includes some of the worst housing conditions in the city. There is a great deal of poverty in the area, aggravated this year by seasonal unemployment and high rents.

"We regard the need for adequate clothing in our district as a very urgent social problem," the letter stated.

St. H. Student Recuperating From Mishap

The Trinity College student who was struck by a car on Hoskin Ave. last Thursday evening, is coming along fine and should be at school on Monday according to her mother, Mrs. R. A. Groves. Joan Groves was hit by a car driven by Jack Williams, a grad student, as she came out from between two parked cars in front of Trinity College.

It was established that the driver was going slowly," said Mrs. Groves. She said that the major injury was a scalp wound across the head and described Joan as being "very, very lucky."

The police report placed the time of the accident at 11:02 p.m. Mrs. Groves was notified at 1:30, when they sent her daughter home.

"It was fortunate that the driver of the car was not speeding at the time of the accident. She was hit by the frame of the car between the windshield and the front door.

Anniversary Debate

Money And Education

By DON BURWASH

Finis to thirty years of Hart House debating will be marked Wednesday night when the Speaker, Roger Bull, IV UC., declares the one hundred and thirteenth session of Hart House Debates to be in session.

Higher Education takes the spotlight at the coming debate. "That the chequebook has replaced the textbook as the key to higher education" is the topic Horace Krever, III Law and J. Roberts, III UC will support. For the noes, will be T. Hammond, II UC and G. Hurlburt, III Eng.

Dr. A. W. Trueman, newly-appointed Commissioner of the National Film Board and former president of the University of New Brunswick, will be the Honorary Visitor at Wednesday night's debate.

Since January 1924 when the first Hart House debate was held, the walls of the Debates Room have echoed the euristic and forensic endeavours of just over one generation of University of Toronto students.

Topics, serious and ludicrous, all succumb to the flood-tides of rolling Cicerone periods, the votes are taken, "the shouting and the tumult dies", the Speaker and the Clerk deart; this has been the pattern of thirty years of debating which only a World War could interrupt.

In all that time, the "Rules of Procedure for Hart House Debates" has been the guide to pleasure and profit to many men interested in improving their powers of persuasion.

Much has been written about the famous men whose names are recorded in the minutes of the debates. While it is true that many, including three prime ministers of Canada, have spoken at Hart House se debates, perhaps the true greatness of the contribution of the debates, erhaps the true greatness the brilliance and eminence of the men who have been its Honorary Visitors, or have gone out from here to carve for themselves secure seats in the Hall of Fame.

Look, rather, to those whose lives, suffocated by the tedious banality of pursuing an education at this University, have been enriched by participation in those flights of forensic fantasy which so often characterize Hart House debates.

A great deal of sentimental "clap-trap" could be written about debates as training grounds for democracy, as means of relieving frustration, as amphitheatres for promulgation of new concepts, but all these attitudes are so completely foreign to the nature of the average Varsity student that they become irrelevant.

Debating in Hart House was originated in the spirit of the Deed of Gift in which the House was conceived as a common meeting ground for faculty, graduates, and undergraduates. It was to be primarily an occasion for neither persuasion, nor propaganda, but pleasure; a meeting place of students and "wise and earnest men" in "that spirit of friendly discussion and debate" which is one of the prerequisities of the complete man.

It is chiefly in this spirit that thirty years of debating have passed. We can record no visible "conversions to the faith" but we believe that somewhere in the depths of the human psyche the spirit of the House has been at work, revealing to men the infinite possibilities of this concept of debating.

Hart House debating has not been without its lighter moments. We find recorded the instance where one of the weaker sex, arrayed in suitable masculine attire, invaded the House. In the course of the discussion the hot air being generated resulted in an uncomfortable temperature and the poor female, loath to suffer the indignity of an indigents' propulsion, kept her coat on and enjoyed a rather warm debate.

At another time, an illustrious member, overcome with the general torpor of the debate, removed himself to the end of the chamber and proceed to fall sound asleep on a bench.

On still another occasion, a member regaled the House with a long quotation, replete with nude red heads and bullet-ridden corpses, from Mickey Spillane.

All in all the debates in Hart House through the years have been friendly, topical, and mutually profitable and form a worthwhile contribution to the program carried on under the aegis of the lonely Hart.

West Veep Is Elected From U of A

W. A. "Doug" Burns was elected Western Vice-President of the NFCUS last Monday. He is President of the Students' Union at the University of Alberta.

Burns defeated Izzy Asper, Public Relations Chairman at the University of Manitoba, in the election for the post. The last vote was received at the National office of NFCUS on Monday, January 11.

The election of Burns completes the National Executive, except for the Maritimes Vice-President, who is still to be elected.

University Law School Begs Full Recognition From Ont. Law Society

The Board of Governors have been asked to appeal to the Provincial Government on behalf of the U of T Law School for more recognition by the Law Society of Upper Canada. The main complaint is that the university law graduates must put in two years of apprenticeship before being called to the bar.

"Ontario is the only province in Canada whose Law Society withholds full recognition from graduates of a university law school", said University Law Club president Bob Montgomery. "The Benchers would have a point if the standards at the University Law School were not up to those of Osgoode Hall."

The province of British Columbia requires that law graduates only article for one year; consequently five students who recently took advantage of this fact are a year ahead of their fellow graduates. After their graduation they moved to the west coast, articled for one year and were admitted to the Bar there. They were then able to be called to the Ontario Bar upon payment of $1,500.

"It remains a great pity", said yer, "that students in Ontario Law School SAC rep Horace Krear are still being deterred from attending Canada's best law school by the unjustifiable expense in time and money involved in coming to the University School of Law."

Jewish Appeal Will Canvass U of T Students

The University division of the United Jewish Appeal commences its campaign on the campus January 27th. The drive, under the sponsorship of Hillel Foundation has set $3,000 as its goal.

The funds collected will be used for Israeli, world-wide, and Toronto agencies. Part of the money collected will be used to remove as many as possible of the 350,000 Jews in the Iron Curtain countries. In the months ahead the United Jewish Appeal will help finish the Jewish Home for the Aged on Bathurst Street.

The drive will directly affect the more than 1000 Jewish students on the campus who will be contacted by class canvassers.

Debate Champs Chosen At Tryouts On Thursday

Debating trials to pick the University's representatives for the Canadian University Debating Championships will be held this Thursday.

The trials will pick four students, of either sex. Two will be debating on the positive side, and two on the negative. The trials will take place on Thursday at 4.00 in Room 8 of University College.

The speaker will talk for five minutes on an impromptu topic. The trials are open to all students on the campus except for those who are participating in the UTDU debating tours.

The topic to be debated in the competition will be "R[illegible] that Labour in the Fe[illegible] vinci[illegible] the [illegible]

Paul et Virginie. C'est la triste, et grandiloquente, histoire d'un baiser vole bien silencieusement et bien tranquillement a une compagne de classe.

Paul et Virginie sont etudiants en Bioanthroppophagie. C'est une faculte qui a ses lettres, ses droits, sa medecine aux mots, ses lunettes des mauvais jours et parfois un air scientifique . . . une faculte comme les autres quoi! Une faculte qui reunit toutes les autres.

Paul, depuis deux ans qu'il est a l'Universite, n'a su resister a la lente emprise des murs jaunes le long desquels se promene sa compagne tous les matins et tous les soirs. Virginie en bonne etudiante veut etre femme de carriere, elle ne veut pas des hommes, elle veut que la femme regagne sa place dans la societe. Une place d'homme a la femme.

Ces deux caracteres qui s'opposent et luttent sont soudain places en classe, l'un a cote de l'autre . . . Paul aime le chandail ourle de sa camarade, et qui lui chatouille la main, parce qu'il a laisse sa main s'approcher du chandail, sans le savoir.

Et tout a coup, ca y est, il l'empoigne, l'enlace et lui baise le front . . . Virginie pousse un petit cri etouffe, elle voit tous ses ideals se casser et tomber lentement comme si l'Empire State s'ecroulait, elle ne veut plus etre la femme de carriere, elle hesite de la tete, le coeur lui chavire lentement, elle va tomber . . .

Virginie se souvient qu'elle est fille d'Isabelle, ou de Josephine ou de que sais-je . . . elle ne veut pas. Paul a senti sa tendre compagne se cabrer, il a vu les regards du professeur de Bianthroppophagie se diriger vers lui comme pour l'avaler, il se voit deja dans le gouffre du peche de la chair, il titube, se rapproche a ses notes, sans dire un mot, pense aux Bedouins si chanceux d'etre nomades.

Paul a eu peur. Virginie a eu peur. Leurs parents et leurs amis et le cure et qui et leur professeur et quoi et la societe sont heureux. Ces chers enfants . . . ils ont fait preuve de tant de courage devant la tentacule passionnelle du baiser qui n'est d'ailleurs qu'un catalyseur de leurs reactions endoctrines et qui aurait pu les perdre . . .

Et Paul sera Bioanthroppophagiste et Virginie sera Bioanthroppophagiste et tous deux iront sur le trottoir dans leurs redingotes de diplome et avec a la main un parchemin lisse . . . tous deux seront forts de leurs connaissances psycho-medico-lettra-droito-opto-pharmatico-social-dietetique .

La seule chose qui brise le tableau dore de ces futurs etres humains, c'est qu'ils ont un jour refuse la vie . . . Morale: un baiser durant une classe de Bioanthroppophagie n'est pas a refuser parce que son existentialite ne se renouvellera jamais et que ce n'est que de vingt a trente ans que les sous-bois et les vins forts peuvent etre connus. Ceux qui preferent mourir pour des idees, cette histoire-ci leur soit un exemple certain d'une mort part durcissement de coeur. Mais puisqu'ils ont deja le coeur dur, ils ne comprendront pas ceci.

DRAMA FESTIVAL

Constructive Enthusiasm

This year's Central Ontario Drama Festival which closed at Hart House on Saturday night presented a remarkably high standard of both acting and production; surprisingly high, in fact, for amateur groups. As adjudicator Graham Suter remarkid in awarding the trophies, all the plays were good; The Rose Tattoo (the Playcraftmen's entry) won because it was superb. And so it was, for it attained to a truly professional standard in both acting and production. The acting was both competent and exciting and so generally good that it was impossible to say whose performance was best.

Considering this, no one was surprised when The Rose Tattoo won for the best entry, the best visual presentation, the best actor and actress (John Sullivan and Frances Tobias), the best supporting roles (Audry Kniveton and Jack Kuper) and the best director (James Dean). The three other festival plays which we saw were certainly good amateur but The Rose Tattoo was good by professional standards even.

The most striking over-all feature of the plays last week was the excellence of their sets which were remarkably imaginative, workable and well-conducted.

As for the plays themselves, The Shrike, presented by the West End Players, was full of powerful drama which was only partially brought out. Nonetheless it was a gripping performance; the everlasting dreariness of the set (the psychiatric ward in the City Hospital) was immensely effective and the actors were sufficiently convincing that we did become involved in their misfortunes.

The Glass Menagerie as played by the Sudbury Little Theatre Guild was less sympathetic but equally successful. The dream-like mood of its presentation, of course, involved the audience more as spectators than as participators. Unfortunately the dreaminess involved such dim lighting that it was often difficult to see the actors. However, since mood in this play is the essential, the presentation was an effective and convincing, if not entirely, visible one.

The Canadian Group Theatre's entry was Twilight Walk, a psychological whodunit with a message to communicate. Messages are all verp well in their place, but the author of this play stopped the action entirely while certain actors declaimed their views on the care and treatment of criminals; once the argument had been presented the play proceeded on its well-constructed way. The company did its best with this material; sometimes it bogged down under the weight but when the author left off crusading and became interested in people again the actors responded with enthusiasm and produced several very moving scenes.

Since we had never before seen a more or less complete Central Ontario Festival we were pleasantly surprised at the high standard which the groups attained, at the difficulty of the plays they tackled and at the success which rewarded their attempts. Most interesting was the evidence of the immense hard work and creative imagination which had been put into them. It is an encouraging thought that Ontario is so full of constructive enthusiasm.

DRAMA REVIEW

The Caine Mutiny

It has been often said that a work of art can only be judged by the passage of time. What flashes brilliantly for two and one half hours may turn soon to vague dust. The three Paul Gregory productions, Don Juan in Hell, John Brown's Body, and The Caine Mutiny Courtmartial, have all had this immediate brilliance, but beyond this remembrance of a superb performance there has been little carry-over, little imaginative growth in the mind. This is the highest criticism that can be levelled at a work of art and indicates no criticism in a deprecatory sense but rather the definitive evaluation in my own mind of these productions as against those other memorable productions that I have seen.

Paul Gregory and Charles Laughton, the producers, have ignored with great daring certain established conventions of the theatre such as sets, the picture stage, the audience as a fourth wall, and so on. They have realized that any break from convention can be done successfully if the vacuum created by that loss is filled by another. This they have done. They have laid their trust in the ability of actors to create by words and pantomime within the imagination of the audience the missing set, the time, and the action. Their trust and insight has borne unexpected fruit; they have freed the stage from its realistic constraints, and made it once more as in Shakespeare's time, a free poetic art. It has now gained the physical mobility of the movies while still retaining its ability to directly stir the imagination.

One can't help feeling that theatre is beginning to burn very bright and clear, and that the years to come may be an extraordinary period of theatrical vitality.

The Caine Mutiny Courtmartial was a fascinating experience, but, to one who had read the book, there was one essential shift of emphasis that lessened its impact. The power of the book lay in the shock to the reader of finding that Tom Keefer, the intellectual novelist, who instigates Maryk into mutiny and who seemed to be the hero of the book should turn out at the trial scene to be a coward. In the play Tom Keefer is suspect from the first because of the lawyer Greenwald's doubts, and so the play shifts the emphasis more to the double tragedy of Captain Queeg and Greenwald, both of whom come out of the trial with damaged reputations. The story is quite simple. Maryk (John Hodiak) is on trial for mutiny against his captain, Queeg (Lloyd Nolan). Greenwald (Henry Fonda) is his defending lawyer. Greenwald, by subtly turning the attack away from Maryk onto Queeg, elicits from the captain numerous lies and inadequate explanations and thus wins an acquittal for Maryk by establishing clearly in the minds of the jury the suspicion that Queeg is a paranoiac. The scenes in which he leads the psychiatrists to admit consciously, or unconsciously Queeg's sickness are delightful bits of subtle and satirical dialogue. His questioning of the destroyer captain is also a gem of parry and thrust.

The minor characters are all clearly conceived individuals who strike immediately a single revealing note without ever being too broad or too obvious. Aside from these verbal battles between Greenwald and various witnesses, scenes which are full of natural drama, the play has a number of monologues in which various events on the ship are relived. John Hodiak does a solid job as Maryk as do the rest of the secondary characters. However, the memorable performance outside of Fonda's was that of Lloyd Nolan as Captain Queeg. Beginning as a man quite sure of himself, confident, with even a sense of humour, Lloyd Nolan nevertheless suggests, even at the first, just the slightest physical nervousness, a nervousness which developed and finally begins to burst forth in uncontrollable movements of the body and voice which are accentuated by his vain attempts to appear calm.

This was a sustained piece of developing character acting in which the underside of a man slowly heaves up its ugly head and disproves flagrantly the surface display of covering words. Henry Fonda as Greenwald gave another magnificent performance. He dominated completely the trial scene; he was a man of mystery whose motives were not clear, whose plan of campaign was not clear, but who yet imparted a certainty, a fatality, a pathetic inevitability to the proceedings. After the trial there was a banquet scene in which Fonda explains his motives and explains why Queeg is not the villain, but Keefer.

Greenwald is drunk in this scene. This is suggested by the subtlest slurring of words and by an immobility that is just slightly exaggerated. The speech itself has that understated quality, that complete economy of gesture and voice, that perfect control which makes Fonda the actor he is. It was a superb dominating characterization that gave perfect contrast to all the other witnesses, by its own bleak and passionate certainty.

This was a play and a performance exploited to the full. There can be no other feeling but admiration for this novel turned play.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Hollywood's Caesar

It's always reassuring to discover that Hollywood can make something besides lightweight musicals and even lighter-weight outdoor action epics.

For example, I shuddered when I first learned that M-G-M was going to make a motion picture of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar. I envisioned a technicolor pageant, unfloding all the glory and splendour (and, of course, unleashed passions) that were ancient Rome. With 3-D, Cinemascope and what have you, I expected the stark reality of the thing to blast me from my seat. In short, I didn't think Hollywood could do it.

It's a pleasure to admit that I under-estimated the Cardboard City. Not only is Julius Caesar (in its fourth week at the Towne Cinema) an excellent version of Shakespeare's play; it is an excellent motion picture, which might very well be further evidence of the Bard's immortality. The producers resisted the temptation of technicolor, I'm happy to report and there is scarcely any pageantry.

The script is Shakespeare's; only a few of the more extraneous scenes have been removed and the surgery is imperceptible. The motion picture camera supplements the devices of the stage ideally: it at no time replaces them. For example, the ability to see the mob and its changing emotions greatly increases the effectiveness of Marc Antony's funeral oration, in which he whips the rabble into a frenzy.

Perhaps you recall the plot of the play. Julius Caesar is becoming more and more dictatorial and conspiring against him are the rebels, Cassius and Casca. They convince Brtus, a highly respected and firecely loyal citizen to join them and they murder the emperor. Marc Antony, Caesar's most loyal follower, fights them, defeats them and, in a Shakespearean ending, Cassius and Brutus take their own lives, poetic justice having finally caught up with them. The dramatic crux of the play, I think, is Brutus' conviction that murdering Caesar is the solution to Rome's difficulties and that, in spite of his loyalty to the emperor, he must take part in the conspiracy. In short, his actions are those of a traitor, his thoughts those of a patriot.

Brutus, then, should be the central figure of the play. In this case he isn't. A remarkable performance by Sir John Gielgud makes Cassius the dominant character. Gielgud plays the part with a quiet, shrewd and calculating air and, when he convinces Brutus that the assassination is right, it is his own eloquence, not Brutus' mind, that makes the decision.

Where James Mason fails as Brutus is in the early stages of the play. Here, you think "Brutus nothing; this is James Mason." But he gathers strength as he goes along and the characterization becomes more and more right.

Marlon Brando brings much to the part of Marc Antony: youth, sensitivity, energy and a fierce devotion to Rome. His delivery of the funeral oration is, to me, one of the high points in motion picture history. Now ironic, now emotional, now fiery, Brando does it magnificently, right down to the last curl of his lip around the word "honourable". Mr. Brando, on the basis of his performance here and in A Streetcar Named Desire and The Men, must surely be Hollywood's most remarkable actor.

As Casear, Louis Calhern kept reminding me of the gangster boss he played in Asphalt Jungle. This part of Casca important, but Edactually and he conveys the right air of arrogance. Neither is the part of aCsca important, but Edmond O'Brien does well by it. As for the other two notables, Greer Garson and Deborah Kerr, as the wives of Casear and Brutus, respectively, it seems a shame to waste fine talent on small, unrewarding parts.

Definitely worth the $1.25 and two-and-a-half hours is Julius Caesar. It's a great picture. But let's be fair, too. Mankiewicz, with a cast like it has and with a script writer like it has, how could it miss?

Also on long runs locally are How to Marry a Millionaire, a pleasantly cynical little effort, which has Marilyn Monroe and Betty Grable spread becomingly over the Imperial's Cinemascope screen, Little Boy Lost at the University with a French lad called Christian Fourcade out-acting Bing Corsby in a sentimental picture and of course Kiss Me Kate, a breezily well-done musical at the Uptown.

Our Reader Writes

Editor, The Varsity:

In last Wednesday's edition of The Varsity we saw a pitiful sight, an article written entirely on one person's prejudices. Admittedly music is a subjective art and one person can violently dislike music another person likes. But to write an article in the same type of hysterical language user 50 years ago to describe the premieres of the same music is beyond the bounds of reason.

Today in America and Europe Schoenberg is recognized as one of the great musical creators of this century, both for his musical output and his achievement of making an ordered whole out of the chaos into which the tonal system had fallen.

In fact, Schoenberg wondered why someone hadn't noticed his system in music before he did. And that is another point—Schoenberg found his 12-tone structure in the music of his time: he did not deliberately set out to create it.

If in Florence's opinion this music is so terrible, why have so many prominent artists and critics pioneered it? Such artists as Mitropoulos, Liebowitz, Vargas, Krasner, Steuermann, Stokowski and Kubelik, or such critics as Ernest Newman, Lister Sinclair and Olin Downes proclaim Schoenberg as a great artist.

The average music listener does not care how a piece is written; he is only interested in the effect or impression it produces on him. By this criterion the music of Schoenberg and his school is an overwhelming success. This system of music has produced such masterpieces as Berg's operas Wozzeck and Lulu, Schoenberg's Violin Concerto and String Trio, and Von Webern's "Five Pieces for String Quartet".

Therefore in conclusion I would ask our anonymous critic to go to a concert of Schoenberg's music without prejudice, and to listen to the music.

Brailowsky

". . . and so, I asked Edna if she were going out for supper, and when she said not, I insisted that she come over to my place for salad and a little cold meatie. My cold beef, you know . . ." whispered a cultured voice in the capacity audience at Eaton Auditorium, Thursday night. But all the nattering voices were stilled as Alexander Brailowsky began to play the piano and effectively held their attention all evening. The program which was planned chronologically, served to illustrate the evolution of music from Bach to Ravel and Bartok and demanded a wide range of styles.

Mr. Brailowsky has a wonderful precision of attack which made the Perpetuum Mobile of Von Weber both charming and humorous. He kept the rhythm distinct without any sense of rush to get in all the notes. His tone as well as being clear and controlled has an immense variety of colour as was demonstrated to particular advantage in Ravel's sparkling Jeux d'Eau and in the Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody in C sharp major of Franz Liszt.

But these pieces showed but one side of his virtuoso technique and interpretive abilities. The Chaconne by Bach (arr. by Busoni) was vigorous with a harpsichord-like precision and eveness. In the Allegro of Bartok, properly named Barbaro the rough often brutal quality was emphasized by the harsh staccatos. The cleverness of his wit especially in the endings was demonstrated in the gay brilliance of Liszt's Valse Impromptu. The was Chopin's Twenty-Four Preliutriumph of the evening, however, des, in which he combined all the qualities I have mentionned so far to make an extremely subtle and versatile picture of each of these short mood synopses.

If there is one criticism to make of Brailowsky's playing it is that he sacrifices some of the possible emotional content to a thoughtful and analytical statement of the music. It might be called overcivilized. But of the two ways of approaching piano playing outside of the desired balance of all the elements, it seems to me that it is more desirable to have an intelligent and precise rendering than an attempt at rugged emotionalism which is lacking the means to express itself coherently.

Dylan Thomas, the poet and story teller, ho died in New York on Nov. 9 at the age of 39 was one who received the applause of most of the critics and many in the crowd. Unfortunately, this ensured him neither the wealth, the ease nor the leisure that he so much needed. It has now been announced in London that he left on estate "as far as can be ascertained" of $300.

Lose To Montreal Carabins 3-1 After 5-2 Setback At McGill

The University of Toronto Blues, hockey variety, find themselves in a highly uncomfortable position today, after a disastrous week-end in Montreal, which saw them lose two games. They were stopped 5-2 Friday night in Montreal by the McGill Redmen, and Saturday night, in suburban Verdun, were decisioned 3-1 by th first-place University of Montreal Carabins, champions for the last two seasons.

The double loss gives Varsity a record of one win and five losses in the first half of the season. They are tied for third place with McGill Redmen, who have played only two games so far.

Friday night, the Blues were soundly outplayed by the strong McGill squad. After a scoreless first period, Herb English and Dick Baltzan gave the Redmen a 2-0 lead in the second frame. Baltzan scored his second and third goals in the final session with Bob McMullen adding another for the Redmen. Dave Stephen and Harry Boyd clicked for Varsity goals but the Blues were never closer than within two tallies of the winners.

The Redmen had a considerable advantage in the play and the work of Jack Ross in the Toronto goal kept the Blues in the game.

Saturday night's game was a different story. The Blues had a big edge in the play but couldn't seem to register where it counted: on the scoreboard. Though badly outshot, the Montreal Carabins scored in the first and second periods to lead 2-0. Then at 18:56 of the third period, Ken Lawson scored for Toronto to cut the lead in half. Jack Ross was pulled from the Varsity nets in favor of another forward.

After Claude Hotte hit the post on a breakaway, Ross was returned but Hotte broke away again and scored at 19:36 to put the game on ice for the Carabins.

Smooth-skating Bernie Quesnel was the top man again for the Carabins, although he didn't score any goals himself.

while Pete "Birdy" MacDougall, Don Marshall, and the rest of the Meds team played heads-up hockey most of the way to be full value for the win.

Medsmen Top UC Pucksters

By FRED GRAY

Scoring early and never looking back, Sr. Meds entry in the intramural hockey wars rolled to a decisive 6-0 victory over U.C. Seniors Friday. In giving goalie Benny Walker his first shutout of the season, the Medsmen had little trouble turning back the Red and White squad.

Although Carl Yakamoff set U.C. off on the right foot, stealing the puck from the Meds defence and racing in for the first scoring opportunity of the game, the attack was repulsed by "Bouncing" Benny and Meds wheeled back to net their first goal within two minutes of the opening whistle. Fred Walsh was the marksman.

With Meds carrying the play, they notched their second counter on a blueline shot by defenceman Bill Shaw that wove through a maze of players and dropped behind the surprised Harris. Hosh King scored Meds' most spectacular goal of the game at the midpoint of the first period. Taking a pass from Don Marshall as he crossed the blueline, King slipped the puck through the defence and crashed in pursuit. Dumped by the defence Hosh caught the lower left-hand corner with his shot as he slid goalward on his nose. The final point of the period came when George DeVeber slapped in the rebound from a drive by Walsh.

With the fine of Ted George, Herb Tilson, and Carl Yakamoff showing the way, U.C. fought on nearly even terms for the first half of the second period, with only some fine stops by Walker in the Meds cage holding the Tigers from the score sheet. With Tilson off for holding, Meds returned in a scoring way, as Geo. DeVeber collected his second goal at the 10-minute mark.

Rising tempers in the second period errupted with a short display of fist and foot work that saw Bill Fullerton of U.C. and Bill Shaw of Meds, ejected from the game for fighting. Chuck MacDougall finished off a well-played game as he scored Meds' final counter in the last minutes of play. Bill Fullerton, Pete Nichols and Herb Tilson were the pick of the Tigers

Grapplers Gain Split In Tourney At Guelph

Varsity's senior and intermediate wrestlers had their first taste of intercollegiate competition Saturday night as the featured attraction of an athletic night at Guelph's Ontario Agricultural College. The Senior Blues toppled the OAC grapplers 24-12, losing two of nine bouts, but the Varsity intermediate weren't as fortunate, losing 31-10 to the farmers.

Featherweights Fred Wood and Paul Berman were Varsity's only losers. Jones of OAC pinned Wood in just over two minutes of their 123-pound bout and Weedon took slightly less time to flatten Berman.

After those two setbacks, Varsity took over. Intercollegiate champion at 137 pounds, Tom Hatashita pinned OAC's Royce in 30 seconds of the second round. The speedy Hatashita came up with a pretzel-type hold that confounded even the experts.

Paul Phelan, 147 pounds, took a 4-0 judges' decision over Smiley and, at 157, Bill Bush drew with Poirier 4-4. Footballer Bob Waugh decisioned Campbell 3-2 in a 167-pound tussle.

The heavier matches were all Varsity's. 177-pound Al Miller took a 6-0 win over (get this) Blaaeuwendraapp and Doug Hamilton tied Brightwell in knots to take a 6-2 win in the 191-pound division. Heavyweight Harry Robinson beat another of the Blaaeuwendraapp boys by a fall at 2:05 of the second round.

Varsity won only two bouts in the intermediate meet. Ed Richardson took only a minute and 43 seconds to dispose of Marra at 167 pounds and 191-pound Harvey Salem stopped McGuiffen in 1:11 of the first round.

Feminine Fencers Practising Weekly

Ever since the stadium playing field got covered with snow and ice, the women archers have been holding weekly sessions in the Drill Hall on Mondays at four o'clock. It isn't the warmest spot on the campus—in fact last week the poor shivering ladies were out there in 56-degree weather. But, in spite of the cold, the undaunted femmes are persisting in the weekly meeting and are now planning meets with McMaster, OAC and the Eaton's Girls Club.

The regular shoot will be on today as usual and the dates for the forthcoming meets are to be decided. The club has been particularly pleased with the turnout for the events and any newcomers, especially those from the first year classes, are invited to attend. The lookout is on for a 1954 intercol squad from the club.

Though things were not looking too bright for the gal fencers, a weekly meeting time was decided upon for six o'clock Thursday afternoons and the girls who have turned out for the sessions have been having a wonderful time.

This is the first year for women fencers on the campus and, considering its newness around here, it has been going on very well. Julius Alpar has taken over instruction and Doreen Toland, who is travelling to Buffalo to fence with their University next month, has been heading the latest campus activity.

The next big sporting event on the University of Toronto calendar is the Varsity-McGill Hockey game which will be played in Varsity Arena this coming Friday at 8.00 p.m. Varsity who have tallied one win in their last 6 outings will be fighting desperately to hold on to mathemetical chances for the playdowns.

Mural

This coming Wednesday will see a resumption, by The Varsity Sports Palace, of a practice instituted this past fall. The Intramural page, dealing with activities in the University sports world, will be returned.

This page will consist exclusively of news from the Intramural front and will also carry roundups and summaries of all the leagues being presently conducted on the campus. When this page was begun early last fall, there was only the football scene that required extensive coverage but this season there are any number of equally important activities so that, though we will do our best to cover all facets of Intramural Sport, it is inevitable that we must miss something. Still we hope that this page will continue to be of interest to our readers and that it will give the "minor league sport" at Varsity the attention that it merits.

Coaches Name Gal Team For Intercollegiate V-Ball

The women's intercollegiate volleyball squad was chosen last Thursday evening at the second try-out practice at the OCE gym. Four of the five contestants from last year's team showed up though only four of them made the grade. Helen Bienzos and Helen Sarrannin will be back; the rest of the squad will be playing their first season in the intercollegiate ranks.

Coaching the squad this year will be Helen Stewart, a PHE instructor at Etobicoke Collegiate. Helen has been coaching that high school team for the past two years and has made it close to the top-ranking team in the city.

Like most of the women's intercol meets, the big annual volleyball tourney will be held in a weekend battle being played this year at McMaster. A home and home series has been rumored with Mac and perhaps OAC in a set of exhibition matches. The big meet has been scheduled for the 19th and 20th of February and will include squads from Toronto, MacMaster, Queen's(McGill, Western and OAC.

Today marks the opening of the intramural V-ball schedule. This is the biggest year the sport has known, thirteen squads being represented. All games will be played at the Lillian Massey gym between five and eight o'clock.

HELP

The Varsity, though well-staffed at the present, has room for one man (or perhaps two) who is familiar with basketball and who would like to write on intramural basketball. With the schedule well under way, and a long series of games yet to play, a good man will be of use. Report to The Varsity office if interested.

Intermediates Start Out By Smashing OAC

By JOHN WILSON

If Ted Kennedy, Tod Sloan, and Sid Smith were to play a little hockey with the neighbourhood kids on a Sunday afternoon, they wouldn't have much trouble tying the other boys up in knots. That's just about the way it was last Friday night as the Varsity Intermediates handed the OAC Aggies a 12-0 trouncing in Varsity Arena.

While all three forward lines were clicking, Bob Primeau, Gene Robillard, and Clare Fisher dominated the scoring parade, accounting for seven goals and seven assists as a group. Robillard was the big gun with four, while Primeau scored two and Fisher one.

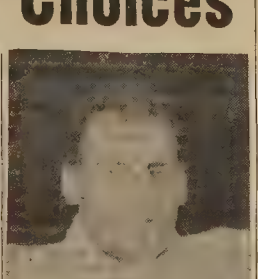
The Aggies were completely outclassed in all departments, and were unable to get a shot on Hugh Currie until thirteen minutes of the first period had passed. John Riddell, in the OAC net, got little protection from a clumsy defence, as the Blue team kept action in the Guelph end for the better part of the game.

Coach Wheldrake can well be pleased with what looks to be one of the best intermediate clubs to take the ice in many years. Although OAC was peculiarly inept, and made the Blues look very good, nevertheless this year's team should have little difficulty bringing back the Intercollegiate Intermediate hockey championship.

The trio of Primeau, Fisher and Robillard stood out on attack and was easily the best on the ice. As a line, they work well enough to be donning Senior Blue uniforms. But Gene Robillard is ineligible as a transfer from McGill, while Clare Fisher is a first-year Engineering student. Bob Primeau, busy racking up honours with the books, as well as on the ice, cannot find time for Blue hockey.

While the Aggies couldn't get an organized attack under way, the Blue defence was quite effective, and Hugh Currie in the Varsity goal, got excellent protection from Barry Smith, Herb Tilson, and John Prendergast.

From the Blue Room . . . Centre Art Gabour was in hospital with a leg injury, and was spelled by John Hague on Friday . . . Bob Hart was the only Aggie who didn't fall all over himself—maybe their skates weren't sharpened . . . Interesting problem comes up next Thursday when the Baby Blues meet Osgoode whom will Jack Wheldrake play for . . . he picked up two goals against the Aggies a week ago when they played Osgoode.



Three Blues Top Choices

BILL McFARLANE

STEVE ONESCHUK

DON MATTASON

Three University of Toronto players were first choices when the Big Four football teams made their draft choices at a meeting in Toronto Friday. Toronto Argonauts had first pick and chose Varsity's defensive halfback, Bill McFarlane. Montreal Alouette's number one choice was Varsity guard, Don Mattason, and Hamilton Tiger-Cats, who had fourth choice, took Steve Oneschuk.

Ottawa Rough Riders, who had the second chance at the list of college graduates after Argos, took McGill's fleet-footed half, George Klein.

The draft is conducted annually. Each college makes a list of its graduating players. These names are posted at a meeting of representatives of the Big Four teams and the club that finished last the previous season—Argos this time—has first choice. The first-place team has fourth pick and then the choice goes back to the last-place team and so forth.

The drafted players can be negotiated with only by the teams which picked them.

Mattason, an all-star inside wing with Varsity last season, wound up as Argo property anyway. As part of the deal which sent Al Dekdebrun to Montreal Alouettes in 1952, the rights to Mattason were traded to Argos and in return the Alouettes secured exclusive rights to deal with Western's fullback, Jacques Belec, who was Argos' second choice. The Larks wanted Belec on account of his French-Canadian background.

Argos had originally planned on making Oneschuk their first selection but the Varsity halfback intends to enter OCE next fall and will probably play another season of college ball.

A complete list of draft choices follows:

Toronto: Bill McFarlane, Varsity; Jacques Belec, Western; Wimp Crawford, McMaster; Dennis Higgins, Western; Bill Koski, Queen's; Bob Fitzhenry, McMaster; Bob Dale, Varsity; Joe Bernoit, McGill.

Ottawa: George Klein, McGill; Len Shaw, McGill; Vince Capogreco, McGill; Jack Wyatt, Western; John McCombe, Queen's; Murray Hadlow, Varsity; Mark Hait, McGill; Jack Roberts, Queen's.

Montreal: Don Mattason, Varsity; Fred Wilmot, McGill; Roy McMurtry, Varsity; John McGill, McGill; Bob Leeming, Varsity; Olie Mandryk, Varsity; Doug Geekie, Varsity; Dave Fraser, McMaster.

studied by the committee", he declared. But the Canadian Congress of Labour still objects to two sections of the Bill, sections 365 and 372, which deals with criminal breach of contract and mischief. "The committee had a clause added so that legal strikers would not be committing a criminal offence". But the CCL wants this matter to be left entirely to the provinces, which all have labour codes.

"Most groups are now satisfied with the clauses on sedition and sabotage", he said, "but the Communists are still objecting to these sections."

Might Blacklist Queen's —Musicians Federation

KINGSTON (CUP)—If Queen's University continues to have "record dances", it will be blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians. This ruling was presented to the Students' Society in a letter from the local union secretary.

The AF of M resented the fact that admission was being charged for dances at which only recorded music was being played. The letter informed the students that they would be placed first on the Local Unfair List, and then if the practice continued, on the National Unfair List.

The letter read in part, "It is the intention of any Faculty of Queen's, or any other Student body, or any student, to use recorded music for dancing, where there is a paid admission at the door, that it their privilege, as they can engage any kind of music they may wish, but on the other hand it is also our privilege to perform whereever we wish, and we certainly do not wish for that kind of employment where recorded music is being used at dances where there is a paid admission at the door."

A ruling of the Cnion states that "it is against the rules of the Federation for any member to perform in competition with mechanical music."

McGill Liberals Vote Out US As Eleventh Province

MONTREAL — (CUP) — An attempted move by the Liberal Club of McGill University to incorporate the United States into Canada as an eleventh province was voted down recently at McGill's first model parliament.

The Liberals, acting government at the parliament, noted "the pride Canada would gain by accepting the request of the USA to annex them into Canada as the eleventh province." The acting prime minister noted some of the benefits to Canada that would result from the annexation—major league baseball, more television channels, and cheaper cigarettes and gasoline.

The leader of the abor-Progressive party said, according to the McGill Daily, that "the people of the USA have not the intelligence to accept democratic government as Canada would so offer them."

The Progressive Conservatives could see only one advantage to annexation—lifting of import restrictions on football players.

Goodbye Beria

The Unbridgeable Chasm

By BOB BROWN

The recent death sentence of former chief of the Russian secret police has caused a good deal of editorial comment in papers the world over. The writer, II Commerce and Finance, sees it as only an inevitable aspect of the dogmatic Communist philosophy.

"The State Scientific Publishing House recommends that pages 21, 22, 23, and 24 be removed from Volume V (of the Big Soviet Encyclopedia), as well as the portrait between pages 22 and 23. To replace these, the pages of a new text are enclosed. The above mentioned pages should be cut out with scissors or a razor blade. . . ."

THIS IS THE EPITAPH of Lavrenty P. Beria. The quotation is from a letter sent to all owners of the Russian Government's Official Encyclopedia. The pages to be removed are those in the BER section of the book, and contain the biography and portrait of the former Russian police and atom chief, Beria.

It is not known in the Western World for what "crimes" Beria was actually executed. The official indictment, to which Beria "confessed", is so comprehensively damning as to be utterly ridiculous to anyone not thoroughly familiar with the weird jungleland of Soviet dogma and politics. According to his accusers, he was a secret British agent even before the Soviet Regime was officially established in 1919. He was guilty of almost every conceivable crime, from using "slander, intrigues, and various provocations against honest government workers" to "sabotaging the Soviet farm program." He was guilty of "spying for imperialist reactionaries" (i.e., the West) and was "morally depraved" and a "bourgeois capitalist".

AND THIS IS THE MAN who was accorded the honor of nominating Malenkov to the Premiership of Russia just a few short months ago, who was Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union, and who was one of the three speakers at Stalin's funeral. This is the man who has had charge of the dreaded Soviet secret police ever since the days of the Great Purge, who has had charge of Russia's amazingly successful atomic energy program, who was one of the few men that Stalin is said to have trusted. . . .

Loyal Communists everywhere are asked to believe that this man, Beria, and a host of his associates and underlings, have for over 30 years been plotting and working for the destruction of the Soviet Union and International Communism.

AND COMMUNISTS the world over without exception do believe it, or find it expedient to say that they believe it.

This is the Gulf.

Between the quizzical, sceptical minds of the Western World, and the unquestioning minds of Communists who believe what they are told to believe because they are told to believe it, there is a gulf.

BETWEEN THE WESTERN attitude (admittedly sometimes vague) that there exist certain inalienable human rights and immutable ethical values; and the Communist view that human rights and ethical principles are subject to the latest shift of the party line, that there is nothing wrong with one of the highest officials of International Communism being convicted of the most serious crimes and sentenced to death by a court that was presided over by an army general with no previous juridical experience, and before which he did not even have a chance to appear — between these two views, there is an unbridgeable Chasm.

Caution Needed

A very controversial bill, Bill 7, is this year still the talk of Capitol Hill. It has changed its number repeatedly but it is called, for purposes of public simplification, the revision of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Last year, The Varsity, in its Civil Liberties issue, devoted almost two pages to a review of the dangers inherent in the proposed revisions. The fact is that many of these still exist.

The present Code was adopted in 1892. It was based upon a Code which was drafted in 1878; the Canadian Government adopted it and it has been used for over sixty years without once having received a major overhaul.

The main task of a Royal Commission, appointed in 1949, and as set forth in its terms of reference, was to simplify, rearrange and consolidate the old Code. The Minister of Justice told the Senate in May, 1952, "the purpose of the revision was not to effect changes in broad principles, but was to evolve as simple a Code as possible. . . ."

However, several MP's and Senators have raised critical voices. Hon. Arthur Roebuck said in December 1953: "The purpose of it (the revision) was to clarify, re-arrange and condense . . . but they (the revisers) have gone a good deal further, and have made quite a number of amendments to the sugstance of the code. . . ."

It is obvious that the old Code definitely needs an overhaul. We have used it for over sixty years — its ideas and principles are out of date — it does not conform to the social ideas and practices of our time.

What we need is a new Code and a new Royal Commission appointed and given full powers to draw one up. Not a Commission to rearrange, but one to re-make.

Parliament should set up a new Commission, of jurists and other experts with wide terms of reference, to prepare a new Code for Canada which reflects the social conscience and understanding of our time.

Too many of our leading politicians have publicly said that Bill 7 threatens "the freedoms and safeguards won by centuries of struggle." It must be carefully considered before it becomes law. So long as there are weaknesses in the proposed Code—and many of the most important legal minds have pointed these out—then we cannot have Parliament pass it.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine stated: " . . . It is my opinion that this is the most important piece of legislation that has been brought before parliament for many a day. It affects the life and liberty of every individual in the whole of Canada. Therefore it is of tremendous significance . . . "

We agree, and it should be so considered by the MP's and Senators.

Better Than Nothing

This issue of The Varsity contains something you may not recognize or understand: a column written in French.

Almost daily in our bilingual country, some speaker, writer or public figure comments on the union of two cultures to make one country. He then asks for greater co-operation between the two.

We have become rather fed up with this constant verbal barrage and the lack of any attempt to understand and appreciate the French element in Canada. Thus we intend to print a column in French each week, and we ask you all—engineers as well as language majors, to read it.

It has been said many times by Torontonians who grew up in the province of Quebec, that they didn't know there was a French-Canadian problem until they came to Toronto. This may be true, but whether it is or not, we should all try to become more conscious of the dual nature of our country.

Reading The Varsity weekly article is a small step along the way to understanding, but we feel that too many of us have taken no steps at all.

Our Readers Write

Swift, Or Return To Reason

Irrationalist Pidhaini, Varsity I, 14, believes rightly that "basic concepts are not provable." (By proof, I take him to mean demonstration of the identity or non-identity holding between subject and predicate of all affirmative proposition via a middle term.) Very cleverly, Mr. P. has attributed to Mr. Lee a concept of "reason" that is inconsistent, and then taken great delight in pointing out the inconsistency. This simple method of winning an argument is by now quite moth-worn.

What Mr. P wants to say is this: that there are no certain primary truths (where the bond uniting the subj. and pred, is given by their very meaning) to employ as premises in argument; hence, all statements have only opinionative value, i.e., lack truth-value. Of course this theory includes Mr. P's assertions to this effect. With this, Mr. P eclipses himself. Why, then, we ask, did he bother to write his letters at all? (Has Mr. P accepted whole-hog the suggestion of Prof. Marcus Long in a recent spiel to the M.P.C. group re the non-existence of self - evident truths?)

Of course if there are such truths, man by reason can proceed to further knowledge. Certainly it is not self-evident that there are no self-evident truths. In essence: Mr. P has either stated that he knows that there is no knowledge (a blatant violation of the self-evident principle of contradiction) or that he is an ignoramus. It is an interesting fact that the 'primary truths' assert themselves in their very denial. Witness the entertaining plight of the Semanticist who takes the principle of identity, "being is", and says "being is not". (Prof. Carpenter?)

What Mr. P has quite overlooked is the world of experience, from which we abstract our basic truths. Does the scientist still deal with this world of experience or with a set of fictitious entities enjoying a blissful existence in some Platonic heaven?

Now an individual cannot prove what he takes on Faith. Yet by feeble human reason some men have proved some of what is taken on Faith by others, such as "God is", etc. "Nevertheless, there is nothing to prevent a man who cannot grasp a proof from accepting, as a matter of faith, something which in itself is capable of being scientifically known and demonstrated (St. Thomas)."

To counteract the present flight from sanity, I suggest "The Return to Reason" (J. Wild: March, 1953).

Winter Wonderland

One of the most difficult aspects of a photo like this is the attempt to identify the scene shown. Campus types who spend most of their time in Hart House will recognize it as looking out over Queen's Park, towards the Parliament Buildings.

That white material on the ground and cars is nothing but snow, of which there is very little just now. This picture may be clipped out and tacked on the wall as a memento of what winter looks like.

Desire For Perfection Clashes With Progress Said Wallberg Speaker

"In all human endeavor one is apt to find strife between the desire for perfection and the desire for progress", said Mr. W. F. G. Swann, the seventh speaker for the annual Walberg Lecture, at Convocation Hall last night. Swann spoke on "Engineering in our Epoch". He is the Director of the Bartol Research Foundation of the Franklin Institute in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

Swann outlined the difference between the approach of the pure Scientist, the engineer and the inventor. He said that the pure scientist, is interested mainly in the fundamental laws of nature.

As an example, he took the physicist, who starts with his fundamental laws and then proceeds to trace their consequences in the phenomena around him.

He said the pure scientist differs from the engineer in that the former can go in any direction he may choose, no matter what the practical result, whereas the engineer has his path all set out for him, all that he has to do is find the way and reach the goal, sometimes completely ignoring many of the complicated factors that play a part.

"Therefore, the engineer has to be concerned with the ultimate results rather than with the starting points," he said.

The inventor, he said, is even more remote from the pure scientist than is the engineer. "The engineer stands between the inventor and the man of pure science." The engineer can be a man with little knowledge of pure science, he said; he doesn't need to be interested in the "logical relations of the facts of nature." All he needs is immeasureable courage and a vast accumulation of facts and experience. "It is often the very lack of technical knowledge of the inventor which provides the secret of his success," he snaid.

Swann outlined the fundamentals of Atomic and Molecular Structure in the New era of engineering. This science has forced engineers to become more acquainted with the fundamental laws of science. With the invention of the radio tube came the first usefulness for some of the vast amount of research that had been done and this led to more and greater discoveries. For example, the invention of a wrist radio receiving set.

In conclusion he said that the important thing to remember about science is that it is concerned with answering the question "how" rather than being too concerned with answering the question "why".

"It is necessary to bring the student of the future to a stage where he is not limited to looking at the new fields afar, but from the viewpoint of 'why.'"

Final Call For Fees

The last call for the second instalment of fees will soon be due. Skulemen, Medsmen, and Architects have already paid their second installment. For most of the rest of the colleges and faculties the last payment is due on the 20th or 25th of this month Social Work has until the 10th of February.

The University will willingly relieve you of your money at Simcoe Hall in the Chief Accountant's Office.

The Varsity Needs You

You Lucky People

By JIM PROUDFOOT

One of these days, The Varsity will appear with no headlines, not one. And it will be your fault. Yes, you.

The Varsity's makeup editor (that means she is in charge of such things as headlines and so forth) was down here in the office last night preparing this issue. "Hey you", she shouted (oh, she's okay), "I have no copy and I have nobody to write heads. Write me a feature to correct the situation".

Writing this sort of story is a double-edged solution to the problem. It fills the immediately pressing problem of insufficient material. Then, it could conceivably induce a few people into coming down to the office. Once you get here, you're sunk. I know. I even sleep here.

Oh, you have no idea of the gay, mad times we have here at the University of Toronto's only co-educational fraternity. "To hell with NFCUS", we cry "Down with WUS", "Hurray for INS," "Three cheers for SPEBSQSA". What a feeling of power we get as one of the big campus wheels cringes into the office asking meekly if he can get "this little letter" printed. On publicity most activities rise or fall and the power is ours, all ours.

And the joy of seeing your byline in the paper, the very words you typed with your very own index finger. The thrill is indescribable.

Then, we have headlines. Ah here is the most creative and most vital branch of the process. No matter how well a story may be written, it is worthless if the heading is poorly done.

So you see you too, can become an important and famous campus personality. All you have to do is report to the Varsity office, packed as it is with beautiful girls, odd characters, typewriters, copy paper, tables, chairs and editors: The magic world of journalism will unfold before you, you lucky, lucky person. Who could ask for more?

Army In Free At COTC Ball

Members of the COTC contingent on the campus will be admitted free to their annual military ball it was announced last night. This year the ball will be held on Jan. 29, in the Great Hall at Hart House. After a meeting of the committee last night, chairman Cecil Rotenberg stated that this year contingent cadets will not pay for their tickets. Non-members attending the dance will, as in the past, be charged. The move is in the nature of an experiment and if successful will be continued next year, said Rotenberg.

Students May Be Prevented From Giving Out Programs

Two business-minded students, Harvey Silver, I UC, and Syd Steiner, II UC, are experiencing difficulty with the Board of Police Commissioners in their plan to give away free hockey programs at Maple Leaf Gardens. The boys wish to distribute programs which will contain line-ups and articles on hockey and to pay for them with advertising.

"We just want an opportunity to carry on business in a legal, ethical manner to carry us through university", said Steiner. "We want to emphasize that we're not out to fight anyone".

They sold programs at the Argo games last season for 20 cents each, underselling the official ones, printed by the club, by 15 cents. At one game the Argo club switched sweaters at the last minute so that, as Steiner said, "Even the TV announcer didn't know who was who".

HARVEY SILVER

In a statement to The Varsity, Mayor Lamport, a member of the Commission, said "It's a new thing because they're going to give them away". At present there are programs being sold by the Gardens and by independent distributors.

"I do feel sometimes that the Argos, who do help the Varsity lads too, can suffer from this. They naturally feel that they would like to have the profits from their programs," said the Mayor. "The competition would a bit stiff".

Mayor Lamport mentioned that the problems of congestion of the sidewalks and littering of the streets with the discarded programs were to be considered. He pointed out that the decision was now in the hands of the Chief Constable who will look into the city by-laws concerning the issue "There is still a great deal of confusion on the matter", said Mayor Lamport. "The Chief Constable will hand down the decision as soon as he can".

Silver said, "We checked with the Sanitation Department, the Licence Department and with the city by-laws, and we feel that we are entitled by law to proceed as we wish. I am quite sure that Judge McDonald, the mayor and the other members of the board will do what's fair and grant us the licence".

A definite threat to their plans would be the suggested extension of the downtown area where handbill licences are not in use. A representative of the Gardens suggested at the recent meeting of the Commission that the area be moved north to College St.

The only reason for not permitting the licence by-law, say the boys, is when the character of the applicants is in question. The mayor strongly emphasized that this was not the case with these two applicants.

SIDNEY STEINER

He considered the students' activities "unfair" to the Gardens and other large organizations which pay heavy taxes. He said,

Opening New Year Debate Spotlights Education Costs

Hart House debating begins a new year tomorrow night in the Debates Room at p.m., when the subject of Higher Education takes the spotlight.

"That the chequebook has replaced the textbook as the key to higher education" is the topic Horace Krever, III Law and J. Roberts, III UC will support. For the noes, will be T. Hammond, II UC, and G. Hurlburt, III Eng.

The monthly debate's Honorary Visitor tomorrow night is Dr. A. W Trueman, newly-appointed film commissioner of the National Film Board. Dr. Trueman was formerly the president of the University of New Brunswick.

Clyde Batten of the Hart House Debates Committee last night urged all House members who have an urge to "get up on their feet to discuss the subject" to come to the debate. He reminded members that all the debates have been top-hat friendly and mutually profitable.

"The public has the most to gain from this venture" pointed out Steiner and, grinning, added, "I'm sure our little enterprise is not going to bankrupt Maple Leaf Gardens".

CORK OR PLAIN

Poole and Poole

In Hart House Sunday night there were man and wife and their two piano's back to back fitting in unity and concord to love, honor and play till time did them part. The two players were Margaret Parsons Poole and Clifford Poole. The two pianos were Heintzman and Company.

As might be expected from a man and wife team, the co-operation in timing and phrasing was excellent, it being the woman's part to follow and the man's to lead. The Pooles poole their individual talents to make what is a fairly successful duo-piano team. But I must confess that I have no great fondness for piano duets. The same amount of personality and color as achieved by piano solo is not possible because the interpretation is divided. Nor is any great strength and variety of tone added as in combinations of different instruments. The only advantage is that of having ten more fingers to cover a duplicate set of notes, like playing solitaire with two checks of cards.

However, within the limitations of their means The Pooles Inc. are quite enjoyable. They both play with attention to the details of their own half and a fullness of tone which testify to the extensive musical training of each. It would be invidious to distinguish one from the other in such a close union, but a certain harshness of tone did seem to lie more on one side than the other.

Half is a word justifiably used in connection with the part that each takes, for in almost all numbers neither piano was subordinated to the other. This was especially true of the Billy the Kid ballet suite by Copland which I found the most entertaining piece of the evening, both in composition and rendition. It is graphic. For instance, the Open Prairies scene is characterized by an interval of bare fifths which remain, after Billy has come and gone, through a Mexican dance which Mr. Poole said would "sound peculiar," but pleasantly so, and through the "honky-tonk, real canteeen" celebration.

In the Mozart Concerto in E Flat there was evident effort to keep together, and consequently it was less musical. The final selections were a misty-mood Prelude by Clifford Poole and Gershwin's blue Rhapsody. The traditional character of the Wednesday and Sunday Hart House concerts seems to have been exchanged this week.

Vic Gals Beat Meds 6-1 In Hockey Event

There was blood on the moon in yesterday's ladies hockey battle as the Vic firsts clad in traditional scarlet and gold, charged through the red and black Meds' gals to a 6-1 victory.

It was perhaps one, if not, the greatest match this season with plenty of action and good play. Meds, lacking the assistance of perennial threat, Sally Searles, failed to push one past the Vic goalie till the last five minutes of play. At the end of a hard-going, fast-moving opening period, Vic was leading by two. Early in the second, Mary Crawford and Mary Foster shot a pair past the Meds line to increase their lead by still two more.

Shortly after, Crawford flipped in her second, Marg Platt of Meds found a hole in the Vic defence and tallied the single for the doctors. Vic's Spragg retaliated with the finisher to end the scoring 6-1 for the Viesters.

Vic's defensive work was quite spectacular for the women's brand of hockey. Mary Foster, first year Vic did an excellent job, both on forward and defence. Polly Spragg and Mary Crawford were top scorers of the meet tallying a pair each. Jackie Wickware and Mary Foster scored singles for Vic. Marg Platt pushed a single past the Vic goalie, who came very close to a shutout.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The members of the inter-collegiate athletic union executive, who met in solemn and secret conclave in Hart House Saturday, were faced with perhaps the most difficult decision they ever had to make. They had to decide whether to treat the McMaster football team with complete fairness or to —as they saw it—save the sport of college football, as we know it. The final decision—to remove McMaster—was a difficult one to make. For the sake of competition and the sport, the executive was genuinely sorry to oust the fledgling Hamilton team but, at the same time, they felt they were acting in the best interests of the game.

To admit McMaster to the league in 1953, the loop had to adopt a strange and ingenious schedule, which saw each team still play a six-game series, even though there were now four other squads to be played. What happened, as everybody knows, was that there were two teams which each club played only once. For example, last season, Varsity didn't play at McMaster and McGill didn't play at Varsity Stadium.

And this is where the league moguls made their mistake. At the time Mac was admitted, the schedule was drawn up for the three seasons to come. Surely they could have foreseen what finally brought the matter to a head: that two of the year's biggest games — Western at Varsity and Varsity at Queen's — would be out of the schedule. In the face of declining attendances, the officials of these two teams felt they couldn't possibly stay in the black without these matches. For Queen's, it was a matter of life and death—without that game, they might have been forced out of the league. And, here at Varsity, the university is in sufficiently bad financial shape without having a deficit tossed to it by the athletic association.

For that matter, the U. of T. needs to make a profit on football because the grid Blues pay the freight for the rest of the athletic program. Perhaps the basketball team pays for itself but it's a cinch none of the others do. And perhaps this isn't entirely proper since it would seem that hockey, for instance, could be placed on a paying basis. It's a fact, though, that the football profit is that important the way things stand.

Nor does that statement make the intercollegiate league a professional circuit. It's sound business to operate at a profit, especially when you need the money. Lots of amateur leagues make money and it's not quite apparent how this affects the amateur status of either the players or the sport in question.

In any case, it was at Queen's that a crisis existed, with Toronto finding the situation almost as serious. Attendance and gate receipts were away down and the league, the executive felt, was in danger. It was a matter of preserving the league or losing McMaster.

There was never any question of Mac's ability to field a good team. Nor was it felt that Mac was to blame for declining attendance. Competition with rapidly-improving professional ball and television (next year Argonaut away-games will also be telecast locally) was responsible. The executive made an unfortunate, but necessary, decision and in view of the facts, it's hard to fault them for it, even though everyone, the executive included, admits that McMaster was given a rough deal.

As far as this "traditional rivalry" business is concerned, it was simply the clause of the constitution that was invoked in this case. It says, in effect, that nothing shall disturb the traditional Varsity-Queen's-McGill rivalry. The absence in next year's schedule of a Queen's-Varsity game at Kingston made that paragraph applicable. It can, of course, be pointed out that Western disturbs the rivalry, too, by winning championships so regularly but, as part of a four-team setup, to which we wwill return this fall, they don't cause a serious disruption.

McGill disagreed with Saturday's vote and supported the McMaster entry. McGill claims that, since the vote was not unanimous, McMaster is actually still in the league. But, if Western, Varsity and Queen's say they won't play Mac —and that's what they say — McGill's principles, fine though they may be, won't stand up.

It's unfortunate that McMaster had to be treated shabbily. The members of the executive did what they thought they had to in order to preserve the sport. Whether they did the right thing will be apparent in late November of this year, when it will be seen if college ball can survive TV or if the sport is dying, regardless of the number of teams involved.

Irish Are Basketball Power Lead In Intramural League

Setting about the task at hand in a very business-like manner St. Mikes Senior basketball boys hung up another victory as they turned back Senior Meds 53-31. Although the game may have fallen short from the spectators' point of view, St. Mike's put on a masterful display of zone defence, coupled with some outstanding shooting, 52 per cent of their shots finding the hoop, to leave the outcome never in doubt.

Taking control from the opening jump the Double Blue set an almost leisurely pace and had little trouble stalling the Meds offensive with their solid defence. At the same time the Irish attack, led by Danny Driscol and Dave Winters (sounds like the football team), broke through the Med's defensive effort easily.

Danny, especially, was a going concern under the basket, as he finished numerous plays with fine scoring efforts. The Meds' team seemed plagued with a bad does of sloppy passing throughout most of the game.

Leading 39-22 going into the final period, St. Mike's dropped back even more so into their defensive shell. Doug Dalgleish, using his height to good advantage, snagged rebound after rebound to start the Meds squad down the floor, but St. Mike's defence remained firm. Timmons. All State guard while in high school, turned in a fine game for the Double Blue, sinking several set shots from well out, to the annoyance of his check. With 6 points Doug Dalgleish led the Meds' scorers while Driscol with 11, Winters 2, and Timmons 10 were tops for St. Mike's.

Shangri-La Revisited

Shangri-La is no longer a story book dream. A "lost valley" of aborigines exists on Dutch-owned New Guinea, and last month plans were under way to "Christianize" the inhabitants of this valley called Baleim on the maps.

Like the fictional Shangri-La, there is no way out except over the peaks, and accordingly a plane-load of missionaries is being flown in to begin their work among the natives.

Close observers of the valley, which has been known since 1939, have described it as "the strange and modern Eden". Two survivors of a US air force transport that crashed in the valley, one of them a nurse, found the natives friendly, the weather lovely, the vegetation beautiful, and "the pigs the biggest they had ever seen".

It is estimated that 200,000 aborigines live in 400 villages in the valley. This Shangri-La is enclosed by impenetrable tropical mountains, where soil is tilled under advanced irrigation methods by stone implements, where gardens are fenced with stone, where bridges have been built over broad rivers with an enginering skill astonishing even to western civilization.

The general conclusion, then, appears to be that these natives are probably leading a relatively peaceful and happy life. They had not been reached by Christianity directly in the past. Yet, last month a group of people — no doubt very sincere people — set out to Christianize them.

The question that is bothering us is why?

"Christianizing" is synonymous, to some extent, with "civilizing". But this will involve a fundamental disturbance of the priciples by which these natives are living. In fact, however, the natives are reported to be living quite contentedly as they are.

What can "western civilization" and "Christianity" offer them? Our wars, struggles and conflicts? Our A-bombs? Our industrialization that has brought with it basic problems in human relations?

These natives of Shangri-La have not asked for our Christianity. We have somehow decided they should get it — even at the expense of disturbing their simple and quiet culture.

We believe that missionaries are truly sincere in many of their humanitarian tasks. Yet we wonder if the civilizing which accompanies the Christianizing is worth destroying, beyond repair, the simple social fabric which at present surrounds the natives of the "lost valley".

The Real Target

We have strongly felt that the British Government was going too far when it recently suspended the vastly liberalized constitution of British Guiana. We believed that the suspension was not getting at the source of any trouble in that colony which might be attributed to the Communists. We have always contended thaat by practicing what we preach we would win the support of the people with whom we come into contact.

The extent of the constitution did not determine the whole cause of the spread of communism in Guiana.

A dispatch from Georgetown, British Guiana, however, might have hit closer to the real cause. It stated that the commission sent from England to look over the Guiana scene "found workers on some (sugar) estates living in tumble-down, mud-floored hovels that were slave quarters in the bad old days of 130 years ago."

The commission also "found some workers toiling from before dawn to after dark on a diet that is below the minimum for subsistence set by the United Nations". These conditions are perhaps more vital in the long run to the native Guianese.

We suggest that the British action of some months ago only strengthened the People's Progressive Party, the Communists as they have come to be called.

Checkbook or Textbook

Just The First Step

The following article was submitted by the University Labor Progressive Party Club. It expresses LPP support of the SAC motion backing the implementation of the Massey Report, but feels this is only a small beginning.

The University of Toronto L.P.P. club greets and whole-heartedly supports the recent SAC motion urgently requesting the Federal Government to implement the Massey Report proposals.

DIRECT FEDERAL FINANCIAL AID to students is an extremely vital matter concerning not only the students but also the nation as a whole. In a brief presented by the National Committee of LPP student clubs to the delegates at the 1953 NFCUS conference, we pointed out: "Decreasing enrolment resulting from increased fees and the refusal of the federal government to grant direct financial aid to needy students — all this prevents the full development of Canadian intellectual, cultural and scientific endeavour."

Dr. Cyril James previously pointed out "There are still thousands of Canadians who are deprived of a university education, or find the quality of that education impaired by financial condition." (Montreal Gazette, Oct. 30/52).

AT CANADA'S LARGEST university, the University of Toronto, fees in a less expensive faculty such as arts have risen since 1948 from $228 for women; $236 for men to $329 for women; $349 for men. A survey conducted over two years ago showed that an out-of-town student needs at least $1,200 to carry him through financially in an academic year. Dr. James placed the costs of an out-of-town student at McGill to be beyond the $1,500 mark. (Montreal Gazette, May 10/51).

Yet the success of the DVA scheme showed the great desire and enthusiasm with which young Canadians took up the educational opportunities made available through direct financial assistance. Looking at the annual questionnaire of the University of Toronto Medical Journal for the 1950 graduating medicine class (81% of which were in receipt of DVA) we find "40% feel now that they would never have gone to university if it had not been for DVA . . . 'It was the best thing that ever happened to me', several stated."

A RECENT INQUIRY INTO the financial conditions of students at the University of Montreal (printed in part in the March 26, 1953 edition of Le Quartier Latin) showed that 35% of the students of the university must obtain from sources other than their families, sums ranging from $700 to $1,200 and $1,500. Nearly 35% of the students do not earn enough during the summer to cover the deficit of their budget.

No wonder that of the whole student population at the University of Montreal, the youth of workers' families (both white collar and non-white collar) comprise only 30.46%, while the young people of those engaged in commerce and finance or the professions comprise 47.7%. Yet these workers and farmers make up 75.6% of Quebec's population. Commercial and professional men make up only 10.4% of the population (Le Quartier Latin, March, 1953). Thus we see that the number of working class and farm students at the University of Montreal is widely out of proportion to the number of workers and farmers in the Province of Quebec.

THE LOGICAL OUTCOME of increased fees is reduced enrolment. After the 1951 general fees increase there followed a 12% drop in enrolment in Ontario universities and a 6% over-all drop in Canada. Although this drop was to some extent attributed to the leaving of numbers of students receiving DVA assistance, it was mainly made up of non-DVA students.

To date, the federal government has persistently denied federal financial aid. Yet, while doing so, it has no trouble allotting large sums to induce students to enter various army, navy and air force training schemes such as the ROTP (Regular Officers' Training Plan), the COTC (Canadian Officers' Training Corp), etc.

TAKE FOR EXAMPLE the ROTP. The student who agrees to a minimum of three years of service after graduation gets his tuition fee, a grant to defray cost of books and instruments for each subsidized university year, pay of $55 a month and a subsistence allowance of $65 a month during the academic year with similar financial arrangements during summer training. Incidentally, the ROTP "aims to encourage large numbers of high school students who would otherwise be unable to afford a higher education to continue their education with government sponsorship and financial assistance." (see introduction to circular "R.O.-T.P.") Certainly if it is possible to grant assistance to youth under the above condition it should be possible to grant assistance to youth who have no desire for a military career. Indeed, one is led to believe that part of the reason why the government continues to deny financial aid is in the hope that needy students will turn to the armed forces.

JUSTICE J. KEILLER MacKAY of the Supreme Court of Ontario on May 23, 1951, just after previous general fees increases, stated: "Further increased fees for Canadian university students would undermine the whole brilliant future of Canada."

A short time ago the L.P.P. sent each of the SAC members a copy of its brief along with a letter suggesting: 1. That the SAC appeal directly to the Dominion Government urging implementation of the Massey Commission proposals. 2. That the SAC conduct a campus-wide survey on what it costs the average student in the various faculties to go to university and how the students meet their expenses. 3. That the SAC urge NFCUS to undertake a nation-wide petition campaign to secure direct federal aid.

AN EXCELLENT BEGINNING was made when the SAC decided to request all student organizations in all colleges and faculties to place themselves publicly on record as supporting the immediate establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries. The L.P.P. ,too, urges that each undergraduate organization immediately respond to the SAC request. However, this is only a first step.

Plea For A Missing Brief Case

The Editor,
The Varsity:

To Whom It May Concern:

In our University there are some who have lowered themselves to the status of the common (and all too common) thief. On Friday morning my brief case was stolen from Hart House. It had been the gift of my widowed mother, who could ill-afford it, and because of this had a deep sentimental value. It contained my notes for the chemistry test Friday afternoon, along with my lunch and various writing materials.

Following is a description of my brief case:

Dark brown with a brass lock. On one side, in a zippered pocket, there is a removable music case. Will anyone knowing anything about it please get in touch with me or phone my mother at CH—1-0691, between the hours of 9 and 5.

If the person who made off with my brief case feels that the fruits of his labors must be kept and admired, even though his better senses decree otherwise, then out of common decency he might return my notes to me. If he should have a change of heart, but wishes to remain unknown to me, then I ask him to leave the brief case at the Hall Porter's desk, Hart House. There will be a reward for its return

Injustice

The Editor,
The Varsity:

With respect to the issue of The Varsity of Wednesday, January 13th, and the statements therein connecting Mr. E. A. Halse with alleged discrimination in the Employment Service, may I make the following statement:

During seven years in which I was connected with student work of the University of Toronto, the latter three as Chaplain of Hart House, I had occasion many times to refer to Mr. Halse overseas students seeking employment. Mr. Halse proved himself at all times most helpful, taking an interest in each case far beyond what his duty required. Please make amends for the grave injustice done him.

(Rev.) E. M. Nichols.

Ed. Note: We wish to remind our readers that The Varsity, per se, is not attacking Mr. Halse's handling of Employment Service. We have never wished to imply that Mr. Halse is using discriminatory practices. All that has been asked is that an investigation be made so that the facts for or against can be ascertained.

In our responsibility to our readers we printed a front page story which involved a charge by a student and not this paper. We will be happy to print any exoneration of Mr. Halse when and if the SAC Investigating Committee so reports.

What Cha' Callit

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Dear joker,

I should like to congratulate the staff of The Varsity for the scintillating issue they published on Jan. 12th. The Varsity of late has been decidedly lacking in any humor and I am glad to see that you have finally attempted to print a jocular edition, however feeble the attempt may have been.

I think that most of the articles could have been considerably improved by a ten-year-old moron and now we have seen just how witty The Varsity can become. I suggest that you continue the normal dry effort and forget about any further witty endeavours. I might add that I took the prescribed dose of a grain of salt and I still found the result equally painful. However it was most considerate of you to suggest a tonic.

Yours, suffering,

"Sweet Ad-o-oline . . ." These four men of music remind us that the Hart House quartet contest is with us again. They are the 1952 Emmanuel entry — Bruce Vanstone, Bruce McLeod, Roy Neechall and Paul Morrow.

Quartet Contest Looms On Hart House Horizon

Preliminary judging of quartets entered in the fifth annual Hart House Quartet Contest will take place in the fifth annual Hart Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, announced last night.

"All ambitious quartets on the campus have a chance for their talents to be heard," he added. Quartets will be judged on harmony, accuracy, balance and blend, voice expression, song arrangement and stage presence, he said.

"This last category advises the use of uniforms or costumes of a simple type," McDowell said. The quartets don't necessarily have to be of the barbershop type, he added.

A silver trophy cup will be awarded to the winning quartet, and in addition each of the successful quartet members receive silver replica cups.

Entries in the previous annual Hart House contest have had such handles as The Page Six Trio plus Bass, the Four Cadavers, and the Four Flushers.

All male undergraduates are eligible to compete in the contest. Each quartet will sing two numbers, and the winning quartet will be required to prepare an additional number for the proposed Intercollegiate Quartet Contest.

Entry forms for the contest are available in the Undergraduate Activities Office, Hart House. These entry forms must be returned by 5:00 p.m., January 22.

The preliminary judging will take place every Monday and Friday noon beginning February 1 in the East Common Room, Hart House.

One of the contest judges the House Committee plans, will be a member of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, Inc.

While the standard attire for quartet contestants is blazers and slacks, each group can dress as it pleases. In past years, entrants have showed up gowned as barber poles and judges.

Sponsored by the House Committee, the contest was originated in 1950 by Gerry Hart, now a graduate of Meds, and Charles McCurdy.

Canada On CoSec Committee Replaces US As Regional Rep

Ottawa—(CUP) — Canada has been elected to the five-nation Supervising Committee of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (CoSec). At a meeting held in Instanbul, Turkey, The National Federation of Canadian University Students replaced the United States National Union as the representative for the North American region

Yves Pilon, national secretary-treasurer of NFCUS, considered it a "singular honor" that the National Federation was elected to the Supervising Committee. The Committee formulates policy for CoSec between conferences.

NFCUS was represented at the Istanbul conference by one of its largest delegations. Five delegates were sent to speak for NFCUS: Tony Enriquez, full-time president; Marcel Leblanc, International Activities chairman; Jean De Margerie, NFCUS chief overseas commissioner; Bill Norris, past president of the Manitoba students' union; and Therese Brochu, a student at the University of Montreal.

The attendance of Enriquez and Leblanc was made possible by a grant from the Foundation for Youth and Student Affairs, an organization of American business and political personalities. The other three are attending at their own expense.

The conference, held between Jan. 8 and Jan. 15, was attended by over forty countries. The general purpose of the meeting was to discuss the exchange of publications, students, and understanding, among western nations. The NFCUS representatives, Enriquez and Leblanc, return Jan. 28.

Enriquez left for Istanbul with the expressed hope of getting Canada on the Supervising Committee. "Canada has much to offer because it is a bridge between the European and American points of view and, therefore, affords a better basis for co-operation," he said last month.

Pilon said the conference was called primarily to counter-balance the International Union of Students (IUS). Recently the IUS has come forward with a "new look" in its policy and has amended its constitution to provide for the position of associate membership. It was the "new look" that the CoSec delegates discussed.

CoSec was formed back in 1950 when a large number of western student unions withdrew from the Communist-dominated IUS. IUS refused to modify its political partisanship and the Co-Ordinating Secretariat was set up in Leiden, Netherlands.

The mass western exodus from the IUS resulted when the IUS Executive expelled the Yugoslav student union in 1949, immediately after the world-wide Communist International had expelled the Yugoslav government from participation in the International.

US Lecturer Plans Speech About Castles

Castles in Wales—Gothic castles of the thirteenth century—is the subject of the lecture to be given today to the Archaeological Institute of America. The lecture will be given by Dr. P. H. Brieger at 4:30 p.m. in the Museum Theatre.

Dr. Brieger, Ph.D., is Head of the Department of Art and Archaeology at the University. His lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides.

The castles concerned are those built by Edward I to seal his conquest of Wales. They have been selected as a topic for the lecture because they represent the peak of medieval castle building.

"The connection with the Roman and Byzantine traditions will be pointed out," said Dr. Brieger.

"The lecture will try to show the development of castles at the end of the thirteenth century, pointing out how it is related to the method of castle construction in the Norman period and how it is influenced by the fortifications built by the Crusaders in the Holy Land."

The problem in the building is what makes the most perfect castle, based on its strategical and geographical position. He said that nowhere in Western Europe can such a concentrated group of castles be found where the points of what constitutes the best castles have been solved with such consistency.

2 Million Dollar Grant Is Assured By Metro

The University of Toronto will be able to collect the $2,000,000 grant promised it by the city after all. This was decided at a meeting last night of the executive council of the metropolitan council.

The first half of the grant will be given to President Sidney Smith within a month — in time to meet commitments in connection with the university building program. The second $1,000,000 will be paid a year later.

The money will be raised by the Metropolitan Council through the sale of debentures. This sum would be repaid by the City of Toronto over a span of five years, with the final payments being made in 1950. The debenture issue will not be placed on sale for some time, but the grant will be paid in the meantime out of current city funds.

The city had made the original grant in 1949, to supplement the amount in the university building fund. Three weeks ago, Dr. Smith had asked the city for payment of the promised money, since the building fund had been exhausted. At first, the request led to considerable confusion since the city was not convinced it was their responsibility and not a metropolitan one, while the metropolitan council was not in a position to make the grant.

Mayor Allan Lamport put forward the present solution at last night's meeting. He recalled that in 1951, the Ontario Municipal Board had approved payment of the grants by means of a debenture issue.

Payment of the funds by the Metropolitan Council became necessary because that body now has the responsibility of raising capital funds. Reeve Fred Hall of York Township wondered if the permission given in 1951 for debentures was still valid and was assured by Mayor Lamport that it was.

The Lighter Vein

A Bloody Disgrace

By WENDY MICHENER

I walked into the bright blood donor clinic clutching every cubic centimetre of blood I owned. The efficient-looking nurse at the desk gave me a swift appraisal, and I saw that she figured I had plenty to give. Then she whipped out the first needle and punctured me. A whole drop came out. I had given blood. The precious ruby drop was dropped carelessly into a blue solution where it spread and dissolved like smoke. Oh, the waste of it! A whole drop of all-Varsity blood.

The next step took place in a room full of comfortable beds. Quite a pleasant sight when it's nine in the morning. There were bottles, bottles everywhere and not a one of beer, and bodies laid out in the length of comfort. As I lay there having one of my veins doctored up for tapping, I noticed the cheerful remarks coming from the other red-blooded specimens. Mostly bloody puns.

And then my time was up. My number was called. I gritted my teeth and clutched my piece of wood. The second needle approached. I waited. But there was nothing but a little sting like iodine and I was all hooked up. I could see all the blood draining out of the left side of my body and leaving it high and dry, while the rest went running around the catacomb passages trying to find it.

Just when I had consigned myself to anemia for the rest of my life, the nurse who had by now become a mediaeval blood-letter, came over. Something seemed to be wrong. She moved the tube, she flexed my muscles. In spite of the fact that it was being tapped at the source, it was not running free.

"Haw, I beat you," shouted a friend who had started at the same time. Everywhere around me people who had given 380cc's of pure student blood were walking triumphantly away, and there lay I. Oh the shame of it all! I lay and lay and my heart beat and beat, but all that came out of my chicken-livered veins was 200cc. Then stopping the hole in the epiderim with my finger, I moved to another bed, alas alone, for everyone else had finished before me. Carrying my wounded arm limply at my side I went in for coffee. But my shame followed me and I blushed at my puny self as I faced all those 380 cc'ers. And then what did I see? Blood on my arm. That vein was finally delivering the goods.

Dean Of Law Begins Tour In Vic Day

The Dean of the School of Law, Cecil Augustus Wright, will tour the Arts colleges within the next two weeks. Sponsored by the Law Club, he will give talks on "Progressive Legal Education." He plans to outline the approach to the study of law that the School uses.

The Dean is one of the most outstanding figures in Canadian Legal Education, to which he has devoted over 20 years. Editor of the Dominion Law Reports, he has written articles which are milestones in legal thought, and has been Dean of both of Ontario's law schools.

The first of these lectures will be held in Alumni Hall, Victoria College at 1:30 p.m. today. St. Michael's College will play host on Thursday at 1:30 p.m. in Brennan Hall.

Hart House Debate To Consider Chequebooks Versus Textbooks

Those attending tonight's debate at Hart House will hear the distinguished educationist, Dr. W. A. Trueman, tonight's Honorary Visitor. Dr. Trueman, now commissioner of the National Film Board is also former president of the University of New Brunswick.

The debate marks the 130th session of the Hart House Debates. Whether "The chequebook has replaced the textbook as the key to higher education" is the topic to be discussed.

Starting at 8 p.m. in the Debates Room, Horace Krever, III Law, and J. Roberts, III UC, will support the motion, opposed by Y. Hammond II UC, and G. Hurlbut, III English. All members of the House may speak from the floor after the main speakers have completed their arguments.

Tonight's debate marks the end of thirty years of Hart House debating. Clyde Batten reminded members last night that the true greatness of the contribution of the debates has been to "those whose lives, suffocated by the tedious banality of pursuing an education of this University, have been enriched by participation in those flights of forensic fantasy which so often characterize Hart House debates".

"Debating in Hart House," Batten said, "was originated in the spirit of the Deed of Gift in which the House was conceived as a common meeting ground for faculty graduates and undergraduates.

"It was to be primarily an occasion for neither persuasion, nor propaganda, but pleasure; a meeting place of students and 'wise and earnest men' in 'that spirit of friendly discussion and debate which is one of the prerequisites of the complete man," Batten said.

Gord Hurlburt III SPS, speaking on the negative, said, "ever since elementary school we have been possessors of texts larger, more attractive than those used by our fathers. Why, the sixth-grader used to carry five pounds-four ounces of text books to school in 1903, but now carries 8 pounds-six ounces. With all this knowledge available, what else but the textbook could be the key to higher education."

The other member of the negative, Tom Hammond, II UC, said, "most of the text books I have seen deserve to be replaced and 'Good Riddance). Besides, check books are given away free, and text books must be purchased."

The debaters for the affirmative refused to comment in case it damaged their case.

Friends Of India See Indian Classical Dance

Indian classical dancing will be demonstrated by Mrs. Willy Block Hanson, at the Women's Union next Tuesday night. This is part of the program for the India Republic Day. The program, under the auspices of the Friends of India Association, will be held from 8:30 p.m. till 12:00 midnight.

Mrs. Hanson, a ballet dancer, will perform the Rath Rali. She was at one time a pupil of Ram Gopal. Later in the evening a film of Ram Gopal doing classical dancing will probably be shown. After this there will be ballroom dancing and refreshments.

The Association is expecting about two hundred guests at the celebration. These will be Indian students, some University professors, Indian families in the area, and some of their friends. Visitors will be coming even from Hamilton.

DR. N. B. MEHTA

"The main object of the Association is mutual cultural understanding between India and Canada," said Dr. N. B. Mehta, the President. He said that the Association helped Indians to learn about the Canadian way of life and culture.

"Because of the millions of immigrants now coming in," he said, "we also help Indians to get employment and get established in this country."

"Not only students are members of our Association as in the past," said Mehta. "Now there are several Indian families in Toronto who belong." He said that there were also Canadian members. Some had been to India during the war and so became interested in it."

Grads In Sweden

Canada Grads Welcome At Swedish University

An expanded program for English-speaking students will be offered by the nIternational Graduate School at the University of Stockholm, Sweden, starting in 1954-55, announced Paul McKoskey, Student Director of the American-Scandinavian Foundation in New York.

Chester Smith and Alec Chistoff, both 5T3 grads, are already enrolled in the Graduate School of Stockholm University under the planned program.

In addition to the courses in social and political sciences which the International Graduate School had previously offered, qualified graduate students who have taken the required first semester language and orientation courses will now be able to pursue independent research in arts and crafts, history, languages, literature, and other fields.

Free tuition and $500 scholarships will be awarded to two outstanding American students. For other students there is a nominal fee of $100.

McGill To Be In Film Soon

Montreal (CUP) — A colored movie on the academic aspect of college life at McGill is now being made. First of its kind, it is a documentary film on the meaning of the university, its constitution, how it functions, and its relation to, and effect on, the community.

This production will cover all the departments of the university, featuring the work which is currently going on in that department.

The film will also contain a brief history, showing such famous persons as Sir William Rutherford and the work he did while at McGill and the buildings which have been endowed to McGill by its great benefactors.

As far as is known this film is the first of its kind to be produced. It is an educational project in itself whereas previous university films have been primarily for publicity purposes. This film will be shown in Canadian and American universities and to graduate groups.

The movie, a year and a half in the making, has almost been completed and will be released for public showing in January.

Food For Thought

By CLYDE BATTEN

"Why do they put this darned stuff on here anyway? It only confuses the issue. They have a perfectly delectable meal and that parsley, suspended in the gravy like a piece of dank seaweed, ruins it all."

"Yeah, and just think of all the things you could do with the money they spend on the stuff. You could probably resolve the national debt, or subsidize Medsmen, or buy beer for the engineers, or even feed the gargoyles in U.C. But no, they have to buy parsley."

"You're not kidding. Parsley in our soup, parsley on our salads and even parsley on our prime roast ribs of beef and potatoes au Bordelaise. Parsley, parsley, everywhere."

The conversation in the Great Hall had gone something like this, and some investigation seemed to be called for. Some very interesting facts were uncovered. Those uses of parsley specifically designed for the war effort have been deleted but the manner in which parsley stuck in flour and water, formed such an excellent camouflage in the last war, is a matter of historical record.

The first startling fact is that certain persons, notably those in Honour Ceramics and PHE actually like the crisp green leaves. In fact, one industrious athlete was observed requesting extra helpings, but further investigation revealed that he had rabbit-breeding for an option.

Our second consideration was the cost. When the market is good, parsley may be obtained for seventy-five cents but under adverse conditions, the price may go as high as a dollar-twenty-five. The consumption of parsley, in Hart House for example, including the three dining rooms and all special dinners, ranges from a low of four six-quart baskets to a high of seven. This would mean a price scale from three dollars to eight seventy-five. Even the latter maximum figure would scarcely provide the forty beers so essential to the life of an engineer.

But let us not soil our souls with too mundane an approach to the lowly parsley. Think of the aesthetic value. After all the sprightly sprig of parsley does give an element of life, vitality and beauty to an otherwise purely utilitarian plate of food. Who can estimate the effect of that bright spot of green on the papillae, or, indeed, on that innermost soul of man wherein he perceives the truly beautiful.

Future Of Africa Topic To Begin New Series Of FROS Panel Talks

Africa's future was discussed by a large group of students from all over the world in the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS) room at lunch-time yesterday. Nigeria and the Gold Coast were put forward as the most advanced districts in Africa, both politically and economically, and the question was raised, "Will the rest of Africa be able to develop peacefully into similar independent states?"

Several Nigerian students spoke on the warfare between the Mau Mau and the British in Kenya. Walter Eze, II Meds, said the reports from Kenya were biased. He said tnat they offered reasons for the actions of the British Colonial government but did no explain "why the Kenya people took up their swords."

Dr. G. Brown of the department of Anthropology said the foremost need was that the lives of Kikuyus should not be taken by other Kikuyus. Kemte Giadom pointed out that those who didn't fight were considered to be traitors, and treated as such.

"The problem is one of insecurity," said Eze. "In Nigeria and the Gold Coast," he said, "the natives have a feeling of security because they own the land and lease it to the whites. In Kenya and South Africa there is no such security," he said. "Six million Kenyans own only half of the land, while the rest is owned by 30 thousand Europeans."

E. Okorafor, a graduate student in the Political Science department, pointed out that the Gold Coast did-not get independence without bloodshed. He said that there were big riots, and the British imprisoned leaders of the political parties, accusing them of sedition.

"The people in South and East Africa are treated like animals", said Okorafor. He said peaceful moves now might not achieve anything. He said Africa will not adopt necessarily Communism, but rather the way of life that is best for her. Okorafor blamed not only the Europeans but also the Africans for the present situation. Eze wondered if Kenya, if given tht same chance as Nigeria and the Gold Coast, might go the same way.

This round-table discussion was the first of a series to be held every Tuesday at 12.45 p.m. in the FROS room, 113 UC, said the Secretary of FROS, Ruth Rakham. She said nex week the discussion will again be on Africa, and after that they would cover India and the rest of the world. She said that this would give the many foreign students on this campus, who have a lot to tell Canadians, the opportunity of sharing their information.

DRAMA REVIEW

The Play's The Thing

The New Play Society has finally lifted its face out of the mud with a production that is competent and cheerful. To begin with they have chosen a good play. The Play's the Thing by Ferenc Molnar is a charming, witty, tightly constructed three-act work, which builds steadily nad reassuringly towards a delightful final act of great good humour.

Briefly stated the story is that of a famous playwright, Sandor Turai, who attempts to patch up the engagement between his naive young composer friend, Albert Adam, and the star of his operettas, Ilona Szabo, who has been overheard in an incriminating dialogue with her old lover, an actor named Almady. This he attempts to do by creating a play in which the incriminating dialogue, overheard by Adam, will appear to be merely the dialogue of a play that was in rehearsal.

The whole thing is very civilized and good humoured without the brittleness or obvious trickery that this kind of triangle play often leads to. Because its characters are large enough for variety of interpretation and because it has a good foundation of situational humour, this is the type of comedy that can be seen more than once.

Drew Thompson played Sandor Turai, the playwright, quite well. Physically he suited the part, and, after a slightly shaky beginning, he dominated the play easily with his urbane humour and his command of the situation. The hero, Albert Adam, is rather a wishy-washy sort and Jeremy Wilkins made little of it. Rosamund Merivale played the heroine, Ilona Szabo, prettily, but with none of that temperamental, stage-stealing glitter and glamour that should have been the character. Peter Mews as the collaborator, Mansky, gave the one really poor performance; he over-acted physically and vocally, losing completely the humour, and also weakening the structure of verbal give-and-take that makes the collaboration of Sandor Turai and Mansky both amusing and believable. Besides these roles there was an excellent slow-worded voluble butler, and a nervous (at times too nervous) manager played respectively by John Hayes and Edward Holmes.

If these had been all the characters in the play the evening would have barely risen above the odd chuckle, but there was one further performance that shook free the long laughter and made the whole play, and especially the last act, the best comedy professionally produced this year. Norman Roland, an actor with a great deal of New York experience, played the part of Almady, the middle-aged ham actor.

I have a peculiar weakness for this kind of Falstaffian characterization, these large bleating men who rant and roar but who are at heart afraid of the very shadow of personal danger. Norman Roland, looking like a baritone from a second-class Italian opera gave a demonstration of broad, farcial acting that never overstayed its humour. He tramped the stage like a hungry Napoleon, threw his face into wild and majestic contortions, broke into tears, cried to heaven for justice, and produced some of the most meaningful grunts that I have ever had the pleasure of hearing. It was a delicious performance on the heroic scale and well worth seeing just for itself.

The sets and all the other technical data were quite professional. This is a good play, well acted, and what is more important in my mind, the good humour of the play remains with you after the performance—a sure sign of truly humorous creation.

(2) Again, if your level of aspiration is too high, lower it. However, if you find that you are lowering your aspirations to the Neanderthal man level, don't bother, just latch onto the nearest Applied Science student.

(3) And now to patch up your personality. If you have been foolish enough to study 24 hours daily during your college career, you've probably got such weak eyes, you won't be able to see your prospective mate, so why worry?

In closing, I point out that my statement about women coming to college for the main purpose of ensnaring hapless males, was only an assumption used for the purpose of illustration. Unfortunately, however, there have been some ugly rumours circulating around this campus to the effect that this is true.

At this point, girls, I have a confession to make. I, too, with primeval instincts ablaze, entered this institution of higher learning to seek me out a mate. Unfortunately, I haven't yet come across a woman who can support me. Well, anyway, happy husband-hunting, ladies.

The Wild Duck

Alene Kamins as Kina and Martin Hunter as Hjalmar in a scene from Ibsen's "The Wild Duck," which opens at Hart House Theatre on Saturday night under the direction of Robert Gill.

Wild Duck A Comedy, A Tragedy

Ibsen described his The Wild Duck, which opens at Hart House Theatre on Sat., Jan. 23, as "a bitter comedy." Robert Gill, the director, says that it is one of the most interesting plays he has ever dealt with because of the necessity of deciding where the comedy and tragedy mix.

Of this play Bernard Shaw said "To sit there getting deeper and deeper into the Ekdal home and getting deeper and deeper into your own life all the time, until you forget that you are in a theatre; to look on with horror and pity at a profound tragedy, shaking with laughter all the time at an irresistable comedy." Ibsen is poking fun at himself, and twisting around his own ideas.

Included in the cast are Martin Hunter as Hjalmar Ekdal; Henry Jackman as Gregrs Werle, Alene Kimmons as Gina, Molly Golby as Hedwig, John Lee as Werle, and Stanley Daniels as Relling.

This is the third play in the Hart House Theatre series this year. The other two were Antigone, by Anoulih, and The Male Animal, by Thurber and Nugent. The last one will be Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice. In a poll of some students, taken last year, on the plays they would like to see produced at Hart House, Shakespeare and Ibsen were among the favourites. It is partly in answer to this demand that The Wild Duck is being staged now.

ART REVIEW

Steiger At Vic

In Frederic Steiger we at last have an artist who can cope with the eyestrain lighting in the Vic Alumni Hall. Visible, to say the least, because of the brilliance of his colours and the boldness of his technique, his work is on view until February 5.

There has been a startling reversal in Mr. Steiger's approach since he came to Canada about twenty-two years ago. He soon established a substantial reputation for portraiture in the skilled but conventional mode. Criticized for sentimentality, I am told, he made a decisive change in his style and began to paint something the sort of work on display at Victoria this week.

The change was chiefly that of technique, a change to bright colour and "impasto." With a painting knife he expertly ladles quantities of pigment onto the surface of his work, the knife making great bold swathes and strokes, channelling and piling up the paint in patterns and textures which are an effect in themselves.

The viewer, standing relatively close to one of the paintings discerns an only barely recognizable mass of confused tubefuls of paint. As he backs up, the dabs and daubs suddenly relate themselves and the design, big bold and evident, is asserted. As free as the technique appears, Mr. Steiger achieves remarkable subtlety especially in his lighting effects, though he does so through the rather standard use of warm yellows, greens and pinks.

The composition of the paintings is impeccable. The artist handles great masses and planes of light forcefully and well. The "new approach" of his technique catches our interest. However, the subject matter on which he has chosen to exercise that "new approach" hardly justifies its choice. It's very much like having an excellent sauce and nothing to eat with it but boiled potatoes.

More impressive, I thought (perhaps out of an excess of nationalistic zeal), were the paintings of Canada's East Coast, about Newfoundland and Grand Manan. "Lighthouse, Grand Manan" is perhaps the one significant exception. Though its abstract composition seemed sound, I found it oversimple and specacular, the colours unbelievable and harsh, the Captain Marvel streaks in the sky annoying.

Finding out about Mr. Steiger was a pleasant task for this critic. For the curious without the time or the inclination to search, some posted information about the author of this stimulating work would undoubtedly be welcome.

VARSITY INTRAMURAL EDITION

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

A recent letter from the American College News Bureau informs us that an organization called the American Association of Unions is currently hard at work arranging a series of tournaments to boost the "Three B's" of Campus Sport. To the unlettered in athletics 'B' might bring thoughts of such crude games as Boxing, Baseball or Basketball. The fact is, however, that these B's are far removed from the realm of body contact and cheering crowds. A greater degree of finesse and skill is required for these pastimes for they are sport on the intellectual level.

The American Unions may have solved the problems of Intercollegiate sport south of the border. With this tournament they are setting the cornerstone of a movement that could revolutionize the entire of University Sport and that could have great impact on the Canadian Colleges as well.

No more will we see football players staggering punchily about the campi of American colleges as they hurry to their 'basket-weaving' courses. No more will we see huge sums of money going to the building of massive concrete bowls. Gone will be those scantily clad dolls who spring about on the green sward of football to rouse us from sotted stupor. This will all pass from our lives.

In place of rude physical exertion, sweating athletes, bawling spectators and weeping coaches we will have a return of dignity and sophistications to the sporting scene. Sportsmen will come to their matches dressed nattily in their Sunday best and will leave the same way. Away with all that old rot about no smoking for athletes. For these men there will be only the very blackest cigars and finest liqueurs. For these will not be muscle-bound brutes, awkward and oafish. They will be smooth and slick. Their faces will not break out in smiles when they win nor will they cheer hoarsely at victory or smart moves. They will have faces like pokers and nerves like ice. The deadpan will be their trademark.

All the economic troubles of University Administrations will be solved. Costs will be cut to almost nothing. Television will be cut out completely and even spectators will go out the window. The big training table with its heavy tabs will be a thing of history. This new breed of athlete will eat like birds, and probably will be, for the "THREE B's of American Sport are Bowling and Billiards and Bridge!

Holding off a second period Victoria rally, Senior Meds yesterday edged by Senior Skule into first place in Group I of the Interfaculty Hockey League, with a 5-3 victory over the Scarlet and Gold puckchasers.

The Medsmen struck for three in the first period, with a last-minute answer from Vic, and two more in the second, while the Vicsters staged a short-lived rally, led by Bobby Dale and Bill Hinder.

The Doctors held the upper hand throughout the first stanza, but onslaught. Walsh, Arnold, and deVeber collected goals in the opener to give the Medsmen a 3-0 advantage until Cook potted the lone Vic first period tally from a goalmouth scramble at 19:58.

The second period opened with Duff and Walsh breaking away to go in on a lone Vic rearguard, and Duff made it good at the :50 second mark. Duff picked up his second goal moments later at 1:45 from point blank range to end the Doctors' scoring.

Hinder at 10:58 and Dale at 15:25, started the Scarlet and Gold on the way to a comeback, but found themselves stifled by an airtight defence and back-checking forwards.

Jim Pierson, converted from a left-winger into a goalie, did an exceptional job in replacing Jack Creighton in the Vic net. He was obviously weak on close shots and breakaways, but managed to hold off the Medsmen most of the time.

Bill Tweddle and Jim Carscallen were stalwarts at the Vic blueline, while as usual the attacking punch was served up by Bob Dale, Bill Hinder and Tom Jardine. Arnold, McDougall and deVeber gave the Doctors a decided edge, along with Bob Shaw on defence, while goaltender Benny Walker had little work to do.

Group I is developing into a walkaway with Senior Meds and Senior Skule leading the way. The Doctors are now holding down top spot with ten points, while the Engineers trail with nine. St. Mike's A's and Senior UC are next closest, locked in third place with three points each.

It looks very much as though two playoff positions from this Group have been settled, leaving the third birth still in doubt. Senior Vic are still conceivably in the running with one point to the others' three, although the Double Blue squad has played only four games.

In their only meeting this season, Senior Meds and Senior Skule fought to a 3-3 tie, so it's a little difficult to say whom our money will ride with from the first Group, but the Doctors seem to be flying high.

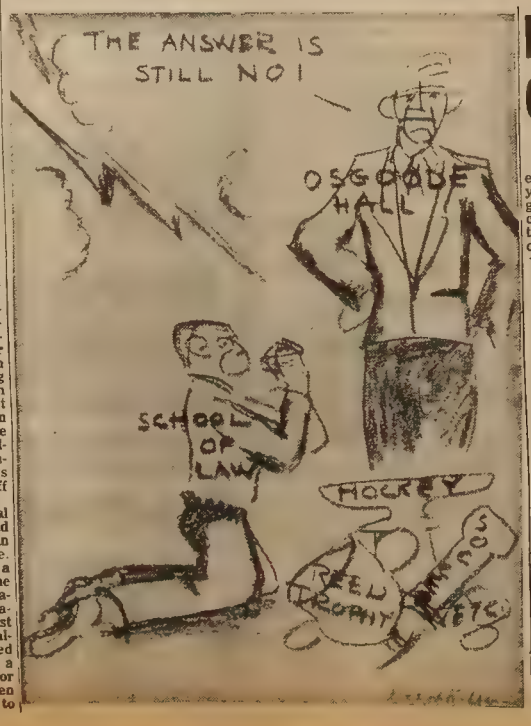
In recent intramural basketball action in Hart House, St. Mike's forward Winters has just shot, while Meds guard Jim Nero attemps to prevent the score. His efforts were in vain as St. Mike's romped to an easy 53-31 victory.

Who's On Top?



By ERIC APPLEBY

Who's on top? The School of Law. On top of what? The point race in the intramural sports competition for the Reed trophy. More students spend more hours participating in the intramural sports program than any other extracurricular activity on the campus. The School of Law has proven no exception, but it is only of late that this latent physical prowess has manifest itself.

Only last spring the School of Law was found wallowing in last spot in the Reed trophy race but the autumn brought new blood and new life to aid their meteoric rise to the top of the pack. The soccer team lost only one game in winning the intramural championship including a 2-1 win over Trinity, the Division 1 champs. The volleyball six reached the Division II finals. The black and gold representatives in the hockey league are currently tied for first place in Division II. Anyone inclined to wager can get odds on the basketball team winning the championship, along with the School of Law squash team currently campaigning in Hart House. The School of Law has an internal squash ladder called the Racquet Squad. Even Prof. Kilgour of the faculty has been unable to rise more than four rungs from the cellar in the face of stiff student competition.

Spirits are high among the Legal Beagles these days and they intend to work their point total higher in the usually torrid Reed trophy race.

Ed's Note:—This is the first in a series of articles outlining the athletic activities of different faculties taking part in the Intramural League. One of the smallest Schools in all Varsity, the "Legal-Beagles", as they have dubbed themselves, buck the obstacles of a heavy timetable to find time for sport and their strength has proven to be greatly out of proportion to their number.

PHE Puts POTS On Ice 2-0 Girl Hockey Hassle Big Fun

By ANN STARK

The hockey hassle between Physed and POT II teams in the arena yesterday provided some of the greatest entertainment seen on the campus this season. These gals are terrific. They exhibit the best unconscious humour we've seen in a long time.

In three riotous and hard-played periods, PHE II managed only twice to slip the puck through the vulnerable POT net. Physots held their own through the furious first period, giving Physed goalie Ann Johnston plenty of trouble. But a breakaway by Marg Kirby in the last minute gave PHE the goal they needed to set them up for a shutout.

Defense work of Marilyn Tilley was largely responsible for keeping PHE forwards out of goal-keeper Pat Whitby's hair. Rumour has it that Tilley is moving up to POT's first team for the next game. In the forward line, Betty Kempton and Sandy Weber played hard hockey in the attempt to steer the puck into the Physed zone. Most of the play in the second period shuffled unexcitingly about center line.

Third period showed PHE at their efficient best. Eleanor Angus and Shirley Roberts swiped the puck from charging POTs time after time. Ann Gilmore received the lone penalty of the game for tripping. For two minutes POTs held off the powerful PHE's only to have their Hn ETAO SHRD ETAO OO speedy Jackie Varcoe break through their line when the team was once more complete. Final score — 2-0 PHE II, giving a shutout to goalie Ann Johnston.

St. Mike's do battle with POT I in the arena to-day. This match will be worth watching — believe me.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

A few years ago when the Weatherman brought us wintertime, Varsity Stadium was blocked off and frozen over to make the most monstrous skating rink in the city. People flocked from far and near to spend Friday evenings and the odd afternoon waltzing around to the strains of an old time brass band, freezing noses and bruising knees.

Papas dragged their little ones along while mothers and the older kids cut figures in the central part of the rink that was reserved for the "fancy stuff". It was the gathering spot for all the Toronto sportsters and nothing could beat the fun of Friday night on the big rink.

Those were the days when you could join the Outdoor Skating Club for ten bucks a season and this included lessons as well as a free pass to the rink anytime. Fifty cents was the admission price for adults, twenty-five for those under sixteen. Varsity students and members of the Outdoor Club got in free. Way up on the old wooden stands on the West side of the stadium an aggregation of shivering musicians complete with tuba and bass drum gave forth with the skater's waltz and others. Why they didn't freeze to death seldom failed to amaze the swaying mob below.

Then the Weatherman started to play tricks and the Stadium rink was abandoned. What was once the favourite spot for citizens of Toronto and the University is no more. Skaters on the campus have had to look for artificial ice or pack up the tubes for trips North. It's not that the rink was any source of great revenue to the campus but it was a spot where you could go and enjoy a few hours of healthy outdoors sport.

If Toronto weather is going to follow the pattern it has in the past two or three years it would be ridiculous to attempt to freeze the entire stadium. The days of the big rink are history but there is no reason why we couldn't have some part of the stadium converted into an ice surface. This would provide at least two weeks skating for the University students and extra space for Hockey practises — something we need very badly around here.

Harding Comes First In Mural Hundred

Interfaculty Track entered its second round of competition last night in the Hart House gym when the runners began running in ellipses around the indoor track.

Dick Harding, who proved one of the top men in Canadian College Track last Fall when he took two first places at the Intercollegiate Games in Montreal, made first place in the 100-yard dash in the time of 11.1 seconds. The fact that he was running around the bend would make this time correspond to about a ten-second hundred on a straight track. John Sopinka, Intermediate Football star and former Queen's Golden Gael, took second spot in the time of 11.2, while Al Riva of Dents placed third in 11.4 Harding is of SPS. Monte Harris and Wally Bulchak came close in the running.

Running of the 600 yeards was held later in the afternoon and Doug McEnteer of University College set a fast pace finishing in front with a time of 1:17.6 seconds, a little less than four seconds off the Toronto Indoor record set by Varsity Grad Murray Gaziuk, in 1951. Dick Harding came second, finishing in 1:18.2 and Pete Watson, who placed second in the Intercollegiate Half-Mile run last fall was third with a time of 1:18.5. Just about six inches behind came Lindsay Drummond.

In last week's opening contest John Sopinka won the 50-yard dash in a time tabled as 5.3 seconds.

Pill-Pushers Win

Pharmacy B's continued their winning ways in the Intramural Basketball League last night as they defeated Wycliffe College 46-28 in a late fixture in the Hart House gym.

The Pill-Pushers were never in any real troluble, though the desperate Wycliffe club tried hard to come back into contention throughout the match. Most of the Pharmacy scoring punch was delivered through the hands of two men — Murray Berman who tallied 15, and team-mate Mel Manley, who hooped the grand total for the night of 17.

Warnica was the best man on the floor for Wycliffe as he threw in a good ten points for the losers, but his fine effort was all in vain as his buddies just couldn't give him enough help to win.

Campus Cuties A Flop

News Item: Phillipsburg, N.J.—(CP)—Benny the buffalo burst from a corral near here five days ago when his owners tried to make him settle down with a female buffalo named Beulah after buying the pair from a game preserve for breeding purpose.

According to an eminent sociologist, Dr. Paul Poppenoe, many college women have the same effect on most men as Beulah had on Benny. That is, when a normal guy is placed in close proximity to a college female, he's apt to head for the wide-open spaces.

College women, according to Poppenoe, are a glut on the marriage market; in matrimonial debacles, they are about as successful as a sale of overcoats in nudist colony.

Now if you go on the assumption that most university girls attend the centres of higher learning for the main purpose of snagging a good old, red-blooded, five-foot-two-eyes-of-blue Man (complete with Cadillac convertible), it's a blessing that only a small minority of our luscious lovelies at UBC are taking Sociology.

In the first place, by the time penoe's heretical doctrines turn up time and time again in the official text books, and it could prove heap bad medicine for this school's enrollment next year if too many female students find out that they put themselves behind the matrimonial eight-ball by attending college.

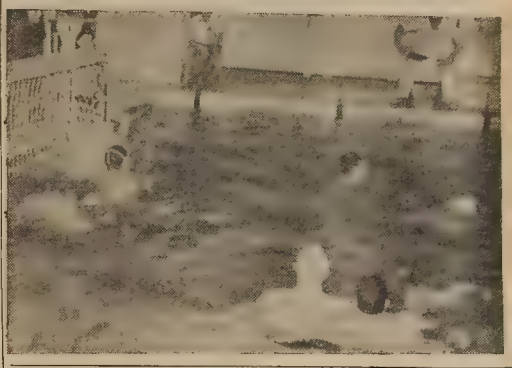
And Don't Stab Yourself Either

However, don't start tearing those sorority pins from your collective chests yet, girls, because I'm going to tell you just what Pop Poppenoe thinks of you.

In the first place , by the time you graduate you're too old, and men don't like to mess around with old-age pensioners; they prefer the younger stuff.

Again, according to Pop, you college types rely too much on your "mating gradient," that is, your levels of aspiration, when it comes to men folks, are much too high.

Pop's also worried about your personalities. He says, "The girl alone in a large city may be one of those whose four college years have done her more harm than good." Here the maestro is referring to those anti-social personages who spend their Saturday nights before a blazing hearth, curled up with Homer (in the Penguin series, of course, it's cheaper).



As I mentioned before, I don't want any of you girls to jump off the roof of the library, or drink 30 cups of caf coffee as yet, because there is a brighter side to the picture. As a former associate of Dorothy Dix, I think I can fix up your matrimonial chances.

Hide Or Seek

High school students have been getting it in the neck recently. A headline in one paper read: "High School Grads Dull, Slangy"; a chemistry professor claimed high school students were unable to read "text books intelligently and extract the sense from a connected discourse"; remedial English courses at this University are getting astounding results.

The public statements have been directed against the English course primarily. But generally, it can be assumed that the attitude prevalent in the English courses probably runs over into the other courses.

It does little to blast away at the students if nothing basic is done about it. We feel that behind this passive attitude of the high school student is the mechanical system of promotion in the schools.

The exam system requires only one thing of the student: an ability to acquire bundles of information for purposes of passing examinations and securing grades and certificates. There is relatively no desire on the part of the student to perfect his courses of studies — to improve ad infinitum. "Pass the exam, that's okay," they say.

Part of this is, granted, a result of a shortage of teachers who could spend more time with the individual students and so develop a true spirit of education in them. But that surely does not give the teachers the right to put the blame squarely in the lap of the students.

To stand up on the platform and rant and rave about the stupidity of the modern collegiate student is to dangerously ignore the serious crisis in education. To say "push 'em through, there's more coming" is to create the very conditions which are now up for criticism.

We are not blaming the teacher for the mess that is evident. He is doing his best. But we also cannot blame the student, for he is subject to pressures and attitudes over which he has little control. Perfection goes when mass education is not handled properly.

On the other hand, we find ourselves very critical of those teachers who are attempting to hide from the crisis by automatically blaming the students. Their energies would be better directed toward solving the crisis.

Where To Seek

We knew that students were frequent visitors to the beer halls around town, but we didn't know they had been spending so much time in them. Hotelmen were warned two days ago of a crisis in the profession of beer-serving.

And why a crisis? Because the people served in beer halls are "better educated than ever." The average Canadian now has eleven years of schooling compared with six years for the average a generation ago.

What has been the result? There has been a gradual departure from the old bare-walled beverage room with hard chairs and drab tables. Now the drinker can, or will in the near future, slurp in plush comfort.

We feel somewhat compelled to thank the university student for guiding this "artistic" development.

The newly-educated masses are demanding more in the way of appeal. And Toronto's beer halls are the first to recognize the rise in the level of education.

What we are puzzled about is how the hotel owners and the teachers mentioned in the article above can reconcile themselves in their respective conclusions.

The Story Goes—

Competition Is Needed

The arguments for and against government planning of, and intervention in, the modes of production of a society are as old as history itself. The writer, a Political Science student, tries to show, in a simple story, the dangerous effects economic democracy might have on political democracy.

By F. I. WHITE

Once upon a time there were five powerful and wealthy men (or groups of such men) each of whom had twenty weaker, poorer men working for him. For many years the hundred poor men sweated and slaved, unable to do much to better their lot. Then there appeared on the scene five others, who were not too prosperous, as yet, but very ambitious. These five gentlemen (not all of whom had bushy eyebrows) became the champions of the downtrodden, each of them, as guardian of one of the oppressed flocks, teaching his followers to withdraw and withhold their services, as a body, until the master was forced to grant at least some of their wishes. The plot, you will observe, is fast thickening; but the fortunes of the protagonists will soon be in decay.

AGAIN, AFTER MANY YEARS, we find many of the toilers still not content. No doubt they were somewhat better off than before. But, while the five valiant fellows continued to protest against the greedy oppressors, the hundred laborers glimpsed a new means of setting things right. For now there came to the fore a new, progressive group — men whose aim was to be chosen, by and for the workers, to be their government. Here was a chance for the workers indirectly, through more social security, and so on, to vote themselves a raise — a decidedly more dignified method than the industrial strife of the past. Could we blame these men, then, as soon as a particularly bad period of thinner and fewer pay envelopes began, for furthering their own interests by these political means?

THE FIVE WEALTHY MEN, who had to pay, naturally protested; but the workers were now convinced that capitalists, and not an inevitable scarcity of the things man needs — and wants — for survival, were their real enemy. And each worker had a vote. Meantime, it had been discovered that the interests of the hundred (and of the five) would best be served if the five groups pooled their resources to form a more united front. All of the foregoing created, somehow, a climate increasingly unfavorable to the interests of the industrial czars; and so, logically enough, someone suggested that the government take over these enterprises — in order, as they said, to "reduce excessive profits and other abuses." Each decade saw more such enterprises brought under the wing of the democratic planners' bureaucratic helpers.

I HAVE FORGOTTEN HOW long it took the last phase of this tale to unfold; but, sure as taxes (now astronomical), it did. Eventually no one could deny that at first the excessive profits had had to be spread mighty thin, and that, when spread this thin, they had soon evaporated. Moreover — and this was far more important — the former five enterprises, now all one and belonging to nobody in particular, were "inexplicably" producing less. (The nigger in the woodpile, of course, was only human nature.) Progressive redistribution of the national product, progressive slogans, and progressive exhortations had at first obscured this fact. We have already noticed how big were the groups headed by the men who were the workers' original prolocutors before the mighty; now, when these groups' services were withheld under their leaders' guidance, the whole economy was imperilled. Quid nunc? Those workers who were discontented and thought that there was more to be spread around than there really was could not be expected to turn to some other group of men willing to form a different sort of government, because the fortunes of the political groups which had seemed to favor only the interests of the five magnates had declined almost as soon and fast as those of the magnates themselves, and because, as we have already seen, the economic atmosphere was now definitely unsuitable to the prospering of such enterprises.

OBVIOUSLY, THEN, THE initiative had to be taken by the government, rather than by the champions of the workers or by the workers themselves. The government saw that it could, as had long since been done in a certain unnameable land situated east of Poland, favor as leaders of labor men whose views matched those of the governing group. And, the enonomy no longer able to suffer workers' protracted refusal to supply their services, such was, if stagnation was to be avoided, more than just an irresistible temptation.

EVERY STORY, GOOD or bad, has a moral. And the moral of the above, if you'll pardon the sermonizing, runs like this: The grandchildren of a union, however gradual, between "political democracy" and "economic democracy" will learn the hard way that to ultimately stifle competition in business is ultimately to stifle competition in government as well.

Football Like Roman Christian-Throwers

The Editor,
The Varsity:

McMaster has been removed from the Intercollegiate Football League. Why? Not because they can't play football. Of course they aren't up to the standards of some of the other college teams, but neither were McGill, Varsity, and Queen's up to the standard of the Western football team.

We must realize we can't all be winners. If McMaster wants to be in the intercollegiate league and can field a reasonably good team — there is no reason in the world why they shouldn't be allowed to remain in the League.

The rub however, lies in the factor of revenues. Intercollegiate football has become a spectacle — a spectacle of drunken engineers, cheerleaders, and a brawling mass of football players — much the same as the Roman sport of throwing Christians to the lions in the old Roman Forum.

To promote this spectacle the rulers in the Intercollegiate League seem to feel that they must draw the largest possible crowd to derive the greatest possible revenue. McMaster failed to provide the drawing-card necessary to fill Varsity Stadium, Molson Stadium, and the rest.

The most important criteria for modern sport is no longer one of good clean competition. It has degenerated into one of finding ways and means of drawing the largest possible crowd, no matter what the means. This of course precludes McMaster from remaining in the Intercollegiate League.

Does the McMaster Senior Soccer Team fear being removed from the Senior Intercollegiate Soccer League because it cannot compete on a par with teams from the larger universities in the same league? Well then why should the McMaster Football team get chopped?

A possible remedy for this situation is to grant athletic scholarships (if this is not already done) to all prospective football players at all the Universities and then do as the National Hockey League does. Try to balance the strength of all the teams in the league by shifting players from one team to another.

Engineers' Paradise

Under Transit Mountain, hard by Level Lake
Lies the Engineers' Paradise, where nothing is at stake.
From early morn till sunset:— so I am told
They drink all the liquor they can hold.
Foaming torrents cascading down
Leave fiery liquors all around.
Engineers loll in the shade
Drinking the finest whiskey made.
The lake is filled with rum so strong
A mere Arts man will not last long
The thundering cataracts, oh so clear
Are made of foaming "He-man beer".
All you heretics may simply spoof
But they all bathe in "90" proof.
Come! Heed the engineering call
And swim about in alcohol.
See, with your own disbelieving eyes,
Where the engineer goes when he dies.
Rum and whiskey are just for sport
They down tequila by the quart
Then for balance they add the caser
A kegg of beer for a chaser.
Frustrated arts types look on with envy
Working themselves into a frenzy
For this fair land of rum and beer
Is dedicated to the engineer.

All Quartet Competition Coming Up

We have a tremendous potential for student quartets thinks Assistant Hart House Warden, Garth McDowell. "With 6,000 members" he said, examining his slide rule, "it is possible to have 1,500 quartets in the contest". He added, "If we get that many I think I'll move to Madagascar."

The quartets don't have to sing in Barber Shop style if they don't wish to do so, he pointed out. The style of singing, dress or trained voices will have definite bearing on the judging and enthusiasm will be an important factor.

The preliminary judging will take place on Mondays and Fridays at 1:00 p.m. during the first few weeks in February. Entry forms, available in the Undergrad Activities Office, Hart House, must be returned by 5:00 p.m., January 22.

The contesting quartets will have to prepare two numbers and the winners will have to prepare another for the Intercollegiate Contest. Costuming should be simple, the same applying to uniforms said McDowell.

The winners receive a trophy cup of silver each, a replica of the large one to be awarded to the whole quartet. The contest which began in 1950, is sponsored by the House Committee.

Judging will be in the East Common Room.

All Gone

"Fantasia" by Wilmot Q. Blackhall, a winner of the Senior division of the Hart House photo contest several years ago. This year the Karsh Trophy division has been added for campus life and activity shots taken since September 1, 1953. Up to six entries will be considered from any member of Hart House.

Hart House Debate Raps Commercialism In Modern Colleges

The Chequebook has replaced the Textbook as the key to modern education, Hart House debaters decided last night. The motion was upheld by a vote of 34-15.

Dr. A. W. Trueman, the honorary visitor who spoke for the motion, said that he was slightly confused, which he called a state of mind not unique at the debate, because he could interpret the motion in two ways.

He said it might be conceived to mean that it was difficult to get into University because of financial difficulties, an interpretation with which he disagreed, or to mean that the aims of the University have become increasingly materialistic and vocational, with which he agreed.

He said he never had a great admiration for textbooks as a means of education, and had only meagre acquaintance with the chequebook.

He said that although fees may have risen, they have not done so in proportion since his undergraduate days.

Claiming to be a "Humanities Man", he blamed the teachers of humanities for not showing the relation of the humanities to the problems of society. "I have heard of no Latin convention, or Greek convention recently" he added.

Dr. G. Bagnani replied for the opposition, saying that he had just attended a convention of philologists. He didn't think much of textbooks, and said that chequebooks were written better than most textbooks, anyway.

"Don't let us mix up University with Education," he said. Education is a continuous process, which does not require great funds, like an expensive organization as the Universities.

The first speaker for the government, Horace Krever, III Law, defined the aims of education as the pursuit of truth. He charged that some students came to the University to get more money after they graduate. An important factor, he said, was the fact that the government was giving large grants to University departments which carry on research in matters relating to the better waging of war.

"The Universities are in danger of becoming a branch of the military arm," he said.

He said a basis of double salaries was in existence, preferring professional teachers, and deplored the failure of the Dominion government to implement the recommendations of the Massey report.

"Until there is one Arts student on the campus, with the possible exception of students in Commerce and Finance, and others, the text book has not been replaced by the chequebook," said T. Hammond, II UC, the first speaker for the opposition.

He felt that the University must fulfill the needs of the community and turn out engineers and C and F graduates, even if they do make a lot of money.

If you have 300 dollars you can come to University, and you have to be pretty stupid to fail in Arts, said John Roberts, III UC, second speaker for the government. He that a BA was like a passport. "You answer a lot of silly questions on examinations to which the examiner already knows the answer, but for the money they let you walk around the place for a few years," he said.

He compared our education system to salmon manufacturing.

"Somebody, throws some stuff into an empty container, then they put a white paper around it with a red seal on it, like a diploma, and guarantee it not to turn pink," he explained.

The great percentage of students at this University are Arts students, said G Hurlburt, II SPS the second speaker for the opposition. He claimed that the government did a remarkable job in implementing parts of the Massey report.

Anita Freedman Award

Though digging ditches, or working for O'Keefe's may be, and probably is, an easier way to make a living, you can earn (1) glory, (2) $100, ($) a couple of ulcers, by winning the Anita Freedman Award in March. The award is open to all Varsity staffers. The only people who traditionally get left out of the money are the five senior masthead members: the editors in chief, the managing editor, probably because they deserve it most of all. They are supposed to be too good to make the contest a fair one.

The glory, money, etc., is given for the best writing job done by a staffer during the current year. Such little things as energy, inventiveness (?), faithfulness (??), and integrity (???) are reported to influence the judges' decision These characteristics may spring from any department of the paper, except the morgue. News (inventiveness), sports (integrity), critical reviews (faithfulness), may qualify if they can. There is something to be said for the volume of the work done, too.

The judges include the Editors-in-chief of The Varsity, the Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC, a representative of the president of the University, and a member of the Toronto Downtown Press (TDP is also an excellent moth exterminator). They will present the Award at the annual Varsity banquet sometime in March.

Anita Freedman died May 28, 1947. Her friends established the Award as fitting tribute to her memory, and to arouse enthusiasm for journalism on the undergraduate level.

Now the fund of the award is running out. This year might well be the last in which it may be won, unless it is not awarded in March, or unless the founders increase the fund. We of The Varsity hope so.

Edward I Welsh Fort Has Appeal

"The appeal of the Arthurian romances surround the castles built by Edward I in Wales," said Dr. Brieger yesterday afternoon. He was speaking to the Archaeological Institute of America, in the Museum theatre.

"Edward was strongly influenced by the literary tradition," Brieger said. "He envelopped all his works in a romantic atmosphere. He regarded the conquest of Wales as an Arthurian adventure."

He said that the castle of Harlech was the most perfect of its kind. "It has compactness and symmetry, sturdy solidity and elastic fluidity. The organic relationship between space and massive bulk make it firm yet organized."

The castle of Beaumaris was the last of Edward's fortresses. It was built on a rigid axle plan, which gives it a certain booklike quality. Because of its perfect geometrical symmetry, it has been called "a sign of incipient decadence."

Carnavon was the largest of Edward's castles. It is roughly the shape of a figure eight, though the town attached is laid out with Roman regularity.

All Students May Try In Final Debate Trials

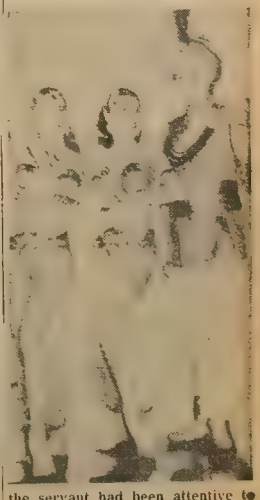
All students, and that includes women, can take part in the debating trials at 4:00 p.m. today. Only those already representing the Universiety of Toronto Debating Union (UTDU) on tours are not eligible.

"We are extremely anxious that all those who are interested in debating should participate in the trials since these will be the last UTDU trials for the year," said Earl Berger, chairman of the UTDU. He emphasized that all those debating on interfaculty teams are eligible.

The trials, held in Room 6 of University College, are for the Inter-University Debating League (IUDL). Judges for the debate trials will be Mr. Robson, Mr. Kinnear - Wilson, and Professor Wevers of the Oriental Languages Department, University College.

Debaters will be judged on a five - miuute impromptu speech which they will have five minutes to prepare. The impromptu topics, which will be picked out of a hat, will be both serious and humorous.

The four winners chosen from the trials will be divided into two teams. These teams will represent Toronto in debates with other universities. The negative team will travel and the affirmative will stay in Toronto.



Toronto's first debate is against Osgoode Hall. If they win that, they will debate against Queen's. The winner will go on to the Western IDUL finals, and then the East-West finals. The last debates are the Canadian University finals.

The IDUL topic will be "Resolved that Labor in the Federal and Provincial Civil Services should have the right to strike." Last year Toronto went to the West finals and then lost to St. Patrick's.

Dancing Girl Found Raped Thug Lashed

RABAT, MOROCCO — Former Sultan Sisi Mohammed Ben Youssef of Morocco, now exiled in Corsica, has been accused recently for ordering a harem servant strung up and lashed to death for getting a favourite concubine pregnant.

The servant's widow charged that Sidi Mohammed ordered her husband, a Nubian guard named Belkhir, given 100 lashes a day for 10 days when he discovered the servant had been attentive to a harem favourite.

The guard died after three days and 300 lashes, and later was buried secretly, his widow claimed. She said all mention of the incident was hushed up at the time on grounds that it was a state secret.

She entered a claim for damages, according to Mohammedan law, with the Maknes Tribunal, which opened an inquiry.

Season's Roughest Game Sees Irish Club UC 6-1

Taking advantage of several UC penalties, the Double Blue squad from St. Mike's yesterday romped to a one-sided 6-1 victory, handed Senior UC their third consecutive loss of the season.

Two goals by O'Neil as well as tallies by Fiaschetti, Sheperd, Duff and Holliyer gave the Mikemen their margin, as they struck for three in the first period and duplicated the effort in the second. Ted George robbed Gerry Young of his first shutout at the 13:20 armk of the second stanza, lipping the puck over a prostrate Young out of a goal-mouth scramble.

The opening minutes showed nothing but a good old game of shinny, while both forwards and defencemen contented themselves with falling all over each other. The Double Blue found the mark for the opening goal at 9:40 as Clair Fiaschetti tipped Jerry Lawless' pass past goalie Harris of UC.

All members of the Red and White defence seemed more intent on playing the man instead of the puck, leaving Montague Harris helpless in the nets, while Ron Shepherd and O'Neil potted goals for a 3-0 first period edge.

The second frame developed into a free-for-all givin, referees Herb Tilson and Red Stephen plenty of work sending the criminals to the box. UC collected four minors while St. Mike's settled for five in one of the worst exhibitions of offensive and defensive hockey seen in the Arena in some time.

Jerry Lawless, Clair Fiaschetti, and Gerry Godin provided the only relief from an otherwise slapstick affair, with an excellent passing pattern, and spearheaded the St. Mike's win.

Duff tallied the fourth Double Blue counter at 1:20 of the second period taking a neat pass from McCracken in the open goalmouth. With Bill Fullerton off for kneeing, St. Mike's ran their string to six at 7:40 and 8:20 on goals by Holliyer and O'Neil. George's lone tally for UC finished off the scoring as UC continued their slide downward to the bottom of the league.

Teddy George and Cliff Lawrence showed some will to win up front for UC, while Fullerton, although spending lots of time in the sin-bin, was effective at the blue-line.

John Evans and Ollie Kostyck played well on the St. Mike's defence, while Shepherd, Lawless, Fiaschetti and Godin sparked a slightly misshapen offence. Gerry Young, in the Double Blue goal, served up an excellent performance, establishing himself as a front-runner for a berth on the Intramural All-Star team.

St. Mike's, now by themselves in third place, might very well be the third representative to the Interfaculty playoffs from Group I, unless Senior UC can come up with a winning combination in their remaining two games. In order for the Red and White crew to get the nod, St. Mike's would have to lose all of their remaining three games, a somewhat unlikely possibility.

POT Gals Win Hockey

By JANE KELLY

Little Noreen Cossar was the big gun for POT in yesterday's hockey tilt as she contributed two goals to the Physot total when they handily defeated St. Mike's 4-1.

Shortly after the first period began, Mary Marg O'Neil stole the puck from the St. Mike's defence and went right in on goal, but her hard shot rebounded off the skate of goalie Eileen Dillon. Noreen Cossar's first goal came a few minutes later from a scramble around the net. Then near the end of the period POT's Rosalie Marsh who played very well throughout the game slipped the puck into a corner of the net.

Right from the faceoff in the second period Noreen Cossar potted her second goal. Play was much faster in this period, but except for a few breakaways, all the action centred around the St. Mike's net.

The third period began with a display of stickhandling by Betty Payette of St. Mike's as she went through the whoe team, but missed by inches with a rifle-hard shot. Another scramble around the St. Mike's net ended with a goal scored by Fran Fry. With only three minutes to go in the game and POT short-handed, Betty Payette stickhandled around four Physot players, drove the puck at Marion Current who stopped it and slapped the rebound into the open corner of the net.

Rosalie Marsh, Mary Marg O'Neil and Noreen Cossar looked very good for POT throughout the entire game; while Betty Payette was by far the best for St. Mike's.

Intermediates Go In Hockey, B-Ball Today

After a very slow start, Varsity's intermediate basketball team has now won two games in succession, and appears to be developing into a strong contender for intercollegiate honors. After surprising Andy's Athletic Club, in exhibition they stopped McMaster in the opening game of the college season. It's back to exhibition games tonight with a game at Ryerson gym with the Ryerson Institute team.

Ted Toggood's Ryerson Rams beat the Blues last fall in an exhibition game and seem to be one of the strongest outfits the Gould St. school has ever had.

Intermediate coach John McManus has been helped recently by the acquisition of four senior players who are working with both teams — John Sheppard, Harold Rotman, Doug Scott and Florian Matsalla. These four won't likely be playing tonight, though, because the seniors have to get an early start for their week-end trip to Kingston and Montreal for games with Queen's and McGill.

However, two intermediate regulars, Al Vaichulis and Norm Reynolds, have been doing most of the scoring for the Seconds in games thus far. Furthermore, McManus has two new players in uniform these days, Al Riva and Jack Rogers, both of whom played under him with the intermediate football team.

Game time tonight is 8 p.m. in the Ryerson gym at Church and Gould Sts.

The young lawyers from Osgoode Hall will invade the Arena at 4:00 this afternoon, when they take on the Baby Blue hockey squad. Fresh from a 13-6 victory over the OAC Aggies on Tuesday night, the Legal Lads are expected to offer some resistance to the Blue onslaught. However the Intermediates gave the same OAC club a 12-0 shellacking last Friday night and should be able to handle the Osgoode outfit.

Osgoode will be minus starry forward Jack Wheldrake who doubles as coach of the Varsity squad and will execute his duties from behind the Varsity bench this afternoon. The Intermediate games with Osgoode and Ryerson are exhibition, but nevertheless present excellent hockey. Try it.

It Seems A Shame

—Cartoon by Fischel.

"It seems a shame," the Walrus said,
"To play them such a trick,
After we've brought them out so far,
And made them trot so quick!"
The Carpenter said nothing but,
"The butter's spread too thick!"

"I weep for you," the Walrus said,
"I deeply sympathize."
With sobs and tears he sorted out
Those of the largest size,
Holding his pocket-handkerchief
Before his streaming eyes.

"O Oysters," said the Carpenter,
"You've had a pleasant run!
Shall we be trotting home again?"
But answer came there none—
And this was scarcely odd, because They'd eaten every one.

Not Proud Of It

The University of Toronto has gained no stature or friends by last weekend's action of the Athletic Association. In kicking McMaster University out of Intercollegiate Football, the universities of Toronto, Western, and Queen's have, in the name of pious claims that it was done to save good old traditional football, catered to financial considerations first, and ignored the faith with which they invited the Maroon and Grey to join last year.

The question of the team's ability did not come up. The only consideration was the ability of the club to draw a full stadium. And the conclusion is that they won't be given the chance to develop drawing power, as was Western, nearly 20 years ago.

In view of the plight at Kingston, two alternatives developed. Next fall's games could be rescheduled to give Queen's their big games, and Toronto could take the risk of losses on other games. But rather than tighten their athletic belt on accessories, the athletic directorate chose to slap intercollegiate football in the face, and let out McMaster from behind.

The other alternative was to play a full schedule of eight games for each team. Our athletic directorate, in a meeting before Christmas, approved the complete eight-game schedule. But when information got around that some teams might not like it, and it would be a lot of trouble to organize, the decision was reversed in preference to getting rid of the ball and chain.

As the richest, and most influential member of the union, a prod from Toronto in the direction of a solution would have been a deciding factor. Toronto, as we see it, is wearing the horns in the ensuing uproar, and we are not proud of it.

The Athletic Directorate's action has been unsportsmanlike, and in following a course which is at least, shabby, if not dishonourable, we feel that the move has made us anything but new fans among the intercollegiate public.

Affair Of The Heart

The Flag And Tradition

Believing that all the facts have not been considered in the controversy over a national flag, Joseph Glionna, Occasional Student, explains his point of view on the issue.

Every day I look up and cautiously whisper, "Are you there?" She is, and I feel reassured and happy.

I thought that Canada as heir to something so great and good would try at least, to claim the Union Jack for her own. It is the only flag that we have ever known, and I for one have never thought of it as being anything else but ours.

FOR MANY OF US IT is an affair of the heart. It is the caustic references that are made by some, and the fact that no one seems to be rising to "its" defence that is particularly alarming. The important thing is not that we may lose the battle in any case. It is how we lose it. There is no battle being fought. There is no voice being raised. If it must come down, let us pull it down gently; give it a fond caress, a few words of love, if we are able; let us dampen it with a tear, and bury it in our hearts.

Is that what we really want? Should we bury our own soul? Should we rend our own heart? If you do not believe, respect those who do. Let those of us who believe pick up the "torch" and go forth with renewed vigor to our new and brighter tomorrow. And whatever the outcome, let us never forget our obligations to the Crown and Commonwealth.

I NEVER LOOKED AHEAD as far as the Parliament of Man. I thought of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, in particular, as being companions of our youth. I had thought that Canada could do things at least a little better. If it comes to a point where we must part with it, (in its entirety), let it be because of external factors. Let us cling to it tenaciously, and if we must part with it, part with it reluctantly. Canada should not dwell on the fringes of the Commonwealth. The Union Jack, the National Anthem, and our Queen are synonymous.

Some believe that the Union Jack is a badge of colonialism. I do not see it that way. I think of Queenston Heights, and the fact that we fought under that Flag (French-Canada as well) to save a nation not yet born. There come to mind the Durham and Balfour reports. The latter has all the marks of the Covenant.

WE ARE A CHILD OF THE WOODS, a product of evolution not revolution. We are what we are today because of British power and ideals, not in spite of them. Since 1763, from Confederation in 1867 — almost a hundred years of our life, it has been ours. The Union Jack would with time become more synonymous with us (since ours is a growing strength) than with Britain. The Union Jack, the Anthem, and our Queen, need not (for those who find it distasteful) be a symbol of political association with Britain. It is a symbol of a greater loyalty. What greater national expression could there be than loyalty? We have honour and principle to consider. Honour is not just a word. It is only in seeing ourselves in respect to, and participating to the fullest extent possible, in something greater, that we as individuals, (in this case as a nation) can reach our fullest national stature. Individually we can have weaknesses, but collectively we can have character. We have a great responsibility. In living up to our responsibilities we create character — national character. The fact that Ceylon, India, and Pakistan have their own flags and anthems is not a fair comparison. They have a culture that goes back thousands of years. As for the rest, we should set an example, not follow.

REGARDLESS OF WHAT is done about the "Flag," the one and only "National Anthem" should be "God Save the Queen." You would rob our great enterprise (the British Commonwealth) of its spirit. You would deprive it of a common expression.

Lip-adherence to the monarchy is not enough. There are some that see only what is directly in front of them, and then sometimes not too clearly. In an age that needs examples, what finer example could young Canada find than our young Queen and her husband?

Distinction is something that is earned. Culture is something that time creates. You do not build culture trying to destroy another or in denying that it exists. You give free vent to all worthwhile cultural influences.

CANADA IS STILL A NATION small in population. We live next to a giant, (a friendly giant to be sure), but even friendly giants may be persuasive. Surely it is not wrong to look back over our shoulders at yesterday. The first real Canadian may not yet be born, but what of that? Let us not bring him forth prematurely. Let us rather be safe than sorry. The fact that we are still predominately British and French in outlook is what really makes us Canadians. If we forget sentiment and abandon tradition, (let us be patient for in the centuries to come we will add to and make our own), if we consciously or unconsciously try to emulate the Americans, if we try to create, foster, or encourage the creation of a polyglot empire such as theirs, (and particularly if we do it by artificial means), we may court extinction rather than distinction.

YOU DO NOT HAVE to be British in origin to appreciate or be British in outlook. It would be a pity if there was no nation to carry the Union Jack on into the future, no nation with the strength and vitality to give it the position that it justly deserves. It is a spirit that we want. Something that we can feel yet cannot touch. It is spirits that make men, not men spirits. Caesar is dead but his spirit lives and always will. We have ridden through the night for a thousand years. That should be enough for the young and the young in heart. It should be enough for the fire of youth, its fanaticism, its devotion to a cause. What greater cause is there than to carry the Union Jack to new and greater heights for our Queen and our country? We cannot live on the past, but we can live by it, and in doing so give our great enterprise (the British Commonwealth) as many tongues as possible.

THIS IS SOMETHING that is above politics. It should not be used as a political football. It is bigger than all of us. We must not be led by little men in high places, little minds grasping for a straw. The duty of the people's representatives is not always to follow the will (if such be the case), but to help us choose wisely or to show us where we are wrong.

Someday a son may ask his father to tell him the story of our "Flag," and he will look up, and begin, and say, as it was said of them, "It was our finest hour."

"God Save the Queen"

A Duty, To The Heathen

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Your editorial headed Shangri-La Revisited in The Varsity, January 19, no doubt had a wide sympathetic appeal. I take issue with your conclusion implicit in your 'wondering' if "destroying . . . the simple social fabric" of this "modern Eden" is worth it. For some time the conception of any 'noble savage' living, or ever having lived, in a spiritual Utopia, much less a mental or physical Utopia is erroneous. In societies such as Baleim which are physically isolated the hardships resulting from the impact of cultures are not felt, the obvious evils of many primitive societies do not exist, and they are mistaken for Utopias. However, the subtle burdens of primitive man are not always easily discovered and explained. The picture of Utopian primitive societies has misled men from the time of Rousseau apparently to the present.

What of Baleim? A Christian missionary knowing the universality of the efficacious Grace of God has a duty to set this truth before the heathen. He has an equal duty to respect the Baleimes and their culture; their way of life enriched by the Christian faith may, indeed, produce an exemplar of the good life. Everyone regrets the evil which has followed missionary work; we musn't think that all such evil followed from missionary work.

It is my hope, as I am sure it is yours, that the missionaries soon to fly to Baleim will not carry a foreign culture with them and disrupt the culture already established. If they introduce the Christian faith to the Baleimes and adapt their culture to it if necessary, their work is well and truly done. This is not too much to ask.

H. H. Vernon,
IV Trinity.

The Greatest Of Ease

Frances Dafoe and Norris Bowden, Canadian and North American pairs champions, will demonstrate their close skating harmony at tonight's Varsity-McGill hockey game at Varsity Arena. Next month, they hope this technique will bring them and Canada the world championship they missed last year by .09 points.

Less experienced skaters among the U. of T. student body will be able to try some of the jumps and whirls after the game at the Blue and White Society's skating party. Starting at about 10:30, the party will last till midnight.

Varsity Law Better States Dean Wright

Amazing is the word for the agreement between the Law Society and the University of Toronto, stated C. A. Wright, Dean of the School of Law. He was speaking yesterday at St. Michael's College, is a series of lectures sponsored by the Law Club.

"There is no rhyme or reason or merit of any sort in the agreement," Wright said. According to the Law Society, graduates of the University of Toronto School of Law must take two years of artic ling (as do the Osgoode Hall students) and then a final year in the Osgoode Hall course (a mixture of lectures and apprenticeship).

"We concede the articling," Wright said, "but we object that the student must take over at Osgoode Hall what he has already had."

He said that all the books used at the U of T were used at Osgoode. Someone studying law should study it with the people who devised the courses and wrote the books, he said. He suggested that it would be better to get instruction first-hand at U of T then second-hand at Osgoode.

The Dean offered certain advice to students considering entering one of the law schools. He suggested that they try to find out the objectives of the Osgoode training. He has never heard of them and he has been trying for twenty-two years. He was on the staff of Osgoode Hall from 1927 to 1949.

At the same time, Wright indicated his own objective. This is to train a person to be a trouble shooter—essentially what a lawyer is, he said. Above all the lawyer must be able to analyse, and reduce problems to a simple common denominator.

"A law school is interested in producing a lawyer," he said. He said that he is not interested and never was in producing a scholar. The law is not to be studied but to be put to use, he said.

Wright also suggested that students compare the personnel on the staff of the two schools. "There seems to have been grave difficulty in obtaining Canadian teachers of note for the staff of Osgoode Hall," he said. "All the appointments of the last three years have been from the outside. They are all good individually, but they are not practical for Ontario. That is, unless they are trying to turn the law school into a little UK".

"Ontario," said the Dean, "is, as far as I know, the only jurisdiction in the English-speaking world where a lawyer, to quality for the Bar, is not taught in the university." He said that this was not necessarily bad, but that it was a trifle peculiar since it was done nowhere else.

He said that Osgoode Hall was the only educational institution, except for a few similar in the southern states, that he had ever known that did make money. The Law society would pay no attention at all to the University for many years, he said. They were running the show, and they had a profitable going concern.

Toronto Board Blasted Single Salary Scale Hit

The Secondary School teachers side of the raging controversy concerning the single salary schedule for Toronto school teachers was let loose yesterday to an assembly of prospective teachers at the Ontario College of Education. Mr. I. M. signed to remove artificial bar-Robb, Field Secretary of the Ontario Secondary School Teacher's Federation was the speaker.

"The single salary schedule is one which provides for wage differentials on the basis of responsibility, experience and qualification," explained Robb. "It was designed to remove artificial barriers which existed between primary and secondary schools and is based on the assumption that it is just as important to teach children in the early formative years as it in their late adolescence," he said. This salary schedule is said to encourage people of high scholarship to seek employment in the elementary schools.

In reply to the stories in the daily papers, which Robb called "tripe," he said that the Secondary School teachers are not being snobbish about this. They do not feel superior to their colleagues in the elementary schools although they have a great deal more basic training than the elementary teachers have. Neither is salary the issue, said Robb. The secondary school teachers do not want more than anyone else.

They do not want to break up the Ontario Teachers Federation, as has been claimed, but feel that they can and should function as the federal government in Ottawa. They are simply demanding a salary schedule of their own on which they can bargain. If they have no salary schedule they have nothing to bargain for, he said.

Commenting on the proposed extra-curricular cessation, he said it was the only way to move the Board to action by doing something that would really arouse the public.

If the teachers do resign as a body, which Robb feels is most unlikely, they will be compensated from the total resources of the Federation which amounts to about 250,000 dollars. The secondary school teachers in the rest of the province would contribute ten to twenty dollars a month if extra funds were needed, said Robb.

Robb rapped the Board's attitude to the secondary school teachers' demands. The two reasons which, he claimed, the Board offered for the rejection are: (1) that it was contrary to the policy of the Board of Education and (2) that certain administrative and educational advantages accure from the single salary schedule.

Robb claimed that the Single salary schedule stilled any militant group in working for salaries. The OSSTF will win. It may take time but they will win, Robb said.

What's Behind It

Referring to the events which led up to the present controversy, I. M. Robb said that prior to 1947 the Board set up its own salary schedules for each of the groups of teachers under its employment. Thus there were three separate schedules; one for the men Public school teachers, one for the women Public school teachers and a third for the secondary school teachers. In 1947, however, some "bright young men with briefcases" got the idea of

Socialists Will Hear CCF MP

CCF Members of Parliament for Nanaimo BC, Colin Cameron will be speaking today at an open meeting sponsored by the U of T CCF Club. Elected to the federal parliament in last August's general election, hs is noted as one of the most outstanding speakers in the House.

In the present session he has spoken out against the rearmament of Germany and warned of the dangers of a revived German imperialism. In the debate on the anti-dumping legislation, he favoured the annual re-opening of the books of the textile industry to determine whether they are really depressed. Mr. Cameron spoke in favor of the abolition of capital and corporal punishment, in the debate on the criminal code now up for revision.

Prior to his election to Ottawa, Mr. Cameron worked in a shipyard in Victoria as a pipe-fitter's assistant. He has been a president of the British Columbia CCF Party, and was for eight years a member of the BC Provincial Legislature. He is regarded as an expert on forestry, and led in drafting the CCF's platform on conservation in the last provincial election.

In addition to his activities in the CCF, Colin Cameron has been active in the trade union movement on the west coast. He headed the labor research bureau of the International Woodworkers of America (CCL) which printed a workers' newspaper. He has also represented the unions on many conciliation boards.

He will speak at 1 p.m. in Room 6 of UC.

'Explorations' Out Of Print Ask Return

An appeal has been sent out to the students of this university, by Professor of Anthropology, E. S. Carpenter. His book, Explorations, has recently gone out of print at the University of Toronto Press and they are finding themselves unable to fill large orders from the United States.

"We are therefore anxious to obtain copies in good condition and will gladly refund the full purchase price to any students who, having read their copies would be willing to let them go", said Prof. Carpenter.

Skaters, Band With Game Plus Skating Party After

During the between-period intermissions of tonight's intercollegiate hockey game at Varsity arean between McGill Redmen and Varsity Blues, Miss Frances Dafoe and Mr. Norris Bowden will demonstrate the figure skating technique that won them the Canadian and North American pairs championships last year.

After the game (approximately 10:30), the arena will be clear till midnight for a free skating party sponsored by the Blue and White society.

The Dafoe-Bowden duo represented Canada in the world figure skating championships last winter and missed the title by nine-tenths of a point. The winning English couple scored 11 points to their 10.91. Following an exhibition tour in Europe they returned to win the Canadian and North American pairs championships. They leave for Oslo, Norway, next month for another attempt at world honors.

Miss Dafoe is the daughter of Dr. W. A. Dafoe of the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate. Bowden is a graduate of S.P.S. They skated at a Varsity hockey game last winter too.

The Blue and White band will play at tonight's game, as it has at the two previous games this season. Music will be provided for the skating following the hockey game.

Officials of the Varsity hockey team are hoping for a good turnout of fans at tonight's game. Although the team has not been winning many games this season, it is not out of the running yet and the coaching staff believes that fan support could make the difference between winning and losing.

Dolls At Debate

The sign on the washroom door opposite the Debates Room read "Ladies" the other night as the Thirtieth Hart House Debate decided that chequebooks were swamping education. These debates are usually "stag" affairs and no announcement was made that the fair sex was invited.

But they were. The Oshawa Collegiate and Vocational Institute Debating Club, is, unlike Hart House, co-educational. With the 21 boys and one teacher came eight girls, each one aware that Hart House is as exclusively stag as the Varsity football team.

As they leaned from the gallery, Clyde Batten, on behalf of the Debates Committee, attempted to make the guests feel at home. Speaker, Roger Bull, later commented on the good conduct of the visiting students. "I was pleased and impressed by the silence and close attention which the members of the group maintained", said Bull.

He pointed out that "it may have tended to limit the more pungent wit of some of the speakers". The other members on the floor, however, didn't seem to be too perturbed over the invasion of the male domain, which usually takes place only when previously announced.

When told that the very floor on which they were walking was reserved for men, except by permission of the Board of Stewards one visitor said, "We found out when we got here What's wrong with women, haven't they got equal rights?"

A more caustic note was added, but not in the debate itself, by Debates Committee member, Dave Gauthier. He said, "As much as we enjoyed entertaining the Oshawa students, the House cannot permit a repetition of this disconcerting and depressing incident. I trust that those responsible for the oversight are properly aware of their guilt and have reformed their wandering ways".

Correspondance was exchanged between the committee and the club in Oshawa in the fall. It wasn't until early Wednesday evening that Bull and the Debates Committee realized that the group might be mixed.

bringing all teachers into one big happy family," he said.

"The single salary schedule was thus imported from the United States to be tried first in Toronto. A committee consisting of trustees and officials of boards was set up and it studied the schedule for a few months. The situation in Toronto was found to be unfavorable to such a schedule and therefore it was decided to table it indefinitely."

In 1950 with the spiralling costs of living all three separate groups of teachers pressed for increase in salary. A committee was set up, which consulted nobody and after three months revealed their plan of a single salary schedule which was rejected three years ago. This plan had along with it an increase of $600 for each teacher. After 12 days it was accepted by all the teachers' bodies as a result of this $600 bonus. The secondary school teachers accepted it under protest, he said. During the next three years they have protested it at every turn and last spring they asked the provincial government to step in and help them.

If the single salary schedule becomes accepted the OSSTF will lose its identity and will exist only a "squeaking minority," he said. If it loses its right to bargain for its members for salary, it therefore will lose the right to bargain for anything, he said.

This Is Hockey? . . . Osgoode Won 1-0

By JOHN WILSON

The legal lads from Osgoode Hall didn't outplay the Intermediates yesterday in Varsity Arena, but outbumped them to a close 1-0 victory arising out of an ironbound defence and the fact that the Baby Blues couldn't put the puck in the net.

Fresh from a two-day-old win over the OAC Aggies 13-6, a club the Blues walloped 12-0, the Osgoode outfit should have been sure pickings for the Varsity crew, but an almost impossible defence, led by Joe Kane and Gerry Fitzhenry kept the boys in Blue at bay.

The lone Osgoode tally came at 18:03 of the second period, when Pat Duffy broke out of a maze of players at the Varsity blueline to go in on Currie for the score.

Coach Wheldrake pulled Hugh Currie out of the Varsity net in the last minute in favor of an extra attacker but hard work by Robillard, Primeau, Wright, and Rogers fell short of the mark as time ran out.

Alberta Caput 'Political Bias' Students Say

Edmonton, Jan. 21 — (CUP) — University of Alberta students are charging the administration with "unwarranted political bias". Protesting the cancellation of lectures for a speech by Progressive Conservative leader George Drew tomorrow, they called it a reversal of policy established last year when Dr. James Endicott was not allowed to speak at the University.

University President Stewart granted Mr. Drew permission to speak "on whatever topic he himself chooses, political or otherwise."

The Dean's Council announced that lectures would be cancelled after 11:30 a.m. tomorrow "in order to allow every student to hear Mr. George Drew". The Deans' Council was acting on a recommendation of the Students' Council whose president is a fraternity brother of Mr. Drew.

The Dean's Council claimed that Mr. Drew will be here in his capacity as leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, and not as a Progressive Conservative. Mr. Sidney Wood, a prominent Edmonton Conservative, informed the undergrad weekly, The Gateway, that Mr. Drew "would be delighted to make a political speech".

Last February, Dr. Endicott, winner of Stalin's 1953 Peace Prize, was banned from the Alberta campus after he had been invited to speak by the Political Science Club. At that time, students issued a protest censuring the administration for "prohibiting speakers on the campus who are sponsored by recognized and authorized student union groups and clubs".

Carleton Council Ignores Students

By JOE SCANLON

Ottawa, Jan. 20—(Cpecial) — Students at Carleton College here are in an uproar over the recent decision of the Students' Council to have the NFCUS per capita fee raised from 20 to 50 cents. The storm of protest was touched off last Friday when a group of students felt that the Council could make no decision without taking a general student referendum.

The latest move by the students was a two-page mimeographed paper, The Carleton Examiner, which appeared on the campus Wednesday morning. The front page headline read: "Nothin' Yu Can Do", The Examiner was described as "the voice of the students".

An editorial in the Examiner stated that "students who attended the Council meeting came away shaking their heads and swearing softly in winder, and with good cause. They had just been told that student opinion on Council actions was not wanted. They had just been told to sit down, that Council did not want to listen to them. They had just been told that Council has every right to do whatsoever it pleases, and that the student body is helpless."

Various students decried the method by which the Council had approved the increase in fees. "The issue at stake is the way the Council raised the NFCUS fee," said Bill McGuffin. "This is an arbitrary measure and should not have been done without a student referendum."

"What we're objecting to is the way the Council is ignoring students," another student said.

The Students' Council, however, planned an open noon-hour rally yesterday at which they discussed NFCUS, and are planning to write an article in the student paper explaining why they passed the increase. Council president Colin McDonald said: "It's all been passed, and there's nothing you can do about it . . . Council will answer when it is ready."

The Examiner, published by a group of students "interested in democratic students government", maintained the Council should have held an open meeting before taking any action, so that both sides of the question could be put before the student body; students then would decide for themselves what they want.

A cartoon in the Examiner shows the Students' Council shooting down the student body as represented by sheep. The masthead carries the statements: "No affiliated with the Students' Council" and "This paper is not printed in opposition to The Carleton (the official undergrad paper) but to bring certain issues to the immediate attention of the student body."

History Club To Discuss Fr. Canada

Mr. Mason Wade, noted American author and scholar on French-Canada, who has been living in Quebec for the last few years, is coming to Toronto as the Grey Lecturer for 1954. He will address the Modern History Club in conjunction with the Toronto History Teachers' Association on the subject of "Problems of French-Canada" in Flavelle House on Monday, January 25 at 8 p.m.

Western Youth Mature States Indian Educator

Dr. Bose, Dean of the Mahatma Gandhi Memorial Medical College of Indore, India, said in an interview that he considered Canadian and American students more mature than Indian students. "Western university students work on their own initiative more than students do in India," said Dr. Bose. "Indian undergraduates depend to a greater extent on examinations. Whether this is good or bad, I could not say."

Dr. Bose, who is at present in Toronto, is on a four-month tour of Canada, USA, and Europe under the auspices of the Rockefeller Foundation to study Pharmacology and methods of medical education. "They teach the same subjects all over the world, but the approach is different in different countries", stated Dr. Bose. He also said that India had been following British methods of teaching, but now wanted to come here, and Rockefeller was pleased to answer India's own needs.

Dr. Bose said that Toronto is a very good medical centre. "I wanted to come here, and Rockefeller was pleased to agree. I wanted to see the Canadian system of Medical training, and in particular the Connaught Laboratory and the Banting Institute. I also wanted to meet Dr. Best, who is an outstanding international figure in Pharmacology."

Communism will not be a problem in India, Dr. Bose said. "Unemployment is the swill in which Communism breeds. There are pockets of Communists in India, but the Indian people are too individualistic to be regimented by this new philosophy."

Dr. Bose said that a tremendous effort is being made by the government and the people of India to improve the country as rapidly as possible. It is too early to say exactly what progress is being made, stated Dr. Bose, but the Indian standard of living has improved vastly in the last twenty years.

"Feeling in India is generally favorable to the USA and Canada. Indians appreciate the work that is being done in their country by these nations", said Dr. Bose.

More School Spirit Here UBC Graduate Announces

Toronto has more school spirit than the University of British Columbia, said Godfrey Chown, I Law, who is spending this year at the U of T under the NFCUS Inter-regional Scholarship Plan. Chown, a graduate of Commerce at UBC, attributes Toronto's more vigorous school spirit to the influence of Inter-collegiate Football.

"On the other hand", Chown said, "it's very nice to have a golf course on the campus, and skiing in the mountains only an hour's drive away as we do at UBC."

Chown stated that he had learned a great deal from his experiences in Toronto. "I would recommend to all students at Toronto that they consider taking one year of their course at another university under an exchange plan."

Chown is at Toronto under the NFCUS Inter-regional Scholarship Plan, by which students (mostly 3rd year) are exchanged between Canadian Universities. Further details on this year's exchange plans will be available in the near future.

Bodnar is long overdue for some goals.

A powerful nucleus of veterans is making McGill coach Rocky Robillard's task an easy one this season. He has two big bruising defencemen back in Len Shaw and Ron Robertson. On the forward line, he has Whitey Schutz, Pete Johnson, Wally Emo, Len Kent and Gord Currie. His new acquisitions are defencemen George Petty from Montreal Royals juniors and forwards Herb English from the Royals and Guy Bourgoin from the junior Canadiens. Centre Dick Baltzan from Saskatoon turned the hat trick against the Blues last week.

University Needs Controversy To Keep Academic Freedom

A four-man panel decided Wednesday night that persons like the "Red Dean" of Canterbury and Senator McCarthy should be permitted to expound their political views before students. They contended that a healthy university was not fulfilling its function if it did not permit contradictory and controversial views to be expressed.

The panel discussion, held before an estimated 300 staff and students in Strachan Hall, Trinity College, was the first in a possible series. The question discussed was "Academic Freedom" and panel members were: Monteath Douglas, Professor Lyndon Smith, Mrs. Kirkwood, retired dean of St. Hilda's, and Gordon Gwynne-Timothy, graduate student and SAC chairman.

Professor Lyndon Smith said that depriving students of a forum which included the Dean of Canterbury or Senator McCarthy would be exposing them to "horrid possibilities". He said students would be able to hear McCarthy on the radio and read about the Dean in books, "but they would not be able to have these views corrected."

"To close one medium —which in many ways is the healthiest — and not the others, is a negative approach," Professor Lyndon Smith added. "The positive approach is to have a sufficiently healthy university permit contradictory views."

Mr. Douglas, however, stated that the university must be on guard against those people solely engaged in propaganda. He defined academic freedom as freedom to explore the truths.

When asked who would determine what was propaganda and what was truth, Mr. Douglas said "any responsible member of the faculty is capable of distinguishing between the genuine and the phoney."

But professors Lyndon Smith and Ashley, a speaker from the floor, claimed that no one could decide what was truth. Professor Ashley said the only limitations on an individual should be the laws of the land. "Who on the staff or governors considers himself competent enough to say what is politically or morally subversive," he asked. Anyone who thought he was, Professor Ashley said, was highly dangerous.

Mr. Douglas felt the only criteria for dismissing a teacher was the code of his profession. He explained the code as good faith, confidence and decency. He said a responsible teacher would not abuse his teaching opportunities to introduce and agitate his own views that have nothing to do with the subject.

"Professors must not be dismissed on grounds of unpopularity of personal opinion and subversive impact," Mr. Douglas said. He referred to Socrates as the classic example. He said Socrates had been charged with being morally and politically subversive, but Socrates' real job was to estimate truth as he saw fit.

A man must be judged by his peers and not by public opinion, he added, for only his peers know the pressures that are on him and today's media of communication to the public are completely untrustworthy.

Harmony Entries End Arts Absent

Hart House members who secured entry forms for the fifth annual Quartet Contest are asked to return the completed forms to the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor, by today at 5 p.m.

Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, reminded members last night that entries for the contest close today.

"All you need is the urge to have fun in four-part harmony," McDowell said. No trained voice is necessary, he added. If singing groups are in the process of getting organized or are practicing, entry forms may be submitted earl entry forms may be submitted early next week, McDowell said.

Such entries as The 4 Minims, the 5T5 4 Meds Quartet and the Four Spades—Jack, Queen, King and Sam, have already submitted their entries.

Preliminary trials are to be held during the first week of February. All entries so far are from professional faculties. Arts colleges have yet to be heard from.

Sponsored by the House Committee, this event has by leaps and bounds become a very popular and famous thing for members of the House.

Contesting quartets will prepare two numbers, and the winners will prepare another for the Intercollegiate Contest. The winners will each receive a replica silver trophy, and the winning quartet will win the large silver cup.

Quartets do not have to sing barber shop style, McDowell said. The style of singing, dress and voice training will have definite bearing on the judging, and enthusiasm will be an important factor.

Knox Chapel Has Service This Sunday

Rev. Maurice Murphy, LTh, MA, will speak at the monthly Evening Service this Sunday. The service, sponsored by the Varsity Christian Fellowship, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Knox College Chapel.

Rev. Murphy is presently on the staff of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship in the United States. After graduating from University College in English and History, he served for a year on the IVCF staff in Canada.

He returned to the University of Toronto to receive his MA, and his LTh from Wycliffe College. During the war, following service in Toronto and Quebec City parishes, he served as an RCAF Chaplain for two and a half years.

UK May Sell Democracy To Uncommitted Asians

The Commonwealth can play a great part in swinging the balance in the uncommitted areas of Asia onto the side of democracy, said Mr. Edgar McInnis, President of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, to the International Relations Club yesterday. He emphasized that it must be clear to the Asians that we want a decent standard of living for its own sake in the underdeveloped countries.

He stressed the fact that from Gibraltar to the Pacific there is not a country which can be counted on positively to stand beside us in a definite struggle. Although there is good-will especially among the leaders of India, he said that the stakes might be too big for the Asians to sit in on the game.

Basically, he said, the conflict is a revolt against poverty. The Asian dies at 20, while the Canadian dies at 80. Before World War I, Asia almost fed itself, but the population grows more than one per cent every year and food-production has declined since the war.

The Asians have great respect for the power and ecomplishments of the West, long with the envy McInnis said, but they are determined to avoid becoming entangled, and to achieve their own destiny by themselves.

Betty-Jean Hagen

The TSO had as guest artist this week a Canadian who has won her laurels both at home and abroad and now comes beck to wear them proudly and deservedly. Betty-Jean Hagen is one Canadian musician of whom we can be proud, not because of her citizenship but because of her achievement in the artistic field.

She appeared in the Syfphonie Espagnole for violin and orchestra, Op. 21 by Lalo. From the very first phrase she indicated that she had captured the fire and vibrance without which this music becomes insipid. She has a great smoothness of tone and richness which extends the whole range of the violin and not just over a limited section in the middle. While maintaining the round quality of her tone, she nevertheless created a variety of tonal colour from the brilliant to the murky as befitted the particular passage. The Scherzando was characterized by a powerful and confident movement over the phrases giving the whole a continuous integration. In the Andante more than the rest she evidenced a maturity of interpretation lending to the music such thoughtful logic that it seemed impossible for it to have been written any other way. Unfortunately the orchestra under Sir Ernest did not equal her finesse of accent in the Rondo and the subtlety of the syncopation, in the orchestral part at least, was lost in a rather regular thump.

The Soirees Musicales, Britten's five movements from Rossini concluded the program in a very lively fashion. Sir Ernest with his usual despatch on the last number, jumped right into the march so quickly that the orchestra members all seemed to be riding off on their chairs, snapping their bows and whipping their instruments to go faster in this rather hunt-like music. This piece shows Britten in a gayly mocking mood which came over quite well with the strength of rhythm which Sir Ernest indicated although the orchestra and he sometimes did not agree upon it.

This last half of the program was much the brighter. Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe", a romantic work with the lack of order which sometimes accompanies romanticism, was quite well controlled with efefctive contrast between the sudden louds and softs.

The other work on the program was a Symphony in G minor by E. J. Moeran, which I had never heard before. So I really could not say whether it was the composer's or the conductor's intentions which made it seem so overwhelmingly harsh at times. It had several beautiful themes and a unity kept through its similarity of method in the development, but very often it seemed to be nothing but one dramatic cliche piled upon another without any particular shape or significance.

DRAMA REVIEW

The Philadelphia Story

Philip Barry's sophisticated comedy, The Philadelphia Story, is an extremely funny but curiously mixed up play; its various little stories which never work themselves into a proper recognizable plot give an air of indistinctness to the whole. It was not so much a question of the sub-plots becoming entangled with the main plot as of deciding exactly what (and if so why) the main plot was.

The story is of a Philadelphia socialite named Tracy Lord, who, upon the eve of her marriage to George (a self-made man with the very best of principles) discovers, by getting drunk at a party and going swimming with a reporter in the cold grey dawn that (a) she is really in love with her first (divorced) husband (who luckily came to lunch the day before), (b) a self-made man, contrary to the principles of Communism and the reporter, may be a heel and a wealthy burden-upon-society, may be a very fine chap and (c) she is now a real person and she just loves everybody, except George.

To keep all this from getting monotonous Mr. Barry has generously tossed in a tom-boy little sister, a bottom-pinching old uncle, a pretty photographer who is really the reporter's soul-mate although he thinks he is in love with the socialite, a father who, having concluded an affair with a dancer, has realized his error and an immense number of transactions (mostly shady) with one Sydney Kidd, the publisher of a large and inquisitive magazine to whose staff are attached the reporter and the photographer. As we said, the plot tends to vanish with alarming frequency.

To further decrease the clarity the play has some difficulty in making up its mind as to exactly what it is. It changes from brittle witty comedy to manners to warm human interest story to revelation of hidden sorrow. Some of the characters are not real people at all but the brilliant figures traditionally demanded by witty plays; some, on the other hand, are human beings with, one gathers, a warm heart beating beneath the surface. Sometimes the play is sheer farce (and very good farce), sometimes it is comedy of manners and sometimes it lapses into trying to deal with a problem—just which problem is not quite clear but it certainly arrests the smooth progress of the humour and briefly spoils the mood. In spite of this immense confusion the play is very, very funny with a humour built up of line, character and situation into one great joke.

This melange of situations was handled by the Crest company with admirable aplomg. Their sets and costumes, to begin with, were excellent in that they were exactly what one would expect the Main Line set of Philadelphia to wear and sit on, although the porch was somewhat too reminiscent of an Eaton's spring window display.

Now, however, we come to the flaw; the indecision which apparently possessed the playwright was echoed in John Blatcherly's direction, for he came up with three styles of acting during the evening. Murray Davis (the father) and Harold Burke (George) were doing a solidly sincere job with taste and (most important) restraint; Mary Laura Wood (Tracy) and Joan Blackman (Dinah) adopted a dashing, dramatic, I-am-a-Camera style while George McCowan (the divorced husband) were actors being actors being real people.

Considered separately, however, most of the actors were very fine. Mary Laura Wood, although she had some difficulty in finding herself in the first scene, gave an excellent performance for the rest of the evening, bringing great wit and freshness to a demanding part. Joan Blackman as the young sister, acting with sweeping audacity, was completely charming. The incorrigible Uncle Willy, played by Eric House, was irresistibly funny; it appears that Mr. House is treading firmly the path of character acting and is on his way to making a great success of it. Since character actors in Canada are even rarer then other kinds we may feel encouraged by this development—and we look forward hopefully to the day when Mr. House does a really sympathetic Polonius.

Murray Davis, as the father of the family, was able, by playing his tear-jerking scene lightly and with restraint to keep the mood of the play and at the same time to give a moving performance with Betty Leighton's Margaret (his wife) as an admirable partner, calm, motherly and dignified—a good straight performance of a good straight part. Harold Burke's characteristization was in somewhat the same vein—neither was very funny because neither had witty lines to say; on the other hand, neither was playing so earnestly that he had to be viewed subjectively. Mike the reporter, on the other hand (played by George McCowan), was handled with less lightness and so emerged more human and less polished as did Max Helpmann's Dexter; although the latter, thanks to his frequent speeches of instruction, was as much of a lecture as a man. Barbara Chilcott, as the hard-boiled female photographer, was both witty and extremely decorative. The point remains, however, that this play should have been, if it wasn't, a stylized comedy of manners to which Mr. McCowan and Mr. Helpmann contributed rather less than the other members of the cast who succeeded in remaining figures of people instead of the people themselves.

Since both plot and purpose of the play remained shrouded in mystery it gave a definite impression that it had nothing to say and wasn't saying it. Nevertheless the substance of this nothingness was vastly entertaining.

HOCKEY BLUES ON THE SPOT

Speaking Of Sport

The hassle on the matter of McMaster's expulsion from the Intercollegiate Football League has raised a great controversy in the press and the bars. The four Universities responsible for the action have been accused of selling Mac down the river for the almighty dollar while their professed principles have conveniently turned their heads.

Can't See The Forest For . . .

. . . the trees have a habit of blocking the view. In the case of the Mac dismissal so many side issues have been pushed before the public eye that they have obscured the basic cause of all the trouble. The simple fact, already stated, is that the Universities are in real financial difficulty and the action taken is not a move to spite scrappy little Mac but one intended to save the Intercollegiate League and, most important, the athletic programmes of the individual members.

Since the big point worrying most of the Schools is their Athletic Programmes and the monetary support such things demand of the Football Gate it is sensible to first consider these programmes and then their relation to the Gridiron Gold.

At Varsity, Football brings the operating capital for almost all the sports throughout the year. Hockey grabs a huge chunk of this bundle with the remaining peanuts being spread thinly around among the minor sports such as Fencing, Gymnastics and Water Polo, while Basketball, cramped by inadequate space, manages to hold its own. A drop in Football revenues would give the Athletic Association only two choices — either to curtail these minor sports in the Programme or present the Administration with a deficit, neither of which appeals to the UTAA. Under the present system these are the only prospects, but with an approach slightly more up-to-date the Association might change the entire situation.

What possible sense there could be in overloading Football so that the other Varsity Sports can continue their free-loading joy-ride, is a wee bit beyond our feeble comprehension. Rising costs in all departments will likewise increase the need for good football players to keep the game at its high crowd-drawing standard and it will be natural for the value of good footballers to increase proportionally. Finally we'll end up with a high price on every boy who may be a good prospect for College Football, and then where will our principles be?

It's hardly good business to stuff all our eggs in one basket. The proof of that is smacking us in the face right now. The present crisis traces directly to the possibility that a decline in the Grid Gate will knock our Athletic Programme woozy.

Why Not Alchemy . . .

. . . since it's supposed to change base metal into gold, it might be an idea for us to turn our 'ballast' 'sports' of Hockey and some of the others into profitable enterprises.

Some American Colleges support their entire operation on Basketball returns. Varsity just manages to break even, though we have both the team and the available facilities to build it into a golden goose. Recently there appeared on the Sports Page of The Varsity a column suggesting the conversion of Varsity Arena into a dual purpose unit. The purchase of a portable basketball floor would allow the holding of double-feature Snorts events with both Hockey and Basketball games in one evening.

Basketball's popularity, constantly growing hereabouts, could draw large crowds who would also watch the Hockey team and the addmission charge might allow both Sports to earn their keep while perhaps leaving a little residue in the Athletic Association hope chest.

However, nothing has been done in this line at Varsity, though other Universities have used the plan with profit and success. We just go right on praying that Football will bring big dividends, that the old system will go on paving off till the millenium when we can stop worrying about everything. McMaster is given the old boat-race, with appropriate crocodile gushings, and nothing is allowed to interfere with a rivalry that is mouldering, leisurely waiting for College Football to join it in death.

A financially unbalanced Athletic Programme, like Humpty Dumpty, is sure to fall, and we ought to balance things before they come to the point where neither we nor all the King's men can put them together again.

Need Victory Over Redmen To Keep Clear Of Basement

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Every game Varsity's hockey Blues play these days is a "crucial contest." Even more so is tonight's Varsity Arena skirmish with the McGill Redmen. The U. of T. puckster must win or find themselves in a most embarrassing position in the league standings — the basement.

Presently tied with the Redmen for third place, the Blues have played four more games than McGill and need to win every contest from now on if they are to finish higher than last place. They have played six games—half their schedule—and won only one. However, only two of these six games have been at home, and they've split their Varsity Arena starts, winning 5-2 over Laval two weeks ago and dropping a 7-5 decision to University of Montreal before Christmas. Of their six remaining games, four will be at home and only two on the road.

For this do-or-die effort, Coach Jack Kennedy is throwing all his eggs into a couple of baskets. He figures the team's big weakness so far (and the records bear him out—17 goals scored in six games) has been a lack of scoring power.

"We've been playing evenly with the other teams", he said earlier this week, "but just can't seem to cash in on scoring opportunities. For this game, I'm going to use our first two lines more than ever".

Of the 17 goals the Blues have scored, ten have been racked up by the Don Cossar-Ken Lawson - Johnny Akitt line. Six more have been credited to the Red Stephen-Harry Boyd-Ross Woods combo. That leaves one counter to the credit of somebody other and that happened to be scored by Robin Logie, who was playing in Lawson's spot in one game.

The third line, with Tom Riley centring Jim Wilkes and Ernie

Blues Off To Queen's, McGill

As Varsity Blues take to the road this weekend with matches scheduled against Queen's and McGill their hopes for victory will ride securely on the broad shoulders of such gentlemen as George Stulac. Jim Russell and Leapin' Lou Lukenda. These three have been the Blues' biggest guns in the preseason workouts and have led the team in setting a 34% shooting average, a mark of fine play. Stulac, with 41% of his hosts finding the hoop, is top-doy in the Blue kennel and has an average of 14.6 points a game while Russell and Lukenda have 31.6% and 36.1% respectively. The latter two have followed close behind Stulac in the scoring department with Russell averaging 14 points and Lukenda getting 13 per match.

Friday night will find the Varsitys in Kingston for the second game of their schedule and Saturday the Blues will move on to McGill, also in somewhat dire straits, though their season has yet to open.

HOOP SHOTS

By LEO MADDEN

The Intramural League is often the training ground for future senior basketball players. Many boys, who have played a little basketball in high school, can improve enough in one or two years of intramural basketball to make the senior squad before they graduate. Marv Tile is probably the most outstanding example of this development.

But of far greater importance are the "whistle boys" of this league. Some of the students, who make a few extra dollars officiating in the nitramural League, go on to make quite a profitable side-line of officiating for high school and university games after they leave school. It is true that they are few in number. This is so because the student referees are not required to come up to any standard, and only those with interest and foresight bother to improve themselves as officials.

Right now, the officials in the Intramural League are, in general, far below the desired level. Even those men, who handle the Varsity games and most of the games in Toronto's senior leagues, are of only averge calibre. (A couple of them are graduates of the University's unofficial training program.) In some instances, the "graduate officials" are not shining examples to their understudies. This was the case in a recent Varsity-MacMaster game.

I suggest that some move should be made to nimprove the present situation. Those of you who are managers and coaches of teams in the Intramural League should take the initiative. Your money is paying these referees. You should have capable officials. Most of these intramural officials have never read a basketball rule book. This should be the minimum requirement.

The encouraging display by the Intercollegiate team can be credited to a team effort. The boys have no one particular star. Each one has been doing his job. Perhaps players like George Stulac, Jim Russell and Lou Lukenda can be singled out as leading scorers. But their brilliance is equalled by the defensive work of Steve Oneschuck, and the rebounding of Bill Corcoran and Marve Tile. Nice going, fellas!— But don't stop now! — Western and Assumption will need the same treatment.

Basketball will make its television debut on Saturday afternoon. The Nortown Tri-Bells, coached by Paul Thomas, will take on a strong Eldredge Club team at Saint Michael's High School. The game will be elevised over CBLT starting at two-thirty. — The Eldredge Club boasts of an array of former Cansius College and Buffalo Univerity stars. They have beaten the Tri-Bells in two previous meetings this year; therefore, the Bells will be going all-out for a victory this time.

You might be interested in knowing that six of the twelve players on the Nortown team are former Varsity senior hoopsters, and that four of the six are still attending the University. We could almost say that the University has two senior teams this year.

Since the Blues are out of town this weekend, why not come up to Saint Michael's, and cheer on the other University senior team. They play three times this weekend: Saturday afternoon, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Trinity B's Top Defeat Meds III

By JOHN WILSON

Yesterday's lone Intramural hockey fixture in Varsity Arena saw the Trinity B's move into first place in Group IV, registering a 4-2 decision over Meds III.

It is rather surprising how good a brand of hockey is being played in the lower groups, as compared to that of Groups I and II. Although a little bit ragged in spots, and in most cases a great deal rougher, the lesser clubs can put on almost as good a show as the senior teams.

Paul McTaggart, the Red and Black's scoring threat, tallied his eleventh and twelfth goals of the season, to pull well out in front of his nearest rival in the Intramural scoring race. Bob Shaw found the mark for the other two Trinity goals, while Bob Lane and Gary Conn counted the Doctors' scores.

Woody Fisher replaced Intermediate goaltender Hugh Currie in the Meds net, and found himself very overworked as the Buttery Boys monopolized action keeping the puck in the Meds end for the better part of the game. A sloppy defensive unit in front of him allowed the Trinity forwards plenty of opportunity to score in both periods.

McTaggart, Wright, Ross and Shawa weer best for Trinity on the attack, while Pete Butler and Hank Selby were standouts at the blueline. Bud Wall, in the Trinity net, had little work to do, while losing his third shutout through careless goaltending.

With one game left in their group, the Trinity club seem a cinch to enter the playoffs, if they

PHE's Shade St. Hilda's

By FLO MIDDLETON

In the noon hockey tussle yesterday, PHE defeated St. Hilda's 1, 1-0, in an exciting, close-checking game. The brand of hockey was far superior to the usual Martin-Lewis antics seen so far this year.

In the first period, there were few shots on goal with the play being concentrated mostly at centre ice. The only exciting breakaway was by Jean Broyer PHE, but Phyllis Challen playing her usual outstanding game in the nets saved the day for the Saints.

Although PHE continued to keep the puck behind the Saint's blue line in the third period, they were able to score only once because of the strong defensive game the St. Hildian's played. The only goal resulted from a scramble in front of the Saint's net when Inger Olsen slapped the puck in behind the blue and grey goal-keeper.

The rest of the game, in spite of the lack of scoring punch, was very exciting with many scrambles in front of both nets. Even though June Collard, the PHE goalie, did not work as hard as Phyl Challen in the Saint's nets, she played a good game and was well-rewarded for her efforts with a shut-out.

Wrestlers

Kirk Wipper's University of Toronto wrestling team will put its three-meet winning streak on the line tomorrow afternoon at Hart House in its first Canadian intercollegiate meet of the season. The University of Western Ontario squad will be the visitors.

The Varsity swimming team, 1953 college champion, will also tackle Western representatives in an afternoon meet. A fencing competition will complete the afternoon's card.

The Varsity wrestlers' last competition last Saturday at Guelph, when they felled the Ontario Agricultural College team, winning seven of nine bouts. An intermediate wrestling meet between Western and Toronto will begin the afternoon sports program at 2 p.m.

Varsity's swimmers lost two dual meets two weeks ago, losing at Niagara and Buffalo State. U of T. swimmers will be: 50 and 100-yd. freestyle, Al Haig and Bruce Taylor; 220-yd. freestyle: Bibi Stipitec and Gord Teskey; 440-yd. freestyle, Doug McCulloch; 220-yd. breaststroke, Gerry Van-Tets; 220-yd. backstroke, Bill McIlroy, Dave Price, Len Rambusch; Diving, Don McPherson.

Breaking The Grape Barrier

Your Sour Grapes, Sir

As historians will probably note in learned books of the future the twentieth century in Canada has been characterized by nationalism in all phases of life. The paradox is that in the midst of this often self-conscious national feeling there was also a very strong feeling of separatism which took the form of two narrower nationalisms on the part of English and French-speaking Canadians.

Apparently this unfortunate provincial sentiment has not entirely been rooted out in spite of the attempts of such people as Jean Bruchesi, deputy provincial secretary of Quebec, the Abbe Arthur Maheux and Principal Jeanneret of University College to dispel the prejudices and misunderstandings on both sides. We know that this is a work which bears fruit slowly, especially among those who have grown up with these misconceptions about fellow citizens of a different culture. But we are very disappointed to see university students perpetrating this bigoted tradition, rather than striving to right the wrongs of our fathers.

In an editorial entitled, "Minority Rule (Or Sour Grapes)", The Ubyssey complains of the insistance of the French-language papers upon having all official documents translated, and upon having a judge of the editorial contest who is capable of understanding both French and English.

"The CUP is made up of 21 English-language papers and three French-language papers," states the editorial. "Nevertheless, delegates from the universities of Laval, Montreal and Ottawa entered the conference planning to get a 50-50 split in everything for their 3-21 minority."

The editor has not only distorted the claims of the French-language papers, but has also been influenced entirely by numbers to the exclusion of the principle involved. The "50-50-split-in-everything" never at any time involved more than the request as members to be able to understand all proceedings of CUP. CUP is a national organization, of a country which has two official languages. Therefore, the French-speaking delegates were entirely within their rights in asking what is standard procedure in our federal parliament where English-language members also outnumber French-language members.

In the same editorial the following statement is made: "And, most important of all, the judge for the editorial contest must be a bi-lingual French-speaking judge one year and a bi-lingual English-speaking judge the next." We are sorry that The Ubyssey editor considers the choice of judge to be more important than the unity of Canada. Even allowing for this attitude, there is nothing unreasonable in this demand. If the French editorials are to be judged in the same contest as the English it is no more than just that the judge should understand both languages. If, as the editor states, it will be impossible to fulfill these conditions outside of Ontario and Quebec, the West should hang its head in shame and make an effort to improve the situation, instead of weakly consenting to it, even approving of it.

The editor also accuses the French-language papers of using demagogic tactics such as "some annoying delaying tactics". Perhaps he will appreciate the sincerity of the papers from the French universities if he takes into account that they are in a position to try to persuade fifty Quebec degree-granting colleges to apply for membership which if granted could give them a majority, but that out of honesty they only suggested that the fifty join as one paper. There is also the suggestion that The Varsity among others lent support to the proposals of the French-speaking delegates because we had an axe to grind. We supported them because we believe in the justice of their claims and in the dual culture of Canada. In the words of Governor-General Massey when he addressed the Canadian Club: "Canadians boast to tourists of having two cultures, but it would be mere complacncy for them to say they are richer for having two cultures if they remain satisfied with their own. Steady progress toward greater understanding will allow Canada to offer not merely two mutually tolerant cultures, but a community as notable for harmony and true unity as for the variety that Canadians will always cherish".

"We're mad" is the parting shot of this editor. We are ashamed of you for contributing to the misunderstanding between our two cultures: Minority rule does not apply to the situation, but we grant you your sour grapes.

Our Readers Write

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Yesterday trials were held in order to pick four students to represent the University of Toronto in the Canadian University Debating Association. Only two students showed up for the trials. An all too common problem arises from this situation. Should this University be represented in debates, or any other activity, unless there is enough student interest in that activity to warrant participation, or should the Debating Union, in particular, be constantly holding retrials and begging people to turn out, in order that the U of T be represented at all times? What is the use of spending the money of the SAC, which comes from the students, on activities which the students, themselves, seem to have lost interest in? Perhaps this states the problem a little too strongly, for interest in debating itself, is higher now than in many years; but it does seem that there is little interest in participating in the IUDL. If this is true, then why enter the IUDL?

It is easy to believe that there are interested people on campus who, for some reason or other, were not able to participate in the trials. If this is so, I ask these people to leave their names and address at the SAC office and we shall try to arrange another trial. This would solve the immediate problem for the UTDU, but in no way answers the problem for university sponsored activities as a whole.

The Varsity,
The Editor:

Even though I feel an extra strong connection with this paper — in fact, a bloody connection — I must say that, for the first time, I am thoroughly disgusted with it.

To my horror, my eyes came across a very startling story on the front page of yesterday's Varsity. It was startling, in the first place, because I couldn't even see the picture. I had to put the paper right up to my eyes to see that the picture had scantily clad girls in it. (Not that I seriously object, but if you are going to show them, then let's see them clearly.)

Then I noticed the headline, "Dancing Girl Found Raped." Sir, this is the best example of incompetent headline writing I have ever seen. Nowhere in the story was there any indication that the girl in question was a dancer. And nowhere was there any indication she was raped. It only stated that "a favorite concubine" was made pregnant. There MAY have been some co-operation on this — who knows?

Since when does your paper have anything to do with Rabat, Morocco? Since when is it news for a university student paper to print an African social column? Since when do you accept news that has no connection with students — I don't think former Sultan Sisi . . . . . was a student: at least, you didn't mention it?

Lastly, where does Bob Hope fit in to your story. I suspect that he is an imposter in your picture and I suspect your picture is one fake.

Pull up your journalistic socks, brother.

Neurosis?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In Monday's edition of The Varsity, Mr. R. A. Fenn complained that my article on Schoenberg was written from personal prejudices. He forgets that criticism, if it is to be sincere, must be the honest expression of personal taste. Nothing is more annoying to musicians than the false appearance of impartiality which newspaper critics are forced to assume.

The candemnations of Schoenberg forty years ago are still valid. The fact that music forty years old is still not accepted by musicians is an indication that it never will be, for the performers and public have never been forty years behind an advanced composer. In giving a list of artists who play this stuff (they are only a minority), Mr. Fenn does not seem aware of the sad fact that artists play music they don't like in order to make money, unethical as this may be. They may wish to please even a small and foolish faction in the audience, they may be seduced by a fat recording commission, or they may wish to give a premiere. Mr. Fenn mentions Kubelik; but Kubelik confesses to friends that he detests atonalists; and so does the majority of performers (including some of those in the recent concert) and audiences. If Mr. Fenn had been more observant of program planning, he would not have made the absurd statement that Schoenberg and Co. are an "overwhelming success"; for the atonalists are the least-played of well known modern composers. They are only successful in writing books and misleading weak-minded and frustrated students.

It was quite natural for Schoenberg to marvel that no one discovered his system before he did, for he was unaware of the sanity of great composers.

I agree with Mr. Fenn that the opera "Wozzeck" is the greatest work of the atonalists, for their music is admirably suited to the portrayal of morbid and neurotic parts. Anyone so unfortunate as doubtless feels a kindred spirit. Beethoven, in his last works, gives us beauty after suffering; Schoenberg eliminates serenity and gives us only suffering. The agonized screams and hysterical shrieks of these depraved cerebral mathematicians have no lasting aesthetic effect upon the listener (only a neurosis); this very estacy of the hideous" is fortuately over when the noise stops.

Mr. Fenn should not object to violent attacks, for his idol is the most violent of musical anarchists. He feels that we have been glorifying the beautiful long enough, and it is time to glorify the ugly. His music is a disease to which one must be exposed before one is immune. Schoenberg's music is like his paintings (also evidence of a serious pathological disturbance) — the incomprehensible doodlings of an irresponsible eccentric, bent on the total demoralization of music.

As I Was Saying

Colin Cameron, the representative from British Columbia spoke to the U. of T. C.C.F. club last Friday about recent issues discussed in the House of Commons. Mr. Cameron seemed optimistic regarding government acceptance of the proposed scholarships increase as suggested by the Massey Report. The M.P. also talked about the Gouzenko interview and the position adopted by Mr. Blackmore, of the Social Credit party.

Suggested Awards Likely — Speaker

The scholarship clauses of the Massey report have not too bad a chance of being implemented, said Colin Cameron, last Friday. Cameron, a CCF M P from British Columbia, was speaking to the University of Toronto CCF club.

"It is quite possible that the government is prepared to yield to a good campaign in the matter of scholarships," he said. The matter would not be too large a one on the national budget, he added, and it would give the government the prestige of progressiveness.

Cameron's speech dealt mainly with the various bills and business in the House of Commons this session. He mentioned especially the Gouzenko incident and the veiled threats which accompanied it, something, he said, which was almost unique in diplomatic channels.

He referred to the speeches in parliament of Blackmore in support of Senator McCarthy. He said that Blackmore has given notice that he will introduce a resolution recommending the creation of a committee similar to that in the United States to investigate "treason in high places".

"I believe Blackmore is an honest and sincere man," Cameron said, "but he has a trouble. His trouble is bats in the belfry."

"Every lawyer in the House, who has spoken, in favour of capital punishment," said Cameron in discussing the amendments to the criminal code. He said that these amendments would be the major business of the House for the next while. "We are setting aside what might cause debate and [illegible] the sections we are all agreed on," he said.

He stated that it was difficult to say what opinion of the members of the House of Commons was concerning corporal and capital punishment. However he said that the government was not prepared to accept the abolition of such punishment at the present time.

In discussing the question of NATO, Cameron said he thought it (NATO) was beginning to fall apart. He said the weakness and danger of its policy were becoming evident. The proposed inclusion of Pakistan is a clear indication that the United States is now prepared to turn narrow economic and military aid into its world-wide plan, he said.

Correction

Last Friday's Varsity contained an error with regard to a lecture given by Dr. C. A. Wright, Dean of the School of Law. Rather than spending three years at Osgoode after receiving an L.L.B. degree, a grduate of the Law School need only spend two years. The first of these is spent entirely under articles with a law firm. The second year is spent taking a lecture in the morning, articling throughout the day and a lecture in the late afternoon.

Matter of Principle:

Queen's Editors Resign, Protest AMS Pressure

Kingston, January 23, (CUP) — Three senior editors of the Queen's Journal announced their resignation, "on a matter of principle", last Thursday. Their action followed the refusal of Tuesday's Alma Mater Society executive meeting to rescind a motion instructing the Journal to stop advertising unofficial faculty jackets.

The AMS were warned in a Journal editorial, last week, that editor-in-chief Seymour Bronstein, associate editor Nina Stone and managing editor Charles Taylor, the editors, would resign unless the motion were withdrawn.

In an editorial, the retiring editors said, "Such a situation makes a mockery of freedom of the press and we wish no part of it. We will not grind the organ at the direction of any person or group. Unless we can maintain a position of complete freedom in control of the paper in the future as we have done for most of this year we do not feel that we can do a fair job for our readers,nor can we fulfill our function as a free body."

Editor Bronstein told the AMS meeting that if they could interfere with jacket ads, it could interfere with any Journal policy. The Journal is not interested in the faculty jacket question, he added.

The motion, passed by the AMS said, "The Journal is instructed not to publish advertising for jackets which might be construed by the reader to be faculty jackets, in opposition to the spirit of the Faculty Society regulations".

"At this same meeting," stated an official letter from the AMS executive, "the question was discussed with the Business Manager of the Journal in terms of financial expediency. He felt that in his official capicity he could not agree to risk losing an advertiser".

Arts representative Bob Jeness said the Journal had "Blown up the matter", and urged the AMS not to back down, suggesting that the three editors be asked to continue in office.

Senior Science representative, Robbie Gurr reminded the meeting of the Journal's refusal to cooperate with one of the four great societies on campus.

In Friday's editorial, the Journal suggested a student vote be held to determine student opinion on the freedom and responsibility of the Journal. The editorial said, "Should the students agree to support a free paper on this campus, we shall be honoured to continue to play our parts in its regular appearance."

Consensus of campus opinion indicated that if such a vote were held, the result would heavily favour some control of the Journal by the AMS executive.

McGill Board To Back Up Mac Decision

The McMaster football question refuses to be closed. After a meeting last week, the McGill University Athletic Board refused to agree to McMaster's removal from the intercollegiate football union.

McGill's representative had been the only one to dissent the ouster which was passed at the executive meeting of Jan. 23. They claimed than since the move was not unanimous, it was unconstitutional. The meeting was called last week to review their stand on the matter.

Officials said, they could find "no sufficiently valid reason for dropping McMaster from the conference schedule in 1954." The board added that the league's financial reasons stemmed from other reasons and not because there was a fifth team in the league. The board said a one-year trial was not sufficient to determine whether McMaster belonged in the league.

Mental Congress Set For Varsity

The University of Toronto will be the site for an International Conference on mental health this summer, August 4 to 21. This is the first time than an international congress of the World Federation for Mental Health has been held in Canada.

The purpose of the conference is to assess the present day scientific knowledge that can be applied to the field of mental health and to discover and plan how this knowledge can be applied in the future. It is concerned not only with mental patients but with building healthier citizens.

About 2500 delegates will be coming from all over the world. They will be members of societies from about 40 different countries. Each society is composed of professional people in the various fields of mental health: psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers and educationists.

"The President of the University of Toronto has graciously accepted the invitation to be president of the Congress," said Dr. William Line, a member of the organizing committee. Dr. Line is a professor in the Department of Psychology at the University and past president of the Federation.

Eleanor Roosevelt will be speaking on "The Individual Citizen's Responsibility in Mental Health", he said. Other speakers will be Leonard Brockington, "Mental Health and Spiritual Values," and Dr. Rumke of Holland, "Some of the solved and unsolved problems in Mental Health."

One week prior to the conference, five research hymposia will be held. These will consider matters such as Alcoholism, Delinquency, and Mental Health in various fields. For each symposium, ten scientists from abroad, ten from the United States, and five from Canada have been invited.

The scientists will bring with them the results of research now being conducted in their countries. The purpose is to discover what progress has been made in each field in different parts of the world. They will report the results of their deliberations to the congress.

"We are concerned with the universal principle beneath the application of mental health," said Line. "Although the application may seem to differ in various countries we want to get at the universal underlying factors."

"We would welcome the help of any students interested in serving," he said. The students can help as interpreters, as guides, and in a variety of ways, he added.

40 University Liberals Hold National Meeting Six Reps From U of T

The Canadian University Liberal Federation was this weekend reorganized and re-established in a two-day convention held in Ottawa Friday and Saturday. Forty delegates from eleven universities assembled in the Chateau Laurier Hotel, to redraft their constitution, and debate resolutions on government policy.

The University of Toronto was represented by six delegates. These included the president of the U of T club, Dennis Lane, as well as Ed Lowry, HI UC, Bernie Sherer, II UC, Larry Levenstein, I UC, Shirley Lang, IV Vic, and Orie Loucks, Grad School. Other delegates represented the Universities of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Mount Allison, Montreal, McGill, and four in Ontario.

Resolutions were drafted supporting Federal policy on some subjects and introducing new lines of legislation on others such as drug addiction, Indian Affairs, tax exemptions for university expenses, and federal aid to universities.

"Since many of the issues are being considered in the cabinet now, the resolutions dealing with them will not be released till they have been fully considered there," said John Medcof, chairman of the convention.

A new constitution was drafted in a committee chaired by Jack Greenstein, McGill. Under it, a national convention will be called every year, and a new executive elected from those delegates present. "We have seen what happened to a paper organization," he said, "and in our new constitution, we feel we have the basis for, an active, worthwhile federation on the national level."

The new executive of CULF for the coming year are: President — Bob Stanbury, Osgoode Hall; Secretary — Mary Vogt, Carleton College; Western Vice-Pres. — Tony Lloyd, UBC; Eastern Vice-Pres.— Jack Greenstein, McGill.

A meeting of the University Division of the Ontario Young Liberal Association was also called on Saturday evening. Four universities with 14 representatives were present to elect a new executive. Elected were: President — Orie Loucks, Toronto; Secretary-Treasurer — Roger Black, Western; Executive council — Ralph Scane, Osgoode Hall, and Roger August, Carleton College.

Mowat To Discuss Birth Of A Culture

A new theory of the origin of the sub-Arctic Eskimos with whom he lived, will be proposed by author Farley Mowat at a meeting of the Anthropology Club in Falconer Hall Monday, January 25th, at 8:15 p.m.

Mr. Mowat is well-known for his book "People of the Deer" published in 1950, after he had spent the better part of a year travelling through the territory west of Hudson Bay. Considerable controversy was created by the publication of this book which the author refers to as "the epitaph of the Inhalmiut Eskimos". It questioned the northland policies of both the Hudson's Bay Co. and the Dominion Government.

A graduate of UC in 1949, the writer now lives at Palgrave, Ont., and is working on a second book dealing with a visit to Italy he made last year.

Philosopher To Explain His Tasks

A philosopher's importance will be discussed tonight at 7:30 p.m. on another program of the television series, "Exploring Minds". This week's program, entitled "Beginning in Wonder" will be conducted by Professor Marcus Long of the Department of Philosophy.

A visual representation of Plato's Cave Analogy will begin the program. This introduces the problem of appearance and reality. Long will relate this problem to other philosophic issues, such as the question of permanence and change.

"Professor Long will define the task of the philosopher and indicate the importance of his apparently fruitles role," said Dr. R. S. Harris. Harris is lecturer in English at University College and liaison between the CBC and the University of Toronto.

Tea For Two

Special Lit Meeting Forced By Students Over JCR Incident

A special meeting of the UC Lit has been forced by three students of that college on the point of "Undemocratic Censure." The students, who participated in a gag picture of the JCR on Monday, January 11, will exercise an old constitutional right in obtaining the signatures of twenty male students of UC.

The meeting, to be held tomorrow at 4:00 p.m. promises to be a lively one as the two male members, one being The Varsity photographer, will defend themselves against charges of the Lit executive of "conduct prejudicial to the interests of University College".

The motion of censure, passed by the UC Lit, appeared on the door of the Lit office in the JCR, on the same Monday as the picture was taken. The photo was set up for the gag issue of The Varsity which came out the following day.

The picture wasn't used because it was ruined in development. It was later fixed up by the Photo Department (see this page).

Third year president Marty Friedland said, "I feel that it's disgraceful, having a picture of Mr. Wagman and the young lady taken, sitting on the floor of the JCR in a pile of garbage. He should have been sitting on a chair".

The motion, moved by Mike Benazon and seconded by Mort Smith, said, "It is felt that the picture will be used for publicity purposes and that it does not reflect the actual condition of the JCR this year". The existence of the motion in the official minutes of the meeting, was later denied by various members of the Lit executive.

It was pointed out by the young lady, who was also censured in the motion, that she wasn't even a member of the Lit. All female students at UC are members of the WUA, a separate organization.

The photographer termed the motion, "a farce to say the least", and "just what I'd expect from the Lit." He pointed out that the photo was taken for the gag issue and was meant in a spirit of "good fun, with no intent to degrade, defraud or ridicule in any way".

Lit President Roger Bull said, "Despite the slanders which have been heaped upon the cool heads of the executive, by malicious and ignorant members of the 'litterate' JCR, we remain steadfast, resolute and immovable, except by majority vote."

The photographer, who happened to be a student at UC, promised a "lively struggle for what's right, just and in our favour".

Wagman said, "Our honour can be defended with brute force, Alene's honour is different". It was he who authored the petition which forced the special meeting.

Notices, announcing the meeting, have been posted by the Lit and there is a large turnout expected. "We want our supporters out in full force, so that we may repulse the invasion of our rights, exact," said one member of the group.

It is rumored that the young lady may invade the strictly stag meeting, tomorrow.

Pot Pourri

By WENDY MICHENER

Pour ouvrir notre tête-à-tête je dois vous expliqué un peu mon rôle. Je vais essayer de faire une espèce de trait d'union entre vous et les universitaires de langue française. Je vais tâter le pouls de la pensée de nos collègues comme elle se montre dans les journaux français.

Le Carabin et Le Quartier Latin se sont plus à la conférence de la P.U.C. Ils n'ont pas trouvé Toronto aussi pure que peut-être ils ne l'avaient craint, et de plus ils sont retournés avec leurs poches lourdes d'honneurs. Le Carabin a établi un précédent en ramassant et la trophée "Droit" pour le meilleur journal français et la trophée "Bracken" pour les trois meilleurs éditoriaux. Le Quartier Latin aussi établit un précédent en ramassant et le privilège d'être journal exécutif de la P.U.C. et la responsibilité bilingue de travail exécutif. Ils ont chacun publié une première page pleine de fierté . . . et pourquoi pas?

Le Quartier Latin se trouve dans une drôle de position comme nouveau journal exécutif. A lui le devoir de communiquer à Duplessis la demande de la P.U.C. qu'il reconsidère ses positions sur l'aide fédérale. Et pourtant Le Quartier Latin et tous les autres journaux d'universités françaises ont voté contre la motion. Même Le Carabin qui a gagné un prix pour un éditorial sur ce sujet, a voté contre la motion. Les raisons des délégués étaient que la proposition se trouvait hors du domaine des attributions de la P.U.C., et opposée à la liberté de la presse. Il est aussi suggéré dans un article non signé dans Le Carabin que les universitaires des autres provinces ne comprenaient pas la situation tout à fait, et donc ne devraient pas s'y mêler . . .

Néanmoins le sujet de la position économique de l'étudiant leur est fort topique puisque la ligue Villeneuve a choisi pour sujet des débats interuniversitaires d'Ottawa, Montréal et Québec: "L'Etat doit payer un salaire à l'étudiant universitaire."

Le Quartier Latin après le modèle Kinsey a fait une enquête. La matière qui les intéressait était non pas quelque conduite sexuelle, mais ce que leur journal valait aux étudiants. Les résultats ont sûrement valu la peine. Sûr 1,200 étudiants, 98.3% lisent au moins une partie. Pourrions-nous nous vanter d'avoir autant de lecteurs . . . Je me demande.

Martial Versus Marital Wins Robinette Trophy For Berger, Biderman

The married way of life was upheld last Friday at noon in the JCR, as Earl Berger and Ron Biderman, both third year UC, won the coveted pewter beer mugs, prizes in the Robinette debates. They opposed fourth-year finalists, Vel Kahn and Mike Benazon who upheld the motion, "Resolved that martial training is more important than marital training".

Kahn and Benazon cited the martial training of the Spartans, calling military training necessary if one was to maintain and learn discipline. They called upon the example the Spartans set in holding up in the famous Battle of Thermopylae.

Biderman referred to this argument when he said "We were guarding the bedroom door while our opponents were still at the pass of Thermopylae, holding the bag."

"There was no better way", said Berger, "for a man to achieve firm purpose, discipline of the mind and iron will than by training himself to establish dominance over the women".

The winners will receive their pewter mugs, symbolic of supremacy in debating at UC, during the final meeting of the UC Lit, this spring.

Neurotic, Confusing

The Wild Duck

Ibsen's Wild Duck is the story (greatly simplified) of a neurotic man, Gregers Werle, obsessed with a theory of the ideal, who breaks into the Ekdal family, tells Hjalmar the truth about his wife Gina's affair with his father Haakon Werle, under the mistaken hope that the revealed truth will make a happy marriage more perfect. As it turns out a tragic death is the result.

This is a perplexing play, at least in the present production, because there is a mixture of comedy and tragedy which is very strangely fused. Hjalmar Ekdal provides the main comedy; he is a small man with delusions of grandeur which are amusing, and yet he is the direct instrument of the final tragedy. Gregers, the man who dominates the play not only physically but who also seems to embody the atmosphere of the play, is not comic in any sense of the word and only indirectly is concerned with the final death.

Now there is an odd contardiction here in two senses: If Hjalmar is a comic character as he was then he should not be the instrument of death not because this is not possible in life but because it did not seem right on the stage; secondly for comedy or tragedy there must be a point of rest, a point of sanity, but the play veered between the obsessed symbolic mind of Gregers and the weak, escapist mind of Hjalmar.

Never was the action seen from the eyes of a sane character except at the end when Relling makes his speech summing up Ibsen's views on thruth. In other words the author was not objective. This play is like Moliere's Tartuffe only inverted. Whereas in Moliere's play Tartuffe is an object of amusement and the father the serious man, in this play father Hjalmar is the figure of fun and Gregers the serious figure dominating all.

Carrying the parallel further in the Molliere play then family provides the point of view both on the father and on Tartuffe and also is an active element in the denouement of the play. But in Ibsen's play the family, Gina and Helvig, do not provide the point of view nor do they take any action although Gina supports her husband and is a woman of action. In lacking this same point of reference the tragic symbolism in everything as seen through Greger's eyes becomes impossibly significant; just as in a soap opera the most casual words become profoundly charged and lose any significance they might once have had.

Also the comedy is misplaced through lack of a point of view because it is too purely comic in terms of the tragic situation which finally evolves. The actors did a good job individually but there was a lack of connection between them. The play as a whole did not catch fire. For instance Hal Jackman caught the somber passion of Gregers Werle and yet his scenes between his father Haakon Werle (John Lee), a quiet soft spoken characterization, never showed the relationship of hatred convincingly although that hatred was stated openly.

Again Martin Hunter as Hjalmar gave an excellent comic performance; he can play the small man with illusions of grandeur perfectly and yet in the final scene in which he shows the other half of his character by repulsing wife and daughter there was something inadequate. And again Molly Golby caught the sweetness and the naivete of Hedvig especially in the early scenes with her father, but in the later scenes the whole emotional fabric of the play seemed to have been misplaced and she and the other actors seemed somewhat at a loss.

Paul Bacon as Old Ekdal gave a good character portrait of an old man fond of pottering about the attic with his rabbits and hens. Gina Ekdal played by Alene Kamins was quiet, sane, and wifely with a dash of shrewdness. Mrs. Sorby played by Sandra Collis also gave a very warm and convincing portrait. Relling played by Stanley Davids was sharp tongued and acidic as the doctor who finally reveals Ibsen's ideas on people who insist on telling the thruth.

The whole play presents a fascinating problem; it has moments of passion, tenderness, and comedy; it is packed with recurring irony and symbolism but the problem of its presentation, if it can be successfully presented, has not been solved. I recommend it because a production of Ibsen is rare but I also understand now why Ibsen is so rarely produced.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Cinemascope Knights

Robert Taylor, Ava Gardner. Need more be said? Those two names tell the story of Knights of the Round Table, M-G-M's follow-up to the highly successful Ivanhoe. The technicolor, Cinemascope, stereophonic sound-tracked extravaganza, in the throes of a showing at Loew's Theatre, is most pleasant to look upon and not much more.

Robert Taylor is handsome and dashing. Ava Gardner is beautiful and ravishing. Bob's for the girls. Ava's for the boys. Their acting is for the birds.

Don't get me wrong, though. I liked Knights of the Round Table for the most part. But it's like much of today's entertainment: in place of being worth-while, giving you something to think about, it's more like a two hour void.

In the first place, it's a spectacle, more so than any Cinemascope or 3-D picture has been so far. Filmed here and there in England, with castles built and battle scenes carefully reconstructed with coats of mail and gowns meticulously designed, with sweeping shots of the hills and fields, all in brilliant and faithful color, it's a treat to the eyes. So, as has already been pointed out, are Robert Taylor and Ava Gardner, depending upon your sex.

The battles and duels are excellently done. So are the chivalric contests like jousting and so forth. Some of them even have humorous aspects, a pillow fight on horseback (Bob wins, girls) for example and, when the men duel, they cut down half a dozen saplings with every swing of their swords. As a matter of fact, the active parts of this picture are strictly top-notch.

But, when the characters stop to talk, as they must inevitably do, the whole thing slows down to a snail's pace. As a matter of fact, the story starts off with a great deal of promise — but dwindles away ineffectually.

Sir Lancelot (Taylor), a knight loyal and true, helps consolidate the hold of his friend, King Arthur (Mel Ferrer) on the English throne. Then, Lancelot begins to cast covetous glances towards Arthur's wife, Guinevere (guess who?) and is greeted with anything but hostility. This intrigue is exploited by certain schemers and develops into a full-blown scandal which splits the country into another civil war. Guinevere is sent to a convent, Lancelot is banished, Arthur is killed and the fellowship of the Round Table is well shattered. This seems like a rather messy state of affairs to end the picture with but they've used up their time by now and wriggle out of it rather implausibly. One supposes that Lancelot's infant son, Galahad (Lancelot indulged in a more or less political marriage, by the way) will straighten things away, when he grows up, possibly in a sequel.

Robert Taylor and Ava Gardner are excellent decoration but they don't give much reality to their parts. One thing that hampers them is the stilted dialogue, an imitation of the English of the period. Coming from them, it doesn't sound right. Mel Ferrer makes a supreme effort as Arthur but the odds are against him. However, just when you get tired of their histrionics, a war breaks out or swords are crossed and your interest picks up again.

The real star, though, is Lancelot's horse. This white charger brings him his sword during a fight, rescues him from a quicksand pit and generally makes himself indispensable. Since Lancelot missed out on Guinevere and his wife died; the horse may bring him slippers and pipes during his old age.

Tinkle, Tinkle

The Canadian Packers Operatic Society has made an unheard of break with tradition this year. Instead of adding to the deluge of Gilbert and Sullivan operas in Toronto they have chosen to produce an anglicised French comic opera by Robert Planquette, called The Chimes of Normandy.

But the fact is that if I had not had a program I would have been sure that I was attending another G and S.

It seems that someone has written his own Gilbert and Sullivan Opera without the help of Anna Russell's lecture. And if he did not write it so, the producer and singers with years of G and S behind them have become incapable of doing anything else. The chancellor from Iolanthe becomes the Bailie of Corneville, the three little maids from the Mikado become three village maids, the saucy Pitti-Sing from Mikado becomes Serpolette, and so on.

In addition there were the same standard arrangements of personnel; two symmetric lines on either side with a marching chorus of men up and down the middle, and the soloists lined up at the front of the stage. There were the standard block gestures and the familiar voice patterns. And as always the ending is eminently happy for everyone. There is, however, one significant change. The tenor is the villain and the bass is the hero.

In spite of the sameness of it all and the inevitable difficulty that the conductor had with the orchestra it did manage to be pleasant and at times even funny. The market-fair scene in which the villagers danced and threw about the wig of the Bailie was quite gay and refreshing. The same is true of the dance scene in the final act. By contrast the scene in which everyone creeps around the old chateau is weirdly effective with turquoise and yellow lighting.

The costumes, lighting and scenery, one of the best features of the whole production. The architecture of the houses gave the feeling of a Norman village, with the wings quite clearly used like entrances to different streets in the village. The costumes too contributed to the atmosphere with a variety of peasant-style hats and bright skirts.

Arthur Sclater as the Marquis de Corneville is to be commended highly for achieving some real feeling in the love scenes, which are usually infected with a polaroid cold. At last I have seen a credible comic opera hero. Germaine, acted by Barbara Franklin was in the words of the libretto, "a lovely girl with a charming voice". Esther Haines gave to the role of Serpolette all the vivacity it needed and has a pleasing voice, but she has a few annoying habits of diction and voice scooping. The rest were either unbalanced in acting or in voice. Gobo, however, did achieve a moment of pathos in his made moments, although in his sane moments he became a little repetitious.

There was a deal of chiming throughout, but mostly it did not amount to more than a tinkle.

ART REVIEW

THE UNCRITICAL EYE

The collection of European masters now on view at the Toronto Art Gallery is one of the most worthwhile and interesting we have seen in a long time. The paintings come from public and private collections in Toronto, Montreal, and Ottawa and so the whole collection consists of miscellaneous pieces by many artists. This means that it is impossible to gain any idea of the artist's development and some paintings are not the artist's best works and others are definitely not representative of his style.

The very popularity of the show and the foreknowledge that all these paintings are by masters is sufficient to disturb one while examinging the exhibit. The critical eye is necessarily dulled since there is no new work which must be evaluated according to our present-day standards, but accepted classics which have already been acclaimed by people with much more knowledge of these things than we.

The fact that many periods of art history and different artistic personalities and conceptions are represented is interesting. For exaxmple, one moves from the gallery of French paintings containing works of the impressionists Pissarro, Degas, Sisley and Monet and also a Van Gogh and three memoirs, all of which must find identification with some facet of your own experience, to a gallery filled with portraits by English artists which are merely formally presentable.

These last paintings naturally do not admit the subjective interpretation of the French ones, but are documents of an era in English history. One of these, a Hogarth painting of John Herring, a rather corpulent young man with sensuous lips and clear indications of a luxurious life elicited this remark from a bystander, who apparently found him repulsive, "You'd wonder he'd want his portrait painted at all."

Probably the most popular of all the paintings was the El Greco St. Francis in Meditation which seems to appeal to something in the Twentieth Century temperament with its sombre grey tones and, as the catalogue says, "the way the light seems to emanate from the figure." The Monet Waterloo Bridge also seemed to attract a good deal of comment because of the fact that the longer one looks at it, the more nis revealed through the London fog.

Although it is a lop-sided show, having several of one artist and only one unrepresentative painting of another, it is still worth a trip down to Dundas and Beverley to see an original, instead of the eternal reproduction, which is more often a distortion of the color and feeling than a faithful reproduction.

And Bobak

Undergrad Art

Considering the fact that it is strictly an amateur show, the exhibition of art from the Universities of Ontario and Quebec at Hart House until February, contains remarkably little that is awkward or in poor taste. A similarly remarkable number have escaped the weedy landscapes and the other conventional subjects of the ultra-standard Sunday painter. There are only a few "abstracts" which carry with them the conviction that the painter resorted to abstraction rather than found it as the appropriate way to express something they have to say. All in all, I found a pleasing, though not startling variety of approach, a happy certain amount of energy and imagination expressed in mild experimentation.

This work is by college amateurs and both words shout special consideration. What standards should we ask especially from a college show? I think we should expect some technical proficiency, sufficient control over the medium that the artist can concentrate on how rather than what he is going to do. We should also expect, and this is rather different, some attempt to understand the medium, its qualities and limitations. Beyond this perhaps the standards are the same as those for any exhibition, though there is ample evidence that original creative imagination needs as much cultivation as technique.

Toronto has the largest entry in the show; our stalwart men maintain a consistently high standard of competency in oil painting. Bateman especially, with the largest representation is always interesting and in good control of his paint. Close behind his Eskimos in interest come Piotrowski's bold paintings, Finley's gay abstractions, Hallam's workmanship, Biskap's stern competency and the back yards which Lister never seems to tire of. The fact that we have seen most of these examples of their work before in the Hart House show can hardly be a drawback.

Our French friends show a happier variety of approach. Les trois soeurs Perce by Jean Millet is a bright, competent, realistic landscape, a little too photographic for my taste. Pierre Gingras has boldly attempted an "atmospheric" effect which does not quite come through in Sous les bois d'automne, Les antouiles, by G. Loranger, is a remarkably successful "tempora" painting with a freely drawn chair and incredible wall paper. Roland Boulanger has presented us with a skillful free sketch of Sous le cap, Québec, working with a felt nib pen. In Two Heads and Streetcar, Ruth Hecht of McGill has ruthlessly cut up the human form for the sake of an abstratct design and has produced two of the most charming colored doodles.

THE PRINT ROOM

If the hot struggles of the amateurs have exhausted you, visit the highly professional work of Bruno Bobak, hiding in the print room. It's worth dodging the paraphernalia left over from the art calss, inadvertently we hope.

Bobak is the head of the Design Department of the Vancouver School of Art. The post seems an appropriate one judging from this exhibition, for the most striking aspect of these prints is their strong element of design. His fine feeling for form, for the actual shape of objects is more than useful in this medium. The relief print suggests and requires simplicity. The necessary bold use of the chisel and the knife makes this a distinctive, rather personalized medium, for the actual shape of the cut is often an important element in the design. Both these factors make the relief print essentially decorative or illustrative. If the artist realizes this, he can capitalize on what appear to be the limitations of such a form of reproduction. And that is what Bobak has done.

Kelp, a print near the door, helps to explain the medium, for it is most evident here that the design is c tuout of a solid black background. The effects of shade which can be obtained by crosshatching may be seen in the woodcut Jade Plant. In that twinkling decoration Tomato Plant, Bobak displays his sense of humor. Beach Form is a triumph of simple interpretated shape with added impetus from the contrast of black and white areas. Cornstalks indicates something of the compositional complexity of which the relief print is capable.

The work of Bruno Bobak might well be an example to the exhibitors in the big room this week. I do not mean that lino blocks and wood cuts necessarily present any less technical difficulty to the beginner than does oil painting. However, I do feel that it would be a rewarding experience for the amateur to explore within the limitations of a less complex medium in some form of black and white perhaps, and benefit from the strong emphasis that is thus thrown on rudimentary good design.

BLUES IN THIRD PLACE

Blues Take Gaels Grow Road-weary Lose To Redmen

Varsity's Basketball Blues crept quietly back to the shelter of Toronto last night after a mixed up week-end that could cost them the title this year. With a two-game week-end facing them the Blues defeated the Golden Gaels of Queen's Friday night by a score of 59-52, then headed for the colonial centre of Montreal to meet the McGill Redmen who took them 65-57. The Blues came home with their Intercollegiate record for the year reading two victories against one loss.

But that loss could ruin all their hopes of getting in the fight for the championship. Last year the Varsitys dropped an early season game to the Mac Marauders and spent the rest of the year going like crazy in an attempt to make up for it. Now the Blues can afford to loose no more games and can hope that the Redmen repeat their upset performances against the other ranking clubs like Western and favoured Assumption.

Jimy Russell was high man for Varsity against the Queensmen as the Blues came out on top. The diminutive guard hit for a good 22 points as he put on a one-man shooting display against the winless Gaels (in three intercollegiate games the Gaels have won none). Jim Harrison played best for the Tricolor as he netted 12 points. Russell's form was the best in recent weeks, as he has been having trouble passing the 10 point mark in any one game, having to settle for a little as 14 points on occasion. George Stulac threw in 18 for the Blue and White while Leapin' Lou Lukenda added 7 and Steve Oneschuk 5 to complete the Blue tally sheet. Donnelly and Lyon with 10 and 8 respectively were the next best for the Queen'smen.

The Tricolor came back strong in the final half in a hard try for victory but the Varsity power was more than they could wear down, though they managed to fire the Blues enough to make them easy pickings for McGill the next night. With the Blues ahead 32-19 at the half the Gaels surged back to pull within 7 points at the gun.

Road-weary and tired after the Kingston game the previous night the Blues arrived in Montreal to play the war-whooping Redmen, who were supposed to be in desparate straits for basketball players. There was a rumor that calls had been sent out for any tall men who could hold a ball to turn out for the Redmen, but these appear to have been false. The Redmen, though considerably outplayed throughout the game by the visiting Blues from Varsity, scored the exceptional average of 46.6 per cent of their shots and managed to end up 8 points ahead of the striving Varsitys who played some excellent ball but just couldn't find the hoop. One estimate of the Varsity shooting average had it as low as 27.6 per cent, a mark that the Blues have held themselves far above so far this year. It was rather unfortunate that the Blues had to have their poor game in regular league play, when it will count against them. In their exhibition games this year it has been customary for the Varsity club to dazzle their opposition with shooting percentages just such as those that dazzled them Saturday.

McGill came out on top at the bell and tried their hardest to keep in front, which they did. At the half the Redmen rested easily on a 3-point lead as the score stood at 33-30 with McGill in the lead. The Redmen added 5 more to this lead before the end. Varsity now has two weeks till they go back into Intercollegiate play. This will be a weekend jaunt to visit Western and Assumption College.

Against McGill Lukenda topped all Varsity scorers, hooping 18 points, but George Stulac came near behind with 13. Steve Oneschuk hit the double figures for the first time this year with 11 and Jim Russell went for 7. Marv Tile got 5.

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The hockey-type Varsity Blues are a mighty tough team on their home ice at Varsity Arena. They won their second straight Toronto game Friday night by scoring two goals in overtime to turn back the McGill Redmen 4-2 in overtime. That made it two wins in three home starts. Mathematics show that, if their record on the road were as good, they'd be higher in the standings than the third place which Friday's win gave them.

The Redmen must have thought the Boyd gang had returned in Friday's game. It was veteran Harry Boyd, who was captain of the Blues in 1948, who tore down the McGill banner twice, just when it was flying highest. In the second period, he cashed in a penalty shot to bring the Blues back from a one-goal deficit incurred in the opening session. Then, when the game went into overtime, he counted on a breakaway in the first minute to win the game.

The penalty shot, a novelty in hockey these days, was called when Boyd broke loose, only to be hooked from behind by George Petty. Harry came through easily. His tally in overtime was almost as good. Lou Appleby fed him a long pass in the clear and he romped in with only the goalie to beat.

McGill opened the scoring in the first period, Pete Johnson finding himself alone in front of the goal to fire home Gord Currie's pass-out. Boyd got that one back in the first minute of the second period. Robin Logie put the Blues ahead at 5:07 converting a pass by Jim Wilkes from the corner.

That 2-1 Varsity lead lasted until 15:06 of the third period, when Guy Bourgoin stole a loose puck from Varsity's Sam Ashton and broke away for a goal. That made it anybody's game with Boyd claiming it for the Blues. Ross Woods added an insurance tally midway through the overtime period, polishing off a good play with Don Cossar and Red Stephen. Stephen, playing defence, carried it from the Varsity end, passed to Cossar on the McGill blue line and Cossar relayed it to Woods in front of the goal.

The same Woods was Varsity's best forward. He skated vigorously and a couple of times became one of the many victims of McGill goalie Alan Lindsay's larceny. Ernie Bodnar looked a sure scorer on two occasions, but missed the goal both times. Red Stephen worked well and did extra duty on defence after John Tolton left the game with possible broken ribs in the third period.

Big Sam Ashton, along with Lou Appleby, was a defensive standout and goalie Jack Ross was great, saving the Blues twice in overtime.

Besides their netminder, McGill got good results from their rough defenceman, George Petty. Petty got involved in a few battles, one of them a stick-swinging session with Red Stephen, that saw them escape lightly with minor penalties. Guy Bourgoin, Pete Jotkus and Dick Baltzan were tops among the forwards.

Blue Notes—More than 2,000 people, many of them induced by the Blue and White Society's free-skating party which jammed the ice after the game, attended . . . The Redmen obviously missed two injured players who didn't play, Len Shaw and Whitey Schutz . . . Another Friday night game produced an upset as Laval surprised the first-place University of Montreal Carabins 11-6 . . . Loudest and most sustained ovation of the evening went to Norris Bowden and Francis Dafoe, who skated during both between-period intermissions . . . Referees Randy Anderson and Bill Mowatt handled the game well.

Blues Outswim Western, Win Meet 53-31

Varsity Blues made a big splash in the Hart House pool Saturday afternoon as they entertained the swimmers from University of Western Ontario, defeating the visitors 53-31.

Varsity gained six first places in the ten events run off in the pool, and numerous second and third places gave the Varsitys the extra edge they needed for the victory.

Tied for top honors in the meet were Varsity's Bibi Stipitec and Western's Bob Easun, both of whom picked up a pair of first places. Easun so outclassed the field in the 440-yard, that at the end he finished a lap and a half in front of the closest follower. Stipitec took the 100-yard free style and the 150-yard Individual Medley. Stipitec's time in the 100 was 58.6 seconds and his time in the 150 Medley was 1:44.1.

On the basis of their display against the Western Mustangs of the watery corral, Varsity's swimming Blues would seem to be a sure thing to retain their Intercollegiate championship and possession of the Dougall Trophy.

The diving competitions saw Walker of the University of Western Ontario defeat two Toronto runners-up for first place. Walker scored 40.2 while Varsity's MacPherson made 38.6 and fellow Blue Trelford scored 37.1.

Western took the 300-yards Medley Relay in the time of 3:17.8, but Varsity evened matters as they came back to win in the second relay of the day, the 400-yard Free Style Relay, in the time of 4:06.1.

The 200-yard Breast-Stroke was won by Van Tets of Varsity in the time of 2:43.4 with Wally Plavsic of Varsity coming second. Plavsic also placed second in the 50-yard by Bruce Taylor of Varsity, who Free Style. This event was won covered the course in 25.8 seconds.

Pre-Meds Score Cecutti Sparkles

By JOHN WILSON

Messrs. Wheldrake and Kennedy ought to take a look at some of the interfaculty hockey games; there's a wealth of future material lurking in the Arena every day, and as far as netminders go it's pretty hard to find another in the Intramural to equal Pre-Meds' Al Cecutti. He was th boy who turned the tables as the young doctors handed Junior UC their first defeat of the season 3-2 on Friday afternoon.

Cecutti had about twice as many shots to handle as goalie Laurie Ostry of UC in the first period, but he set up an impassable wall in the crease and kept the score at 1-1 coming out of the first stanza.

Good, fast hockey kept play bouncing from one end to the other until Meds finally broke into the scoring column at 18:03 of the first when Grant Farrow picked up a rebound and flipped the puck over a prostrate Ostry to make it 1-0. Moments later at 19:45 Gary Banks evened it up for UC, when Bob Naden's screened shot from the blueline deflected off his stick pas Cecutti.

The greatest worry of any goalie is a screened shot and Al King, who played a tremendous game on defence, gave UC the lead for the first time in just such a way at 3:50 of the second frame with a shot that bounced off a defenceman's arm.

Paul Grose tied it up again at 6:25 out of a maze of players in front of Ostry who was on his knees, golfing a high shot to the upper right hand corner of the net; then Dave Haldenby produced the winner at 14:20 on a pass from Doug Murdock.

The remaining five minutes of the game were all UC, as they strove for the tying goal. With less than a minute left, Ostry left the UC net in favor of an extra attacker, but Cecutti played kitty-bar-the-door quite handily, stopping about ten shots in the space of two minutes.

The Pre-Meds' win was a disastrous one as far as Junior Vic and the Trinity A's are concerned. It puts the Medsmen firmly in possession of third place with six points, which almost assures them of the last playoff berth in Group II with only two games left.

Both Vic and Trinity will have to win all their remaining games while the Doctors lose theirs, a tough order but a necessary one if they are going to make the playoffs.

Women's Basketball

By JO RATCLIFFE

Since the first week after the holidays, there have been several practises for intercol hopefuls on the women's basketball team. Using the OCE gym for their tryout-practise run, about thirty gals turned out to battle for a spot on the all-important squad. There were only five back from last year's winning team leaving two positions open for newcomers. Mickey Barnett who coached the Toronto team to victory last year is again ding the honors.

Besides the first squad there will be, as usual, an intermediate group which competes at most of the same meets. The bronze baby, the championship cup for the top squad in the intercol loop has been resting in Falconer Hall since last February when the U of T ladies swiped it from McGill.

Tuesday night coach Barnett made the first big cut in the ranks of the contenders. The remaining group will be traveling to McMaster this Wednesday night to play

Matmen Split Day

Varsity's senior wrestlers came up with only two wins Saturday afternoon at Hart House and lost the meet 26-11 to the University of Western Ontario team. Earlier, the intermediate Blues shaded the Westerners 25-20.

Only Varsity senior winners were Tom Hatashita, Al Miller and Doug Hamilton. Hatashita was nearly felled by Western's Adams but held on and then racked up a 10-3 decision, in a 137-pound tussle. Miller took an 11-3 win over Wooden. Hamilton, the Skule athletic director, pinned Western's Habrose in a minute and nine sec-

Varsity's football Blues have been invited to play the University of Miami team in Florida this fall. In acknowledging receipt of the offer Friday, Warren Stevens, U. of T. athletic director said that Varsity is definitely giving the matter consideration.

Stevens said that it depended on Varsity's football schedule. If the trip didn't interfere with the schedule, the Blues would be very much interested, he said.

"I wired them that we would try to clear a date and asked them about financial arrangements", Stevens added.

Stevens said that if the McMaster question were reconsidered at McGill's insistence and the league were forced to adopt a five-team league and an eight-games schedule, each team would have two open Saturdays. In that case, Stevens said they might bring in U.S. college teams for exhibition games.

On The Sidelines

By JO RATCLIFFE

There was a time when the U of T sponsored a women's inter-collegiate skiing team that travelled each year to the Laurentians to compete in a meet with McGill. It was one of the most colorful events in women's intercol sport but for the past three years it has been discontinued. This, among other winter activities, was apparently cut due to lack of the proper weather for practices in Ontario.

This year, however, has been one of excellent opportunity for ski practises particularly at Collingwood and Huntsville. It seems a shame that due to a couple of years of poor skiing, an entire intercollegiate event should be discontinued. The men on the campus kept on with their ski competition and the women's interfaculty meet has been going on each year in spite of the cut in intercollegiate competition. This discontinuance was not due to any act by the PHE department and any time the skishes are ready to get back in intercol meets this could be arranged, though it is now too late to count this year.

Toronto and McGill were the only teams who took part in the meets held at Saint Sauveur, that notorious spot north of Montreal. Last year at the interfaculty meet at Collingwood, there were nine contenders for the honors. If we can get this number out to interfac meets on hills as bare as they were last season, there is no reason why we couldn't have an intercol squad of at least two girls trying their luck on the snowy slopes of the Laurentians.

Another thing we might try to push a bit is weekly trips to Collingwood via chartered bus. As it is, there is only the one trip to the slopes, that being the annual Saint Sauveur weekend. Those who travel there annually might put away all their reserves and instead of the one trip, might get two or three weekend trips for the price of one—not so far from home either.

Qu'est-ce que c'est?

Ha Ha. What the hell is this, you'll be saying. Well, as a matter of fact, we were wondering the same thing but, as the Bard once said: "What will it all matter a hundred years from now?"

Settlement House

Troubled Youth

By BOB BROWN

Eddy is an 11-year-old boy who lives in the south end of the district bounded by University and Spadina Avenues, College Street, and the Waterfront.

For as long as Eddy can remember, he has been living with his mother and seven brothers and sisters in a room best described as a small dirty hole. The father deserted the family some time ago, and the mother finds it difficult to keep the family together on her own small wages. Perhaps she has reached the point where her family and home no longer seem so important to her as they once did.

Three years ago, Eddy was a small filthy animal. He roamed the streets night and day, and, due to his unfavourable environment, had acquired a worldly sophistication about such topics as sex and liquor. He had no friends, and was incapable of making any. He was destructive, and was frequently involved in street fights. He had already appeared in court twice. At this time, Eddy was eight years old.

Now, three years later, Eddy would still not be mistaken for a Forest Hill child. But he has learned to work in groups with other children; he does have some friends; and he has not re-appeared in court.

Eddy received the three things that he desperately needed from the University Settlement House — a sort of community center that serves Eddy's neighbourhood. The Settlement provided Eddy with love and consideration, with friends (in a small group or club at the settlement), and with help with Eddy's some situation.

The University Settlement operates a children's summer camp, Camp Boulderwood, at Gravenhurst, Muskoka. (This camp is supported by the Community Chest and the Star Fresh Air Fund.) The first time Eddy went to this camp, he tried to run away the second day he was there. Last year, Eddy cried on the last day of camp because he had to leave.

The University Settlement House, which is connected in a semi-official way with the University of Toronto, is located at 15 and 23 Grange Road (just behind the Art Gallery on Dundas). It was set up some 44 years ago to provide a meeting place where students could come together with residents of the local community. It was inspired by the success of similar undertakings in England and the United States, and was the first settlement house to be established in Toronto. The house provides a greatly needed recreation center for both children and adults of the district. But it is far more than this. It is a community centre—a place for meeting and making friends, for learning worth-while skills, for pleasant and relaxed enjoyment.

But in order to continue its work, the Settlement needs help. Some of the children in this district are poorly dressed, and therefore the Settlement needs gifts of used clothing. The Settlement would also be particularly grateful for any donation of old children's skates.

But what the Settlement House needs above all is people. There is a great need for students volunteers to help staff the House's many functions. Mr. Lon Lawson, Program Director, (EMpire 8-4335) or Miss Kathleen Gorrie, Head Resident, would be very glad to talk to any students who are interested in the Settlement or its work.

Settlement Collection Under Way Today Several Depots Set

The University campaign to collect clothing for the University Settlement begins today, Bill Baldwin, Student Service Commissioner of the SAC announced yesterday. Depots where the clothing may be deposited will be set up in Hart House, the Engineering Stores, Vic Union, Hillel, UC, Emmanuel, School of Law, and St. Mike's.

The campaign will continue throughout the week, and depots will eventually be placed in all faculties and colleges, Baldwin said. Anything will be accepted, he added, but the Settlement especially wants warm sweaters and coats for winter wear.

The clothing collection was organized by the Settlement to help supply needy families in the Dundas-Huron St. area with clothing. A letter to the Students' Administrative Council asking the University to undetake a local campaign read: "We are deeply concerned by the fact that a large number of children and young people coming to the Settlement do not have proper clothing. To meet this need the Settlement is planning to hold a rummage sale, restricted to families in our district, at which clothing of all kinds will be sold to families who are in need, at nominal prices."

Ernest Hemingway and his wife, holidaying in British Uganda, are feared to have died in the wreckage of their Cessna chartered plane. They were touring East Africa, and had left the capital, Nairobi, to visit Murchison Falls. A search was started when the plane failed to return for refuelling. One search plane has sighted wreckage on the banks of the Nile, 3 miles below the Falls. Hemingway's wife was the former Mary Welsh, also a writer. They were married in 1946.

You Can Lead . . .

What's happening to you students?

Friday's issue of The Varsity carried a letter by Earl Berger, chairman of the University of Toronto Debating Union, complaining of th epoor turnouts for the inter-university debate trials. Only two students showed up for the trials.

This is all too symptomatic of a general attitude on this campus. It appears that the days of the bold student who was an active extra-curricularist are gone. Students are burying themselves in their books — or appear to be.

This is, to say the least, a sad state of affairs. We hardly hear of many active clubs now; we know that debates are poorly attended; we are aware that the student discussion group is disappearing from the campus—slowly but surely.

With this in mind we are led to conclude that the student body is dying. Gone is the vitality which marked the DVA days on this campus.

If students do not turn out to debate trials, to club meetings, to bull-sessions, then these activities will have to be dropped. And once these very important extra-curricular activities go they will be gone for a long time.

We feel that going to university is something more than putting your nose in the middle of a text book and forgetting everything else. And those who believe that the extent of university is the library and the lecture room would find life at this institution very dull.

Fortunately there are a few students who are "giving" something to this University: the SAC members, who are involved in an idea called student government; the Varsity staffers who turn out this paper every morning; the Hart House committee members; Torontonensis; various club executives; and others.

And there are those students, like the UTDU chairman, who are spending whatever spare time they have arranging extra-curricular opportunities for other students. But only two students turned out for the debate trials; if Toronto can't get two more, they will have to drop out of the inter-university competitions.

We don't know what is wrong with you students. We only know that "you can lead a horse to the water, but you can't . . . ."

Store For Students

We noticed recently that students at McGill were getting back some of the money they spent on school books. The McGill University Book Store, in its third year of operation, netted $11,000 profit, and that money is to be divided, for the first time, among the students who used the store.

Under a plan of the Students' Executive Committee (equivalent to our SAC) the profits will be divided among the students according to the amounts they have purchased. The more a student buys in the way of books and supplies, the more he is given back.

Why can't our Council set up the same system? Why shouldn't the profits of a student book store be returned to the buyer? This is all the more inviting when it is realized that most of the students could put the small amount returned to them to good use.

CUP Sets Stage

For the True Canadian

This editorial, reprinted from the University of Western Ontario's Gazette, views the recent conference of Canadian University Press (which was held here last month) as a progressive step toward a greater national unity among French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians.

It is not often that Canadians from all ten provinces are able to get together for an informal talk. When they do the result is most interesting and rewarding.

SUCH AN OPPORTUNITY was provided for those students who attended the annual conference of Canadian University Press, at Hart House, in Toronto, during the Christmas holidays. These student editors from twenty-one Canadian universities met, discussed the thing they had most in common — the fact that they were all students and all connected with college journalism; and made many new friends.

Most felt that it was a successful conference — some from the point of view of good parties, some from the view of the amount of work accomplished and common problems solved. But there was a way in which this conference was of far more value than any of the work done or momentary pleasures enjoyed would indicate.

MANY THOUSANDS of words have been written about Canada, and especially about the diversity of our country and the unity that somehow grows out of it. They need not be repeated here. These words were not spoken at the conference, but they were demonstrated forcefully in the actions and spirit of the group attending it.

The individual differences among the delegates were quite noticeable, and lent colour to the proceedings. The delegates from the western provinces, those from Ontario, from Quebec, and from the Maritimes and Newfoundland — all showed in numerous little ways the variations in spirit and temperament that exist among the various regions of Canada. One cannot, after all, expect that the classical tradition of the liberal arts as taught in the universities of Quebec will produce exactly the same pattern of student as the more exuberant, progressive teaching of the universities of the West; nor that a student accustomed to the sprawling campus of the University of Toronto will think in exactly the same terms as one whose home ground is a college of two hundred students in a small Maritime town. But put these students together and you get a most revealing comparing of notes and mingling of differences.

The informal evening gatherings lent some interesting sidelights to this: The delegates from Alberta and Newfoundland comparing the discomforts of a three-day train journey; a coed from The Varsity carrying on a lively discussion with the chief of Laval's delegation, in French; one of the delegates from Western plotting something with the editor of U. of Montreal's Le Quartier Latin, which resulted in a long distance phone call to Montreal. One could go on reciting incidents indefinitely. But there is no need to do so, as they all prove the same point. The real value of the conference could not be measured in terms of work done nor of parties attended, but only in terms of what one might call inter-provincial understanding, or a broadeninhg of the local outlook.

It was significant that the conference made a ruling that henceforth all documents of CUP must be produced in both French and English, and it was also significant that the executive work of the organization will be done this year by Le Quartier Latin — the first French-language paper ever to hold that position. The essentially bi-lingual nature of our country makes it essential that any national organization must be bi-lingual or cease to call itself national. To quote one of the delegates from Quebec: "We have tried to get our ideas across, sometimes with strong words, never with bitter words. There are no such things as English-Canadians or French-Canadians; there are only Canadians, some speaking French, some English."

Many who attended the conference feel that they know a little better now just what a Canadian is, and what he stands for. Therein is the true value of any national gathering.

A Duty (?) To The Christian

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I should like to commend Mr. Vernon of Trinity upon his concern for the remote Baleims and upon his insight in the matter of the Christian's duty concerning them.

But I question the use of the term duty? Should the motive for Missions arise from a sense of duty or is it not a response of the God of Love? If the motive is the call of the God of Love and the mission is the proclamation of the universality of the reconciling grace of God, then by what means can this be accomplished? The answer necessarily involves the introduction of organized institutions such as hospitals, orphanages, churches, schools and colleges.

While I agree that the primary motive of the Christian missionary is not the transplanting of his particular culture, it is necessary to have a means by which to proclaim the Gospel which involves service as well as words. This requires the use of certain aspects of our culture which results in the interaction of the two cultures, not the transplanting of one in the other.

A concrete example? Korea. This is a country which demands consideration on the part of all Canadians whether Christian or not, since we are responsible as members of the United Nations for the war which has so recently devasted her. Some of our cultural institutions have been transplanted there, and slowly but surely the Koreans are making them integral part of their way of life. Should we withdraw these institutions because of the ills of commerce and imperialism which usualy follow missionary work? Or should we continue to support them? Wherein is our responsibility in this matter?

Mary L. Haggart,
III Emmanuel.

Better Christians

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Re Mr. H. H. Vernon's article 21.1.54, on "A duty to the Heathen", suffice it to say that this world will be a better place for mankind when we stop judging ourselves better than anyone else.

With all the respect for Mr. Vernon's honesty of purpose, good intentions but with distorted and ill-conceived ideas, I dare to say that the so-called heathen is a better Christian in practice than this self-righteous missionary. We have enough heathens in downtown Toronto to keep these professional meddlers busy 24 hours a day.

Why not leave the people alone? Why contaminate them with your troubles, hypocrisy, double-talk, miseries and high blood pressures?

Wally Eze,
II Meds.

M. Duplessis Will Soon Go States Wade

Duplessis may seem to be quite a permanent institution, but the new French Canada will eventually want something different, Mason Wade, Grey lecturer for 1954, told the History Club yesterday.

"French Canada will want a different kind of government," he said. "There is a growing skepticism about the nationalist cries of his party."

Wade's lecture dealt with the question of French nationalism. He considered its history and the problem it causes today. He said that French nationalism thrived on opposition to its culture and threats to its extension.

The Massey report has found general support in French Canada Wade stated. He said that the opposition to federal grants for universities was purely political, but that the recommendations of the Massey Report were generally popular. The reason for this popularity, he said, was that the Report noted the bi-lingual culture of Canada and recommended that both be furthered by federal aid.

Wade declared that the majority of French-Canadians did not object to the penalties imposed on the Jehovah Witnesses. "They have attacked something very dear to French-Canadians," he said, "and they are considered outsiders. The people are emotional rather than rational in their approach to the question."

Lower Wage For US Men In Teaching

West Lafayette, Indiana — (Exchange)—College and University professors receive lower salaries than professional men in other work. The National Education Association of the United States has shown this after a survey of 417 colleges and universities, including state, land-grant and provate institutions.

State universities professors have a medium salary of $5,525 while physicians average $10,285; dentists $6,501; and lawyers $6,986.

The survey showed that head coaches are paid more than many administrative officials, with median salaries ranging from $4,000 to $9,540.

We're A Comin'

The news staff of the Varsity will attempt to regain the Jerry P. Potts trophy tomorrow. The team, dressed in a somewhat unusual attire has been training for the last few days running around in ellipses, resembling the shape of tomorrow's track. The last time a Varsity team won the trophy, it consisted of feminine athletes.

Benny Forecasts Varsity Will Win Big Chariot Race

The front campus will become a race track tomorrow at noon, when half-a-dozen Engineering teams and a team of newswriters of The Varsity will battle it out for the new Jerry P. Potts trophy, which has been especially disconnected to be awarded at tomorrow's Chariot race.

The Chariot race will be held at 1:10 p.m. with the starting and finishing lines in front of Convocation Hall.

A new set of rules has been announced by the Engineering Society. All teams will have to secure their own chariots, which will have to have wheels, where it will not necessarily have to be an integer. They will have to be powered by human muscular power.

Associate Editor of The Varsity, Orie Loucks, said last night that The Varsity's was the strongest team. He felt confident that the glory of his predecessors would be regained at tomorrow's race.

The Varsity has gained the Jerry P. Potts trophy many times by various means in the past, and has won most of the Chariot races, although the Engineers have denied this consistently.

The last time The Varsity staff has won a Chariot race was when the majority of the editors were females.

Entries for Chariot races were accepted in the past from faculties and colleges. In the past years, however, no entries were received from outsiders, other than an entry from the Medical Faculty.

Charges have been laid against some of the teams which instead of running around the campus, cut through it.

Some of the competing teams have been blocked in the course of the race by what contemporary competitors called honest Engineering methods. This at times entailed exerting forces on the chariots after they started moving, in a direction opposing the forces causing the motion.

The Skule Cannon, which has been used in previous races as a stimulant is expected to be out again tomorrow, said Don Fredenburgh, the President of the Engineering Society.

He said last night that entries were restricted to engineers because of the consistent lack of quality from outside competitors. He predicted that the race would be perfectly clear and just.

One-eyed Benny, campus bookie at present on vacation at Tropical Park, Florida, wired the following message to The Varsity yesterday: "I know how this will upset my engineering friends, but I can't see how The Varsity entry can lose, especially if there's a dry track. These folks aren't such good mudders, but I imagine they could win this race even with heavy going. You can quote me as saying it will be a breeze".

Debaters Ejected From JCR Decide In China's Favor

Over cries of "violation of free speech," "no sense of decency," and "Boor!" the UC-Meds debaters were ejected from the Junior Common Room of University College last night. Innocent confusion resulted in the UC caretaker having no knowledge of the debate, and the speakers with their audience were forced to adjourn to a nearby room in the Cloisters.

The forced move, which drew a stormy protest from the JCR crowd, caused only a slight delay in the discussion, as the three judges decided that Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations.

Harriet Thomson, first speaker for the affirmative, pointed out that the UN was established for one purpose - to establish peace. The League of Nations failed to do this because of its lack of power, and the voluntary membership system that allowed members to enter and leave at will. The UN is making the same mistakes. It is ignoring 400 million Chinese, when to succeed it must embrace all peoples.

The UN charter states that all members must be sovereign and peace-loving. It is hypocritical to recognize a small corrupt island as the representative of China.

Howard Rubinoff opposed this, saying that the present regime does not represent the Chinese people, but only an aggressive military clique. If we allowed this group into the UN it would upset the balance of power, there, raise China's prestige and destroy the confidence of the Philippines and Indo-China in American foreign policy.

"Asia is no longer a Western instrument", stated Pat Riley. She added that Red China had changed the world balance of power, and if the UN was to be representative it must reflect this. It has taken mankind ages to evolve from the tribe to the city-state to the nation. We must continue this progress or face annihilation. The UN must represent all peoples, she stated.

Miss Riley said that, unlike Russia where the Communist party had first seized power in the cities, the Chinese communist movement had risen in the rural districts and so had a much wider popular base.

Since Russia is officially listed as a peace-loving nation, continued Miss Riley, one can hardly disbar China on this count; and as for being an illegal government, Naguib's revolutionary Egyptian regime was immediately recognised. China is a world power, and we cannot afford to ignore her.

The last opposition speaker Jerry Rosen, stated that people and countries are judged on their reputation; China as been judged by Korea and Tibet. Her control of all medium of expression is contrary to the Declaration Of Human Rights e already trade with China, and so have much to lose and nothing to gain by admitting her to the UN.

In her rebuttal, Harriet Thomson said that if Rhode Island deserted the confederation, we would recognise continental United States and not Rhode Island, as the legal American government.

Can Investigate Eskimos Before Extinct – Mowat

"There is room for a top anthropological study on the interior Eskimo of the Keewatin, if it is done within the next few years before the race disappears" said author Farley Mowat at a meeting of the Anthropology Club last night in Falconer Hall.

Mowat is the author of the book describing these people of the Keewatin area of the Barren Lands. The book is entitled, "The People of the Deer", and is based on his experience of 1947-49, during which time he spent nearly a year and a half in the area.

Since he last saw this race of people, Mowat has kept in touch with them through friends in the Canadian Army stationed near them. Of what was a group of 47 Eskimos in 1949 is now a handful of 27, since three more of them starved last spring he said.

Opening his address, Mowat emphasized that he was not an Anthropologist, and asked the group not to judge him as one. "I have always been subjective," he said, "and have been too realistic to be an anthropologist."

After his experience in the arctic, Mowat told of his investigations into previous work done on this race. "All I found," he said, "was just what I could write on four cards. References were made to the people by explorer Hearne," he said, "but not mention was made of them, after that until the middle 19th century."

"In 1893," Mowat told, "J. B. Tyrrel, made a traverse of that country, over a period of two years, and located a population of what he considered 600 inferior eskimos in an area little over 200 miles long. These people," he said "were in an area where there had been no natives supposed to exist."

Six trading posts were established among the people about 1926—the first established—for the purpose of trapping the white fox But at that time, supposedly as a result of influenza attacks in 1918, there were only 300 left, he said.

"In spite of this, the federal government, in its 1931 census, refused to acknowledge that any people existed in the region," he said. "When the trading posts withdrew in 1931, and the people were left dependent on them, they suffered again, and after the last H B Co. post withdrew in 1937. they were not heard from till 1947."

Canadian Students To Be Exchanged With Free Tuition

The National Federation of Canadian University Students is offering a sure-fire way of beating rising tuition costs these days. For the twentieth year, a NFCUS plan makes it possible for Canadians to study at other universities free of tuition during the 1954-55 session.

Some 25 Canadian students participate in this plan each year, although the universities place no restriction on the number of exchange students they will accept and the plan applies to all faculties except medicine and dentistry. Exchange students must take advantage of the plan in their next-to-final year, returning to their home school for the final and graduating year.

For the purposes of the NFCUS exchange system, Canada is divided into four areas. The Maritimes are one. Ontario and Quebec form another, a third comprises Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and the University of British Columbia is in a separate zone. A student must apply for attendance at a university in a geographical division other than his own.

The university administrations waive the fees of the exchange students and, in most cases, the savings here more than balance transportation costs.

In addition, the student organizations on the various campi usually waive their fees in the case of exchange students. Further, the NFCUS committees on each campus are asked to help these students with various arrangements pertaining to their attendance at a strange college.

After the applications close on Feb. 15, a local NFCUS selection committee takes over to choose the exchange students.

Round-Up Of Clothing Is Still On

The University's campaign to collect clothing for the University will continue for the rest of this week, Bill Baldwin, Student Service Commissioner of the SAC, and the clothes have been set up in Hart House, the Engineering Stores, Vic Union, Hillel, UC, Emanuel, School of Law, and St. Mike's.

The Settlement especially wants warm clothing for the winter, such as sweaters or coats. Because it is located in a poor district, the Settlement has become "deeply concerned by the fact that a large number of children and young people coming to the Settlement do not have proper clothing", Baldwin said

The Settlement is related with the University in a semi official way.

SPIVAK AT WYMILWOOD

Nothing could be more pleasant, to me at least, on a Sunday evening than a sonata recital, and last Sunday evening at Wymilwood Eli Spivak and George Brough gave us just that. Mr. Spivak, one of Canada's most distinguished musicians, opened the program in his usual soft spoken way by explaining what this type of music meant to say and added that they hoped to be successful in conveying this message. And convey it they most certainly did.

So often one feels that music is just bows and strings and resin and fruitless toil. And all too often this is exactly what it is. The two artists spared us the usual tour de force, playing with extreme sensitivity throughout. Careful shading and phrasing, beautifully blended in sonorous textures gave the feeling of delicacy and warm intimacy.

The Sonata in G Major by Cesar Franck was excellently played. The rhapsodic melodies melted in delicate harmonies to create true romantic sensation of great splashes of color and sensual emotional outpouring, all of which was treated with the utmost sympathy and clarity. A truly great performance.

The next concert, on Feb. 2 will feature Boris Roubakine.

BC Students Must Create Own Bylaws

Vancouver 15 January (CUP) — If the student government of the University of British Columbia does not come up with an effective disciplinary code, the Faculty Council of the University may take the matter of student government into its own hands.

There are two concrete and one alleged offence against the existing by-laws already on the books. While the offences are being committed, the student government is trying to formulate a criminal code to punish the offenders.

A suggestion was made that the Undergraduate Societies Committee mound and operate a student court. However the organization turned down the suggestion. The campus newspaper has verbally flailed the Societies Committee, charging that it "fears responsibility."

The crimes before tht Committee at the present are breaking windows in Brock Hall, making a copy of the Brock Hall master key and being drunk at the university dance.

BERNARD TURGEON

The Art Gallery people have always come up with fine material for their Sunday afternoon recitals and last Sunday was no exception. The artist, Bernard Turgeon, who is twenty-two years old, is fast becoming one of Toronto's favorite baritones, and rightly so. He possesses a warm, rich tone and pleasant personality, but most important of all, the true spirit of musicianship.

Mr. Turgeon opened with four Italian songs of the Scarlatti period. He succeeded in interpreting the long flowing phrases very well, lending grace and spirit in turn to subtle moods and deep pathos to sad ones. Four French songs followed, the last two of which were exceptionally well done. Aux Pays and Danse Macabre were sung with sustained support and vigor throughout.

The Aria of Prince Igor from the opera of the same name was the best effort of the afternoon. It was possible to get a real look at the artist. Some of the high notes were slightly forced but otherwise the performance was impeccable.

A capacity audience heard the concert and liked it. Praise of that nature speaks far more loudly than this lowly critic ever could.

Universities Get Share Of New Tax

Montreal, 18 Jan. — (CUP) — "Possibly several million" of the expected $25,000,000 new revenue to be provided by a Provincial income tax will go to Quebec's Universities, a government source informed the Montreal Star recently.

The proposed aid, to which the Quebec Government is committed in both its Throne Speech and in a statement by Premier Maurice Duplessis, is expected to compensate to some extent for the loss of federal subsidies.

Since the loss of the Federal grants last spring, all Quebec Universities have suffered financially. McGill lost about $400,000 last year, and was forced to raise student fees for this session. The University of Laval recently announced the loss of $700,000 for the same period.

Two-Year Loss

The Federal grants, which amounted to $7,000,000 for the whole of Canada, and $2,000,000 for Quebec, were accepted by the Provincial government for the first year only. For the past two years, Quebec universities have not been permitted to receive these grants. Whether or not any attempt will be made on the part of the Provincial Government to compensate the universities for their losses over this period is not yet known.

Women's Competition
Hockey, Volleyball and Basketball

The attention of all managers and players in the women's team sports mentioned above is called to the long standing regulation of the Women's Athletic Directorate which prohibits any player from competing in two different team sports at the same time. Once a player has "made the team" in one sport she is automatically barred from competition in any of the other sports. (The only exception to this is softball where it overlaps the basketball season.)

Competition in the individual sports is not included in this ruling except at the discretion of an intercollegiate coach.

Weak Shots Spell Scoreless Contest

What started out being a battle of caution ended up becoming a scoreless, fighting, slugfest as Vic and Saint Mike's ladies ripped into a 0-0 finish.

It took a while to get things going but around the end of the second period, the gals threw caution to the winds and really went to it. In spite of the even score, the teams were not as closely matched as might be expected. If Vic had put a little more drive behind their shots, they could have been up six or seven points over their opponents. St. Mike's took the offensive in the early part of the meet but the first period and part of the second passed before there were any shots on goal. Vic's Mary Sue Heaslip took the first whack at the St. Mike's goalie, Eileen Dillon, and most of the play for the rest of the game centered around the St. Mike's net.

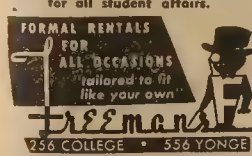
Marg. Bauer of Saint Mike's took the first shot at the Vic goal tender, Alicia File but this was deflected just as the bell went to end the second period.

The coaches of both teams must have done some very fast talking during the intermission. It was an entirely different game after that. Sparked by the brilliant defensive work of Pat Cowman, the Vicsters managed to keep the puck down in St. Mike's territory. Barb Markle, fast defence-gal saved the day for her team though the Vic shots, and there were many, all fell short of the net. A bit more shooting strength could do a lot for the Vic team while the St. Mike's goals would profit a great deal by a more offensive attack.

Council Raps Extra Activity

Montreal, Jan. 29 — (CUP) — Failures due to participation in extra-curricular activities is bothering the Students' Executive Council at McGill University.

Two sub-committees recommended to the council, that students should be required to have an average mark of at least 65 per cent before taking any time consuming extra-curricular post.



They also recommended, that there be fewer supplemental examinations permitted, and that a refresher course be given to members of the lecturing staff. They suggested that students be encouraged to give more thought to their reasons for coming to University before entering.

Both committees agreed, that poor training in the high schools is an important factor in university failure.

One of the two committees recommended that the Faculties of Engineering, Medicine, Dentistry, Commerce and other Trade Schools be separated from the rest of the University. This committee felt that failures were primarily due to a lack of definite objective in the students going to college.

The other committee felt that the failures were due to a lack of challenge in courses, the departure of the University from the fundamental idea of a University, and the indoctrination of conformity by the family, church and society.

Tennis Anyone?

Sporty Figures

In any of the major sports on the campus today, you'll find the names of the Walker sisters in a prominent position. Di and Daphne Walker begain playing top-notch sports in their early high school years, and since that time have made quite a name for themselves in both Ontario and Canadian competition.

Dianna, a third-year Art and Archeology student, has for the past two years helped bring home the bacon for the victorious Intercollegiate Badminton team. Although she excels in the "bird game", Di's tennis is a sight to behold. She played three successful seasons with the intercol tennis troop. And to broaden the picture, she is also a well-known and formidable guard on UC's basketball squad. Skiing is just another sport that seems to be a natural for Di. As yet, she hasn't skiid for a Varsity team but perhaps she'll give it a try next year when we hope to be in competition again.

Daphne Walker is the other half of this sister act. Last year as a rookie guard on the Varsity Intercol Basketball squad, Daph was one of the winning factors that brought the Bronze Baby back to Toronto. In badminton—her big game—she entered the Toronto and District tournament to reach the semis in the singles and, along with Ann Grey, the doubles' finals. At the Strathgowan Invitation last year, she got as far as the quarter-finals against the stiffest competition you'll find anywhere in North America today. In addition to all this, Daph has had two seasons with Varsity's Badminton squad.

Di and Daph feature strongly in tennis and badminton tourneys at the Badminton and Racquet club. Other activities they share—golf, UC hockey teams, and of course, basketball. Oh yes, and when they've had lectures in Art and Archeology and Psychology, they use up the rest of their spare time with art and photography. Pretty soft, eh.

First Signs Of Spring

Keep Out

Once again the Jerry P. Potts Trophy is coming down off the shelf. But this year the present holders are keeping it mighty quiet.

There was a time when the Skule Chariot Race offered a chance for any college or faculty to get something with wheels and roar around the front campus. Today at noon students will be allowed to watch six entries from Engineering and the probably unwelcome Varsity news staff.

Past races may have been a far cry from the bronze chariots in which the Assyrians descended upon the Hebrews or the sport of the Greeks and Romans, but at least people had the fun of dressing up a street cleaner's cart and taking a whack at the trophy.

We hope that next year, Skule will see fit to open its heart and race to the rest of the campus.

Heaven Help Us

Misrepresentation is one of the worst crimes a journalist can fall into. It is the easiest to commit, and the hardest to fight. Much of it in a newspaper is accidental and unintentional. But authors have a duty to their reading public to know their facts perfectly and relate them accurately.

Anthropology is a wonderful field for amateurs to meddle in and write best sellers on. It is no fault of the reading public that they believe what they are reading. No matter how many times the man denies he is an anthropologist he is still accepted as an authority and the harm done knows no bounds.

Authors must, fundamentally, line their pockets, no matter how often they repeat their other excuses, and misrepresentation of interesting science to the buying, sucker, public makes the most money, and the harm doesn't matter.

We have laws to protect the public from the bucket shops on Bay St., but heaven help the man who likes to believe a good book.

January 26th

Indian Independence

It was the early morning of 26th January, 1930, when a young Indian revolutionary declared from the banks of the river Ravi, a tributory of the River Indus, ". . . We believe that it is the inalienable right of the Indian people as of any other people, to have freedom and to enjoy the fruits of their toil and have the necessities of life so that they may have full opportunities of growth. We believe also that if any Government deprives the people of these rights and oppresses them, the people have a further right to alter it or to abolish it . . . The British Government in India has not only deprived the Indian people of their freedom but also based itself on the exploitation of the masses, and has ruined India Economically, Politically, Culturally, and Spiritually. We believe therefore that India . . . attain 'Purna Swaraj' or complete independence . . . We hold it to be a crime against man and God to submit any longer to rule that has caused this fourfold disaster to our country . . ." This clarion call was echoed by millions of voices who pledged to carry on civil disobedience including non-payment of taxes, without committing any violence against anyone, including the British people even under provocation.

Why was this unique declaration made? . . .

More than four thousand years ago, the Aryans, who came from Central Asia, developed a philosophy or way of life. As the term India derived from the River Indus, the people of India in those days were called H-Indus, so the then Aryan philosophy was termed Hinduism. In a sense, Hinduism is not a religion like Christianity, Islam or Marxism, as it does not owe its origin either to one Son of God or One Prophet or one Book.

THE FOLLOWERS OF HINDUISM respect the teachings of all other religions, and do not seek converts, which they think of no use for the Triumph of Thurth. A cardinal principle of Hindu philosophy is the faith and belief that all human beings have the birth-right to determine for themselves their individual way of life without disturbing their neighbour's peace.

Lord Buddha, in the 6th century B.C. stressed certain aspects of Hindu philosophy. He particularly preached the gospel of Truth and Tolerance. Buddhism emphasized the sanctity of life in all forms.

Similarly, the doctrine of Peace and Non-violence was stressed by Mahavira — the founder of Jainism.

Sikh religion, another off-shoot of Hindu philosophy, and founded by Buru Nanak preached the futility of rituals, and enjoins humility and sincerity.

Islam came to India in the eight century and flourished rapidly during Pathan and Moghul rule. There are 43 millions of Moslems in the Republic of India.

THOUGH THE FIRST CHRISTIANS came to India in the first century A.D. they did not make much progress until the establishment of a direct sea route from Europe in the 17th century. To-day about 2% of Indians are Christians.

Other religions which still flourish in India are Zoroastrianism (the religion of the Parsis) which came from Iran, and Judaism from Palestine or rather Israel.

Though the above ways of life existed in India long, long ago, it was not till 17th century that her spiritual liberation and cultural renaissance started.

THE OCTOPUS OF COMPETITIVE colonialism saw India prostrate in the battle fields of Plassey and Panipat. We remember our defeats and tragic consequences. But we forget that our village saint Ramaprasad of north India and musician Tyagaraja of south India, lived and worked for our spiritual emancipation even in those gloomiest of days.

A century before the battle of Plassey, Dara Shikoh, the philosopher Moslem prince, unfolded the eternal treasures of Hinduism and Islam by translating Hindu Sanskrit scriptures into Persian language.

TOWARDS THE END of 18th century, Rammohan Roy of Bengal attempted to synthesise Hinduism and Islam into Unitarianism. Rammohan can be considered as the first seer of modern Asia if not the modern world, who made pioneer attempts to reconcile the dogmatic contradictions of Hinduism, Islam and Christianity and to lay down the foundations of a Church Universal. We find him also championing the freedom of press and the causes of Turkey and Ireland as well as of the Independence of Latin America against Spanish tyranny (Edinburgh Magazine, Sept., 1823) Jeremy Bentham greeted Rammohan as the "intensely admired, dearly beloved collaborator in the service of mankind". Anyone can find in his works an extra-ordinary familiarity with and fusion of Hindu unitarianism, Persian mysticism, Arab monotheism, Christian ethics, Chinese philosophy and the progressive Scientific thought.

In the second quarter of 19th century, the writings of Bankim Chandra Chatterjee, the first creative prose-writer of India, the immortal author of "Vande Mataram", inspired the people of India in Nationalism and Self-rule.

IN THE THIRD QUARTER of 19th century Noble Laureate, poet-painter-philosopher Rabindranath Tagore appeared in the cultural horizon and continued to shed the lustre of his creative genious over the entire literary and artistic life of India and the world. He was in fact an institution vindicating the claims of Nationalism as well as Internationalism. He refused the patronising aid of the then British Government, which came in the shape of a Knighthood, and grasped the hand of Mahatma Gandhi, who greeted him as "Gurudev" —Master. The immortal music and songs of Tagore conveyed adequately to the neglected millions of our rural population and brought a new spiritual awakening and a wider cultural revival. With Rabindranath and Mahatmaji illuminating the path, our present leaders were confident that freedom was bound to come again to our people, and, in fact, to all the enslaved and oppressed nations of the world.

With such cultural trend behind and guidance and friendship from these two great men, that, millions of voice echoed with the slogan of "Purna Swaraj" — Full Freedom; Politically, Economically, Culturally and Spiritually, on 26th January 1930.

SINCE THEN, EVERY YEAR, the Indians observed 26th January as the "Independence Day", when they prayed to God and took oath that their struggle for full freedom would continue peacefully until achieved. At last, the same young Indian, who moved the 'Resolution' on 26th January 1930, declared Free India as a Sovereign Democratic Republic on 26th January, 1950, from the Prime Minister's seat.

Though, we, the Indians, have achieved freedom but we still have to observe this Day more than before, not only as a day of remenbrance but also to reaffirm our pledge for establishing "full freedom" for all mankind. Mahatma Gandhi taught us to consider "full freedom" ont only as a privilege for the few but as the birth-right of all including the "lowliest and the lost" as sung by Tagore in his "Gitanjali".

THE INDIANS NOT ONLY have to struggle hard at home but also in foreign affairs. For, the scattered class-discriminations, social injustices and illiteracy that existed, cherished and nourished under the shadow of the then British Imperialism, probably for her security in that part of Asia, have to be removed with great difficulties. The people of India very well know that their weapons for this struggle are Gandhism — the latest product of all philosophies of India, and modern Science, that developed in Russia, Europe, England and North America.

So far as way of life is concerned, the people of India have little to choose between the philosophies of some of the "Peoples' Democratic" countries or a few "Christian Democratic" nations; — which are often blessed by great leaders of various parts of the world, including Stalin and Pope Pius.

It is unwise to say, as many people think, that India is disturbed by the progress of Marxism and Christianity. But she is really afraid of continuation of totalitarianism, imperialism and colonialism in the disguise of Marxism and Christianity. She also feels sad when she finds that some of the western democratic countries and Russia get little bit disturbed when India speaks on the basis of human rights in favour of self-rule for the people of Africa, Indo-China and Korea . . . .

. . . . ON THIS 26th JANUARY, the people of India will pledge again to stand by the shoulders of any nation from any part of the world who will fight for establishing human rights — "full freedom" for all mankind. Though it is true that sometime, some nations apply 'diplomacy' only to avoid taking any positive actions for establishing human rights in Morocco, Tunisia, S. Africa, etc., but, on this day the Canadian students can take it for granted that the Indian students will always stand beside them whenever and wherever there will be a genuine call for establishing "full freedom" for all mankind by peaceful means.

Who Should Decide ?

Editor,
The Varsity.

In recent weeks we have heard of two cases where parents, because of religious conviction, have refused to allow doctors to give their children blood transfusions which the doctors have deemed essential. One child has died, the other is still ill. This situation poses some very interesting moral and legal problems for our society. How far does parental control over children extend? To what extent can the state intervene to enforce its will against parental will? To what extent can we allow experts (like doctors) to dictate what we shall and shall not do?

My own opinion in this particular case is that the parents had no right to obstruct medical science in its attempt to save life. They had no right to impose their own religious convictions on a child, incapable of making up its own mind. I would favor a law allowing the medical profession to act as they see fit in spite of parental objection if three doctors concur that such action is essential to the child's well-being.

I am anxious to hear other opinions on this subject.

Skule Denies SAC Bid To Implement Report

The Engineering Society was the first student organization to vote against the Students' Administrative Council's resolution concerning the Massey report. Four other organizations have met and virtually unanimously supported the resolution.

The SAC had requested that all student organizations in all faculties and colleges publicly place themselves on record in support of immediate establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries. In other words, students are asked to publicly support the implementation of the scholarship clauses of the Massey report.

The Engineers defeated the motion adopted by the SAC and put forward by NFCUS. However they passed a motion to reconsider the resolution at a later date when more information concerning the clauses of the Massey Report should be available.

"Possibly it could be used against us. The scholarships may be intended for Arts only," said Doug Christie, IV SPS. He suggested that the motion be revised to included scholarships for professional faculties.

"While scholarships are a worth while cause," said Bill Deekes, III SPS, "the government may consider projects such as the Health scheme more important." Don Lowe, IV SPS, pointed out that people are asking "Are University students privileged people?" He said that they may claim the Massey Report does make us privileged people.

The first student reply to the SAC appeal came last Wednesday. The Medical Assembly of the Medical Society voted to pass the proposed resolution.

"There was some discussion of the motion when it was presented," said Marg Norman of the Medical Society, "but it was passed unanimously."

Emmanuel and Wycliffe colleges have both passed the resolution. The students of Emmanuel met last Friday and Wycliffe met yesterday night. The vote was virtually unanimous.

At the meeting of University College's Literary and Athletic Society yesterday afternoon, the motion was presented in the President's Report. The motion was that the Lit support the implementation of the scholarship provisions of the Massey Report. "The motion was passed unanimously and without discussion," said Roger Bull, President of the Lit.

Ghost-Staffers' Special

The Varsity Pottless

One-eyed Benny, the campus booky, who predicted that The Varsity would win the Chariot race, was right again.

The ghost-newswriters of The Varsity won the Chariot race yesterday noon. The team, which was almostly entirely ignored by onlookers raced around the front campus, cutting the time of the second team almost in half.

Ceramics Engineering was announced as the winner of the race which was restricted to Engineering teams only. But such course does not exist. All the other teams were disqualified by loud manifestations of majority opinion.

The Jerry P. Potts trophy was not awarded to any of the teams yesterday. An Engineering Society official, who refused to be quoted, said that the award could not be made, because the trophy has not been disconnected yet—it is still functioning in the Lady's room.

The ghost-newswriters team which was an underdog in campus gambling circles until the bang of the Skule cannon set the race rolling, was the last to start because of some assignment difficulties.

The ghost-newswriters overtook the first engineering team, ahead of them in front of the main library, without difficulty. They overtook two teams in front of University College, although they were held back by some fellow-travellers who hung onto the rear of their chariot.

For the remaining fifty yards, however, the fight got tough. Innumerable spectators were blocking the way, refusing to give way.

Finally the team found two openings in the crowd, with the result that half the team went through one, half through the other. They spent some time searching for each other in vain.

Although they had to drag the inclosed spectators with them in addition to the weight of the chariot, they succeeded in mastering the wet road.

Immediately as they broke the finish line, the ghost-newswriters were cheered by engineers, who did not realize that the team was not one of their own.

Mental Aid In Summer SCM Need

Each summer the Student Christian movement of Canada recruits students in Canadian Universities to work as regular employees of mental hospitals.

The students are sent to two mental hospitals: the Saskatchewan Hospital, Weyburn, Saskatchewan, and the Ontario Hospital, 999 Queen St. West, Toronto.

The students are considered as regular employees by the hospital officials. Besides their work, the students organize groups in study, worship and recreation.

Students will have to pay for their own accommodation, but a co-operative venture is used to reduce expenses.

Application forms are available at the SCM office at 143 Bloor St. West.

McFarlane Honored Wins Copp Trophy

Bill McFarlane, "Iron Man" of the Varsity Blues Football team, was last night declared winner for 1953 of the Johnny Copp Memorial Trophy.

The Trophy awarded to "the member of the Senior Football team, who in that season, by his sportsmanship, character and playing ability, is judged the most valuable member of his team by his teammates", is fit recognition of the McFarlane's service in the Blue and White of Varsity. A two-way player, McFarlane seldom saw the bench, spending most of every game smearing opposition ball-carriers and leading the Varsity offensive.

His Iron Man title was the result of his persistent immunity to all injury while every team in the Intercollegiate Union was wailing the "bruises blues". Seemingly indestructible, McFarlane was rated the top defensive back in the league — and his ground-gaining made him an All-Star selection in the CUP poll. These abilities brought him to the attention of the pro clubs and when the Big Four Draft was held his name was the first picked by Argos. The Sculers, though will be lucky to keep him. The McFarlane fame has spread and rumour has it that certain clubs in Canada's West are digging up lucrative jobs to lure him away and into their corrals.

The prospect of a job is likely very attractive to McFarlane who graduates this spring in Engineering. The man accomplished the feat of playing football four years straight, still managing to pass in his course. This season, McFarlane's last in Varsity Blues, was his third as a Senior and his greatest. The tribute paid him by his teammates is an added flourish to the accolades of press and fans who watched Bill McFarlane play good ball.

BILL McFARLANE

Engineers Protesting Mac Boot

The Engineering Society Executive yesterday voted to send a strong protest to the Athletic Directorate of the University for ousting McMaster from the intercollegiate football league. They felt that the conditions now are no different from last year's, when McMaster was invited into the league.

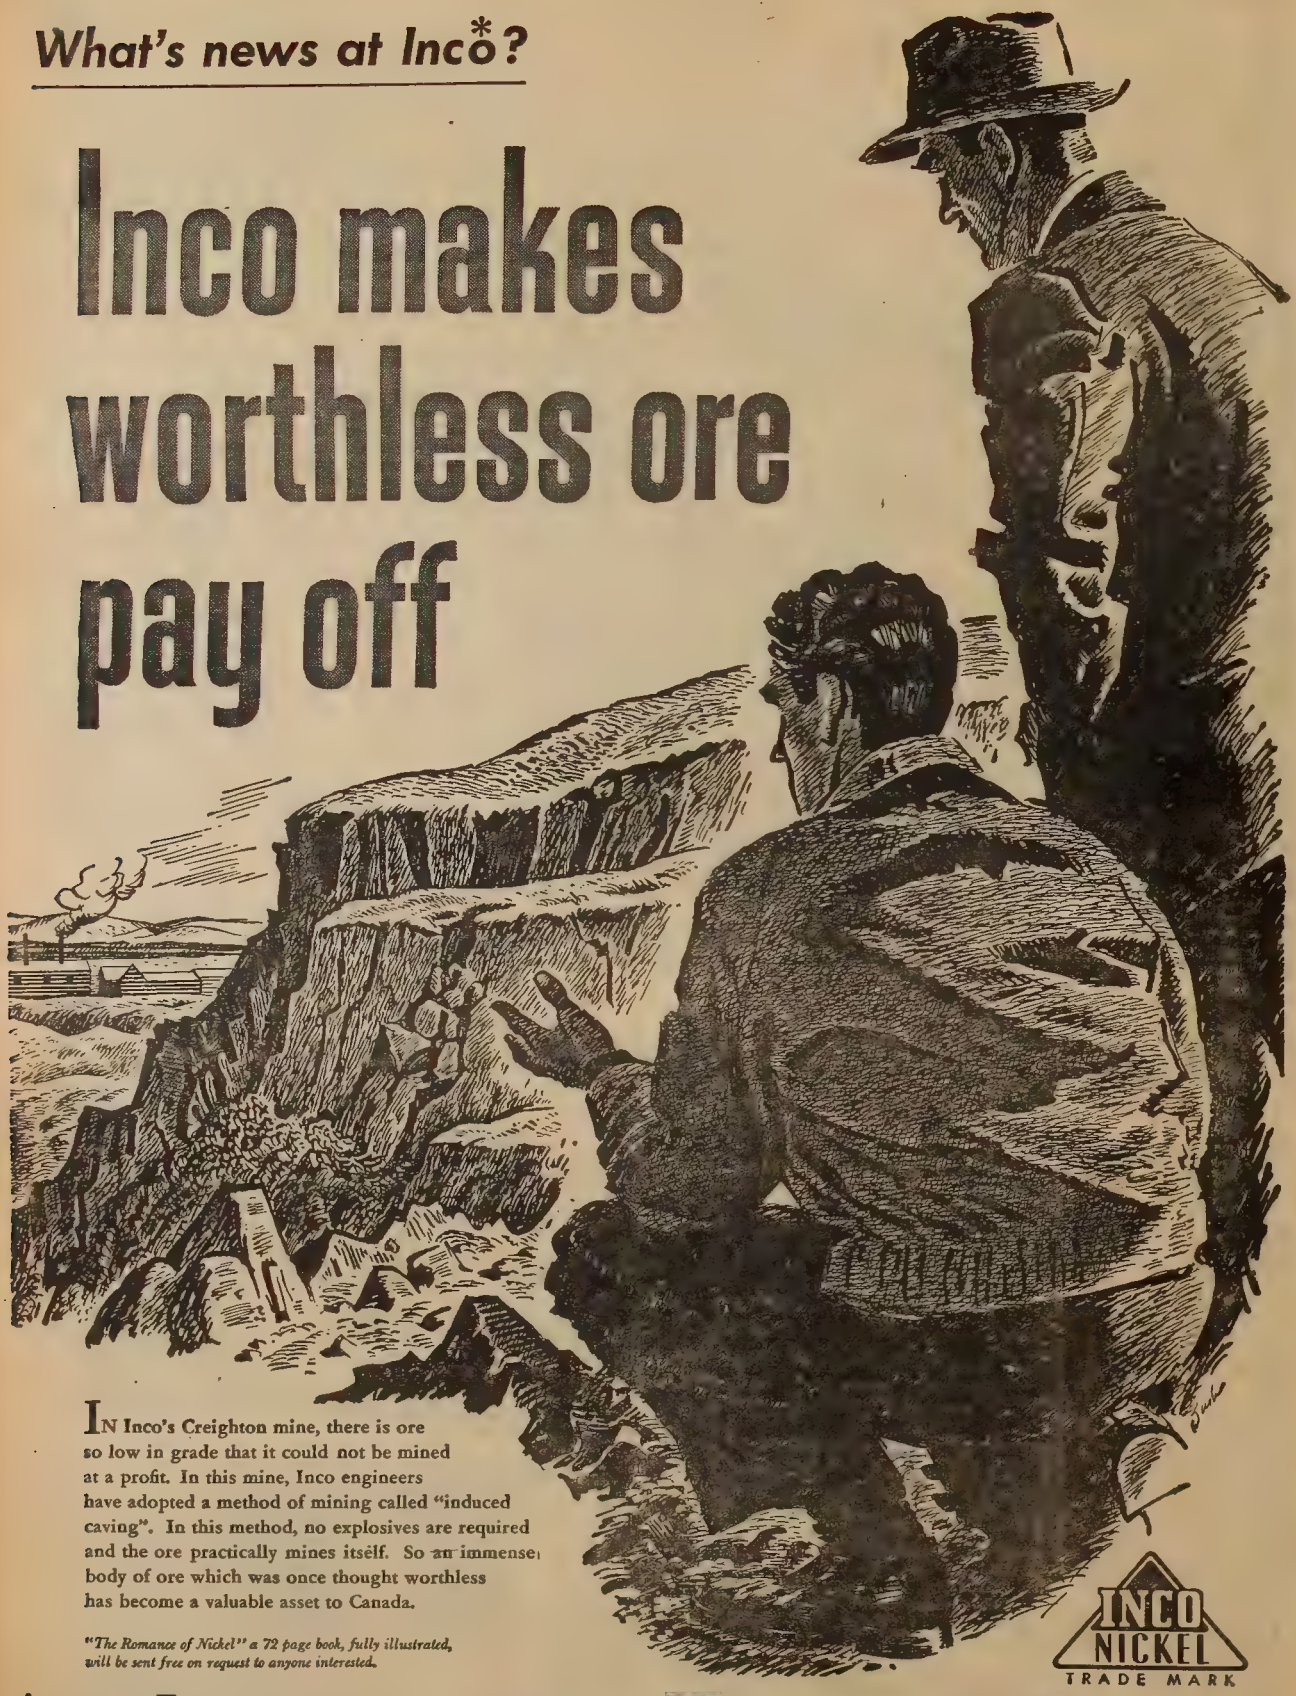
The Executive pointed out that before Christmas the Athletic Directorate had decided to keep McMaster in intercollegiate ranks, and then changed their minds. Jack Rossall IV SPS, said the students did not know the real reason for the move, but only read the conjectures of sportswriters.

SAC representative, Don Lowe, felt that it was hard to find out anything about the Directorate, and that it was one of the most autocratic organizations on the campus. Alec Pathy III SPS, said "University students, who are the ones to watch the games, should have had some say in the decision of the Directorate."

The Engineering Society also endorsed the second-hand clothing campaign for the University Settlement. They have set up boxes in the Engineering Stores in which to put any donations. SAC representative Bill Deekes said he thought 1600 Engineers should be able to collect a lot of old clothes.

Don Andrews, IV SPS, announced that delegates from other universities, including Queen's, McGill and RMC, would be at the Skule at Home in the Royal York on February 4th.

The Engineering Institute of Canada (EIC) Students' night will be on February 18, said President Don Fredenburg. He said it would consist of a panel discussion on a technical subject with prizes for members of the panel, and also for speakers from the floor.



Tight Residence Returnees New BC Campus Problem

Vancouver—(CUP) — One of the University of British Columbia men's residences has found it necessary to issue an ultimatum to students for returning to the residence in the wee small hours in a "drunken, rowdy manner." Three students have been requested to leave already, and several more have left because the noise interferes with their studies, campus officials said.

The authorities issued their first warning bulletin during the fall term examinations, when the problem was especially bad. They are now threatening to clamp down even harder on the happy nocturnal westerners, and state that enforcement and punishment of the rules will be dealt with even more strictly in the future. Students will no longer be given a second chance; after their first offence their names will be put before the Housing Committee for action.

Inco makes worthless ore pay off

IN Inco's Creighton mine, there is ore so low in grade that it could not be mined at a profit. In this mine, Inco engineers have adopted a method of mining called "induced caving". In this method, no explosives are required and the ore practically mines itself. So an immense body of ore which was once thought worthless has become a valuable asset to Canada.

UC Lit Exec Supported Picture Ruled Harmful

The Executive of the UC Lit was upheld yesterday at a special meeting of the membership that was called by two students of UC. These students felt that the UC Lit executive had acted undemocratically in censuring the three students for having their pictures taken in a pose that was thought to be prejudicial to the best interests of the JCR.

The motion censuring the executive was defeated by a vote of 19 to 15. An amendment to this motion was passed however. This motion by Mike Benazon, IV UC, stated that "the students involved be awarded the Geller Krever Rose Rueben Award for instrumental activity in a non-executive capacity by a member of the society." Since the main motion was defeated this amendment was also automatically defeated.

Joe Wagman, II UC, felt that the censuring of this kind could get out of hand and furthermore he said, "the picture was not thought to be prejudicial to the reputation of the JCR, but was done with the best interest of the JCR at heart."

Mike Benazon however thought that a picture showing students eating in a pile of garbage could never do the JCR any good. He said the people involved were "persons eager to have their picture taken for publicity but to the detriment of the College".

One of the persons involved felt that the Lit's action in chastizing the persons involved in the incident was "presumptuous and ill-timed" and "the motion was passed in a wave of carefree abandon." He said that the motion should have been judged for its merit not for its emotional value.

David Gauthier, Literary Director of the UC Lit, said that there was no such censure ever passed through the Lit and that the meeting was called to discuss a pseudo-motion. He said that the whole thing "was an unfortunate fiction."

Roger Bull, President of the UC Lit, apologized to anyone who felt the "their reputation had been maligned". Also by way of what some members felt to be an intimidation, Bull stated that if the motion of censure was passed that the Lit executive might feel it necessary to resign.

Zakiff Opens Hillel Appeal

Mr. Gedalia Zakiff will speak to team captains and canvassers at the Hillel Foundation, Thursday, January 27, at 8.30 p.m. and in so doing will officially open the United Jewish appeal campaign on the campus.

Mr. Zakiff is an Israeli journalist and Zionist leader, who has come to Canada at the invitation of the Zionist Organization of Canada.

He was born in Russia and was brought as a child to Israel. He went to Paris and studied law and journalism. From an early age he prepared himself for his future role in the Zionist movement as an orator and writer. Immediately after the war, he was sent to China and India representing the Zionist movement. From there he went back to Europe and continued his work in France, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. He speaks six languages.

The last five years of his career have been devoted entirely to the problems of South American Jews.

Monogamy Maybe Not Best Thing

Polygamy does not affect the rate of population growth, it was stated yesterday at a meeting of the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS) organization. The meeting was the second group discussion concerning the future of Africa.

"Polygamy is a cultural institution, recognized by the law," said Edwin Ojike, grad. "Some don't take to it because it isn't convenient." He said that there was a trend away from polygamy but that this in no way constituted a rejection of the institution. "We will still have it and we will still have to recognize it," he said.

"Where the women outnumber the men, polygamy is essential to the dignity of women," said Dr. G. Brown, of the department of Anthropology, was chairman of the meeting.

The problem of starvation in Africa is not as widespread as many believe, the African students stated. However, they said, there was some seasonal starvation in the Gold Coast area and others. This was blamed on the growth of population and the inefficient methods of farming used.

"Most foreign investments in Africa are in terms of materials and metals useful for war," said Abdul Kamara, grad. He said that Europe was not interested in letting Africa produce her own commodities. "There is no free enterprise in the West coast," said another student.

"Investments are all right as long as they do not interfere with the progress of the people," said Kemte Giadom. "We will welcome them." "Investments come when they are beneficial to the investor, not Africa," felt E. Okorafor, Grad. Studies.

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

Let's face it. Exams are coming. But don't start to hibernate yet. Stay out of your book-lined cave until after the first Cornell-McGill Week-End, from Thursday, February 25, to Sunday, February 28.

Twenty lucky vict- (I mean volunteers) will be chosen to act as hosts to ten students from McGill and ten from Cornell, at a series of parties, lectures, discussion groups and parties. This is just what you need to put you in the mood for that exam on Middle European Phonetics (or is it fanatics?).

Do you like McCarthy? Here's your chance to stand up and say so. The chief topic for discussion will be "Forces to Social Conformity in Our Society; The Right to be different." Or if you're mad because your professors won't let you write your English essay on Pogo, pour forth your grievances in a group discussion on "Freedom of Thought and Knowledge; Right or Privilege?"

The two groups will arrive Thursday night, and will be given a sample of Hogtown Hospitality at a reception in Brennan Hall, where they will be assigned their hosts. Friday morning they will attend lectures in subjects of their choice (no Algernon, they don't lecture in French here) and after lunch with their hosts in such palatial cafeterias as the JCR and the Bittery, they will take part in the discussion groups, where papers will be presented by various students.

Friday evening there will be a banquet at Hart House with a guest-speaker, and afterwards there will be a party. Need we say more?

Saturday morning, those who have recovered from the previous evening's celebrations will go on tour of Hart House and the campus, and the Parliament Buildings and the Legislature (here's your chance to get into Hart House legally girls.) There will be another group discussion Saturday afternoon, and then the whole group will proceed by car (unless anyone feels energetic enough to walk) to Nobleton for an evening of old-fashioned food (box lunches) and dancing.

Political Splits Within IUS Seen As Cause Of New Idea

(This is the first in a series of articles designed to acquaint Canadian students with the history and organization of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students.)

By RICH ANCO

The idea of setting up an office to co-ordinate the international activities of a number of national student unions was not an idea just out of the blue. It was primarily a result of unsettled frictions withinthe International Union of Students (IUS) between the Communist and controlling blocand the western bloc of student unions.

IUS, a world-wide student organizations was formed after the war and immediately fell under the Communist domination. Repeated political partisanship on the part of the leadership only served to heighten the the strains that were taking hold in the non-student world.

But the western unions continued to work and hope for some compromise. None came.

The split between the two ideological blocs widened until in 1948 the American delegation walked out of the IUS. This resignation followed a major political event in Eastern Europe — the Communist coup of Czechoslovakia. The Communist treatment of certain Czech university students who demonstrated during week of February 22, 1948, angered many western students. The IUS would make no protest to the Czech authorities and the United States called it quits.

The US action only forecast the mass exodus of western unions which was to come a year later. All during the post war history of IUS the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) had been present only in observer status.

In 1949 the IUS Executive again echoed official Communist international policy. The Yugoslav Government under Tito had been ousted from the Communist International (Comintern) and the IUS, therefore, planned to expel the Yugoslav students' union.

This was too much for the western unions to take. They worked for some conciliation, or compromise but none was offered them. Their voice was effectively drowned out by the Communist leaders who were able to manipulate the meetings and propaganda.

The western unions did the only thing they could. They resigned.

Now, any organized international inter-action between the western student unions came to a standstill. International programs and projects had, up till this time, been continued through IUS. Were the western unions to abandon any internationalism hereafter?

This aws the problem that faced them in 1950. This was the problem that gave rise to thoughts of forming some organization by which the activities of the unions outside their respective countries could be "co-ordinated." This idea was forced on the western unions by the circumstances.

BALLET REVIEW

First Night Medley

As was explained in a loud voice piercing through the darkness to the left, the opening ballet presented by the National Ballet Company at the Royal Alex on Monday was the second act of Casse-Noisette, which consists mainly of isolated character and solo dances. Further investigation in the light of a powerful pocket flash revealed to the voice that Jury Gotshalks and Irene Alpine were dancing the roles of the Nutcracker Prince and the Sugar Plum Fairy.

The presentation was a fairly sound one although seldom exciting. The discipline of the chorus has improved considerably since last year as is particularly noticeable in arm movements. They were not always in time, but one cannot count this too severely against them as Toronto provided only the dregs of an orchestra for the talents of George Crum. The mirlitons in attractive red striped tutus danced in a unified group with good precision and lightness. Of the national dances the Chinese pair and the Russian-style bouffon were nearest to the required spirit, although neither dance was executed with virtuosity. Natalia Butko lent to the Arab dance a sinuous quality with the now flowing, now angular hand movements, but the dance itself is rather like that of a slow motion strip tease. I find the one used by the Slavenska company much more interesting.

Jury Gotshalks gave a strong partnership in his part with Irene Alpine but did not show as much strength in his solo. The Sugar Plum fairy of Miss Alpine was rather lustreless. She got through it without betraying difficulty but it was only an indication of what it could have been in the way of technical brilliance and personality. She tended to substitute a lavishness of arms for height and stability. The costumes were attractively designed by Kay Ambrose but the settings which were also designed by her were too blatant and unimaginative for this classic fairy tale.

The Lilac Garden by Antony Tudor is really quite impressive. Apart from certain rushings across the stage which occurred a little too often for the liking of the viewer, the choreography is strikingly significant. He uses symbolic gestures which repeated take on wider meaning; he uses plain walking to contrast with the dancing as Shakespeare uses prose in contrast with poetry; and he uses all parts of the body for expression. He succeeds in establishing on stage the kind of relation between the actors which exists in plays and which is not often made in ballets.

In an economic use of all effects of staging, Mr. Tudor has created a ballet which parallels closely the movement of the music. The costumes were of various shades of green-blue with some white and grey, colours which were also in the comparatively uninspired setting.

Lois Smith and David Adams as the star-crossed lovers were convincingly moving. The interplay of personalities between them and James Ronaldson and Celia Franca, the dividing influences, built up into an electric climax when the young girl rushes blindly straight into the arms of "The Man She Must Marry." The supporting dancers all added to the total effectiveness with clear acting and careful dancing, to make the whloe performance very successful.

Equally successful was Gala Performance, taught them by the hand of the maker, Antony Tudor, which by the same choreographer which shows what happens backstage and on-stage when three (count 'em three) guest ballerinas from different countries all appeared at once with a ballet company. However, all the ballerinas were not equally successful in their attempts to captivate the audience. Celia Franca was side-splittingly funny as the Russian ballerina. Her comic parody was so evident that it must have been apparent even to those in the audience who have not had a long enough arquaintance with this art to realize its pitfalls There is little that this ballet forgets to make fun of in its little that this ballet forgets to make fun of in its own field. It was very wise to place at the end of this comprehensive program, for many a seriously executed step would also have had its share of laughter otherwise.

The National Ballet undeniably is presenting good ballet. It is a pleasure to mark the general improvement in standard since last year and to notice several in the chorus who show promise of graduating into the solo class.

NATIONAL BALLET WEEK?

Or A Weak National Ballet

Mayor Lamport has announced a National Ballet Week, I hear. The question is: is it a National Ballet Week or a Weak National Ballet?

Much as we consider the National Ballet Company at the moment to be a company of decent standing, we doubt the justice of their cause. It might be of interest that the National Ballet Company has been given more in the way of money and free gifts than any other Canadian company. Toronto gives them tax-free use of the St. Lawrence Market in the summertime. The Eaton Co. provides them with free costumes for two of their new ballets. They have a large list of patrons. It has become the favourite subject for the patronage of the socialites. And in three short years they have managed to get themselves to a position which the Winnipeg ballet laboured for years to reach. They have come in and skimmed the cream of the recent popular support for ballet from all the other companies in Canada (and there are many) who have laboured for years in the pioneering of ballet in Canada.

If this company could claim to be a truly National company, their appeal might be considered more justified. But it cannot. It is merely another company which due to certain circumstances, was able to mushroom into sizeable proportions, fed by the groundwork of previous Canadian companies. In the several articles which have been printed the typical peachy publicity story of the company and its history, the actual facts leading up to the formation of the company have been glossed over or simply omitted.

It is not our job to make an exopse, but we feel that the company might give credit where it is due. By doing this it might not have stirred up the feeling of rival animosity among other companies which exists at present. The company is composed of dancers from a limited section of Canada. Some are not Canadian citizens. As such it is no more a NATIONAL Ballet Company in fact, than the Royal Winnipeg Ballet or the Volkoff Canadian Ballet, although both of these have at times represented Canada.

Nor does the company have a school to train its dancers. True it runs a summer school, for two months, but this has little connection with the company. Thus it is providing no standard discipline to prepare dancers for its ranks. It has also alienated other schools which do the work of the day-to-day practice on the pupils from whom they must, out of necessity, draw their recruits.

There is another question to be considered pertaining to their appeal for more support both from the government and from the public. Are they using the money they receive to the best advantage? We do not claim to have access to the accounts of the company, but it is apparent that they are exceeding their income, in spite of good audiences and good patronage. If their budget does not allow for such extensive touring as they do, let them reduce their ambitions to the size of their budget. For the last two years they have undertaken extensive tours across Canada and are scheduled to go to the United States. The reason they state is that they wish to bring good ballet to all of Canada. But why all of it at once? They would reduce their travelling expenses and bring ballet to more places that have little opportunity to see it, if they planned to cover thoroughly one section only of the country in one theatre season. They would also be able to effect a greater improvement in the company by settling down a little.

If the company wants our support let it demonstrate that the money is being as constructively used as posible, and let it make an effort to become the liaison company to which the dancers of all the minor companies may aspire.

Varsity Reporters Training Programme

Students who wish to report for The Varsity next year may start now in order to begin in September with some experience. The News Editor will hold a workshop on Friday from 1 to 2 in The Varsity Office in the Basement of the SAC Building. Basics of reporting and principles of newswriting will be explained. Students are requested to sign for stories this week and attend the workshop, where their stories will be criticized.

See Grif Cunningham or Aubrey Golden today for your stories.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHER REITER

University College, Varsity's grand old lady of Intramural Sport, is wheezing her painful last. Once the faires flower on the Campus, bouncy and gay, she has grown old, shrivelled and dull. To put it bluntly, UC is a dying duck as far as Intramural Sport is concerned.

The old pugilistic proverb to the effect that "The bigger they are, the harder they fall," applies well to UC one of the largest colleges at Varsity and by far the most apathetic to Sport. The Arts types are fading weakly from the Intramural picture. So far they have dropped two Major League Basketball teams and two others in the Minor League. The three UC Hockey teams could probably be squeezed into two, because there is seldom a full turnout of players for any game. The Water Polo clubs at UC have just been scratched, and the Senior hoop group had to hunt around to find men. Things are in bad shape over at University College.

World On His Shoulders . . . .

. . . might make an apt description of Marv Siegel, UC Athletic Director, who is carrying most of the college's Intramural load on his own back. Siegel is working desperately to rebuild UC into an Intramural Athletic power, but he's doing it all alone. In some cases he has volunteers to help, such as coaches in basketball, but these are exceptions to the rule, UC he-men seem to prefer lounging in the JC or guzzling in the Tuck-Shop, to waving their College banner and enjoying themselves. The fact is that UC has as many good athletes as any College on the Campus. But University College teams are persistently the Intramural League's weakest. The majority of men are not supporting the programme.

Any number of excuses can be found for UC's poor showing but the ones that sound most reasonable are: (1) UC has no central spot in the College where information can be obtained regarding Intramural Sports. (2) There is little visible Faculty support or help for Athletics. (3) The rise of a new "Marks" ist doctrine, which drives its adherents to devote themselves completely to their studies, excluding all else so that they may win more marks. This is keeping students out of the gyms. (4) Poor quartermaster storekeeping and weak organization. Solve these and we will save Intramural Sport at UC.

Casting Bread Upon The Waters . .

. . . has paid off well for University College. Were it not for the College's generous action some years back when they agreed to accept homeless PHE into their happy family, UC would probably have no standing whatsoever. Last fall, when they fielded a football team, most of the strength came from the PHE people playing in UC colours. The lone championship, that won in Lacrosse, was gained by a team made up largely of PHE men. In Hockey three-fourths of the players are Physed people. The obvious question is, "Where would UC be if PHE were to be cut free?"

The answer is obvious.

Marv Siegel is a little disgusted with the whole business. Says he, "There is no chance of University College ever winning the Reed Trophy until the College wakes up to its responsibilities and does some work in Intramural Sports."

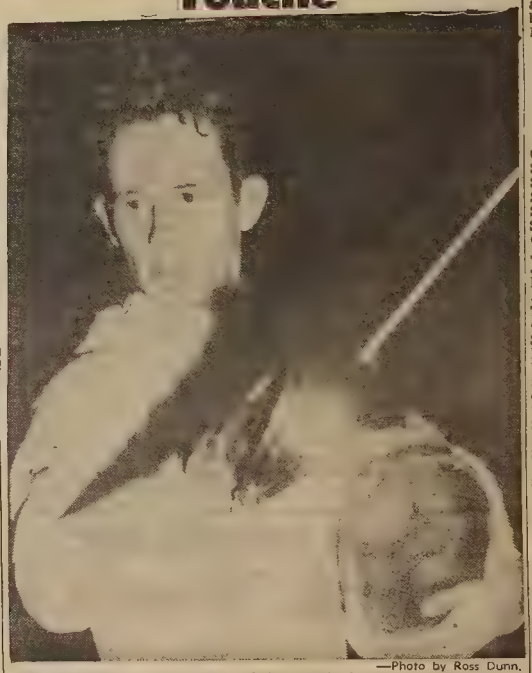
Until UC people do wake up and give Siegel some help, the war-whoop of the UC Redmen will be just a death rattle.

UC Srs Fight To Finish Meds Squeak By 36-34

By JOHN WILSON

Forging ahead in the last period for a close 36-34 win, Sr. Meds yesterday handed Sr. UC their third defeat of the season in an intramural basketball fixture in the Hart House Gym.

Meds were trailing 13-8 at the end of the first stanza, as UC monopolized their own backboard, and took advantage of constant breakaways. Led by Danny Glick and some good defensive work by guard Johnny Magder the Doctors piled up sixteen points in the second period but were still a basket short of the Red and White club at the start of the third frame.



Outscoring UC 12-8 in the third the Meds men managed to freeze the ball in the dying minutes to come out on the good side of the 36-34 count.

Danny Glick hooped eight points for the winners, along with Don Cowan who went for six. Guards Dick Nero and Johnny Magder kept possession of the rebounds along with big Meds centre Doug. Dalglish, to set up the Med's attack.

Buddy Obal led the UC boys with eight points, colsely followed by Ollie Mandryk with six and Jerry Love and Graham Dranes with seven each. Mandryk sparked the UC defence which was impassable in the opening minutes but faded noticeably in the second and third frames.

The victory gives the Medesmen a two and one record, their loss being at the hands of the St Mike's A's.

Girl's B-Ball Squads Chosen Have Experience Not Height

The Varsity women's intercollegiate basketball squad was chosen last night in a combination final trial and brush up practise for the McMaster game tonight at Mac.

Five players from last year's winning team turned up for the practises which began shortly after Christmas. Sally Wallace who sparked the Meds interfaculty winners this season and who was outstanding in intercollegiate play last year has returned for another season. Playing first line with Sally will be Carolyn Dobson, another '53 member and newcomer Mary Winship.

Shirley Roberts who has always been a threat to b-ball opponents is back for another season in intercol competition. She will be playing on the same line as Jane Duff, back for her second season with the squad and Pat Swazie who has moved up from the intermediates this year.

From the list of six guards June Hansford is the sole survivor from the '53 group. Lou Martin and Meredith Robinson have been shifted from the ranks of intermediate play and will be playing their first senior season this year. The only first year girl on the team is Pam Miles who will be playing guard. Sally Searles and Beth Wade who have been out of intercol competition for the past three years have returned for another season for the Lady Blues.

The girls who were not cut last Tuesday and who didn't make the senior ranks this year will make up the Toronto intermediate squad. The most remarkable thing about this squad is its height — rather the height they haven't got. But in spite of this, the girls look quite good and should be able to put up an excellent showing tonight. Most of the members of this year's intermediate team are first year. Team members: Sally Wigle, Joy Taylor, Sylvia Kerr, Jane Kelley, Julie Wicks, Mary Foster, Mary Isky, Arleen Seaman, Ann Kleth and Donna Parr.

Interfaculty Hockey Standings With Playdowns Close Ahead

With the season's end just around the corner, and the playoffs almost in our laps, the time has come to take a quick look at the Interfaculty Hockey picture.

Only one group championship has definitely been settled; the SPS VII's will represent Group VI of the first division. This amazing Skule club has amassed eight points in four games to remain one of the three undefeated teams in the loop to date. The other two teams in Group VI will be unable to catch them, and only one team enters the playoffs from this group.

The other two undefeated teams are Senior Meds and Senior Skule, who are at present running first and second respectively in Group I. This issue could be settled today at 1:30 when the two meet in the Arena. The other representative from Group I is likely to be St. Mike's A's, who currently hold down third place with five points, and could almost cinch it with a victory over Senior Vic on Friday.

There will be three representatives from Group II also, and two of these have already been settled. Junior UC, and Junior SPS, now in first and second place are sure to be in on the post-season action, while the third spot still remains in doubt. With Al Cecutti in goal, Pre-Meds ought to get the nod, but either Trinity or Vic could throw a wrench in the works with a sudden burst of might. However Pre-Meds will have to lose their remaining two games for either Vic or Trinity to make the grade.

St. Mike's B's and the Dentistry A's are the teams who will enter the playoffs from Group III, while only one team comes from the last three groups in the first division. SPS VII's, of course, will represent Group VI, but the Dentistry B's are giving the SPS VI's a battle in Group V. Group IV at the moment finds the Trinity B's on top, but they have been beaten by the SPS V's 6-2 earlier in the season and might well lose out to them in the final analysis.

Forestry A's made a bid for a playoff spot in Group I of the second division by setting an Intramural record in beating Architecture 16-0 yesterday. Only two teams from each of the two groups will see action after the regular schedule closes in the second division. Led by high goal scorer John Hubicki, the theologs from Wycliffe should cop first place in Group II, while the second spot is still in doubt between Emmanuel and Knox.

The playoff schedule will start sometime near the end of February, and all game times will be announced in The Varsity.

To Waterloo?

The Hockey Intermediates set out this afternoon for London and Wterloo, and their second and third league games with Western and Waterloo College.

Coach Jack Wheldrake isn't just too sure what to expect from either club, but Western appear to have a strong contender with a crew that walloped OAC 9-2 last week. The Baby Blues, however, have beaten the same Aggie outfit by the lopsided score of 12-0 earlier this season.

The Intermediates have a .333 record in three games so far this year, but the win was one that counted, against OAC, their only league game to date. The other teams in the Intermediate Intercollegiate race this year are the two teams from Western and Waterloo College.

The whole team will make the trip into Western Ontario for the two games, against Western tonight in London Arena, and against

Varsity Blues Travel To Mountain Town Will Meet McMaster's Mauling Marauders

Varsity's basketball Blues, currently in a tie for first place in the intercollegiate league, will be in Hamilton tonight for a game Master Marauders. A victory would give the locals undisputed possession of the top rung on the college ladder.

The teams played their first game two weeks ago at Hart House with the Blues claiming a 61-49 victory. Since then, Varsity has beaten Queen's and lost to McGill to match Western and Assumption for first place.

The first game with McMaster was one of the roughest ever seen on the Hart House floor, with big Mac boys like Ken Stanley, Bert Raphael, Jim Lindores and Lorne Wrigglesworth giving the locals an interesting evening. Wrigglesworth also scored 22 points that night and will be one person the Blues will have to stop tonight.

Varsity's top scorer so far has been George Stulac, who has hooped 51 points in the three games played for an average of 17 a game. Stulac will probably be a threat for the scoring championship, a race which is currently led by Assumption's rookie, George Joseph, who has 24.5 points a game. Jim Russell and Lou Lukenda combine with Stulac to give the Blues probably the most potent scoring threesome in the league. No small factor in Varsity's success, though, is the floor work of Steve Oneschuk and the all-round play of Bill Corcoran and Marv Tile.

The Blues make their return to Hart House Saturday night to play Rochester University.

Waterloo tomorrow afternoon in the twin cities.

Western Mustang football star Jacques Belec is a winter athlete also it seems, and finds action at centre on the first line of the Mustang hockey club. Western only sees fit to enter one team in Intercollegiate competition, and they have played for some years now at the Intermediate level with varied success.

Two victories would give Wheldrake's boys undisputed possession of first place, a position of relative importance, as the season only consists of one home-and-home series with each team.

The Ultimate In Dress

Tie And Jacket Again

The men staying at Victoria College residence are forced to wear a tie and jacket to lunch and supper at Burwash Hall. Since there has been much talk against this pleasant custom, let me point out precisely why the rule is so rigidly enforced.

NO STUDENT HAS A RIGHT to dress as he pleases any more than he has a right to think as he pleases. If students were allowed to dress as they please, they might dress in a manner that is incorrect according to the people who know about such things, just as they might entertain erroneous ideas if they were allowed to think as they please. What is correct to wear while eating is decided for the students by some sage group of gentlemen who realize that all the variations of dress throughout the centuries have progressively proceeded to the modern styles of today, which are the ultimate in dress, and which will undoubtedly remain in style forever. Anything else is immoral. Nothing the world has ever seen is quite so virtuous as the tie.

It is obvious that jackets and ties are particularly well-designed for the process of eating. This is especially true for the noon and evening meals, because these meals are eaten between the hours of 11:30 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. Another virtue of the jacket is that it costs a great deal to buy. By refusing admission to those without jackets, we at Burwash are able to exclude anyone too poor to buy one. The tie also serves a useful purpose: if the top button of the shirt breaks, the tie will hold together the neck of the shirt.

BUT ASIDE FROM THE PURELY physical benefits to be derived from forcing everyone to wear jackets and ties, the mental effect on the students is indeed a good one. We can be sure that if Christ were alive today, He would wear a jacket and tie. He was that kind of man. And since the powers that be at Victoria want everyone to be Christian, it is only reasonable that they force everyone to dress as Christians would. There is no such thing as a Christian without a tie and jacket. It is good that everyone be forced in this way to be a little Christian. By creating this Christian atmosphere in Burwash Hall, all the men who dine there are put under a subtle mental pressure to become more Christ-like.

THE MEN AT BURWASH HALL are made to dress as gentlemen so that they may more easily become gentlemen. A gentleman is one who wears a tie and jacket to breakfast. He is proud of his broad shoulders and his generally beautiful appearance in his jacket and tie, and he justifiably feels superior to anyone not wearing a jacket and tie. Some gentlemen at Burwash Hall feel so superior to persons without jackets and ties that upon beholding one they approach him and say, "Go and put on clothes like mine before you continue eating". Perhaps this is being a little too gentlemanly, but gentlemen know that it is good for students to dress alike since it provides an outward sign of unity among them, and this outward standardization is a good promoter of unity of opinion, which is ideal in a university. After a student has bowed down to dress as society dictates, it makes it a little easier for him to think as society dictates, and this makes him a gentleman. This is desirable. Christ was a gentleman. Students look forward to overcoming any personal convictions they may have; they aspire to become gentlemen. When students become gentlemen, they can present a more solid resistance to any who oppose their opinions. Hurrah for Senator McCarthy.

SO LET US FORCE the men of Burwash Hall to be more gentlemanly than ever. Let us force everyone to carry a large sign to breakfast. Let the sign read: "I'm a good sheep".

Quebec Witch Hunt

When some people have been twice foiled in two attempts to pursue an issue, they will give it up as a bad job But not Duplessis of Quebec, in his attempts to legislate against minority religion in his predominantly Roman Catholic province.

Bill 38 is his third, and most malicious attack. In it he has ignored any Christian or moral principles he may or may not have had, and along with setting a new record for obscurity has placed in the hands of Quebec courts the legislation which will finally outlaw Jehovah's Witnesses in that province.

In brief, his Bill 38, section 2a, states that: . . . Freedom of Worship . . . does not constitute the free exercise of religious worship to distribute in public places books, magazines, or pamphlets containing abusive or insulting attacks against the practice of a religious profession of any portion of the province of Quebec.

In other words, relating embarrassing facts, however true they may be, is now legally punishable by fine or imprisonment. This same situation, in the last ten years, has been twice reversed in supreme court decisions. In both cases it put only a temporary halt to the legalized Witch Hunts of Quebec. And for so little have the Quebec legislators damned themselves.

But not satisfied with their state of iniquity these men have gone even further. In section 10b of the bill they state: "An interlocutory injunction may be applied for, and pronounced against any organization, whether a juridical entity or not, who or which infringes, or is about to infringe the provisions of Section 2."

They state further: "In the case of an organization, not a juridical entity, it shall be sufficient for the purposes of the proceedings relating thereto to designate it by the collective name by which it is commonly known. The injunction may be granted without the issuance of writ of summons."

This is nothing more than a legalized appeal to informers. Here in Canada we berate the totalitarian states of the world for their practice of forcing informers with third degree methods. But here, also in Canada, we are about to see tattle-tale informers rewarded for levelling spites they might have against whomever they please.

We can very well ask, wherein lies the crime, and who had perjured himself. There is no doubt that Duplessis and his legislators, if they pass this bill next week, have thrown all reservation to the winds, and have brought disgrace both to the religion they are protecting, and the country we all live in.

This final disgrace is not a matter of Quebec's provincial rights. The question is vital to every Canadian who would prefer to live in liberty, as opposed to the legalized informer methods of a dictatorship.

To Preach Surrender To God?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I read with great interest your editorial of 19 January, 1954, which concerns the latest missionary enterprise of the Christian church. I found myself in agreement with much of your argument. It cannot be denied that often in the past the conversion of the non-Christian has meant merely the introduction of certain conventions and mores of Western society. I have no doubt that this kind of evangelization, which is a confusion between attitudes derived from divine revelation and those produced by human invention, has often brought the most deleterious effects into native cultures. However, Christianity, it should be remembered, is not primarily interested in the preservation of any culture, no matter how "quiet and simple". The fact of Christ being killed and raised from the dead declares that no human society, no matter how excellent and distinguished, is enough. Christianity indicts all things human as having fallen short of the purpose of God, that they are infected beyond hope of purely human cure by the forces of death and evil. It is not that Christianity deprecates the value of a "quiet and simple" culture. It declares however that even this human achievement needs to be redeemed by the victorious love of God, now offered to all men in Christ.

Perhaps we may hope that the plane load of missionaries who have descended upon the natives of New Guinea will preach the Gospel on that fundamental level of human existence with which the Gospel deals: the replacement of unbelief by trust and the surrender to God, of despair by confidence in God, of indifference by love and joy in the Lord. This would be a Gospel stripped of the petty conventions and trivialities, the crimes and vices, with which the sin of Western man has hidden, distorted and obscured, the priceless treasure of eternal life in Jesus Christ.

John Rowe,
Chaplain to Hart House.

Parents First

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In answer to Mr. Kruger's letter, I believe that parents should have complete control over their children in all aspects of life. The Fascist state tries to control the education, culture, and other phases of the life of the individual. What Mr. Kruger suggests — medical control of children in cases of disagreement over health problems — could easily lead to a more comprehensive and widespread control.

Without wanting to appear too cold-blooded, I put it to you that the life of a child is not of ultimate importance if it means the disregarding of a right, especially such a right as that of religious belief. After all, a child has had little or no contact with the community as a whole. If the parents, who are the ones who care for the child most, are willing to sacrifice its life in order to defend the principle in which they believe, it will obviously be to them that the greatest loss will be should the child die, and not to society. At the present time we do not believe that the individual lives for the state; therefore why should society attempt to interfere with the religious beliefs of the parents, in order to preserve the life of a child, who has as yet given nothing to the community, while it has been of great value to the parents.

Bring Back The Dauphin

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I have been profoundly moved by the letters concerning the Christian dilemma which have been appearing with monotonous regularity in your columns. Indeed one feels that many students regard the salvation of their souls as being a sure thing if they have appeared in The Varsity defending some worthwhile issue. (This of course is justification by works, a subject which, were it not already passe, I'm sure would be defended by somebody.)

Now I have a much more important subject to put before the innocent and lamentably untutored minds of the student body. As founder of the CSRDTF (Canadian Society for the Restoration of the Dauphin to the Throne of France) I would like to gather around me a flock of loyal supporters who would lend their zeal to such a worthy cause.

I feel the time has come when the emphasis must swing back to monarchial government. One looks forward, in the immediate issue, to the presence once more of Royalty in the Tuilleries, the Louvre, and Versailles. Too long have these priceless instruments of government been overrun with the ignorant tramplings of the bourgeois and peasant touring classes. With various Cardinals and whatnots ruling things from behind the scenes I am quite sure that the Christian dilemma will vanish away.

The effect on Quebec of course is readily and quickly understandable, while in Russia one may without too much temerity envisage the speedy overthrow of the detested proletariat and the setting up, the welcome return in fact, of the Tsar and all that that implies.

In short, Mr. Editor, I think that the CSRDTF is a good thing from which every way you look at it and I know you will give me your support and perhaps encourage the SAC to have a tag day.

Jason's golden fleece was literally white as snow yesterday noon. Whether or not the social minded coed was in the bargain or not, we don't know, but the quest ended with his "crowning" in the Hart House quadrangle.

Dr. Gullet Speaks To UN Club WHO Not Emporium For Sick

Good mental, physical and social health is a fundamental right of man regardless of the artificial boundaries superimposed by the national state over the totality of the geographic world, said by Dr. Gullet at the United Nations Club yesterday.

Dr. Gullet, Secretary-Treasurer of the Canadian Dental Association stressed that the 'keynote' of the World Health Organization is a preventive body; not an emporium for the sick, but a body to improve world health.

The World Health Organization is an agency of the United Nations formed in July, 1946. Representatives are appointed from the 75-member countries and financed by each country on its ability to pay. Basic research is encouraged in all phases of problems pertaining to good health. Field work of the institution is carried on by travelling teams, and fellowships are provided also for suitable research to medical, dentistry, and nursing students.

At the present time the W.H.O. is meeting at their headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, in the former buildings of the long defunct League of Nations. One of the projects on the agenda is the establishing of an organization to supersede the Federal Dental International established by the League of Nations. If this project is adopted, it will bring the problem of world dental care into federation with the W.H.O.

Dr. Gullet concluded by pointing out that the rapid transportation growth has necessiated the nations of the world cooperating as a whole in world organizations and the protection of world health is a necessity to the well-being of man.

Ptomaine Coffee Bar Still Making Profits

At the last meeting of the UC Lit, several constitutional amendments received additional readings, and reports were heard from several of the Lit Executive on the affairs of the Lit.

The treasurer of the Lit, Jack Lewis, presented a financial report on the operations of the JCR snack bar, which was the subject of the controversial "Garbage Picture" and "ptomaine-coffee" story in the recent Gag issue of the Varsity. The snack-bar profits so far this season amount to $171.00, and Lewis said that the Lit would not exceed its budget this year. Marty Friedland, 3rd year president, announced that a Red and White Square Dance would be held on Saturday, aJnuary 28, in the Women's Union Theatre.

Constitutional amendments receiving readings included motions dealing with the appointment by the Lit Executive of the producer and director of the UC show, the calling of special meetings, and the appointment of the EAC representative to the Lit executive.

David Gauthier, Literary Director deplored (1) the holding of the UC Parliament and the WUA open meeting on the same day, (2) the poor turn-out at the Robinette Debates, and (3), the poor turn-out at the UC Parliaments. The Athletic Director, Marv Siegel, deplored the poor turn-out for UC athletics.

Ron Gould and Pete Larmour were nominated for next year's SAC representatives, and Peter Martin won the position of EAC representative by acclamation. Golden, Perlmutter, Lowry, Siegfreid and Temple were acclaimed to the Minutes Committee.

The Varsity Sneers At...

DON LOWE

. . . for using The Varsity as a financial sponge for the miscalculations of the Finance Commission of the SAC. Lowe, who is the Finance Commissioner, saw fit to cut the budget of The Varsity to make up for his deficits. The Varsity to date has operated well within its own budget.

Report Reveals Deficit SAC In Great Danger Varsity Drastically Cut

The Varsity has been chopped. Starting next week the Varsity will publish only four times a week for the first two weeks of February, and then for the last two weeks of the month it will appear only three times a week. In March The Varsity will be published three times. The dates will probably be March 2, 4, 11. All the issues, except for the last one, will be eight pages. The last one will be a twelve-page issue.

This was decided last night at the SAC meeting, after the members heard the report of the Financial Commission, which reported that the SAC was operating at a deficit, unless ways and means were found to cut expenses.

The Varsity was chosen as the most suitable ways and means, as its budget was the easiest to cut. The Finance Commission presented the following motion to the SAC: "That since there is no other method of effecting savings, the Commission recommends that 90 issues of The Varsity be published instead of 94, and as suggested at a previous meeting, that there be one four-page issue per week, the balance to be eight pages, but there be at least four issues in March, one of which to be a twelve-page issue for the review of the year's activities."

The Finance Committee had to find approximately $1,500.00 from losses on the Handbook, fees, and building costs in the new SAC offices. A saving of $2,310 00 on Torontonensis helped the SAC from going into debt even more.

Orie Loucks, Associate Editor of the SAC, pointed out to the SAC that four-page issues of The Varsity were not at all popular with the students of the campus and that The Varsity would much rather put out fewer issues if they could be all of the eight-page type. The SAC agreed to this and the final details are to be worked out between the Associate Editors of The Varsity and E. A. MacDonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC.

Loucks also pointed out that Toronto students through their fees pay 1½ cents a copy. This is the cheapest rate in Canada. Some students pay as high as 5 cents a copy for their student newspaper.

The report also stated that the anticipated revenue from advertising in The Varsity was only 56 per cent of the desired amount. This will be improved in the next two months, however, The Varsity will lose some revenue here.

A motion was proposed by SAC President John Stalker, which said that "SAC disapproves of the dismissal of the McMaster football team from the Intercollegiate Football League and therefore a committee of three of the SAC from the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate, should be chosen to investigate, the reasons why the McMaster football team was voted out of the league."

The committee is to be made up of Bill Deeks, John Stalker, and Roger Talbot, the Men's Athletic Commissioner

Stalker said, "The Med's Society didn't feel that the evidence was sufficient." Mr. Macdonald pointed out that the decision was "not entirely Toronto's." Bill Deeks said that the "Athletic Directorate is unduly silent."

Roger Talbot said The Varsity could have the information if it would just go over and get it from Mr. Loosemore. He said, "They have not sought the facts from Mr. Loosemore, just printed their opinions."

WUA Debate On Eligibility

Should a girl in Third Year General be eligible for the Presidency of the Women's Undergraduate Association?

This important constitutional change will be debated at the Third Open Meeting of the WUA, at 4:00 today, in Women's Union Theatre. There has been a great deal of discussion about this issue and a final decision must be made before the nominations of next year's executive.

The all-important nominations for SAC and EAC representatives will also take place.

This Modern Age

It seems that two people were riding along a highway in a car. One was male and the other was female. As they ride along, you see, the man says: "'Hey Babe, howabout a ciggyboo?"

"Oh no thank you," says the babe, "I don't smoke."

Five miles later, the man spies a bar, you see, so he says: "Well maybe you'd like a drink, eh babe?"

"No thanks, I don't drink."

So, about five miles later, he sees a motel ahead. So he says: "I don't suppose, you like to stop here and spend the night with me."

"Gee, sure," says the babe, "I always tell the girls at the office, you don't have to smoke and drink to have a good time."

The Varsity is having a party this Saturday starting at 9:00 p.m. Information in the offices.

SAC At A Glance

The Students' Administrative Council last night besides cutting The Varsity's number of issues to help meet a $1,500 deficit:

—Were informed that a suitable number of scholarships would be detoured to the Engineering building from the Massey Report recommendations to satisfy the Engineers;

—heard that the investigation committe on employment discrimination charges had held a meeting, listened to the charges and are considering them for a report at the next meeting;

—voted to co-sponsor with the SCM the World Student Day of Prayer on the third Sunday in February in the Great Hall:

—received the resignation of Radio Director Bruce Dunlop who claimed that programs of sufficiently high calibre could not be produced that the attempt for further action would and should be abandoned as a futile effort;

—heard the question "What are the students interested in?" approve the lack of student interest in radio work:

—had at hand one Spanish letter and several Russian letters all untranslated;

—received four invitations to the dance (S.R., 2);

—were invited to a Trinity dance (cassocks will be worn);

—learned that 50 pounds of salt had been purchased to prevent further falls on the steps of the SAC Building leading to The Varsity and Torontonensis offices;

—heard comments that a Varsity article was unbecoming and that the paper would be better off without that sort of article;

—gave approval to a Private Member's Bill urging income tax exemptions for university fees, textbookse and scientific equipment;

—considered where to house the Brading Trophy, now permanent property of the U. of T.

—were told that two Red Cross insignias had been stolen from U.C. and Trinity.

Dr. Kinsey Goes On Trial Debater Quits Over Topic

Edmonton 25 Jan., (CUP) —The much publicized and controversial Kinsey reports will be the subject of the McGoun debates.

The McGoun debates are a series of debates between the universities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The debates are held simultaneously at all the participating universities, with the home affirmative team battling the visiting negative squad.

The Kinsey subject was not well received in the University of Manitoba. A member of the Manitoba team resigned immediately the topic was announced.

The Songmen

Every concert season The Songmen, a local male chorus, give a recital at Eaton Auditorium. If they are not the best male choir in the country, and unfortunately they are not, it may be said that they are the most improved of the lot. It is a shame that such organizations can not find suitable material for more musical performances. Alas, they obviously can not. And you, dear reader, how often have you heard My Lord, What A Morning and Flow Gently, Sweet Afton, and the like? There were several good numbers mind, but there were some eral musical atrocities too.

The real blow of the evening was the Rhapsody for Alto and Male Chorus, by Brahms. I for one had never heard it before, and when I did I realized why. Even Brahms himself was capable of error and as the be-bopper would say, "Man did he goof".

David Ouchterlony, conductor of the group, played two organ solos, Trumpet Tune, composed by himself, and the last two movements of the Symphony No. 4 by Widor. The first, a gay little tune was well played, and I was singularly impressed with the scherzo of the latter work. The last movement however was just another of the rabble-rousing tours de force, all too often pushed on the poor unsuspecting public.

This chorus, like so many others, suffers from the same malady, that of having or rather choosing to compete with professional talent, yet not having the time or money required for such a task. The result always leaves something to be desired. Still, they sing with conviction and something must be said for that.

Charles La Pointe.

Patricia Snell

Pat Snell saved her best wine for the last in her program of songs of French, German and Italian in this Wednesday's 5 o'clock recital.

The Ah Fors' e lui and Sempre Libera from Verdi's Traviata demonstrated all the best qualities of her singing. Her presentation is not only expressive, but thoughtful in a way that indicates an understanding of the intention of the music. With an exactitude of pitch she combined suppleness and a vibrato that was only rarely too prominent. In this Aria the higher notes of her range came out with relaxation and brilliance that was sometimes marred by straining previously. Miss Snell has a strange variation of tonal quality over the range of her voice which leads one to suspect that she is breaking into different modes of

The songs of Duparc and Debussy received the most expressive treatment from her. She adopted a warm, smooth tone to portray sleep and death in Duparc's Extase which enraptured in its tranquil beauty. The French in this was fairly understandable and the Italian and German came out quite clearly too.

Stuart Hamilton, her accompanist was a reliable support who followed her pace and moods capably if without adding much.

Wendy Michener.

Engineers Trail Behind Meds Crew Takes Lead

By JOHN WILSON

It looks like the two top teams in Interfaculty hockey aren't going to let us go out on the limb and pick a winner before the post-season action gets under way. Senior Meds and Senior SPS fought to a 2-2 tie in yesterday's only game, their second draw in as many meetings.

However, if the style of hockey played in yesterday's game is any indication of the brand the first group teams are going to produce for the playoffs, we won't give them a snowball's chance in Hades against the stronger crews from Group II.

Shabby play, sloppy passes, slashing, and no back-checking, take the lead before it's allover. gave neither goalie much opportunity to be spectacular. Meds netminder Benny Walker had to be on his toes late in the first period, when Skule pressed an obvious advantage, helped along by two penalties to the Doctors, but the Blue and Gold surge subsided with the end of the first stanza.

George deVeber opened the scoring for Meds at 1:40 of the first with a twenty-foot backhand after taking a pass from Robin Arnold at the blueline. With Bob Shaw off for holding, Skule evened it up at 11:05 when Bob Cruise struck for his sixth goal of the season after Mollenhauer had passed behind the Meds defence.

Ken Kent, playing his first game for the Senior Engineers, gave Skule the lead at 2:30 of the second with a low shot that Walker never even saw. That shot was from the blueline, about as close as the Skulemen got to the Meds net in the second frame.

Robin "Eagle" Arnold salvaged the tie for the Doctors at 16:15, catching Chuck MacDougall's rebound outside the Skule defence. Arnold, along with deVeber and MacDougall led the Meds offence, while Pete MacDougall and Bob Shaw held up the blueline patrol.

The big SPS line of Jack Mollenhauer, Bob Cruise, and Al Harrison (they've accounted for over half of the Skule goals this season), were best on attack, while Pete Bannister was good on defence.

The split in points still leaves the Medsmen in first place in Group I with eleven points, while Skule trail with ten. SPS, however, have a game in hand, and might well were the keynote in a game that

The Sportswoman

Wednesday night saw a strong UC I team trounce Vic I 47-22 in the women's interfaculty volleyball loop. Although the Vicsters tried all sorts of strategies, they just couldn't get the ball flying, and so UC towered all the way.

Half time score showed the "Red Gals" ahead 26-9. Little Loraine Rotman was high scorer of the game, tallying 19 points in the first half.

Phil Andrews' strong one-arm shot was a big asset for Vic; top scorer for their squad was Joan Graham with seven points.

POT's first and second hockey teams have swept the ice this week defeating UC's first and second squads 8-1 and 3-0 respectively. According to referee Peter Nichols, Tuesday's game in which Physols I's downed UC I's 8-1, was the best he has seen this year.

Di Conacher was the lone UC scorer forcing a neat goal in the third period. POT tallies were made by Mary Marg O'Neil with a fabulous three, Rosalie Marsh, who played a tremendous game and scored twice, Noreen Cossar with two, and Jean McNeil.

Wednesday's match saw UC II foxed as POT II fought to a 3-0 shutout. Scorers — Betty Kempton, Sandra Weber and Jerry McCurdie.

THE MASSEY REPORT AND YOU

Editorial

Consider Our Big Potential Asset

A resolution is currently being discussed in the various colleges and faculties concerning the establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries. It was passed by the SAC and is now seeking general and campus-wide support.

The resolution was built on the Massey Report recommendations of 1951. The recommendation based on national scholarships may not be a sure-fire solution to the problem of finances in education, but leading educationists across the country agree that it is a first step to getting over this hurdle.

If the Right Honorable Vincent Massey in 1951 considered the question of equality of opportunity in higher education a vital problem to the national development of the arts, letters and sciences, then surely he would say it is as vital a problem today — if not more so.

Already loaded down with higher living costs and text-book costs, the University of Toronto student this fall was given a 13.6 per cent fee increase.

It is absolutely ridiculous to measure merit by one's ability to pay for a higher education. The Massey Report recognized that, though a small number of bursaries and scholarships existed, they were not sufficient to meet the demands of an expanding university population.

Early last fall President Smith spoke out in favor of more bursaries, scholarships and other means of financial aid. Other university administrators have supported this position.

The Massey Report is an old story with the National Federation of Canadian University Students. It has been a major project in their national campaign for the past two years. A NFCUS delegation visited Ottawa last year with a brief asking for implementation of the national scholarship scheme, but the federal Government took no direct action.

This year NFCUS is planning a more concentrated campaign. Local committees have been organized to create student interest in the Massey Report, and a brief will again be forwarded to the federal Government some time in February.

Following this up the SAC passed a motion requesting the Government of Canada to put the recommendations on national scholarships into effect. Faculties and colleges were asked to record their support of these recommendations. Approval from these student groups was expected to be automatic.

But the Engineers decided to make their independent — though illogical — voices heard. They turned down, temporarily, their faculty's support of the Massey recommendations.

Because, they say, it might be used against the Engineers and for the Artsmen; because it is questionable whether students were a privileged class; because a national health plan may be far more important. The Engineers have turned down the principle (of more aid to students) with petty arguments that could and would be ironed out once the first big step was taken.

A serious problem faces today's student; some attempt must be made to solve it; national scholarships and bursaries are a good beginning; yet our fidgety Engineers are content to sit back and consider.

We hope no other colleges or faculties will follow the blind example of the Engineers.

We suggest to the Engineers that, in many respects, students are a privileged class. They are vital to the nation as a whole. We feel that the cultural life of Canada suffers if young people are forced to abandon their studies because they cannot afford an education. Every effort must be made to provide the assistance necessary to keep students of ability at university.

The Government must face up to that fact that if they fail to tackle the problems in education now, they will be guilty of turning their backs on their greatest potential asset — the educated individual, prepared to make his full contribution to the nation's health, welfare and development.

Inside The Report

By NORM CHALMERS

Chairman Toronto Massey Committee

Should students ask the Canadian government to spend nearly $5,000,000 annually to help up to 9,400 of them meet their bills for fees, board and books by a national system of scholarships and bursaries?

THAT'S THE QUESTION which will confront most of the college and faculty student organizations on the campus in the next few weeks. On January 13th the SAC answered it with a resounding "yes", and asked the organizations it represents to do the same on their own account.

The resolution-passing marathon is all part of a year-in, year-out drive Canadian students are likely to be asked to keep up for some time. Its object: implementation of the Royal Commission on National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences proposal for federally financed scholarships and bursaries on a significant scale.

SPECIFICALLY, THE COMMISSION — the "Massey" Commission — proposed that there be granted each year:

(1) 100 Canada Scholarships, worth $1,000 per year and tenable for four years;

(2) 250 National Scholarships, worth $500 per year, and tenable for four years;

(3) 2,000 bursaries of $500 per year tenable for four years and awarded partly on the basis of financial need; and (4) that a student loan fund be established.

IF THE NEED FOR SUCH a scheme to help meet the ever-present shortage of trained and educated men and women needed to be demonstrated, the Commission itself supported its proposals with evidence enough.

For example, the Report's authors cited (p. 356) a statement prepared by the Canadian Manufacturer's Association in 1950. The CMA did not merely repeat the all-too-familiar fact that only three (and not necessarily the right three) of any 100 students who start primary school graduate from University. They also added their own finding that 54% of those who drop out do so for economic reasons.

NO LESS THAN 143 of the briefs presented to the Commission during its hearings throughout Canada asked for the establishment of a National system of scholarships and bursaries.

By adding some 9,400 students, the Massey scholarships would help not only the brilliant but also some of the intelligent all-round people who often contribute most in the end. To-day as the Reports notes (p. 151) "Only a few undergraduate awards from private sources are now given to allow those who are unusually gifted to secure that preliminary education which is essential to higher studies of a professional or specialized nature".

THE COMMISSION NOTES the success of the Dominion-Provincial vocational training program in the University field and cites widespread provincial contributions in excess of the required 50% as an indication of the need for an expanded federal student-aid program.

It may be that the Massey recommendations should be only the first step in a movement toward some sort of all-inclusive scheme akin to DVA, which would make the personal expense of higher education a community responsibility. This is a matter for discussion and debate. Meanwhile, implementation of the Massey proposals would fill a clear and widely felt need.

THE DRIVE TO HAVE these recommendations put into effect is obtaining widespread support on the campus. Unfortunately, the Communist group, for reasons of its own, is trying to attach itself to this bandwagon. However, there is no reason to believe that University of Toronto students will be frightened away from support of a necessary program by the LPP attempt to appropriate it for itself.

Endorsation of the College and Faculty resolutions in coming days and weeks will help bring some new pressure on the government at Ottawa to put the Massey proposals into effect. It will also serve to rally student support for any further useful action that student representatives, in consultation with their constituents and with the University administration, may propose.

Campaign For Scholarships

(This article was compiled by a Varsity Staff Reporter who has done a series of stories on Student action on the Massey Report.)

By CAROL HOFFMAN

Student concern with the national scholarship question is not a new development. There has been student activity in that direction now for several years. This year the National Federation of Canadian University Students is trying to bring that interest and activity to a head in an effort to persuade the federal government to do something about it.

Back in 1947 scholarship inquiry committees and groups were initiateted by NFCUS. In 1948, student committees were formed to look into the cost of education for the average university student in Canada. One of these committees operated at the University of Toronto.

It was decided at the NFCUS annual conference in 1949 that the Federation should present a brief on "Federal Aid To Education" to the Royal Commission on Arts, Science, and Letters (the Massey Commission). One section of this brief dealt with scholarships and grants-in-aid to university students wih high scholastic standing. Jack Madden, then at the University of Toronto, was one of the students contributing to this portion.

"All Canadian university setudents should have a part in preparing our brief," said NFCUS National President at the time. The brief was presented to the Commission in January 1950. It can be supposed that the NFCUS brief had a definite effect on the Massey recommendation for the establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries.

Since the presentation of the Massey Report in 1951, students across Canada, working through NFCUS, have been trying to push the implementation of the scholarship clauses. Last year, as part of the program to bring this about, a delegation from NFCUS met with Prime Minister St. Laurent. The Prime Minister said that at that time nothing could be done.

This year NFCUS is making a special effort to arouse student interest and support behind the movement. A nation-wide campaign is planned for February to build public opinion to a peak. Then a brief will be presented to Ottawa. NFCUS has also applied to be an observer at the meeting of the National Confederation of Canadian Universities, an organization of all the heads of university administrations. At this meeting there will be a discussion of the Massey Report and of student affairs in general.

The Students' Administrative Council of Toronto recently passed a resolution in support of the present NFCUS campaign. They requested all student organizations in all faculties and colleges of the University to place themselves publicly on record in support of immediate establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries.

Several student organizations have already supported the SAC resolution. Of all those who have considered it, only the Engineers defeated the resolution. They passed a motion to consider the matter at a later date, when more information should be available.

Beautiful 7-Cent Coffee

These five beauties are some of the 39 visiting Chemistry students from Mexico who are on a flying visit to the Toronto campus. The aromatic coffee being poured is the Vic Union's famous seven cent coffee. Mexico grows some coffee, so, as you can easily see, it is a well-thought-out and executed picture. These pretty lassies were greatly intrigued by Toronto's snowfall. We're glad somebody likes it.

Mexican Students Pay Short Visit Shown Wallberg

By AUBREY GOLDEN

Engineers lined the corridors of the Wallberg building yesterday morning and stared in wonder as 32 pretty Mexican beauties were seen in the hallowed halls. (There were also seven men students.) The occasion was the visit to Toronto of 39 Chemistry students from Mexico.

Here on a day-and-a-half flying visit, they made a surprise call in order to present a book on the Mexican Research regarding the last resting place of Azetc hero Emperor Cuauhtemoc to Prof. J. J. Rae of the Chemistry dept. While they were at it, they presented him with a medal in commemoration of the Fourth Centennial of the University of Mexico.

They are visiting the United States and Canada in a trip which will take the 32 girls and seven boys, all in Chemistry courses, to every major university and laboratory possible. The engineers weren't the only ones happy to see the Wallberg, for the visitors enjoyed it immensely.

"I think it's one of the largest, best equipped chemistry departments which we saw and we've seen quite a few, in the States and here!" said Graciela Hollumeau, one of the few who spoke English.

There was no doubt as to who supported the University of Mexico and other ones down there, they said. The government was always there, even to build them "University City" which is just what its name implies.

They commented on our specialization, saying, "Our courses are more general, you specialize more than we do". Many of them pointed out that they have taken three different courses in chemistry, and are now ready to go into one field by means of practical work.

Our recent snowfall held their interest a great deal. While their bus driver was painting mental pictures of snowless Mexico, Josephina Reyes asid "It was very thrilling, I have never seen it before." Some of the others busied themselves in a snowball fight which turned into a free-for-all.

They made the trip in a gaily-colored bus for the nominal, overall fee of $250.00. It sported cartoons of students with various names under them, such as "Sam" and the names of some of the places they visited, arousing a great deal of comment in front of the Wallberg, where it was parked.

They spent the latter half of yesterday afternoon being shown around by the Mexican Consul, Eduardo Prado and they finally ended up in the studios of CBLT where they were interviewed on Tabloid. Previously they had visited the Vic Union, sampling some of the seven-cent coffee (theirs is much cheaper), the provincial legislature and Casa Loma.

They will probably leave for Niagara Falls sometime today and when they leave it will be with a good impression of Toronto. One of them said, "Toronto is the most friendly city we have found, the people are so warm and kind."

Toronto's answer, in the words of a downtown secretary who met them coming off an elevator is, "Saludos Amigos" and "It's nice to see someone who at least looks warm."

Will Call Open Meeting To Discuss WUA Fate

Dissolution may be the fate of the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College. An open meeting of the WUA will be called for next Thursday. If there is a quorum present (20 students including executive members are required for a quorum) a motion recommending the dissolution will be presented.

The motion will be that the WUA be dissolved and the executive with it. The entire executive threatened to resign en masse after yesterday's meeting. However, they decided to wait instead for next Thursday's meeting.

"If the women in UC don't wat a WUA. fine," said Shirley Ried, president of the WUA. "They can come and say so next Thursday, and let the boys take over all the activities of UC."

She said that this feeling had been building up for a long time, but that yesterday's meeting brought it all to a head. Three important issues had to be decided at the meeting, and people had to be dug out of libraries, the JCR, and dragged from the streets in order to obtain a sufficient quorum to open the meeting. The meeting did not begin till 4:45, although it was called for 4:00 p.m.

The President said that at the last meeting there was scarely a sufficient quorum to pass a resolution concerning scholarships for the women of UC. "Since there are about 500 women in UC, the fact that only about six outside of the executive turned up is rather disgraceful," she said.

"We don't mind working if the people want us to, but they obviously don't," she continued. "They don't care where their money goes. It's rather ridiculous to take the money out of their fees, if they're not interested in how it's spent." One way the money is spent is in free food at Red and White Nights.

She said that the executive could resign immediately but that they felt they should work through an open meeting. Because they feel obligated to finish their work this year, with all the events coming up, they will ask for a mandate to stay on. If they don't receive this, they will resign.

"The executive does not want to be ministerpreted," Shirley emphaisized. "If we resign there will still be an Arts Ball, Grad Banquet, Athletic Banquet, and women's athletics at UC."

She went on to say that the proposed resignation would mean the end of women's debates and an all-male parliament. If the WUA is dissolved, the women will have no say in anything, she emphasized. This will affect next year. There will be no representative for the Students' Administrative Council or the External Affairs Committee.

"The 'apathetic' women of UC will have to form a new association if they want any representation," Miss Ried stated. This, of course, will only be necessary if the WUA is dissolved or if the executive resigns.

"We could do what we wanted if we wanted to," the President said. "We could be completely dictatorial. We don't have to call these open meetings. Although we are elected, we have no mandate."

"It is an appalling situation," she declared. "This issue goes bepond the realm of UC women's government." She said that the theory was the same for any elected government of the world.

Colleges Support Motion For Massey Scholarships

Three more College Associations have approved the SAC sponsored resolution endorsing the Massey Report recommendation for the establishment of a federally-financed system of national bursaries and scholarships. This raises to seven the number of colleges or faculties who have supported the scholarships plan.

The Women's Undergraduate Association of UC approved the SAC resolution without discussion at their meeting yesterday afternoon. On Wednesday the St. Michael's men's society also approved without discussion the scholarship plan. Both associations endorsed the project without a single dissenting vote.

In a meeting held on January 21, the St. Michael's College women's association also endorsed the Massey resolutions. In the debate on the motion, the objections of Quebec to federal aid and the need for a national, rather than local scholarships, were the two main points that received the most discussion. The motion was approved unanimously.

Strikeline Pranksters At Ubyssey

Vancouver (CP) — Jan 28 — Vancouver newspapers, radio stations and some UBC students were fooled by a practical joke on Wednesday as rumors circulated that Ubyssey reporters had gone on strike. (The Ubyssey is the student paper of the University of British Columbia.)

The pranksters, four imaginative Ubyssey staffers, picketed the Ubyssey office with signs labelled, "Editorial Board unfair, Editor Allen Fotheringham is a blue nosed reactionary, snob, and the masses revolt." The reporters paraded through the library and advised students not to cross the picket line as they had received certification as a union by AMF president Ivan Feltham. Strikers enlisted the campus CCF to teach them labor songs.

Spokesmen for the Ubyssey called the Newspaper Guild, and said they wanted the average student reporter to have more say in the running of the paper.

The campus correspondent for the Vancouver Province took the strike seriously and handed in the story. Radio stations and wire services picked up the story. Soon the rumor spread that Ubyssey would be forced to shut down.

Campus Beauty Contests

Something Missing

There is something wrong with campus beauty contests. Either that or the aesthetic judgment of the combined male Varsity staff is for the birds. We will not, cannot, must not believe that, so there's something wrong with beauty contests.

Fortunately, at Toronto we are not too hampered with problems of this calibre and import. Perhaps it is because there are so many beauties running around here the people who run these shindigs have trouble supplying the demand for judges. Perhaps. Or it may be that Toronto beauties are too shy and retiring, and downright realistic to enter contests.

Happily, the other college newspapers (there are a few) make up for this dearth of pulchritude by running platoons of snapshots of naive, smiling hopefuls trying for all sorts of titles from "Queen of the Course" (she's usually had it) to "Queen of the Fencers at Western." These happy little pictures usually appear about a week in advance, and some of the girls even look passable. From an Arts course, anyway. Fate could not have been so unkind as not to give them at least some brains.

When the photogenic page in the alien daily arrives weekly, it is cut out and pasted up on the wall of the office. There it hangs, serving its useful purpose of covering up the holes in the wall, and incites controversies. Up to the wall trot editors and reporters, department after department cover the beat, and give their male opinion of the winner. The "winner" is circled and the name of the department which did the picking (news, sports, etc.) put beside it. The "winner" never wins.

The "queen" in each case, invariably, is some murkey turkey whom everyone has missed in the rush. So there is something wrong with beauty contests.

Only once, and once only did a choice of a Varsity staffer make good. She won a "Miss Home Economics IV" in some obscure little college in Nova Scotia. The only trouble was he picked her as the ugliest of the lot. And we all agreed.

Diefenbaker Will Address Tory Caucus

The National Convention of the Progressive Conservative Student Federation will be held in Toronto on February 5, 6 and 7, it was announced yesterday. During the convention, a luncheon meeting will be addressed by John Diefenbaker, MP for Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.

"Mr. Diefenbaker is one of the more prominent members of the House of Commons. He is well-known for his defence of civil liberties," said Joe Slogan, Vice-President of the Federation.

The luncheon meeting will be held on Saturday noon at the Albany Club, said Slogan. Students who wish to attend may reserve tickets by phoning Joe Slogan, II Dents. The Convention hosts are the Conservative clubs of the University of Toronto and Osgoode Hall.

The U of T PC club will hold a meeting to elect its delegates to the forthcoming national convention. Resolutions will also be drafted for the convention. The meeting will be held at 8:00 p.m. on Sunday, Jan. 31, at the home of Ann Cooling, I Law.

Will Judge 3 Quartets On Tuesday

The first preliminary of the fifth annual Hart House Quartet Contest will be held next Tuesday at 1:30 p.m. in the East Common Room, said Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden.

McDowell said last night that three of the seven quartets entered so far will sing Tuesday. They will be notified by telephone or mail regarding days they will compete, he said.

The quartets will be unaccompanied, McDowell said, and they do not have to sing barbershop style. They will be judged on five factors: harmony accuracy, balance and blend, voice expression, song arrangement and stage presence.

Hart House plans to obtain the services of a member of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, Inc., as one of the three judges. Contest rules will not be as strict as barbershop contests, McDowell added.

Quartets entered to date include the tabs: The Singing Sigs, The Four Spades—Jack, Queen, King and Sam, The Four Bishops, The Fresbmen Three plus One, The 5T5—4, and The Minims.

Winners in the successful quartet each receive a silver replica cup. A larger cup, with the name of the winning quartet inscribed on it, is retained in the House.

Any other quartets who are interested in entering the annual contest may contact Garth McDowell in the Undergraduate Activities Office, Hart House.

This is a picture of the new UC Men's residence. There are no men in it yet, because it is not finished. It will probably be finished in September, and then there will be men in it. Take note, girls, because UC men are far superior to all other types of men on the campus. As the old saying goes, "Women who have tried camels prefer UC men 10 to 1."

Regional NFCUS Meeting To Convene This Weekend

This weekend at McMaster there will be an important Regional NFCUS conference. Toronto is sending three delegates, Jane Farquharson, III UC, Ron Price, II Vic, and Pete Miller, II UC. The conference begins Saturday at noon and closes on Sunday evening. It will be chaired by Howie Ellsworth, Ontario Regional President of NFCUS, who is a student of McMaster.

The agenda of the conference is an impressive one.

First, delegates will discuss the reports by delegates from the regional universities on the activities of the local NFCUS committees. Then the Massey Report and its recommendations on Universities will be discussed. Delegates will discuss how they can get effective action from the Canadian government on the implementation of the Massey Report, rather than have it kicked about the campuses of Ontario. They will also discuss how to get more support from the students in Ontario universities.

The idea of a National Student Week will be discussed. This has been attempted before but was not too successful.

The National Art Competition will be discussed. It is reported that there has been a very good response from Toronto students and the students of Ontario generally. A good response is general throughout Canada except for a complete lack of response from the Maritimes, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan. Next week there will be an exhibit of Toronto's entries in the competition in the Debates Room of Hart House.

The conference will discuss NFCUS scholarship Survey which has been making a survey of the universities of Canada to see just what scholarships are available at the various universities in Canada.

They will also discuss projects for next year. The Massey Report is again high on the lost. Pete Miller one of the delegates said, "The Toronto delegation will suggest that next year more emphasis be put on the implementation of the Massey Report. We feel that this is the most important project that NFCUS can undertake at this time."

The National Short Story Contest, which closes this weekend; the international exchange weekends between Canada and the US; and the International Activities Commission will also be discussed. The conference will be strictly a business affair; apart from the business there is no other program planned.

Suggest HH Music Room As Engineer's Lunchroom

The problem of how to accommodate hungry skulemen at lunch time was the subject of an article in Toike Oike, the spasmodic publication of the Engineering Society.

The dilemma arises out of insufficient accommodation at Hart House and in the Engineering buildings. The article stated that a recent plan proposed by Warden McCulley was to change the Hart House Tuck Shop into a Coffee Shop which would reduce the capacity of the eating facilities in Hart House and thereby do the engineers out of a sure place to eat.

More engineers are bringing their lunches to school now so that even with the present facilities in Hart House it is very crowded, said the article. It said there had been a suggestion that the Debates Room or the Music Room could be turned into a lunch room, as these rooms are relatively empty during the lunch hour.

The writer said that there was little or no room in any of the Engineering Buildings at present and then the Board of Governors would not like to see the Engineers remain too isolated as "any contact they have with other Faculties or Colleges is to their (the engineer's) definite advantage."

The article called for some definite move on the part of the Board of Governors to alleviate the problem, suggesting the Music Room or Debates Room as possible solutions to the problem. It is thought that it would cost little to change these two rooms over to lunch rooms.

Morning Fire Delays Paper

Hoses which were stretched across the road to the scene of the fire, delayed the buses carrying the papers for some time. Estimated loss from the fire was $100,000.

The Arts Type

By BOB BROWN

Winter is here. Is it ever! Gee whiz, when I got up this morning I never thought I'd make it down to this old place! But just as I was going to turn over and go back to sleep, Ma came up the stairs.

"Get up, Bob. You're not going to sleep in just because you're fool enough to stay out all night working on some stupid school paper."

So I got down to school—the Ec. Building—about 9:30. I wasn't really late, 'cause the prof. had got himself stuck in a snowbank somewhere out in East York, and he didn't get there till about 9:15. He was lecturing on Political Science. At least, I think he was as I got sorta tired and dozed off for a while. Gee whiz, those wooden benches are hard.

Well anyway, all I remember this prof. saying was that the US Supreme Court decision upholding the Mann Act prohibiting the transportation of women across state lines for immoral purposes was extending the Interstate Commerce clause of the Constitution to Interstate Intercourse. And we got a test in this fool subject, too. I wish the professors would talk so I could understand them. Gee whiz.

And then I took a book back to the darn old library. It was a bit late—only one day, and they made me pay a fine of fifty whole cents. I don't think that was fair. I hadn't even read their darn ol' book.

By then it was about 10:15 or thereabouts. I went down to Hart House. It was sorta cold, and the snow was still coming down. I don't like it when it's damp and cold. So I stayed down in Hart House Tuck Shop till about twelve. It was only statistics that I was missing, and you know statistics is sorta dull anyway. And anyway, I don't like the lecturer. He only gave me 22 in the term test. He said that I wasn't applying myself. The creep!

Anyway, I ran into some of the boys, and we went up to Bloor St. for a quick one. It asn't very quick, but you know how things are. When I and the boys were up there, we got to talking about that editorial in The Varsity that had said that you shouldn't ought to study too much, and you should get interested in extra-curricular things. We all agreed with it. Gee, I hope that I haven't been doing too much of this studying business. I don't really think so though.

Well, anyway, by that time it was about 2:30. I had a lecture in economics at 4:00, but who the hell goes to 4:00 o'clock lectures? I also had an essay that was due the next day, but the prof. is a good head; he won't mind if it's a bit late, so I didn't bother getting a book out of the library to write it out of. Besides, I was still sorta mad at that fool library. So I went home.

It was still snowing when I got off the street car. Gee whiz, I guess winter is really here.

Fiendish Council RAPES Innocent Budget

The Varsity is celebrating its new transition from poverty to penury with a hard times party. Dress will be dirty dungarees, but, since many staffers may be unable to afford them, informal dress will be acceptable. There will be refreshments, consisting of Fred Ross's boots, stewed as a concession to Varsity tradition. No one else will be. Entertainment will feature the comedy team of Anco and Loucks, singing such favourites as "I got plenty of nothing" and "Brother, can you spare a Time?"

Choose Reps In Nominations To HH Posts

Nominations for the annual Hart House committee elections will be held next month, Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, announced last night.

"However, now's the time to begin pondering as to whom you want to represent you and your college or faculty on the committees," he said. He emphasized the importance of naming good men to the committees. Some 72 positions are open.

The various committees are made up predominantly of undergraduates. However, there are always a few grads and faculty members, the idea being to break down the barriers of the university community by informal contact.

Student initiative is the most important thing about the committee system, Warden Joseph McCulley stressed last night.

Because the students are in the majority in all the committees, the Warden points out, the initiative must come from them. They can outvote, and often do outvote, their senior members.

Afraid To Antagonize IUS Set Up No Western Office

(This is the second of a series of articles designed to acquaint the Canadian student with the history and organization of the Co-ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students — CoSec.)

By RICH ANCO

The westren student unions, with a background of frustrated attempts to co-operate with the International Union of Students (IUS), turned their energies toward setting up some form of co-operation between themselves. In October of 1950, the unions of Sweden, Norway and Denmark issued a joint invitation calling for an international student conference to be held in Stockholm from December 17 to 21, 1950. This meeting laid the foundations of an international secretariat which was to materialize two years later.

In an atmosphere confused by a curious mixture of positive and negative approaches to a difficult international situation, representatives from 21 national student unions assembled at Stockholm. All attended following recognition of the fact that the IUS stubbornly continued to follow the Communist line and that the IUS did not serve as an instrument for the promotion of practical student activities.

However, the invitation from the Swedish, Norwegian and Danish unions stated emphatically that the Stockholm Conference was not being called with the purpose of serving as a platform for general political discussions but only to further the development of practical student co-operation.

The 21 national unions of students representing the United States, Canada, Britain, Scotland, France, the Netherlands, Belgium, West Germany, Austria, Denmark, Sweden, New Zealand, Switzerland, Turkey, Finland, Iceland, South Africa and others determined a program of activities for operation at the international level.

One very significant decision, however, to the agenda was made by the majority of representatives present by prior agreement. No new international international union was to be organized in opposition to the IUS.

Carrying this principle to the limit, the Stockholm delegates refused to set up the minimum structure necessary to co-ordinate the program of practical activities developed during the meeting. The Conference resolved "that future co-operation between national unions shall be based on the principle of delegating responsibility for the carrying out of specified projects directly from the Conference to national student organizations or groups of such organizations."

The Stockholm Conference made four points: no new organization of students was to be formed;

(2) no formal statement was to be sent to IUS from the group regarding their aims and purposes;

(3) another conference was to be held in twelve months;

(4) a program of practical activities to be undertaken by separate national unions was drawn up. These were to include work on a survey of student institutions, work on technical assistance programs for underdeveloped areas, and work on information and exchange.

The reasoning behind the attitude of the framers of the conference was that any new organization would be, by its nature, anti-IUS, and would involve the unions in international politics. So strong was this feeling that it blocked any move to set up a co-ordinating office, or even to allow one national union to assume responsibility for the co-ordination of the international program.

Hospitalization Is Discussed At CCF Club

Private hospital plans do not cover the people who cannot afford to pay, and these are the people whom it is most necessary to cover, Allan Millard told a UC CCF meeting on "Welfare and Socialism" yesterday.

He said that health and welfare are a public responsibility and spoke in favor of a national health insurance scheme, as in Britain.

Speaking on the relation of the Welfare State to Socialism, Millard stated that although a certain amount of social security could be obtained under capitalism, it was necessary to remove the country from the control of private property interests to secure adequate health insurance. Only a nationalized and planned economy could ensure the full development of resources to meet the needs of the welfare of the people, he concluded.

Ballet Review

Gamboling Greeks

Wednesday night we tried to split the editorial we; but my attempt at shizophrenia did not succeed. Faced with the choice between going to the Greek Panegyris at Massey Hall and going to the Volkoff Ballet in the Forest Hill Concert Series, I decided to brave speeding tickets and go to half of each.

It is too bad that there were so few people attending the festival of Greek folk-songs and dances for it is a kind of dancing that is rarely seen and one that, to me at least, is highly attractive. To the accompaniment of an orchestra of four pieces or to one instrument, seven men and seven women danced mainly in two lines. The orchestra consisted of an oboe-like chanter, a lute, a primitive bagpipe, and a stringed instrument with an oblong box which was played right in front of the player's waist. The whole effect was weirdly like a bagpipe in a high wind.

Before intermission the group executed dances and music from the Greek provinces of Macedonia, Epirus, Thessaly and Pontos. The costumes were a variation on baggy pants, shoes with tassels, vests and blouses for the men, and black shoes, white stockings, skirts, elaborate headdresses and clinking jewellery for the women. The first number, Makedonikoi Choroi Kai Tragoudia, with a color scheme of red, black and white, was characterized by a step hop and shuffling of the feet. There was a middle section much like a dirge in which the girls started with slow motion steps and gradually accelerated. In spite of the basic simplicity of these folk-dances they have interesting foot movements and rhythms; for instance a three-four alternating with a two-four. Also the pattern of the two choruses together has a certain amount of variation.

The company performs with enthusiasm and a simplicity which testifies to the authenticity of what they do. The Pontiakoi Chorois reminded one that this kind of dancing is not very far from square dancing because of its similarity to the Virginia Reel. One of the most attractive of the costumes, is the national one with a white pleated skirt and red and blue bolero for the men. Strangely enough it does not seem effeminate for it is worn without self-consciousness in a dance tradition that is primarily male. For some of the dances of heel-tapping, pointing and turning, the musicians ran about the stage, dancing themselves while sawing furiously on straight-stringed instruments or hugging close a bagpipe, like a pig that might run away, in order to incite the dancers on faster and faster.

The effectiveness of these dances lay mostly in the precision and unpretentiousness with which they were presented.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Apparently, the kiddies over at McMaster have figured out, by a line of reasoning which we do not follow, that Varsity's athletes are to blame for the removal of the Mac football team from intercollegiate competition. A letter fom the basketball Blues' manager, Bill Stinson, is published on this page. It describes and comments upon the reception given our basketball team in Hamilton Wednesday evening.

If this typifies the sportsmanlike attitude of the McMaster students, it is time they were removed from all intercollegiate sports, not just football. This is a university league. Remember?

Needed: A Salesman

You can sell the public any product — any at all — and they'll like it. If your product is reasonably good, that's a point in your favor. All you've got to do is try.

College hockey could be sold in Toronto if we went about if the right way. In the first place, it's a commodity that people would be happy to buy. But there's so much hockey on the market these days, along with countless other forms of entertainment, that you need to use plenty of salesmanship to get a crowd. Varsity isn't getting crowds and reverse reasoning or something indicates that salesmanship is missing.

We've been at Varsity for four years now and the only exhibition games we've seen at the arena have been a couple of straight-time scrambles with local mercantile teams. In the same period of time, the Blues have played at schools like Michigan State and Michigan University, Minnesota, Colorado and others. Coming up right now is a two-week in the schedule and the best we've been able to do is an hour and a half afternoon scrimmage with St. Michael's college. Seems to us that a well-known U.S. college could have been brought in for a night game.

Admission to the hockey games couldn't be much cheaper. An ATL card will get you in free and, if you don't happen to have one of those, fifty cents will do the trick. You don't need to worry about being placed in the general admission section — you can follow the wave of economically-minded people who move into the reserved seat section after the first period.

Maybe this means the Varsity powers-that-be don't place a very high value on their hockey. If that's true, they're making a mistake. Nobody's going to balk at paying half a buck to see a hockey game. Or, if anybody does, who wants him for a fan anyway? At 50 cents a head, we'd have taken in roughly $1200 at last week's game. Six home games at that rate would pay for the hockey team with something to spare. But instead of that, the hockey team has to be one of the poor cousins living on the earnings of the football team. The fact that those football earnings may become less and less substantial makes the problem even more urgent.

The hockey team ought to be made into the biggest thing on the campus in the winter. As things stand, it would have a good chance in a contest to determine the most dispensable activity around. Maybe skating parties, the band, figure skating exhibitions and the like are a step in the right direction. But nobody appreciates for long something that comes as easily and as cheaply as a college hockey game.

A few well-promoted exhibition games might increase interest considerably. The University of Michigan, for example, plays Detroit Red Wings a couple of times during the season and hockey on that American campus outdraws basketball.

Boxers Take Over Spotlight

Lots of people thought there was plenty of fistic action going on at Maple Leaf Gardens last Tuesday evening, the night of the Walls-Harrison squabble. As far as the quantity of action is concerned, that card will be a drop in the bucket compared to what is scheduled for tomorrow's athletic night at Hart House.

For one thing, Tony Canzano's senior Varsity boxers will engage in their first meet of the season. The Blues are defending intercollegiate champions and tomorrow night's meet against the Ontario Agricultural College from Guelph will be a warmup for the intercollegiate meet, which will be held here Feb. 12 and 13.

In conjunction with the senior college meet, will be the finals in the senior interfaculty meet. Eliminations have been going on all week in the boxing room in Hart House.

Two new divisions have been added to college competition this year: 145 and 150 pounds. Mike Callaghan is Varsity's 145-pounder, while John Whyte fights at 150. Malcolm Gray gets the big assignment of replacing champion Lowell Keffer at 130 pounds. Lee Bernardie completes the list, carrying U. of T. colors in the 175-pound class.

Varsity Cagers Tackle Rochester Skyscrapers

By MOISHE REITER

It's to be a basketball weekend at the University of Toronto, with the powerful Rochester U Yellow Jackets making their first appearance in several years on the Hart House court. Their opposition will be the somewhat sagging Varsity Blues, who are groaning under a two-game losing streak. The lowly McGill Redmen started the Blues on their road to ruin last Saturday in Montreal when they managed to defeat them by an eight-point margin, and McMaster's mannerless Marauders pushed them lower still with a seven-point defeat Wednesday night in Hamilton. But Saturday night, the Blues return to Mother Varsity to refresh their strength and learn again what it feels like to play before a sportsmanlikecrowd.

Rochester, next to Harlem Globetrotters and the Niagara Purple Eagles, will be the best team to show thus far against the Blues of Varsity. Their starting five averages over 6'3" and will have, or should have, a good edge over the smaller Varsity club on rebounds. Should Lou Lukenda, George Stulac and Marv Tile be at their usual good form, however, the Yellow Jackets may have a rough time pushing them out of the picture.

Jim Armstrong, Rochester's answer to Tom Gola, though he is much shorter, standing a mere 6'5", is likely to be something of a sensation. This lofty laddie is Rochester's high point man, with a season's total of 326 points in 16 games last year. This set a university scoring record, and his field goal percentage of 58.9 per cent, rather phenomenal to say the least, (and this boy is the most) ranked him second among US smaller college players. Flanking him are diminutive Don Evangelista who reaches only to six and a half feet above sea level and half-pint Hank Cwali—a standing 6'4".

It will be one tight defence matching wits with another when the Blues meet the Yellow Jackets. Both clubs use a zone defence and on the small Hart House floor this will make things really interesting as the two teams set about breaking the other's "Maginot line". Rochester's excellent shooting will find its match, we feel sure, in Varsity's dead-eyes, who have shown a like good record on the Hart House floor.

This is a welcome home night for the Blues, who have been on the road since January 13, the night they beat McMaster 61-49. At the Saturday Athletic Night in Hart House Varsity will go into their game with their win-lost record pegged at five and six. They will be aiming at the start of a new win string. We'll be out to cheer them to it.

Both Games To Distaff Hoopers

By JANE KELLY

The womens' intercollegiate basketball squads got the season under way with a bang on Wednesday, downing McMaster twice in Hamilton. The score of the intermediate game was 34-27; while the seniors trounced Mac 29-15. Both teams looked good considering it was their first game and at not time was the outcome really in doubt.

Donna Parr sparked the intermediates with nineteen points as time after time she tallied with shots that appeared impossible. Donna proved herself equally good on set shots and driving lay-ups. Joy Taylor was second highest scorer with six points while Mary Foster notched five.

Although Varsity led right from the first basket, the play during the first half was fairly even with the ball going from end to end. A fine defensive display put on by the Toronto guards led by Anne Keith and Ruth Marshall held the score to 19-14 at half-time.

In the final quarter, a sustained drive brought Mac to within three points of the Toronto score, but Joy Taylor took the pressure off with a nice lay-up in the dying minutes of the game. Varsity got one more basket for security and on the game going aawy.

Joan McIlroy who is only four-feet eleven was the best player on the floor for Mac with eleven points while Barb Jarrett tallied nine. Their effotrs were not sufficient as U of T proved to be far the better team.

The senior contest should have been a walk-away but Varsity had difficulty finding their shooting eye in the first half. Time after time the ball bounced off the rim of the basket and sometimes three shots in succession were missed by inche. The 11-4 score at half time was hardly indicative of the superior brand of ball played by U of T.

During the third quarter the play speeded up considerably and Toronto finally got untracked and added accurate shooting to their usual fine ballhandling. McMaster play also picked up in this quarter, but close-checking by Varsity guards June Hansford and Sally Sarles prevented Mac from even coming close.

Going into the final quarter with the score at 17-12, Toronto looked like the championship team it is. Mac seemed to tire in this quarter and Varsity capitalized on almost every scoring opportunity.

The rookies on the team could harly be distinguished from the experienced players. Mary Winship, Pam Miels, Mededith Robinson, Lou Martin, and Pat Swayzie played heads-up ball throughout the game.

Shirley Roberts and Sally Wallace shared the scoring honors for Varsity with eight points each and Jane Duff tallied six. Macaluso led Mac scorers with eight points; while Jane Ralston got five.

Sports Win, Hound News

THE SPORTS STAFF HAS DONE IT AGAIN! The sports-writers successfully defended the Porter Trophy for inter-departmental basketball supremacy yesterday by knocking over the hapless news staff 53-11.

It was the most one-sided game in the history of this historic rivalry. Previously, the news staff had boasted a team that would have done well in many leagues. Paced by such stalwarts as Hopping Hugh Niblock and Frank "Set-shot" Moritsugu, they had been the scourge of the league. This year's team was weakened by the loss of many top-ranking players. Only veteran to return was the once-spectacular Rich Anco, who seems to have slowed down in recent years and is merely a shadow of the former great. Scoring stars Jerry Brown and Joe Scanlon had been given athletic scholarships at British Columbia and Carleton universities, respectively. Added to that handicap was the fact that they weren't allowed to appoint their own scorekeeper this year, a fact that had worked to their advantage in other years.

The portly Anco went scoreless and fouled out in the second quarer. Orie Loucks hooped four points and the other seven were scored by Elinor Bernstein, who starred as scorekeeper in other years. Generally, the news team was hopelessly inept.

Moishe Reiter hooped 3 points for the sportswriters and lanky Jane Kelly added the other 50.

Blues Top Irish B's In Hockey

It was the Don Cossar - Ross Woods-Johnny Akitt combination that told the story again. This threesome scored four goals at Varsity Arena yesterday afternoon as Varsity's hockey Blues decisioned St. Michael's junior "B" Buzzers 7-5 in an exhibition game.

The Blues went ahead early in the game as their experience and strength gave them a big edge on the youthful collegians. But later, the Irish speed began to pay off and they tied the game at 5-5 in the third period. Ross Woods won it for Varsity with less than three minutes to go and Johnny Akitt added an extra one in the dying moments. Don Cossar had fired two within two minutes in the first period.

Harry Boyd opened the scoring halfway through the first period, cashing in a rink-length dash by Red Stephen. Cossar made it 2-0 two minutes later, taking a pass from Woods and he made it three by firing a shot throuhg a goal-mouth scramble. After Frank Mahovitch got St. Mike's started it, Varsity added another, making it 4-1 for the first period. Ernie Bodnar scored that one, breaking into the clear after taking Pierre Perrault's pass.

The Buzzers appeared stronger in the second period and scored two quick goals. Pete Buchanan banged home Mahovitch's rebound and defenceman Ken Halloran sank a long shot. Pierre Perrault got one back for the Blues.

Mac Actions Uncalled For, Manager Claims

By BILL STINSON

Mr. Stinson is student manager of the Varsity basketball team. In this article, he comments on the conduct of the fans at Wednesday night's McMaster-Varsity game in Hamilton.

As manager of the Blue basketball team, I witnessed Wednesday night's game against McMaster Marauders. The game was a mere side attraction compared to the infantile display provided by the McMaster students during the game.

Incensed by the CIAU decision to drop McMaster from the football league, the students decided to make a scapegoat of the Varsity basketball team. As the Blue team came on the floor, they were greeted with yells and signs signifying our school's apparent desire for money. The players were bombarded with pennies, which created a definite hazard to the players.

A warning over the public address system produced no result and, throughout the game, the Varsity bench was the target for pieces of chalk.

The team does not feel they need an alibi for their defeat, as they played a hot McMaster quintet. However, I do feel the personal attacks by the crowd against the coach and several of the Toronto players were uncalled-for. Some of the language used was definitely unfit for mixed company.

Moreover, these inane actions were apparently condoned by responsible McMaster officials. In fact, we were warned that these actions might take place by one such official.

If this incident is an example of the maturity and intelligence of McMaster students, I do not think they are fit for intercollegiate competition in any sport.

Crumpeters On Spot Lose To UC Juniors

By JOHN WILSON

The Trinity College "A" hockey machine has a tall order ahead if they're going to see action in this year's interfaculty playoffs. After dropping a 4-1 decision to Junior UC in the Arena yesterday afternoon, all that's left is the old mathematical chance, and, if Pre-Meds win at 1:30 today, then the issue will be all cleared up without any more ado.

The best the Red and Black can hope for is a tie for third place with Pre-Meds. Each team has only two games left, and the Doctors have a four-point advantage.

On the other hand, Junior UC, in registering their fifth win, are now sitting high atop the standings in Group II, with eleven points. Their only remaining game is with Junior SPS and they can cinch first place with a win in that contest.

All the scoring in yesterday's game took place in the first period, which was all UC, and the Redmen came out with a 4-1 lead. Stu Passmore potted two goals to lead the UC onslaught, while Gary Banks and Jack Rogers counted the other two.

Bill Lovering was credited with the lone Trinity tally late in the period when a sliding shot from centre ice trickled past UC goalie Joe Koshan.

In the second frame, the Trinity pucksters began to show some drive, and led by hard-working forwards Bill Lovering, Pete Russell, and Mickey Marwin, kept the UC attack bottled up in their own end. However, Red and White rearguards Chris Wansborough and Al King held the Buttery Boys off, but were unable to get anything like the first-period attack started.

Great netminding by Trinity's John Goodwin, as a substitute for a sloppy defence, saved the Red and Black from what might have been a walkaway by UC.

Dave Court, playing his first game in the Red and Black uniform, was the only light in an otherwise shabby defence, which cost the Trinity club at least two goals.

As a result, Trinity still remains in last place in Group II with two lonely points, one behind Junior Vic and four behind Pre-Meds and the last playoff spot. Vic and Trinity can kill each other's chances with a tie in their next meeting, or either one can edge into third place with two wins in their two remaining games. But, as said before, Pre-Meds can settle the question with a win at 1:30 today against Junior SPS.

Baby Blues Roll

While road trips don't seem to be very profitable to the senior Blues, Varsity's Intermediate Hockey crew takes to the road with great success. They returned late last night from a two-day stint in Western Ontario, after edging the Western Mustangs 8-6 in London Wednesday and smothering Waterloo College 8-2 yesterday in the twin cities.

The bay Blues had a little bit of trouble getting used to the small ice surface in the London Arena, and came out of the first two periods of Wednesday's game with Western in the lead. Down 4-3 at the end of the second, they turned to rack up their second victory on a five-goal deluge in the third of the season.

The backbreaker came, surprisingly enough with Western enjoying a two-man advantage. With the score tied at 4-4, Don Avery pushed a neat goal into the Mustang net and Bob Primeau added another moments later for insurance.

Herb Tilson played a tremendous game on defence, while netting two goals. Bob Primeau was again the sparkplug with a hat trick and Don Wright notched two.

Joe Walker hit his stride in the Waterloo contest, striking for three goals, while hard-working Ted Rogers picked up two. Gene Robillard, Don Wright, and Johnny Adams added markers to give the Baby Blues the one-sided victory.

The Waterloo game was an exhibition contest, although they reserve the right to challenge the Intermediate champion.

Coach Wheldrake was more than pleased with the Blues' performance, and should be, as they now are sitting high atop the league with six points, four ahead of the nearest rival.

Wrestlers Travel

Varsity's senior wrestling team hits the road again tomorrow afternoon for a meet with the University of Buffalo crew. The Blues have lost only one meet this season and that to the intercollegiate champions from the University of Western Ontario.

Sally Sarles

Outstanding

By FLO MIDDLETON

Besides being one of the Medical faculty's better students, Sally Sarles is one of its most outstanding athletes. Coming to Varsity from Wellington (to the non-geography students in the crowd, it is a hamlet near Belleville), Sally entered Pre-Meds and at present is in fourth year.

Although hockey is her favorite sport, Sally has not restricted herself to chasing pucks around Varsity Arena. Like many of the girls this year, she is unable to play hockey for Meds because of the one-sport ruling of the Athletic Association and has given up hockey in order to play Senior Intercollegiate Basketball. For the last few winters, Sally has been a member of the intercollegiate hockey team and was a real spark for the Varsity women pucksters.

In the summer, it is baseball for this future doctor. Usually each summer, Sal has done an outstanding job at first base for her home-town baseball team, but last summer she was interning at a hospital in the States. Back at Varsity in the fall, she took over the pitching chores for the red and black team and was the main reason for its good standing in the intramural league.

With the close of the baseball season, Sally turned her athletic talents to basketball. Playing guard for the Med's A team, she was the backbone of this intramural championship six. In the finals at Hart House against PHE, Sally played her usual strong defensive game, helping to keep the PHE scoring power down.

After an absence of two years from Intercollegiate ball, Sally is again playing for the senior team. At McMaster on Wednesday, she was the star of the guard line with her quick defensive tactics.

Not only is Sally president of the Med's Women's Athletic Association, but she has also been on the University Athletic Directorate for the past two years. Her activities have not been confined to sports alone for Sally has found time to take part in Daffydil and be on the executive of her year.

Story Of India

Her Spiritual Heritage

India has been a popular topic of discussion recently as a result of its Independence Day, January 26. This article, a look at the human philosophy within India, is written by an Indian who is doing graduate work here in the Faculty of Engineering. First of two articles.

By RAJ MITTRA

Indian life has always teemed with problems of all nature and it has been her constant effort to arrive at a triumphant, abiding harmony through a perfect solution of all of them. Now she attempts at a movement of expansion, embracing vast spiritual horizons, to compel discords into concords and sweep forward in love and amity to the whole world.

THE GATES OF INDIA from East to West were always open which offered easy passage for human immigration from days unknown to history. "The admixture of races" in the words of C.E.M. Joad, "has had important effects on India's past history and present outlook. The first of these is a fundamental unity far more vivid and persistent than can be accounted for by the circumstance of propinquity in the same geographical area.

"Europeans live in a geographical area of nearly the same size but the wars and destruction which have disgraced European history show too clearly that the Europeans are very far from being imbued with the sense of unity which distinguishes India. We cannot, in short, speak of a 'European' with the same appropriateness as we can of an 'Indian' who in spite of differences of colour, caste, and creed looks upon all other Indians as fellow-countrymen and upon India as his home." Canada has certain resemblance in this respect, although from a different angle.

INVASION OF FOREIGN rule, the Greek, the Parthian, Hun, the robust vigour of Islam, the levelling steam-roller of British occupation, the enormous pressure of Occident have not been able to drive or crush her ancient soul and India still keeps continuity of her inner mind and soul with the India of the ages. While the earth's oldest civilizations have gone into oblivion leaving behind them nothing but monuments, India proves her indomitable vitality gained by drinking at the fountain of her ancient wisdom and spiritual achievement.

The assault of Europe was the most important event in the modern history of India. A few earthquake shocks, to be precise, a few slight tremors, and the whole land lay at the feet of foreign adventurers. The contact between India and Europe has been mutually fruitful. Europe has developed a tendency of subjectivism which has brought subtle changes in her outlook.

AND INDIA HAS FELT within her an impetus to recover her intellectual and scientific pursuits and more significantly an urge to discover the truth of her own being. The awakening of modern India after the impact of western pragmatism was delayed, however, because of the fact that Religion, which was certainly an important element in her greatness of past was tied blindly, in this period to a fixed social system which could not grow with time, and what is worse, faded towards eternalism. A skeptical and curious age followed this and she rejected her past as outworn and dead, and blindly imitated everything foreign. The latter part of the nineteenth century flashed the dawn of an era in which India rediscovered herself, her ancient vision and set on her struggle for awakening, evolution and freedom. The "first war of independence" was fought as early as 1857 which was distortedly called "the Sepoy Mutiny".

THREE GOOD SUGGESTIONS come forth to outline the steps of the future reconstruction of India. Many have the opinion that social and economic equality is the ultimate aim and religion in India stands as a hindrance to social progress. Some speak of a new civilization built by the fusion of cultures with the foreign countries with whom she comes in contact. Yet another class of people are full of faith that a greater India, recovering all that was best in her past and with new powers acquired through centuries of experience, will emerge to respond to the call of the spirit with her mission to sing to the world the message of peace and harmony.

The striking thing about the first two views is that they do not properly appreciate India's spiritual heritage, which is the keynote of Indian culture, and far less recognize its importance to her future rebuilding.

THE ACHIEVEMENT THAT crowned the mighty efforts of the West in the age of individualism whose culmination was the triumphant progress of physical sciences and external order of things was associated with the trend to plunge into a mundane sphere of life. On the other hand, India, in the medieval ages, directed herself to the knowledge of the super-physical and went to the other extreme by denying the truth, revealed by vision of ancient India, that Matter and Life are as much real as is God.

Blow The Smoke

Canada is moving up in the international student world. And it's not because of those students who, at last year's Montreal conference of NFCUS, decried the increasing emphasis on international relations.

NFCUS, at last, is realizing it has an important part to play in world affairs. It has placed itself on the Supervision Committee of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (CoSec), and with that, we suppose, it will devote a good deal of its energies to that organization.

We have always contended that NFCUS should get out into the world; but this was not the feeling of the Federation's delegates in Montreal. They felt that any idea of positively investigating a working basis with the International Union of Students was impinging on the national projects.

Now they have reversed themselves. Now they want to get into international affairs — but not if it means having anything to do with the Communist-led IUS. It's quite all right to get into CoSec, but never take seriously any attempt to work with the other half of the world, they now say.

Send an invitation to IUS to have a round-table discussion to probe possibilities of associate membership; but only use this as a smokescreen; actually, get an executive position in CoSec and do all the "real" work in that organization.

Why continue being hypocrites? Why continue contact with IUS in bad faith? Certainly IUS will be led to believe we are not sincere in desiring to co-operate with them if w go off to Istanbul and tak a leading role in the "western-led" union. NFCUS has to make up its mind if it wants to or does not want to have anything to do with IUS.

It appears, at first glance, that NFCUS has all but washed its hands of IUS. This, we have always said, is a faux pas in international student politics.

IUS has apparently — and this is underlined — made some concessions in the hopes of winning the western unions back to its fold. By refusing the challenge that has been thrown into our laps, NFCUS is showing that it has become involved in international politics and has temporarily side-stepped international student co-operation.

NFCUS sits smugly with the knowledge of its Istanbul victory. But it is a hollow victory for it is playing into the hands of IUS whose propagandists daily call for "student unity." NFCUS may have fumbled the ball in Istanbul. We feel it has.

Society Must Check Abusive Control

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In reply to the letter of Mssrs. Sugar and Hershorn in which it is claimed that because "we do not believed that the individual lives for the state, therefore why should society attempt to interfere with the religious beliefs of the parents in order to preserve the life of a child," I would like to offer the following comment.

It is an historically well-attested fact that when a religious body cuts itself off from the main stream of Christian thought throughout the centuries, setting up its own doctrine as inerrant, and refusing to acknowledge its own doctrine as inerrant, and refusing to acknowledge in any Christian body any claim to truth, then such a body invariably develops a perverted outlook, and suffers acutely from a loss in perspective. One has only to look through the pages of a Church History book to find a succession of splinter groups which have broken away from the Christian Faith at large, impelled by an excessive emphasis on one aspect of truth to the point of fanaticism, and which then gradually disappear when succeeding generations fail to think along the same line.

What I am saying in no way reflects unfavourably on Christianity as such; the automobile, generally considered a blessing to society, can also fall into the hands of those who will disregard what have generally been considered to be safe driving habits.

Now, whereas society as a whole cannot claim to be Christian, nor to be devoted to any particular ideal, it can claim to exert a steadying influence on its members, and give them a framework of security and tolerance within which they may pursue their own ends. When such ends, however, become repugnant to the state at large, surely it is reasonable to suppose that society may interfere to protect those who will bear the brunt of those ends. Why should two babies be allowed to die simply because the parents feel that the transfusion of blood is unscriptural? Surely nothing could be more repugnant to the Christian, whose religion has been the pioneer and driving force behind the institution of hospitals, and repugnant to the state at large, which spends thousand of dollars operating such things as mercy flights for Indian and Eskimos children, on the chance that lives may be saved.

Generally speaking, the parents are those through whom control should be exerted over the child; but parents as such are not infallible, and when such control is being abused, society must maintain the right to step in and protect the child until he is able to protect himself.

Halifax To Vancouver It's National - - Ballet

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Having read the article, "National Ballet Week, or a Weak National Ballet?", I feel it necessary to add a few hitherto unknown facts.

Three years ago, Miss Celia Franca, former ballerina with the Sadler's Wells in London, England, and present director of the National Ballet Company, travelled throughout Canada holding auditions for the purpose of choosing dancers for a ballet company of national status both in name and scope.

It has been my privilege to have talked to the dancers who were chosen and have learned that they left their local studios and companies due to the lethargic manner in which their executive and management went about gaining Dominion acknowledgment.

W.R.M.'s article refers to these ballet people as "the cream of the recent popular support for ballet." It is because they were the "cream" and were stagnating that the dancers left their abyss of helplessness and found sunlight through the activity of the National Ballet Guild.

If the word, 'National' in its name were fallacious, there would be no disagreement, but that its members are Canadian or New Canadians, that they do come from cities as remote as Halifax and Vancouver, and because their itinerary does take them to every part of the domain leaves no doubt that its title is applicable and well-deserved.

Professor Ernest Dale

Classics Professor Dies Suddenly

Professor Enest A. Dale of the Classics Departments of both Trinity and UC died Friday night in Hart House Theatre. He suffered a heart attack during the opening curtain of a performance of Ibsen's The Wild Duck and died a few minutes later.

A professor of Latin, he was associated throughout most of his career with the classical theatre as a director, actor and translator of ancient dramas, so that this main interest, even scholastically, lay with Greek tragedy and Roman comedy.

He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1888 and came to this university in 1912 as an instructor in Greek. He lectured at Queen's for a short time and then returned to Toronto on the staff of the Classic Department At the time of his death he had been in the department longer than any other member.

Always a driving force behind drama on the campus, he translated, directed and acted in a production of Sophocles' Antigone and in 1946 received the Canadian Drama Award.

At his death he was chairman of the Board of Syndics of Hart House Theatre and last Christmas directed and appeared in a Nativity play produced by the Arts and Letters Club. His last work at Hart House was in the University College Centenary Masque in October when he portrayed George IV.

Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University: "For many years Professor Ernest Dale was a central figure in the University community. He was a gifted teacher, an ardent supporter of, and active participator in many dramatic activities; friend and counsellor of colleagues and students and an outstanding lay spokesman for his church. In all that he did, he united the thoughtfulness and learning of the scholar with the energy and sense of purpose of the man of action. With his sudden death, the University of Toronto, particularly the two colleges that he served, Trinity and University College, and Hart House Theatre, of whose Board of Syndics he was the chairman, has suffered a great loss."

Professor R. J. Getty, Head of the Classics Department, UC: "The passing of Professor Dale is a great loss to the Department of Classics as well as to the other activities in which he took part. He was a very loyal and faithful colleague and a first rate scholar".

Professor G. M. A. Grube, Head of the Classics Department, Trinity: "As the holder of a joint appointment (the only one of its kind), between UC and Trinity, students of both colleges attended his lectures. He was a friend to them as well as a teacher. He will be very much missed by both colleges and through his outside contacts will be missed in the cultural life of Toronto as well."

Professor F. C. A. Jeanneret, Principal, University College: "UC has lost its oldest professor in point of service, and one of its most esteemed. He was a fine representative of that broader type of scholarship, still more typical of Britain and the Continent than of this side. He was an active and enthusiastic exponent of the humanities, classical and modern, a zealous student of the drama, a lover of nature and a devout churchman. He will be greatly missed as a teacher, a colleague and a friend."

Students Stranded At Caledon As Snow Blocks Roads Out

Snow-blocked roads forced some students who attended the World University Service seminar at the Caledon Hills Form this weekend to find their own way back to Toronto. Of five cars that took 34 students up to the farm on Saturday, not one had moved last night at 10:00 p.m., and 12 students had stayed behind waiting to take them out.

Chairman of the Host Committee, Jane Firstbrook, IV UC, told The Varsity last night by telephone that driftin snow had blocked the sideroads overnight.

The Caledon farm is a few miles from the highway serving the district, and it was this road, she said, that had been blocked. Only one snow-plough services the sideroads in the area, and it had not reached the Caledon Farm until about nine o'clock last night. Even then, the only road open was one by an indirect route to the north, she said.

One of the students who found his way back to Toronto, Bosco Loncarevic, III SPS, said the drifts were from six to eight feet deep in places. He had skied in from the highway on Saturday, and had had no difficulty in getting out yesterday.

The other students who came back walked to the road, and either hitch-hiked back or took the bus, said Miss Firstbrook. Those who remained stayed to bring back the cars. They had had everything packed, ready to leave but had unpacked it all to get an evening meal. At the time of The Varsity interview last night they had not yet packed up, and had not decided whether they would return during the night, or wait till early this morning.

Painters Toil On Water Tower

Mantoba (CUP) — Suspicion has been cast on the faculty of commerce with the appearance of the letters C.O.M. emblazoned in red on the University of Manitoba water tower.

The letters were first noticed Tuesday morning by the more observant students with 8:40 classes. At press time no clues as to the identity of the painters or the purpose of the art work have been found.

While criticism of their art work must be severe, acknowledgment of their bravery and determination must be given.

Endicott, 'Red' Dean Are Effigy Victims As Students Protest

University students last night patrolled Toronto's Massey Hall area with effigies of the "Red" Dean of Canterbury and Dr. James Endicott, president of the Canadian Peace Congress, dangling from the back of a red truck. Members of the Association for the Liberation of Ukraine (SVU), the students said they were protesting the meeting of the Peace Congress being held in Massey Hall.

One of the students, W. Burghardt-Khen. I Modern Languages and Literature, distributed pamphlets describing the Peace Congress as "an agency of our neighbour to the north".

The Congress, frequently called a Communist-front organization, held a mass meeting last night in "support of a negotiated peace." No trouble resulted as a result of the appearance of the truck in front of the Hall.

The pamphlet went on to describe the others who attended the conscious agents who were the core and the driving force of the Peace Congress. "The false front is just a camouflage," it read, "while they are quite conscious of the real role this false front agency plays in Moscow's plans."

The pamphlet went on to describe the others who attended the meeting as follow travellors. "This second group is, however, of tremendous importance to the Red bosses for they do a great service in propagating views, which tend to paralyze the resistance of the average citizenry, of which they, after all, are part, Their importance lies in the fact that they are not conspirators, but plain citizens, who can influence public opinion far more easily than a small group of notorious underground bosses."

It declared that Russia had not peaceful intentions. Imperialism has become the second nature of the Russian, it added.

Members of the Association for the Liberation of the Ukraine last night protested the meeting of the Canadian Peace Congress being held in Massey Hall. Effigies of both the Red Dean of Canterbury and Dr. James Endicott were constructed on the back of the panel truck shown here, and were driven through the downtwon area. No distrubance occurred as a result.

UBC Students Burn Effigy Of BC Mayor

Victoria, B.C., Feb. 1—Another fiery chapter in the story of effigy burnings on Canadian college campi was written here last Friday night. Some 100 students from Victoria College, an affiliate of the University of British Columbia, burned an image of Victoria's Mayor Claude Harrison.

The demonstration was protesting Mayor Harrison's statement last Tuesday that he favored burning all subversive books on the shelves of the city's public library.

The mayor's effigy was drenched in gasoline and burned in less than a minute as the students danced and sang "So Long, it's Been Good to Know You".

The students seemed to be supported at least in principle by B.C. Premier Bennett, who issued a statement earlier in the day, scoring Harrison's plans. Book-burning is "a lot of nonsense", according to the premier, who stated that the 250,000 books in the provincial library would not be subject to any investigation.

"I am 100 per cent. opposed to what people call McCarthyism and witch-hunting", the premier added.

Social Workers' Conference Here

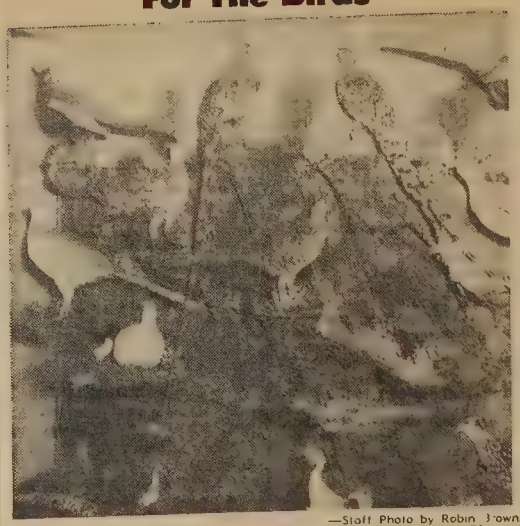
The University of Toronto will be the site of not one but two international conferences this summer. The seventh International Conference of Social Work will be held in Toronto from June 27 till July 2. As well, the International Conference in Mental Health will be here in August.

About 3,000 people will be coming to the social work conference. Approximately 1,000 will be from Canada; the rest will be from 50 countries all over the world. Some will be official delegates from governments, some private individuals, and some representatives of voluntary organizations.

The purpose of the conference is to make an assessment of the physical and welfare needs of people throughout the world. It will be a pooling of ideas and concepts for the betterment of human welfare. The conference will bring together all welfare agencies the world over and co-ordinate their work.

"This is an International Conference of social workers, independent, non-governmental, non-political, non-secetrian, and voluntary," said Professor Hendry, of the School of Social Work.

"Most of the countries of the world need social welfare," he said. "They are different in ideology but the same in dire need. There are no distinctions in poverty, disease, famine, or ignorance."



In the three days previous to the International Conference, there will be a Canadian Conference on Social Work. About 1,000 Canadian social workers from all parts of Canada will attend, of whom 500 will make up part of the Canadian delegation to the International Conference.

The theme of the Canadian conference will be human values and basic security. How Canada can preserve the values contributing to the well-being and happiness of her people, and whether these values are those of dollars and cents will be dabated.

The Canadian conference will bring together all the welfare interests in Canada. It will clarify the views on the Canadian situation; then these views will be presented at the International conference.

An International Conference of the Schools of Social Work will follow the Seventh International Conference. The purpose of this conference is to consider what has been done at the preceding one, and its importance in training social workers.

Open Drive For Jews Last Thurs.

The immigrants who have been pouring into the parched sands of Israel, are not the "Miami Holiday seekers", but "persecuted, uprooted, pushed, poor Jews" from 72 national states said Mr. Gedalia Zakiff last Thursday night.

Footloose journalist and Zionist impressario, Mr. Zakiff, officially opened the United Jewish Appeal on the Varsity camjus. Mr. Zakiff emphasized that Israel cannot be understood without "imagination" in regard to its true historical perspective, as Israel is now only a state; not a nation. National cohesion will only become a reality when the multifarious cultural groups are assimilated in cultural unity.

Jewry, said Mr. Zakiff, is not one single cultural group, but a religious philosophy binding innumerable nationalities. This revolutionary Isreali experiment bringing such a widely diversified group of humanity together in the heart of the hostile desert is indeed an epoch of history.

Five years ago, said Mr. Zakiff, there were only 600,000 Jews in the Israeli area; now 1,500,000 Jews have gathered from 72 nations. The financial problems are acute since these people are the "poor brothers" of Jewry. Furthermore, the expense of carrying on war with the Arab League is far in excess of Isreal's budget.

He added, it is the duty and benefit of every single Jew the world over, whether Zionist or not, to support this new heartland of Jewish culture. If the Arab invader, as Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia recently threatened, wipes Israel from the flats of Palestine, it will indeed be a dark day for the entire Jewish world.

Is SPS Too Liberal? Toike Oike Has Forum

A forum conducted by the Toike Oike asked several promienent faculty members of both Arts and Engineering faculties the question: "Have the courses in Engineering been liberalized too much?"

Warren Main, a Lecturer in Applied Economics in Engineering Business, said, "In a crowded curriculum room for 'frill' courses has been used sparingly. The student, geared to a rigid schedule, seems unable to devote the energy required to derive benefit from the Arts courses, and in many cases is, unwilling to 'aste time' on what he regards as marginal, though possibly interesting fields." He added that "Enormous classes, a grudging response, and attitude on the part of the lecturer that this is another chore, do not provide the proper background for a successful course."

Professor E. A. Allcut, in the Mechanical Engineering department said, "An engineering graduate should be more than a technician. His training should be as broad as possible, so that he would be able subsequently to acquit himself with credit, not only within his chosen profession but in the world generally". He also said that in 1943 the best engineering courses in the United States had no less than 18 per cent of their courses devoted to liberal arts.

Marcus Long, Associate Professor of Philosophy said, "The Engineer is first and last a human being who should learn something of the cultural ideas os necessary for the full development of a significant personality. He is also a very important member of society whose contributions to the community and nation will be much greater if informed."

Mr. W. I. Turner, President and General Manager of Canadian Controllers Ltd., (2T5), said, "A well educated man, whether professional or otherwise, should have a good grounding, at university level, in the Classics, the Humanities, Philosophy, iHstory and Human Relations. This can be done prior to or concurrent with his professional training in the physical sciences. In today's society the Engineering Profession is being accepted on an equal level to the others, such as Theology, Law and Medicine. Therefore, more is expected of the Engineer in the community and he must be prepared to take his place and accept responsibilities that were not considered in the earlier days of Engineering. He is assumed to be a well educated man with a University degree and not one who has just learned a lot of formulae and scientific facts in a Trade School," he said.

L. E. Jones, Associate Professor of Mechanical Engineering said that too often engineers "retire behind their protective wall of handbooks and smugly ponder how well they fill their desingy". "I would prefer to take a little time to stand on the wall and look at the horizon—and if that is not available, I would settle for the people around me, among whom and with whom I live. Surely, as members of the community, they have problems which could be solved by other basic fundamentals, still applied with the analytical skill and intellectual honesty for which the engineer is noted. Let me be usful in technical matters, certainly; but let me have, I pray, enough vision to see, enough courage to act, and enough skill to succeed, that the world's ills may be lessened for my having journeyed through," Jones said.

Professor Triontis, Lecturer in Economics said: a course can be "conservative" without being narrow. Engineering curricula sometimes tend to be overloaded with "engineering"; students are "taught" how to "make a living". Yet "life is more than meat", and young men need much guidance and enlightenment on the art of "thinking" and "living". It might be interesting for the University to enquire of each graduating student his philosophy of life and his purpose during his short stay on this planet. This should help in forming an opinion about the present course in Engineering—and other courses too he said.

Special Bible Gets Showing

The only Coronation Bible in Canada will be on display from 12:30 till 3:00 p.m. in Hart House library today till a week this Friday.

The Bible is number 17 of 25 printed in Great Britain for the coronation of Her Majesty, Elizabeth II. It is a replica of that upon which the Queen made her coronation oath.

This recent addition to the Library's collection of rare and valuable books is a gift of the Massey foundation. It is richly bound in red Morocco, and bears on its cover the royal cipher and crowns.

It will be on display outside, on a table, from February 1 till 12. After that it will be exhibited periodically in the book case of the second floor rotunda of Hart House.

Laval aussi aura sa reine étudiante. Suivant la mode d'autres universites canadiennes et americaines, une "Castoriette" sera élue Reine du Peuple' par le peuple et pour le peuple. La condition principale d'election n'est pas seulement beauté, mais 'popularite'. Il faut ajouter que l'element masculin tient la majorité. Le couronnement de cette fille sur toute autre fera partie de trois jours de fêtes au prochain carnaval d'hiver de Laval qui est annoncé par l'AGEL (Association Générale des Etudiants de Laval).

Si nous nous fatigons desfois à Toronto de la condition du S.A.C, nous devrons aussi remarquer que la manque d'intérêt pour et par notre conseil administrative d'étudiants est une maladie commune. A Québec aussi on dit que l'AGEL ne remplit pas son devoir. Nous pourrions demander si la maladie se trouve chez les étudiants que devraient donner leur support ou chez les associations étudiantes. . . .

Our President Reports

The Varsity gives a condensed resume of the report for the year ending June, 1953, written by Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University. The report examines the financial and enrolment difficulties facing the University and discusses academic freedom and the future of religion and the arts.

...On Academic Freedom

. . . . Any person or institution that has a vested interest in the status quo resents the suggestion of change; on the other hand, revolutionaries fired with a fanatic zeal for whatever cause they have at heart dislike objective criticism. To the first group universities are hotbeds of radicalism, to the second they are icebergs of reaction. The tension between universities and society is not new . . .

In our own country, freedom of thought has been stifled in the name of the state under dictatorships, and it is now being threatened in the name of democracy. What is "academic freedom"? It is the assurance that in universities truth may be relentlessly pursued by the teachers and their students. There is no claim to infallibility on their part. "To think at all is to risk error." Scientist and humanist alike are aware that their insights and proofs may become outmoded or invalidated. Yet scholars and students must be encouraged to be explorers in the ever-widening area of knowledge and wisdom. If they were afraid to look beyond the accepted tenets of the past and the present, their teaching would become an indoctrination of barren dogmas, producing asphyxiation of the mind and sterilization of the spirit.

. . . Universities have a special trust to encourage and preserve the freedom of thought and of speech. Their members must be pioneers and pathfinders in the world of ideas. The best teachers are not the cold and impersonal ones; rather they are those with vitality and enthousiasm and originality who have opinions of their own to contribute to the free trade in ideas. They must not in Milton's phrase," The "licensed and prohibited." the heresy of yesteryear becomes the orthodoxy of today. And so the process will continue. . .

There is, of course, the concomitant responsibility that rests upon the individual professor as a citizen of a nature and intelligent community. If he is not tolerant of the rights of others to express their opinions—if he excludes from his teaching any appreciation of the possible validity of views opposed to his own, he becomes a proselytizer and he ceases to be a believer in and a professor of the competition of ideas. If he makes statements with flippancy designed for the main object of advertizing himself rather than of contributing to the extension of knowledge and wisdom, he is misusing his academic freedom. Moreover, no teacher escapes the obligations of a citizen to observe the civil and criminal laws. He cannot plead the sanctuary of a university if in expressing opinions an ideas he transgresses laws relating to treason, sedition, blasphemy, or defamation . . .

Academic freedom is not a legal code, but an environment favorable to unfettered intellectual activity. The proof of its existence in any university is not to be found in contractual safeguards, but rather in the atmosphere of courage, confidence, and responsibility that prevails among the members of the academic community. Out of an active career of over three decades in Canadian universities, I profess my faith in the good sense and the wisdom of members of the staffs of Canadian universities who share the heritage of academic freedom, and in their capacity to discipline themselves and their colleagues in the exercise thereof.

Canadians are participants in the British tradition of liberty with its undergirding of personal civic responsibility. The concept of guilt by association, the technique of the smear, and the methods of the informer, the agent provocateur or the witch-hunter are foreign to the liberty we cherish.

On Research

"Nothing distinguishes the modern university more than its devotion to research. Research in the sense of a systematic organization of scholarly resources to illuminate old and reveal new areas of knowledge is a singular feature of the modern university.

The research achievements of a university are today presented, and, I think, rightly so, as one of the hallmarks of its worth . . . To many people the word research may suggest an activity carried on only by scientists in their laboratories; and the popular concept may be validated by the actual situation in many universities. But at the University of Toronto research has never been the preserve of any one department or division; the record of publication maintains a steady level in the natural sciences, the social sciences, and the humanities.

Although for obvious reasons such as the cost of apparatus, the major share of research grants still goes to the natural sciences, it is exhilarating to note the steady increase in the number of grants made to the social sciences and the humanities.

. . . The University And Finance

. . . It is not an exaggeration to state that the securing of adequate financial support of the scholars and searchers has seldom been more difficult than it is today.

. . . At Toronto, because of spiralling costs of goods and services, it was necessary to raise the fees in 1946, in 1950, and again in 1953. The percentage increase in fees has not been as great as the increase in the cost of living, although the curves are now approaching one another . . .

As a result of the last increase, student fees in 1953-54 will produce 28 per cent of the total revenue; in other words. The University must find from other sources more than twice as much income as it receives from fees.

An institution that prizes its freedom is better situated if it derives from a variety of sources; if only one group pays the piper, it may well be tempted to call the tune. A university with a large income of its own from unrestricted endowments is in a strong position. Endowment provides a reasonably constant income and this ensures the stability of the educational program on a long term basis . . .

Canadian universities, if their needs become sufficiently understood, may look forward with confidence to similar benefits (endowments) from the recent economic expansion of this country. It is not the spirit of philanthropy, but rather the means, that has been lacking in Canada . . .

To depend on fluctuating annual government grants is to be in a state of chronic uncertainty. Grants on a five-year basis awarded on the part of provincial governments in Canada would be of great assistance to Canadian universities . . .

After our experience of Federal Government grants through DVA, and later through the Department of Finance, it cannot be too emphatically stated that no attempt has been made by the Government of Canada to control, dictate to, or even influence, Canadian universities.

. . . An unfortunate situation arises for universities if they are in receipt of ad hoc grants to initiate or to carry forward a particular project that a government department has in mind. Such grants are made only for a limited period . . .

. . . Further, the university incurs a moral obligation to continue in their employment those who have served for several years under ad hoc grants. Yet if the grants are withdrawn the regular budget cannot be stretched to cover their salaries . . .

. . . Another financial problem is involved when the universtiy receives, from foundations, governments, research agencies, or other donors, grants that are earmarked for specific research projects. These grants have been sought and welcomed in the past if the projects were appropriate to the research policies of the institution. But the sponsoring agency does not, as a rule, pay any of the indirect costs of the research, such as light, heat, maintenance, library services, and accounting and auditing services.

. . . On Religion

"We have gone too far along the road of secularizing institutions of higher learning. There is a gap in liberal education; it has been caused by the policy, which is all too prevalent in universities throughout the English-speaking world, of evading, ignoring, or even opposing, the teaching of religion within their walls.

"In any discussion of the teaching of religion, the best argument for such teaching is, for most of us, the gain to the individual personality in spiritual terms, or in other words the personal values of religion — the enrichment of life through grace and worship and that service to God which, paradoxically, is perfect freedom . . . it is the task of universities to conserve and transmit our cultural heritage, in which the Judaeo-Christian element has been one of the most important strains . . . in some faculties of arts, it is possible to learn more about the mythologies of Greece . . . than the Christian religion.

"To the student who knows nothing of theology, much history is meaningless, much philosophy is distorted, and much literature is unintelligible.

"The point that emerges forcibly is that religion has determined in great measure the development of our democratic form of government. Compared with religion the contributions of political theory have been less significant. How can students be expected to grasp such ideas if they are religious illiterates?

". . . . for many students, their university years are marked by much spiritual growth, and the foundations laid by their homes and churches are strengthened and enlarged. The influence of university teachers on the students' moral and spiritual development is often greater than the teachers themselves would ever guess.

". . . . I question whether, in many of our universities, the subject of religion is given anything like the attention that it ought to receive as a force in our individual and national life.

". . . . Universities must regain their spiritual leadership. It has been well said that 'never has the Human mind been master of so many facts and sure of so few principals.' . . . If this is an age of 'technological success and cultural failure,' of material riches and moral bankruptcy, the remedy for our plight is to be found in deeper understanding of and devotion to, spiritual values."

. . . On The Arts

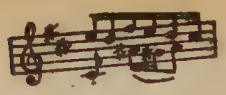
" . . . Religion and art have been, throughout the history of civilization, deeply interrelated; the pursuit of the good has often been inseparable from the pursuit of the beautiful. One must be careful, of course, not to see the two as of equal value, then the modern university should make the cultivation of the aesthetic sense one of its main purposes.

" . . . Canadian universities see in the historical study of literature and philosophy and, to a lesser extent, of the fine arts, its appropriate method of cultivating an awareness of aesthetic values . . . no formal course of instruction can engender the creative impulse. But the university can and should provide an environment in which the artist may flourish . . . Universities, by providing economic security and a sympathetic environment for the artist, have become the principal patrons of the arts.

" . . . The two most recent of the mass media of communication — radio and television — have, despite their enormous appetite for the trivial and the vulgar, done much to train the ear and the eye in the language of sound and vision . This cultural shift will make heavy demands on those divisions of the university concerned with the fine arts . . .

" . . . In the development of a sensitivity of aesthetic values, formal instruction can do much. But in this field the process is a gradual one; it cannot be forced too rapidly and it needs an atmosphere of informality. That is one reason, among many why residences are not frills but an integral part of the university education. Hundreds of young men and women have developed a discerning taste in music, art, and literature as a result of the stimulus of residence experience."

...Enrolment



During 1952-53 there were 11,570 students enrolled in the regular courses, of whom 10,508 were from Ontario.

There were 133 students from British Commonwealth countries . . . "The number of students who come to us from Commonwealth countries is significant in view of the efforts being made in Canada and elsewhere in the Commonwealth to promote a greater interchange of students and staff. It is hoped that when further action is taken on the recommendations of the Royal Commission on National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences, fellowships tenable in various parts of the Commonwealth will be provided on a generous scale" . . .

. . . It appears probable that before 1970, even without taking new immigration into account, there will be almost twice as many 18-year-old in the Province as there are now . . .

. . . "Universities should make sure that the energies of able teachers are not dissipated in the effort to stimulate and develop students who are unfitted for membership in the community of scholars. It is a waste of everyone's time to try to educate the incompetent. The aim must be to enrol students of good intellectual calibre, with the stamina and character to persevere in exacting work. The hurdle should be an intellectual one and not a financial one. This will involve a process of selection and subsidy" . . .

. . . "If we make the academic hurdle high we must make the financial hurdle low. If universities are to serve that proportion of our youth who are qualified in intellect and character for higher education, scholarships and bursaries will have to be provided on a scale hitherto unknown in Canada. There is not at present real equality of educational opportunity. If proof were needed, I would cite the fact that the percentage of university students in Great Britain who received financial assistance in 1951-52 was 72.4. The corresponding figure for Canada was no more than 15 per cent.

Gold & Fizdale

Rarely do Canadian artists attain such international standing as have the duo-piano team of Gold and Fizdale. We received a sample of their fare last Thursday evening at the Royal Conservatory for the fourth of the Special Events series — the feature concert series of this city's music factory.

Gold and Fizdale have a remarkable precision and technical facility about them that arouses wonderment, but the actual success of their music depends largely on what they play. They have an extra-ordinary duo-co-ordination, which ensures a rich, full performance and they depend on it as well as their individual excellence to sell their music. The result, however is not always satisfying.

Taee for example the Mozart Sonata K 448. It was beautiful, so clear and precise and expressive. Everyone was elevated to a point near ecstasy. The music assumed a delicate, warm quality. Indeed, Mozart would have been pleased.

But on the other hand, take the Poulenc Sonata. The playing was still good, but the music let the players down. The style was not consistent, being slightly reminiscent of different composers, Faure at times and in turn like Ravel and others. Similarly, the Strawinsky Concerto was very gratifying, for the first three movements, at least, but the last movement Prelude and Fugue was empty. Why? Because the fugue is weak and void of all the things a good fugue should have. Such an honest reflection of the music as Gold and Fizdale give should be reserved for music worthy of such artistic integrity.

The von Weber Six Pieces Op. 60, originally conceived for one pano (four hands), was effectively played, avoiding the obvious trap of over-dramatization so often lavished on music of this period.

The amazing team played three encores on eighteen curtain calls with the same facility they are famous for. Obviously they have set a standard for themselves which is high; just beyond their reach. This is a lesson that all aspiring young students should hold as their golden rule. This is how artists are made—not born, as is the old adage. Genius still consists of 90 percent perspiration and 10 percent inspiration.

Tela Podoliak

About four seasons ago Miss Tela Podoliak attracted attention in Toronto by inning high parise in many classes at the Kiwanis Festival. Last Thursday evening in Eaton Auditorium Miss Podoliak proved that she was still a pi-

Opening with a delightful Mozart anist deserving high praise.

Aria with Variations, she demonstrated sound technique. Throughout the program she displayed precise fingering and even tone—fundamental qualitiles of a competent pianist.

But in addition to her flashing technique, Miss Podoliak displayed musicianship, especially in her performance of the Becthoven Sonata in C minor. It is difficult to choose any particular work as outstanding in performance, for it seemed that this pianist maintained high standards always. However, I thought that Miss Podoliak injected life into her playing of Bartok's Roumanian Folk Dances and the Khatchaturian Toccata, whereas at other times her playing seemed quite detached and impersonal. I liked Miss Podoliak best when she played Mozart, Vivaldi and Scarlatti, though I was probably prejudiced by the music itself.

Waiting for Lefty

Clifford Odets' Waiting for Lefty, one of his earliest plays, is to be put on this Wednesday night in the Women's Union Theatre and again on Saturday, the 13th, in Hart House, when it will fight through his art for a better be the U.C. Eentry in the University of Toronto Drama Festival. It is a very dramatic play, very strongly written, Odets' attempt to fight throuhg his art for a better world. Some might think it an example of communist propaganda against the milieu of the mid-thirties, but today we see ita as a social document.

The play has a very interesting structure, succeeding in breaking down the barriers of time and space in a series of brilliant flashbacks. Directed by Leon Major Waiting for Lefty includes Aline Kamens and Stan Daniels from The Wild Duck, and Charlotte Holmes from The Male Animal.

St. Michael's Play Goes To Queen's

The St. Michael's drama society is going to take Riders to the Sea to the inter-university drama competition at Queen's University. The competition takes place from Feb. 4 to 6.

Five universities from Ontario and Quebec will be represented: Bishop's, McMaster, Macdonald College, Queen's and Toronto. None of the other Toronto colleges will be represented.

Healey Willan Plays Organ Today At 5

Dr. Healey Willan, the university organist, will give the fifth in this year's series of University organ recitals this afternoon at 5.00 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

The program will consist of a Fantasia and Fugue in E minor by Edward Silas, three choral preludes by J. S. Bach and three by Dr. Willan himself, an Adagio by Gustav Merkel, and a Corant and Minuet by Joanathan Battishill.

Organ recitals have been held in Convocation Hall for the past 41 years, and various well-known organists from all over the city take part in the series.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Sinner

By the time the United States censors get done clipping the censorable scenes out of The Sinner, it will be approximately half an hour long. Or, in others words, it's doubtful if this picture will ever be seen by our neighbours below the line. However, we in Canada take a saner (if that's the proper word) attitude and, as a result, this engrossing and very fine motion picture can be seen in its North American premiere at the Odeon-Hyland theatre.

Actually, The Sinner is more sinned against than it is a sinner. Typically, the publicity men and advertising artists have created the impression that this movie is only a few stages above smoker and stag material. It isn't, of course, although restricting attendance to people over 18 seems to be a wise move. Not that everyone over 18 will get the point and everyone under 18 won't — but, for the majority of cases, it was a good decision. For one thing, audiences are saved from the antics of the leather jacket set, which held forth at the matinees of Julius Caesar, for example.

The Sinner is a very honest story, well-told, of a girl's more or less sordid existence and her eventual discovery of a genuine love which ends her life tragically in one sense and happily in another.

The picture was made in Germany and in German dialogue but there has been no insertion of English titles or dubbing-in of English dialogue. Instead, Hildegarde Neff, who plays the lead role, tells the story as a first-person narrative and, done as it is here, it is an asset. Occasionally dialogue is given but only where it was quite necessary to achieve the desired effect. The photography is imaginative and quite superior.

Miss Neff portrays a girl who grows up in one of those broken and combative households. She discovers quite early in life that it doesn't take money to get the good things in life and lives as (what shall I say?) a good-time girl, a high-priced you-know-what. She meets a struggling artist who has also had a broken existence, and the two of them discover a worth-while life together, which is strengthened by the discovery that he has a disease which is blinding him gradually and inevitably.

Hildegarde Neff is like a good many European actresses. In the first half of a movie she generates more sincerity and understanding than most of her Hollywood contemporaries can in half a dozen roles. Her appearance and whole bearing are fascinatingly sexy, if you'll excuse the bluntness. Before long, the audience, if it is at all like me, completely sympathizes with her problems and would be all set to rush forward with a suggestion, were that possible.

Gustav Froehlich is the doomed artist and is excellent. Like Miss Neff, he surprises with his effectiveness in spite of the lack of dialogue.

There are enough scenes to make the under-18 edict understand. Several of Hildegarde's adventures take her into boudoirs and the director has decided to leave very little to the imagination. Later she models for her husband and she takes a nude swim, too, like she did in the Snows of Kilimanjaro. This picture isn't in technicolor like the Snows, but the water is clearer.

* * * * *

Another off-beat picture in town is Le Plaisir at the Savoy. Unfortunately, it falls below that theatre's recently-established high standard. This is a collection of three De Maupassant stories, made in France. There doesn't appear to be any particular reason for bunching them together and none of them is out of the ordinary. However, the middle take, which deals with the excursion to the country of the inmates of a social house to attend a little sister's first communion, is quite funny.

ART REVIEW

Water Colorists

Canadian Society of Painters in Water Colour, 28th Annual Exhibition, Toronto Art Gallery, January 15th - February 21st.

This is a very interesting, perhaps even exciting, collection of pictures, well worth a trip to the Dundas Galleries. Many of the exhibitors will be familiar to those who have followed the showing in Hart House. Tom Hodgson, for instance, is obviously aomng the most important members of the Society. In Lantern he has taken the rather lifeless form of a street lantern and given it openness, colour, and gaiety, but still kept the original form. Close Up, while it might be a study of the inner ear, is nevertheless a satisfying balance of yellow, blue, and brown. Gustav Weisman does not remain as fresh as Hodgson. Though among the best in the show, his Shipyard and Crown of the Sea leave one wishing he would change his style or approach his subject in a different manner. On the other hand those who have found the innumerable Henri Masson's in the Women's Union a little wearisome will discover in his Studio a welcome freshness of style and a vigorous use of colour.

Among those who chose traditional subjects the Gaspe Fishing Harbour of Virginia Luz, the softly rolling hills and quiet colours of Ada G. Killins' Hilltop Trio, and Leonard Davies' still, settled barns showed the supremacy of technique over sheer originality, at the same time maintaining animation and strength in the certainty of their colours and the exactness of their lines. Less successful in this field was Jean D. Grant, whose Clam Diggers was too simple, and lacked imagination.

Jean Murray Crozier and Peter Haworth attacked traditional subjects with a more contemporary approach. The former has a good sense of colour and seems to have derived inspiration from the same source as R. York Wilson; the latter, however, though frankly acknowledging his reliance on form, only succeeds in achieving a cohesive unity in the rhythmic movement of Northern Lake. Paraskeva Clark and Aba Bayefsky were both disappointing, apparently striving after something that wasn't there and probably not worth the effort. Will Ogilvie, though maintaining his delicate standard, seems to have sacrificed any impression of strength. His Dragonflies Sunning is far too gossamer-like.

When the abstractionists and their kin were good they were the best in the exhibition, but when they were bad they were ghastly. Failure in almost every case was due to a sloppy attempt to compromise between form and colour. Victims were Margaret Aitken, Hortense Gordon, and W J. B. Newcombe: blob, blob, blob. But in Jack Bush's Sunny Day, William Ronald's Back Through Noon, a study in spatial and linear suspension, and in the still repetition of forms in Frank Palmer's Waterfront and Boats there is a brilliance that would not be dimmed by any similar group. Palmer and Ronald are especially good. And there is Oscar Cahen who is certainly one of the strongest figures in Canadian Painting. Also of great interest are Bruno Bobak and Bertram Brooker. David Milne's A Bit of Green with It is unique and beautiful. He will be greatly missed. Carl Schaefer's Mill at Ayr, the Pond, is another among the best.

Anyone going down should also make a point of seeing the Galleries' permanent collection of Water Colours on view in the upper Gallery.

LEE COLLECTION

Galaxy of Gimmicks

Have you ever felt that you were born four hundred years too late; that the plastic comforts of today could well be exchanged for the more colorful discomforts of the past? Don't build yourself a time-machine, just trot over to Hart House, every Wednesday from three to five p.m., and the last Sunday of the month (you can come too, girls), and steep yourself in the atmosphere of the past, at the Lee Collection.

Shut your eyes, take a deep breath, and you'll find yourself in 900 BC in the Middle Chou period, looking at a "Ting" (This is not just my Brooklyn accent showing, it is a three-legged vessel, probably used for ancient Chinese beer-parties.)

In the right corner, wearing a 1735-36 Augsburg hallmark is milady's twenty-fifth anniversary present, a beautiful silver-gilt toilet service, made by Johann Erhard Heuglin II. You thought that manicure set you got for Christmas was the most didn't you? My friend, you haven't lived. This set has everything from an inkwell to an egg-cup. What more do you need for boudoir comfort than bells, a candle-snuffer, and knife and fork and a jewellery box. Enamelled scent bottles of Bristol glass and snuff-boxes made of semi-precious stones with diamond studded thumb-pieces, also helped to make eighteenth century life gay and sparkling.

For the book-lover there is a medieval manuscript of a French Book of Hours, owned by Louis de Giac, the chamberlain to the Duc de Berry, a great collector of manuscripts. This book would delight comic strip people since there are more pictures than there is printing in it. It is beautifully hand-illuminated in bright gold and red and green with leaves and patterns. There is one book granting a title to some Spanish Lord, which contains the signatures of Isabella and Philip of Spain and Portugal. For the benefit of the Moslems on the campus there are two elaborate copies of the Koran written in the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries which are read from the back to front, reading right and left.

Then there is the sixteenth century venetian thumb-ring with two dragons climbing up the side and the figure of St. George enclosed in a gold temple at the top. This might be known as a Drag(osig)-net (I'm sorry, I couldn't resist it). Suitable for Varsity parties is an ancient tusk drinking horn with bird's feet (how tweet). elled with amethysts. (My birthstone, do you suppose they'd give it to me as a birthday gift?) Mounted on the filigree base, covered with smaller animals is a stag ridden a la Lady Godiva, by Diana, wearing a diamond in her head-piece. After the banquet table of the 1500's had been cleared (and those were the days when people could afford to eat), the toy set on the table would zig-zag down Practically everything on it pivots or moves. A beetle crawls, a frog jumps, two lizards creep, hounds chase a running rabbit, a mounted horseman gallops, two dogs race beside the bounding stag. His horns whirl and Diana's finger beckons in a coy come-hither motion.

The collection was donated to Hart House by Viscount Lee of Fareham in 1940 at the instigation of Vincent Massey. The new curator of the collection, Edwin Cook, who has been in charge since this summer, teaches the history of art at nights at Central Tech, and oil painting at the Art Gallery. The collection is composed of artifacts from the pre-Christian era to the present, with emphasis on the Renaissance and the eighteenth century.

The most modern object is a nsolid gold tazza (a saucer-shaped cup on a stand to you) made from a recently discovered sixteenth century design. Viscount Lee had There is also a carved cocoanut and gold cup from Nuremberg. All this needs is a music box recording of "I've got a lovely bunch of cocoanuts", inserted in the handle.

Perhaps the most fascinating of all, however, is the adult toy "Diana Riding a Stag". If you still peek in the Eaton's windows at Christmas-time, this is for you. This toy-seller's triumph is made of silver with gold plate, and jewit made with the gold from a few of his Australian gold mines. Though the goldsmith followed the ancient design on the outside, his imagination was free to wander on the design inside. Thus on a sixteenth century designed, twentieth century made article is inscribed the ageless truth: "Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold!"

The Lee Collection is open on Wednesday afternoons from 3.00 to 5.00.

Ah, Please

An aesthetic poet (John Emerson) makes love to the milkmaid, Patience (Lillian Petrie) in the Vic Music Club's production of the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta PATIENCE, at Hart House Feb. 2 to 6.

TRIO TRIUMPHANT

The bassoon burped, and the relatively small audience at last night's Hart House concert responded with an amused applause to a sound which is usually absorbed in the schnozzle of an orchestra tuning-up.

Before the evening was over there was good reason for clapping. In a program of ancients and moderns the woodwind trio of Perry Bauman, oboe, Ezra Schabas, clarinet and Wayland Mosher, bassoon; proved itself to be of a very high calibre. This combination of woodwinds is agreeably full, having a parallel tonal range to a string trio of cello, viola and violin.

The balance of the three in the Cinq Divertissements by Mozart, as throughout was excellent. Each player had control of his individual instrument and yet each blended it into an integral part of the ensemble. The bassoon in this arrangement was usually the odd man out; as the clarinet and oboe tossed the tune delicately around he was left to run around basic arpeggios hich he did very dextrously All the movements were characterized by elegance and finesse.

In the same vein was the Marcello Concerto in C minor for solo oboe. Perry Bauman was superb. His trills and crescendos were all controlled and clear with fluid smoothness. In the Adagio he displayed good breathing control and a tasteful vibrato which enhanced the tranquil melody.

By contrast with the clarity and precision of the oboist, the piano accompaniment of Arlene Nimmons was fuzzy and unemphatic. Considering this quality of her playing she was well-advised to choose impressionistic works. She seems to skim over the keys without reaching their depth. Consequently her tone is never harsh, but is not powerful either. One might think that this treatment would be effective in Ravel's rippling Jeux d'eau, but impressionism of technique applied to impressionism of composition puts the picture behind a fog.

The Suite (after Corrette) by Milhaud was short and sweet, if I may be pardoned an obnoxious pun. The sweetness of ancient ideas was contrasted with the sourness of modern treatment. Discordant seconds were thrown in at unlikely moments in the epigrammatic development of the eight movements. Charmingly written, charmingly played.

YELLOW JACKETS STING BLUES

Lou Leaps, Loses

Varsity's Lou Lukenda (23) leaps into the air with Rochester's Jim Armstrong for a rebound under the Blues basket. Armstrong made himself a thorn in the Varsity side with jumps like this in the first half to hold the Blues to eighteen points. Rochester forward, Joe Texter, (16) looks on with Varsity's Bill Corcoran (25).

Varsity's Fourth-Quarter Sag Overcomes Stirring Comeback

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity Blues blew alternately hot and cool against Rochester Saturday night, ending out in the cold as the Yellow Jackets came through to a 72-62 victory. A faint start and then a sluggish finish made up the Varsity formula for defeat while the 'Chesters played it smooth and steady all the way down. Playing far off the form that they have shown all season in Hart House, the Blues faltered under the shifty offence of the visitors, making the River Men of Rochester the first team to break the famous Varsity zone in Hart House this year. Toronto was unable to crack the rather tough nut that was the Rochester zone, replying on the dead-eyes of George Stulac and Jim Russell to score from outside.

George Stulac picked up three fouls in the first quarter and a fourth just after the start of the second half, forcing him to ease off and thus reducing, almost to nothing, the Blues' rebounding strength. Rochester's Big Jim Armsrong stepped in at that point and made the River Men right at home around the Varsity hoop, while the Blues, like the gracious hosts they are, clustered about in humble admiration, watching the Yellow Jackets friskly pop the ball into the netting. Every time the Blues did step into the middle of things under the backboards theye gave points away as they were called consistently on personal fouls. The Rochester lads, it turned out, are quite accurate in their foul shooting and their edge in that department turned out to be the margin they needed to dump the Blues.

Rochester provided two of the night's top men in Joe Texter and Tom Naylon who between them hooped 36 of the River Men's 72 points. Naylon, just a wee fellow who couldn't have been more than 6' was the class of the court while Varsity's Stulac, though he kept himself somewhat in the back ground after building his impressive foul total, came right in with the 'Chester for top ranking.

A set shot artist of an unusual type, Naylon uses the backboard on every shot, and he scored seven long ones, missing almost none. It was Naylon and Texter, pulling the Varsity zone apart with their fine shooting and passing that opened the defence up enough to work the ball into tallish centreman Armstrong who then dunked a neat 16 points for the Yellow Jackets. The Blues seemed a bit punchy and their zone, usually quite a tight unit, was sort of shredded so that Rochester sifted through smoothly.

Varsity had their brief moment of glory in the third quarter and it was then that the loyal Toronto fans got an idea of what the Blues can do when they go out to really play basketball. After the Yellow Jackets had seemingly salted away the victory at the half with a 40-18 lead, Varsity came out and scored 14 points, holding the River Men to a mere two; then pulled even closer till only 4 separated the teams. But alas, alack, 'twas then they did their fold and the River Men swamped them in a last quarter flood. In that third period, George Stulac broke loose from a heavy Rocheser checking contingent to hoop five field goals and a single free throw for 11 of his 21 points.

Leapin' Lou Lukenda fought like a bull under the hoops, trying to break the River Men's control of the rebounds and when he found the range late in the game connected for 16 points. Jim Russell's sure set shot found the mark for 14 points and kept the Blues in the game when the Rochester zone held off all attempts to smash it.

Texter's 22 and Naylon's 14, with Armstrong's 16 were the top marksmen for the Yellow Jackets.

Blues Addle Aggie Pugs

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Varsity's senior boxing team opened its 1954 season on the correct note Saturday night in Hart House as they thoroughly clobbered the team from Guelph's Ontario Agricultural College. The Blues won all eight bouts from the farmer boys.

All Varsity's wins were by decisions except in the 155-pound class, where intercollegiate champion Larry Corcoran won over Tom Martin of OAC by a technical knockout, Martin being unable to continue the bout.

The decisions were: 130 pounds — Pete Young over A. Ramsay; 135 pounds — Russ Reilly over John Stephens; 140 pounds—Bill Clarke over Charlie Logan; 145 pounds — Mike Callahan over K. Garydon; 150 pounds — John Whyte over H. Nash; 165 pounds — Lee Bernardi over Steve Kiachan; 175 pounds, and W. Schmida, 175 Mike Berlihey.

All seven bouts were decided by decisions Saturday night at Hart House as School of Science dominated the senior interfaculty boxing meet. There were seven Skulemen in the finals, which climaxed the week-long meet, and four of them won championships.

Engineering champions were: M. Gray, 130 pounds; F. Nott, 140 pounds; D. Williams, 150 pounds and W. Schmida, 175 pounds.

Gray defeated H. Kleinmen of Meds, Nott got a decision over F. Tippins of Pharmacy. Williams outpointed another Skuleman, A. Holmes and Schmida won by default.

At 145 pounds, W. Woychuk of Meds got the nod over H. Nightingale of SPS. In the 155-pound division, A. Van Nostrand of Meds won that faculty its second title by outpointing J. Steward of SPS. R. Bombier won a championship for Victoria College by defeating another Vicster, J. Crossland in the 165-pound class.

Fencers Muddled Missed 18 Points Finish In Second

Buffalo, Jan. 31 — A misunderstanding in rules interpretation cost Varsity's fencing team a possible 18 points btu they managed to finish second in a three-way meet here Saturday. The U. of T. squad was ahead of Canisius College but trailed the University of Buffalo.

Varsity took six men to the meet, enough for complete teams in two classes. They expected to double up to make a third team but found that U.S. rules prevent a man from competing in more than one section. That cost the Blues a chance for a clean sweep as they won everything they entered, beating Buffalo 6-3 and 5-4 and Canisius 9-0 and 6-3.

Wally Kostiw and George Montgomery were Varsity stars as they won six matches each without a loss in the foils competition. Murray Nash, competing in his first intercollegiate meet, won four matches and lost two in the epee section. John Andru also posted a 4-2 record.

Pre-Meds, St. Mike's A's Sure To Be In Playoffs

By JOHN WILSON

Group I and Group II settled the playoff picture in two games Friday, Pre-Meds blanking Junior SPS 2-0, and St. Mike's A's squeezeing by Senior Vic 2-1.

Pre-Meds goalie Al Cecutti made the difference in the first game, playing another tremendous game in racking his second shutout of the season.

The Doctors' first goal came at 10:15 of the first period and the score would have remained 1-0 except that one Skule rearguard elected to trip Medsman Aggett on a clean breakaway, and the Doctors were awarded a penalty shot at 16.05 of the second frame. Aggett made it good, and the Medsmen settled down to holding off a desperate Skule attack.

The Doctors' win leaves them in SPS, each with eight points. It also kills any hopes either the Trinity A's or Junior Vic had of making the playoffs.

In the second game, the Double Blues from St.Mike's turned back a strong Senior Vic crew, for a 2-1 decision, consolidating them in third place in Group I with seven points. Now only Senior UC can catch them, and this possibility is very unlikely.

a tie for second place with Junior Jim Pierson, playing his second game in goal for Vic, and his third as a goaltender highlighted the contest with a superb display. But it was hard going fighting off one of the best attacks in Intramural hockey.

Duffey opened the scoring for St. Mike's at 17:20 of the first period, after play had see-sawed from end to end with the Mikemen holding a slight advantage. Mike O'Neal made it 2-0 with a piece of real fancy stickhandling slipping between two Vic defencemen and getting rid of a hard shot while still off stride.

At 12:50 of the second, Bob Dale put Vic back in the game, taking a pass from Tom Jardine inside the St. Mikee's defence and going in on Gerry Young all alone. Along with Jardine, Dale once again sparked the Vic attack, as the Scarlet and Gold, in dropping their sixth loss, looked far more impressive than at any other time this year.

McGill's Lost Week-end: Trampled By Western, Assumption

London, Jan. 31 — The University of Western Mustangs won their third straight senior intercollegiate basketball game here Friday night and, in doing so, set a scoring record for Thames Hall. They pasted the luckless McGill Redmen 97-44. Those 97 points were the most any team had ever amassed on the Thames Hall floor.

Excellent shooting told the story for the Mustangs, who are after their ninth straight cage tilt. They sank 35 field goals with a shooting average of just under 40 per cent, for the whole team. The Redmen, meanwhile, shot a woeful 20 per cent, totalling only 12 baskets.

Chris Ellis led the way for the Mustangs, who moved into a slight first-place lead by winning. The veteran Ellis sank 18 points in all. Don Getty fired 14, Walt Karabin added 12 and 10-point men were and Bob Ford.

The Redmen didn't have a single major scorer, but Timmy Lake did manage eight.

Raiders Tie for First

Windsor, Jan. 31 — Assumption College Purple Raiders tied Western Mustangs for first place in the intercollegiate basketball league by slamming the McGill Redmen 87-45 here Saturday night. The Raiders and Mustangs have each won three straight games.

The Raiders, in making it a bleak road trip for the Redmen, had three high scorers. Rookie George Joseph potted 16 points to run his total to 69 for three games. Another rookie, Dick McKenzie, got 14 and vetern Chuck Collini added 15.

Al Suarez, Gord Edwards and Mel Mikalachki scored 11 each to account for the bulk of the McGill scoring.

Four First-Stringers Out Blue Wrestlers Stopped As Buffalo Wins 23-11

Buffalo, Jan. 31 — Four of Varsity's first-string senior wrestlers were missing here Saturday as the Blues lost to the University of Buffalo squad 23-11. An additional handicap to the U. of T. was the fact that they don't wrestle at 191 pounds in U.S. colleges so that Doug Hamilton didn't compete.

Although the four substitutes lost their matches, coach Kirk Wipper said he was very pleased with their showing.

The Blues did win three bouts, with Bill Bush, Bob Waugh, and Al Miller coming up with victories. Bush, a 157-pounder, outpointed Buffalo's Stan Zatko 5-3. Al Miller won 6-2 over W. Ford at 177 pounds. Footballer Waugh's win was by a fall. He dropped Earl Hind in the second period.

Heavyweight Harry Robinson of the Blues gave Julius Perlini a game battle but got the short end of a decision. At 147 pounds, Buffalo's Bill Movesan got the nod over Varsity's Pat Eagan. Toronto had no man for the 137-pound decision and defaulted.

Baby Blues Lose

Osgoode Hall's athletes have been making thorough nuisances of themselves this season as they keep knocking over various colleges in exhibition games. The legalites proved they're as good at basketball as they are at hockey Saturday night at Hart House as they edged Varsity Seconds 61-58 in the first half of an athletic night double-header.

It was a tight game all the way, with the Osgoode team having perhaps a better balance in scoring power. Varsity had the game's two top scorers in Norm Reynolds and Al Vaichulis, who collected 20 and 19 points, respectively. Both these men are developing quickly in their first season of college ball and have been consistently prolific scorers in recent games.

Former Western star Wendell "Wink" Wigle topped the legalites with 15 points. Another former Mustang, Bud Obal added 10, Jim Kellher got 14, Ted Sahaidak 11 and Claude Fitzgibbon, who referees many senior cage tilts in the city, fired five.

Peacemaker

A Pious Parable

A Parable
Reprinted from the Queen's Journal

Now it came to pass that the master of the temple did find two children of his parish fighting on the grass. Paused he beside their entangled legs and arms and sought he to stop their warfare.

Reasoned he with them at great length quoting scripture and invoking the feelings of their parents. But the battle went on without the slightest waver.

Finally the representatives of a loving God pulleth the youngsters apart rewarding each with a dime for ice cream and wishing them God-speed on their homeward way.

But this outwardly imposed reign of peace proveth short duration. No sooner departeth the ambassador of good will than the energetic youths again took to battle.

Once again approacheth the master of the temple to the field of combat. Chideth he the boys for their warlikeness. "But sir," said one of the wariors, "We have to fight", we both want to take out the same girl and we have agreed that the one who is in the best condition after fifteen minutes gets to take her out."

Pondereth the master of the temple this information. Recognized he that this solution was no solution at all for it ignoreth the needs the boys still felt. But also understandeth he that the boys' solution neither guaranteed peace nor solved the problem for a certainty, for it was likely to leave both of them in such a state of disrepute that the fair young lady might go uncourted that night.

Thereupon the peacemaker putteth away his pious phrases and suggested a conference. Suggested he further that there might be another girl who would enjoy double dating, and that the two avid courters might alternate in their attention to the girl of their battles until they discovered a friendly solution to the problem.

So convincingly useth the master of the temple the talents of speech, that he convinced even the fifteen-minute men of battle. Realizeth he that their warfare had had a real and legitimate purpose but seeth yet that it would not attain its goal.

The master of the temple retireth from the scene of the battle with greater understanding of the motives of men and the failures of remedies which deal only with surface expressions and reach not to the deep, underlying causes.

Verily, saith he, blessed is the peacemaker . . . but what a job he hath.

Glycerine Research Award Given To Dr. Erich Baer

Dr. Erich Baer of the Banting and Best Department of Medical Research, University of Toronto, has won the Glycerine Research Award for 1953. The award, consisting of an Honor Plaque and $1,000, was made in New York on January 27 during the Glycerine Producers Association annual convention.

Dr. Baer came to the U of T in 1937 as assistant research professor in the Department of Chemistry. He later joined the Banting and Best Department of Medical Research and for five years has been head of the sub-department of Syntheic Chemistry in relation to Medical Research. Dr. Baer's team of research workers has included Frank Martin, Morris Kates (now with the National Research Council), Miss Margaret Russel, John Maurukus, and Harvey C. Stancer.

Professor Bear is well-known internationally for his work in the carbohydrate field carried out in association with Dr. Hermann O. Fischer at the University of Berlin and Basel. Their synthesis of one of the key intermediates in the biological oxidation of sugars has greatly aided in the elucidation of the mechanism by which the body obtains energy from food, and has had a direct bearing on knowledge of the chemistry of diabetes.

Foresight, Or Else

"It is inevitable that blood will flow in the streets in South Africa."

This is a statement The Varsity heard during student discussion last week. At the same time we realized more than a few people were quite aware of this fact, and assumed that as Canadians, we could not bother ourselves about another nation's problem. These same people were also satisfied that the present Malan policy was probably no worse than any other policy the whites in South Africa would take in dealing with their race problems.

Considering the present state of mind of the whites, assimilation of Boer and English is difficult, but assimilation of these with native Bantu is impossible. It was also agreed that the present apartheid was worse than a temporary solution.

The general picture is one of futility and hopelessness. But must we wait here like the useless toads we are, and take no step whatsoever to relieve the violence of the inevitable bloodshed.

No. The least we can do, if we are to be of any use at all, is to try to re-educate the whites of the South Africa Union. Through continued pressure from the democratic countries of the world, including Canada, we would at least win a few more South African whites to a tolerance of assimilation. It may be argued that it is impossible to change the spots on a leopard. But that is no reason for not trying. Though South Africans may think they are being too heavily chastized, and might try to resist it, yet they will see assimilation all around them, and it is our job to kep pointing it out to them. Campaigning will be difficult, but it is a hope. It is probably too long range to prevent revolt, but it could lessen its severety.

As a potential revolt, the African situation is a perfect opening in a new continent for the ever-present force of Communism. A subdued people in China took it up with success, and the appeal of equality is a major point we cannot at present counter. The only real counter we have at the present time is the interest the United Nations has taken in the natives. What have the democratic countries of the world done?

No one likes to meet trouble at the halfway mark. We are not suggesting that. North Atlantic Treaty and National Defence are examples of planning done by people with the foresight to realize that prevention is cheaper than cure. With such admitted recognition of the hotbed in Africa, it seems amazing that so few people are interested in trying to help the African ative.

We are a long way from Africa, but as students, with all the organization there is at Toronto, we can surely make a contact, and try to do something, as we have already done in Asia.

Story Of India

Natural Heritage

This is the second of two articles looking at the human philosophy within India, written by a postgraduate student in Applied Science.

By RAJ MITTRA

Matter is verily the body of the spirit and life, the expression of energy and in the discovery and possession of this harmony lies the true ideal of spiritualism. This was the discovery of the theme of Modern India. And what is seeking to awake in India is not an Anglicized Oriental people, docile pupil of the West, doomed to repeat the Occident's success and failure, but still the ancient memorable divine power, recovering the deepest self, lifting her head higher towards the supreme source of light and strength and turning to discover the complete meaning of the vast form of Religion.

THE PURSUIT TO EXTREMES has done enough harm to mankind as is evident from the condition of the world today, but it is fortunate that there are signs of a new-found consciousness which bids fair to be the living embodiment of the collective aspirations of human groups. But the nature of these groups is not the same everywhere. In one of them at least, the ego of life has got so much enmeshed in the tangle of matter that it regards man as nothing more than a human animal and continously ignores the message from the spiritual sphere. In another, dictatorial totalitarianism threatens to destroy all superior values of life, and all prospects of further advancement of race, since the individual in it has no separate status and therefore no freedom to express his higher self.

SOME OTHER GROUPS are however turning to make efforts to approach the ultimate goal of human existence. One among them, India . . . of the ages still lives to do something for herself and for human progress, to rise up with her head high continuing the movement whose first outbreak was political but whose ultimate end is spiritual consummation through which the world would receive the message of emancipation.

And to appreciate India therefore one has to appreciate her spiritual consciousness. One can hardly explain by mere argument how Mahatma Gandhi and his followers fought the rifles of imperial power with passive resistance which he called "satyagraha" (quest for truth), nor can one reason why thousands of Indian youths stepped to the gallows with Sanskrit chants and smiling lips, hailing "Vande Mātaram" (Glory to thee! O divine Mother). Again the ways of Acharya Vinobha Bhare in his Land, and Mass Uplift movements would be inscrutable if one ignores this aspect of Indian life which is more than material. Another aspect of true spiritual consciousness which has been given prominence in India is the recognition of the equality of all religions which was one of the fundamental preachings of Gandhi.

THUS IN THE WORDS OF Sri Aurobindo, the great Indian philosopher whose message is distributed throughout this article, "India can best develop herself and serve humanity by being herself and following the law of her own nature. This does not mean, as some narrowly and blindly suppose, the rejection of everything new that comes to us in the stream of Time or happens to have been first developed or powerfully expressed by the West. Such an attitude would be intellectually absurd, physically impossible, and above all, unspiritual; true spirituality rejects no new light, no added means or materials of our human self-development. It means simply to keep our centre, our essential way of being, our inborn nature, and assimilate to it all we receive, and evolve out of it all we do and create."

ONE MAY COMMENT that this approach is theoretical. I would at once agree to say that this is our ideal and the extent to which we can approach it by our efforts would determine our future.

Jai Hind (Hail India!)

Our Readers Write:

Uncle Sam, We Love You

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Let's damn Americans. They are no good. They are boors, they are skunks, they are pigs in a queen's boudoir. We are good, we are polite, we are unselfish. No graft in our police departments; the talk of Windsor is just an American calumny. Oh, we just love our, as a very august personage of TTC expressed it, "niggers", our "blacks" of the Employment service, our Chinks and our Polacks and our Limees and our Jews. They are just dandy as long as they keep to Queen-Spadina district.

Our politicians are paragons of virtue; they do not "kite" checks, they fulfil their promises. They do not wait to vote themselves a raise until after elections when the going seems safe. Alttogether, they are a good lot.

And now, in all seriousness, they really are. Most of them are really honest men. I believe that a great majority of them are there because they really want to work for the good of the nation. The very few isolated exceptions do not count. Altogether our government is healthy, clean and idealistic. I think most of us believe that though, as right now it is a fashion to be cynical, and to look everywhere for "What's-in-it-for him?", we are silent.

It is very brave to brave an elephant; many people make quite a reputation by attacking the better-known people. It also makes one feel important to hurl a thunderbolt like: "The US is in the grip of mass hysteria." Having diagnosed the situation, it is so pleasant to offer a remedy: "Jail 'em". And then to sign our own name to the whole thing: John J. P. S. Lewis, II PolSci, Victoria College U. of T. But by such little things the feeling of the nation is really determined.

Can we affaord to have the sympathies of the nation alienated? It just happens that USA is on the map and that it is the only country which can offer resistance to the imperialism.

Even such a libertarian as John Stuart Mill recognized that a person may not sell his own liberty, neither incite anyone to selling his liberty or act to the end that someone sell himself. This is the principle on which Americans are proceeding and it is just as J. S. Mill-ish as the dictatorship by majority. And here we come to the subject of negation of liberty to certain people.

I wonder, how many of us would tolerate a Benevolent Society dedicated to the Dissemination of the Ancient and Honorable Art and Profession of Prostitution (BSDAHAPP, for short). Many great people spoke well of it. It might have some justification, starting from the fact that a man is an animal. But it is completely inconsistent with our views on life. We can prove them wrong and dangerous from our point of view.

They can prove us wrong and dangerous from their point of view. As our social structure cannot coexist with a Benevolent Society of that sort, therefore one or the other is to disappear. We have police. It matters but little that the people who work for the Dissemination of Prostitution are possiby honorable men, honest in their intentions and purposes.

If we would do that in regard to our morals, should we do not just as much in regard to our liberty and life? I do not think it is necessary to prove that the communism and its basic doctrines are opposed to ours. Our liberty is only bourgeois liberty, invented by bourgeois to keep the Proletariat in chains. The communist liberty is the liberty of doing what the state is doing, as one could not possibly want to do anything which the state would disapprove of. Our rights of speech and the rest are just as immoral.

The fact is that communism wants us to sacrifice our liberty of today for a "Paradise" of many generations from now, a "Paradise" to be meanwhile built on what we consider iniquities, rape and murder. A shadowy existence without ideals and other "prejudices".

"On the ruins of this bankrupted world, where the capitalists suck your blood, we will build a world for you! You, who were slaves will be masters! Those who were masters will be your slaves!

"Even you, oh, Proletariat, will have to suffer! There will be mistakes! Millions will be killed for nought, but the Government is always right! You will deviate and if you will you will be killed! The people will groan but the Communism will come! It must come! It is inevitable! You will suffer you will die! Communism shall come!

"Down with prejudices! A man is a machine to be fed, to be kept, to enjoy the economic advantages of the parasitic existence on the fat of the earth! Down with opium, down with mysticism, down with right and wrong! Long live Communism!

"The Art for the revolution! Literature to Slogans! Paintings to Representation of Proletarian Existence! Music to Inspiration of Revolt! Movies for Mod-raising! Art for the Revolution!

"Our Speech shall be slogans! Workers arise! Down with Chains! Forward, march! To Fat! Unite! Down with all but us! Attack! Victory! Victory! Communism, hail!"

They shouted that and they still shout that. But they also know when to keep silent. They stand and wait. Therefore, I say, US is completely right in routing communists. Just as prostitutes, muderers and anyone else who works against the basis of our society, so the communists have to be apprehended and punished. They, people who preach slavery, should not have the advantage of that which they are fighting—liberty, also liberty of speech.

A state, which offers lawful opportunity for reform, and almost any state with exception of dictatorships, such as USSR, Jugoslavia does, has the moral right to maintain itself. This right is implied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

It is time for us to appreciate the services which the United States have done to the Free World and to Canada specifically. We should be more thankful, for it is only because of the United States we still have our liberty. We also should be more responsible and not join the All-Canadian mass hysteria of US "Dictatorship." Let's like United States.

Student Returns From Eastern Europe

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

"Vodka is pretty fair stuff, but it's not a child's drink". That was the opinion of the SAC's representative to the IUS Conference in Warsaw last summer and also a member of the Canadian delegation to the Student Peace Festival held in Bucharest, Roumania.

The student is John Lofft, III Meds, who published in the last issue of Maclean's a feature article on his summer's adventures behind in Iron Curtain.

He sold his story to Maclean's for which he was paid the rate given to an ordinary feature article. This, he said, was a real help in meeting the last payment of his fees.

Lofft was in Europe in the summer of '51. He was only able to see West Europe on his first trip so he was more than eager to see Eastern Europe in order to decide for himself just what conditions were in Eastern Europe. Progaganda both from East and West was very confusing, he said.

He said that while in Europe he was struck with the hospitality of his European Hosts. He also thought it was very kind of both his fellow delegates and his Communistic hosts to tolerate a reactionary such as he was.

While behind the Iron Curtain, Lofft made a serious attempt to find actually how much of the news we hear from behind the Iron Curtain was actually true.

JOHN LOFFT

He spoke to as many laborers, students, and others as he possibly could. Most of these people he found to be afraid to speak, but on learning of his desire to learn the actual conditions of the countries he visited they would usually give him a fairly unbiased account of the actual conditions.

While in these countries, he was given almost complete freedom to talk to anyone he wished, go wherever he wished and take as many pictures as he wished.

Lofft noticed that the Massey Report was very popular in most Communist countries. Besides having universal free education in all schools leading up to college, the system of scholarships given by the government almost provides free education for all University students as well.

"On the bursaries and stipends provided by the government a student can live most comfortably, especially if he lives in the city of the university. Conditions were not always as black as we sometimes hear about", he said.

There are strings attached, though; compulsory courses are included given on Marx, Engels, Leninism and Stalinism. There are also two compulsory years in the Russian language. Students generally feel hat these courses are "for the birds" said Lofft; "they feel that there is too much Soviet propaganda; they are filled up to the neck with it".

Another drawback to the educational system is that for the first two years of college a student must belong to the Youth Organization; afterwards membership is optional. However, unless one is an exceptional student, the chances of getting a bursary are much less.

Students, according to Lofft are much the same as we are. They complain bitterly about the Youth Organization that dominates their student activities and which actually is quite similar to our SAC.

In the University at Bucharest Lofft said that "the food was not so hot". Also in front of the University a policeman stood with a machine gun "looking much more efficient than our own Varsity police; the significance of his presence I could not determine also there were a fantastic number of soldiers in Bucharest and no autos".

Lofft found that most people he talked to are no longer interested in capitalism, "but they hate communism more. They want some form of democratic socialism that will bring about the necessary reform without the hardship that has gone along with the Communist regimes".

"The people genuinely want peace", said Lofft, "probably more than we do. The ravages of the last war have not yet been forgotten. Warsaw was 95% destroyed in the last war. The governments, too want peace, as war now would seriously interfere with the tremendous program of industrialization that is going on everywhere behind the Iron Curtain".

"In peace they feel that they can defeat capitalism. They feel that they have learned to operate a peace-time economy without unemployment. I feel that democratic capitalism must do the same to justify its existence".

Few people seemed to enjoy the presence of the Russians; everyone, even the high Communist officials seemed to be eager to get the Russians out of their country. "People feel that their generation is being sacrificed for future generations, as the country is geared to such a rapid industrial development". "People rarely have enough to eat and all luxury items are too expensive or just not available to the average worker", he said.

"Waiting For Lefty"

Believe Chosen Play Leftist UC Players Gripe But Act

Dissension among the cast of one of the UC Players Guild's plays was admited yesterday by director, Leon Major, II UC. However, he said, only one or two members of the 14-man cast were responsible for any reported grumblings.

The discontent came to the surface last weekend when some of the actors protested the choice of Clifford Odets' "Waiting for Lefty" for the Guild's next play. They described the play as "decidedly Communistic" and said they felt they could not act in it.

Major said no members had left his cast up until last night. The play will be shown tonight in the UC Women's Theatre and then again a week from Saturday.

Major explained that he chose "Waiting for Lefty" because "it is a sharp and moving social drama." He added that there was a good deal of truth in it. " 'Lefty' is definitely not a communist play," he said.

"Waiting for Lefty" was not the first choice of director Major, who has studied under Hart House director, Robert Gill. He had previously picked "Bury the Dead" but had been told that it was too big an undertaking.

"If people are afraid now to present plays which are supposed to be leftish, then we are in a pretty bad way," Major said. "We must guard ag. it reflecting the panic which has gripped the United States."

One of the dissentors said last night he would probably continue working in the play, but that the principles supposedly expressed in it were definitely against what he believed. He stated he agreed with many of the social evils Odets had revealed in his play, "but the references to comrades and strikes are too Communistic."

Major criticized the dissentors and said they should have reacted weeks ago and "not two days before our opening". Too often the word leftist creates a great fear in people, he said.

Major, who is responsible to the UC Players Guild and apparently has their approval, has worked in three Hart House plays this year: "Antigone", "Male Animals", and "Wild Duck". Students who know him rejected implications he is a "fellow-traveller".

Les Lawrence, the leading actor in "Wating for Lefty", agreed with Major that the only criteria for a play should be its dramatic quality.

McGill Needs Money To Support The Daily

Montreal, 29 Jan.—(CUP) —The Students' Society of McGill University will be asked to increase their fees two dollars per student. The added revenue would be allotted to the campus newspaper, the McGill Daily.

Even if the fee raise is granted, a reduction of the paper budget is imperative for next year. The reduction will force the Daily to reduce its size or its frequency of issue next year.

The executive of the Students' Society has passed the motion for the fee raise. The members of the society who opposed the motion felt that the necessary funds could be allocated from the present revenue of the society. This has been done to make up the $14,000 deficit which the budget has incurred this year due to increased printing costs. The added money would be taken from the other clubs and societies.

The editors of the Daily have announced that the proposed publication schedule for next year even with the fee increase, would be a tabloid of four pages a week

BARBARA BACKUS

. . . for very efficiently organizing and handling the NFCUS art competition which had been mandated to Toronto. A fourth year history student, Miss Backus is one of the few people on this campus who believe in NFCUS and work to make it a worth-while organization. Nine universities from across Canada participated in the contest which is on display in Hart House.

HH Showing NFCUS Art

Women can look at pictures in Hart House all this week. The entries in the NFCUS art competition can be seen till Friday from 1.30 to 6.00 p.m. in the debates room, and the general public will be admitted.

In the Oils class, the winning picture was "Aerial", by Heather Spears of the University of British Columbia. Anne Stott, from McGill, was the winner in the Water Color class, with "Evening." The Drawings and Prints caiss went to Clarence Barnes of Queens. Toronto received Honorable Mention in the Oils Class.

"We would have like to have seen more universities enter," said Barbara Backus, Chairman of the NFCUS art committee. Entered in the NFCUS competition were eleven Canadian universities.

Progressives

Conservative? The University of Toronto Progressive Conservative Club passed a resolution on Sunday that the word, "Progressive", be dropped from the party name.

They also favored the SAC resolution urging the implementation of the Massey Commission recommendations regarding scholarships. They had already introduced a Bill to this effect at the Model Parliament in December.

Costs Down If Stranded At Caledon

House Manager of the Caledon Farm, Bosco Loncarevic, III SPS, announced yesterday that the Exploration Society had reduced the overnight rates to students who find themselves stranded on the farm after a winter weekend.

"The question had never come up he said, "till students last weekend were forced to stay over Sunday night. Ploughs had not opened the road till late at night", he said.

The regular rates at Caledon are one dollar per night, 25 cents per day, and 30 cents for linen, for any length of stay, he said. The new rates for stranded students will be only 50 cents per night. All students bring their own food, and will be charged for any they use from the emergency supplies the Exploration Society holds there.

The decision to change the rates was made at a meeting of the Caledon Committee of the Hart House Exploration Society, held Monday at noon.

The President Reports

Theatre, Exams

In the President's report, Dr. Smith referred to the work of the Hart House Theatre. He said, "The function of Hart House Theatre has been to provide some training on an extra-curricular basis in acting and producing, and to establish on the campus a vital theatre that would directly serve the student body."

". . . it has become one of the major Canadian schools of preparation for the professional stage. Of the students appearing in Hart House productions since 1947, 57 have gone on to the acting profession. Of these, eight appeared in the Stratford Shakespearean Festival.

". . . a university theatre . . . provides one of the best kinds of training for the professional stage, and at the same time it suggests that the presence of so much talent at this University calls for a more formal and comprehensive University contribution to the theatrical life of Canada.

". . . it may be that the University could accept a more important role in the present burgeoning of Canadian dramatic activity by co-ordinating its resources in the drama and fine arts. The courses leading to the Artist Diploma in the Royal Conservatory of Music may be suggestive in this context."

Concerning the standards of final examinations in the Faculty of Arts, the president said: "In the College subjects, examinations are a matter of joint concern to the four College departments in each subject, and opportunity is normally provided for critical consideration of them by all concerned. Such collaboration does not necessarily take place in the case of University subjects. There is thus a possibility that the standards of the examinations in the 17 non-collegiate Arts departments might vary widely. It's obvious that great discrepancies in the quality of examinations would be undesirable. Should the Council establish a board or boards to review the examination papers, and thus ensure that a reasonable standard is everywhere maintained? The question should not be dismissed merely by reason of departmental independence. In this as in other matters, no department can be a law unto itself.

"A practice which might be worth some deliberation is that of having in the final year of each course a comprehensive examination. A comprehensive examination can be a gauge of mental power, compelling the student to interrelate the segments of his field of study and to conveice of it as an integrated whole. That conception no doubt exists in the minds of most students by the time they reach their final year, but it would be clarified by the requirement to express it cogently in response to searching questions of a general and philosophical trend, which would test the student's power to differentiate and to synthesize."

Hart House Elections To Be Held March 3

Nominations for the 1954-55 Hart House Committees are open from Monday, Feb. 15, to Friday, Feb. 19, Warden Joseph McCulley announced last night.

The election has been scheduled for March 3rd. In this election, members will be elected to the five major committees, Art, Debates, House, Library, and Music, and also to all the Club committees, such as the Camera Club, and Chess Club.

Nomination forms will be available next week in the Undergraduate Activities Office, on the main floor of Hart House.

McCulley said, "All the activities of Hart House are administered by the elected Committees". He said they consist mostly of Undergraduate members, although the graduates and faculty are represented.

The House Committee has chosen Wednesday, March 3 for the election date so it would not conflict with elections by colleges

A pre-nomination meeting will be held the week prior to nomination week for members interested in standing for election on the major committees. Also, any other members of the House are urged to attend and find out the workings of the annual election.

Far-removed colleges and faculties are getting a break this year. These students, who find it difficult to vote on March 3, may vote in an advance poll on March 1 and March 2. This arrangement will also aid students whose timetable conflicts with voting day and times.

An election information summary will be available to interested candidates next week in the Undergraduate Activities Office, and in the evening at the Hall Porter's Desk.

Massey Report Topic At NFCUS Conference

The implementation of the Massey Report as far as it regards the university student was given a boost by the NFCUS Regional Conference held at McMaster last weekend.

Sixteen delegates representing the eight universities in the Ontario Region attended the conference. These included Assumption College, the newest member of NFCUS. Toronto delegates were Pete Martin, June Farquarson, and Ron Price.

Toronto moved that NFCUS concentrate again next year on the problem of implementing the recommendations of the Massey Report concerning a national system of scholarships. This motion was unanimously supported by the member universities.

The financial plight of the University student also came in for consideration as the Conference resolved to seek lower local transit rates and lower student rates for cultural entertainment events.

McMaster reported that a compilation of all the scholarships of over one hundred dollars value open to undergraduates at Canadian Universities has been almost completed and shortly will be available as a service to impecunious students trying to get on the gravy train.

In the field of the Arts, the conference resolved to ask the national conference to make both the NFCUS short story contest and the national art competition annual events. It was decided also that NFCUS should hold a national photographic contest for undergraduate photographers next year.

The problem of NFCUS relations with the Communist - dominated IUS came under discussion and it was decided that no decision would be made until Tony Enriquez had presented a detailed report on the CoSec Conference in Istanbul.

The perennial financial difficulties of NFCUS did not arise as a controversy at the conference. Howie Ellsworth, the regional Vice President pleaded, however, that the member universities who have not paid their fees for this year should do so immediately.

The conference went on record as supporting and endorsing the work of FROS at the campi in Ontario in assimilating new foreign students into college life.

Pete Martin, the Toronto Co-chairman of NFCUS said, "The most impressive feature of the conference was the enthusiasm and unanimity of the other Universities in Ontario and the many accomplishments of NFCUS during this year. It almost seems as though student apathy is on the wane."

Mathematicians Too Illiterate Varsity Prof. Tells Seminar

More courses in grammar and more reading of "good literature" were recommended for mathematicians yesterday by Dr. Ralph Stanton, Assistant Professor in Mathematics at the University of Toronto. He was suggesting a remedy for the "appalling ignorance and illiteracy displayed in present-day mathematical publications".

The topic of yesterday's Mathematics Seminar was "Are Mathematicians illiterate?" Stanton had prepared and distributed a list of about 30 quotations from recent mathematical texts to demonstrate tha sotme mathematicians at least are illiterate.

"Every Latin letter of the set of Latin letters which corresponds with the interaction of any 2 elements of the Greek group, contains an odd number of Greek letters in common with one but not both of the elements of which it is the interaction," was one of his illustrations. "I defy anyone to work out the meaning in less than 20 minutes," said Stanton.

"The prostitution of elementary and secondary school standards in education for fake psychological and political standards is one of the causes of illiteracy," he said. "This can be found in Ontario as well as the United States, with revision after revision all downward, of the curriculum."

Annsleyites Kidnap Men In Revenge

"Annesley's icy Greek Goddess", a robust, over-developed, young woman made entirely of snow, presided over a raging snowball fight and kidnapping last night on the front lawn of Annesley Hall.

Several artistic young men from Middle House (a Vic men's residence) erected a snow statue on this lawn last Monday evening. General consensus among the Annesley women was that this Greek Goddess was badly proportioned, and obscene.

Deeming the statue an insult to Victoria womanhood, the women last night kidnapped one of the sculptors, Grant Lawson, I Vic. This precipitated an hour-long battle between Middle House and Annesley.

"Get me off this tree," shouted Annesley's acptive, Lawson, as about forty girls struggled to tie him to a sturdy oak. He was called out of the library at 7.30 p.m. because "someone wants to see him"; the someone turning out to be the Annesley girls, intent on retribution for the "Lady".

Nore Flynn, III Vic, on his way to Middle House for reinforcements, shouted, "Never say die Grant, we'll be back." The struggling Lawson could only say, as they wrapped the rope around a few more times, "Big Joke".

After 15 minutes of vicious struggle the hostage was still alive and kicking. Then the reinforcements finally arrived.

The first rush of boys resulted only in the freeing of the captive, as Annesley girls rushed from the residence in a counter-attack. This led to a free-for-all which ended in the front hall of Annesley.

According to all reports the sculptors who were the cause of all the trouble were Grant Lawson, Peter Grant, Doug Ross, Nore Flynn, Hugh Little, and Bruce Sutherland.

Reported damage was not heavy, one broken belt, one lost stocking cap, assorted bruises and a broken window.

Afterwards the weary and snow-scarred veterans retired to the Union Coffee-shop for refreshments.

Police Charge 2 Men With Ripping Gallows

The red panel truck that carried the effigies of the "Red" Dean of Canterbury and Dr. James Endicott through downtown Toronto Sunday night did not complete its tour intact. At about 11 p.m. that night the gallows, that had been tied to the back of the truck, were unceremoniously ripped off by two men at the corner of Bloor and Bay St.

The effigies were part of a demonstration organized by the student branch of the Association for the Liberation of Unkraine (SVU) in protest of a meeting held by the Canadian Peace Congress in Massey Hall Sunday.

Wolfram Burghardt-Klen, I UC, a member of the SVU, said that when the truck stopped for a red light at Bloor St. one man ran from the sidewalk, tore down the gallows, and disappeared into a near-by lane. He said there was another "gentlemanly looking" man with the attacker.

Police, however, quickly captured the two men and charged them with public disturbance. Detectives at Belmont Police station would not reveal the names.

According to Burghardt-Klen, one was British and one was of "unknown origin".

At Massey Hall the students in the truck were asked by police to keep away from the area. Burghardt-Klen said police feared there might be a riot when the meeting ended. He added that some police had said if they had had their own way, they would have chased all the people out of Massey Hall.

Engineers Debate Vic On NFCUS

"I have yet to meet anyone, Artsman or Engineer," said Leo Gray, II SPS, "who can be bothered to put down his beer long enough to discuss NFCUS." He will be one of the speakers at the Vic-SPS debate to be held in Vic's Alumnae Hall at 8.00 p.m. tonight

Gray added, "Therefore NFCUS has failed to make any noticeable impression on University of Toronto students." His opponents at the debate will be NFCUS Publicity Director, Ron Price, III Vic, and Dennis Lane, IV Vic. The other Engineering debater is Gord Hurlburt, III SPS.

Price said, "We are used to hearing criticisms of NFCUS by the Engineers. Now the matter is out in the open, and they will have to prove them. I know for certain they can't."

The motion before the House is, "Resolved that NFCUS does not make a worthwhile contribution to the University of Toronto campus."

Also at the debate will be the Co-Chairmen of NFCUS, Jane Farquarson, III UC, and Pete Martin, II UC.

Hurlburt asked, "What's NFCUS?". He is a member of the Hart House Debates Committee, and spoke in the recent debate on education.

WUS Seminar

Communications And Skiing Too

In three days designed to bring together foreign and Canadian students with the desire of promoting friendship and better understanding through group living and interchange of ideas, the World University Service Seminar at Caledon last weekend studied the topic Media of Communication — Bridges or Barriers to Human Understanding?

The discussion groups were led by Professor McLuhan, Professor Ham, Rev. Ted Nichols, National Secretary of the Student Christian Movement, and Mr. Al Shea of the Communications Research Company.

In a panel discussion on Friday night, Mr. Shea pointed out that the technical process of communication is a mechanical one—hence it is neutral, and has no influence per se on the message transmitted. But the individuals involved in the process determine what sort of material is to be injected into the communication scheme.

Professor Ham said communication was in essence the means by which minds influence minds and that result could be creative or cataclysmic. He also noted the two aspects to communication — information and meaning. The latter is the essential point of the communication system and involves the theory of "feed-back" or interaction between the communication entities.

Saturday morning the delegates met in separate groups to concentrate on sub-divisions of the general topic: Is Conversation a Lost Art?; Is Technology the Beginning or the End of Culture?; and Is International Misunderstanding inevitable? One student from each group was chosen to record ideas brought out and generally to assist the leader. In the afternoon the groups combined for joint summary.

The recorders formed a panel Sunday morning for a sum-up meeting to present the conclusions or further problems which finally evolved from their separate groups. In all groups the problem of definition had cropped up in such words as "conversation," "culture", and "entertainment."

The question of where students fit in the question of communication was raised. Rev. Nichols said the important thing is to do something in our own environment about subjects discussed, for this commuication in motion. Skiing communication in motion. Skiing and dancing formed part of the entertainment during the weekend.

Settlement House

Varsity Serves City

By BOB BROWN

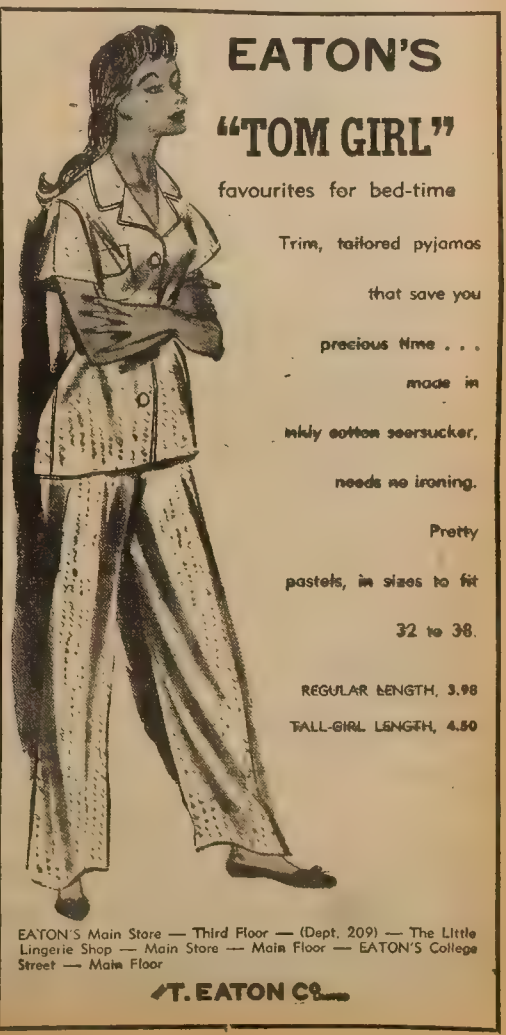
What is the University Settlement? It is two rather ramshackle buildings, with their woodwork painted in Royal Blue and White, squatting behind the Art Gallery on Grange Road.

These two buildings do not seem at first glance to stand out from the other buildings of greyer hue that surround it. But if you stand on the corner of Beverly and Grange for a while, just watching these houses, you will see a never-ending stream of people of all ages entering and leaving the houses.

This is as it should be, for it is the people of the district that give the University Settlement its life and its purpose. For the University Settlement is the University's own social service agency, serving the overcrowded and deteriorated neighborhood immediately south of our campus.

The Settlement is a recreational, cultural, and social center for the people of its district. It is staffed by over 150 volunteers.

Along with these volunteer workers are 25 Psychology sutdents from the University (those taking Psych. 2a) who are required to serve two hours a week at the Settlement as part of their practical training in Psychology. However, there are about 8 additional university students from other courses who are at present donating their time and energy to the worthwhile work of the Settlement.



The Settlement, founded in 1910 by Sir Robert Falconer and members of the University staff, was originally set up to provide students with an opportunity of meeting and working with residents of a local community. It is still administered by University faculty, students, and representatives of campus organizations.

The University Settlement attempts to provide these people with opportunities for recreation, enjoyment, and education. The Settlement operates a Credit Union, a mothers' club, an international club, classes for New Canadians, and many other services for the adults of the area.

The children, however, receive special attention. There is a children's library, and a nursery school. There is a swimming and gym program for the children. A host of recreational clubs operate within the settlement, giving children of all ages an opportunity to enjoy themselves doing everything from woodwork to cooking. The Settlement also operates a summer camp in Muskoka.

But the Settlement itself needs help to carry on its fine work. University students are particularly needed to supervise children's sports, to act as group leaders, to teach English classes to New Canadians, and to serve as camp counsellors in the summer. Most of these jobs would require about two hours of time each week. All student volunteers are trained and assisted by the Settlement's regular staff.

If you are interested in assisting the University Settlement, Mr. Lon Lawson, Settlement Program Director, would be glad to hear from you. The Settlement's address is 15 and 23 Grange Rd., the telephone number is EMpire 8-4335.

Drive For Permanent Office Headed By Canadian Reps

(This is the third in a series of articles designed to acquaint the Canadian student with the history and organization of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students—CoSec).

By RICH ANCO

Thirteen months passed after the Stockholm Conference before the second meeting of the International Student Conference. But they were important months. They were months which saw the strengtheningof the idea that the western student unions needed some form of official organization to carry out their practical international projects.

On the invitation of the Scottish Union of Students the second meeting of western unions was held in Edinburg in January, 1952. Before the 25 countries present adjourned they established the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (CoSec). Canada played a major role in this development.

What had been the attitude at Stockholm, the first formal meeting of non-IUS student unions, found only mild support at Edinburgh. Delegates at Stockholm had been extremely optimistic that practical work among students could be done outside the International Union of Students, but they had refused to set up some central organization.

Their position was based on two arguments: (1) international student unity was desirable; (2) this could not be realized by forming an "anti-IUS" group.

Denis Lazure, one of the NFCUS delegates to Stockholm, expressed the optimistic attitude in his report: "The (Stockholm) Conference probably deceived the extremists both left and right. But it will meet with the support of moderate people and those who, naively perhaps, are still expecting the day when all students in every country of the world will be united, body and soul, in the same community."

While the Edinburgh Conference did not abandon the ideals of international student unity, it did make clear that if anything was to be done among the western unions outside the IUS, some permanent office would be essential. Canadian delegates, Jean de Margerie, and Syd Wax (then president of Toronto's Students' Administrative Council), were important forces behind the move establishing the permanent secretariat.

At Stockholm, national unions had been delegated certain practical projects. Few of these had been completed by 1952. In a speech attacking those who had not wanted a western office, Wax laid the blame for the failure of many of the projects on the fact that no secretariat had been established.

As a result of Canadian resolutions, plans for an international secretariat were set down to co-ordinate the work of 25 national unions from western Europe, North America, South East Asia and South America.

The Co-Ordinating Secretariat (CoSec) was to be recognized as a permanent administrative agency whose task was to ensure the implementation of the decisions made by the International Student Conference. The central office was to be located in Leiden, Netherlands.

Reporting on the Edinburgh Conference, Wax said: "The meeting was unanimous in its opposition to forming a Western Student union. All we wanted was international student co-operation for and by students, without political activity. We wanted a strengthening of the co-operation which had begun at Stockholm."

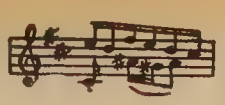
MISALLIANCE

Reality Cracks

Martyn Green's proposed appearance with the Misalliance company gave rise to considerable speculation as to the probable result of combining a Gilbert and Sullivan player with a Shaw play. That result, which we saw last night at the Royal Alex. was startling; it was Shaw turned into musical comedy turned back into Shaw; it was stylistic and artificial; it had the hard glitter and brilliance of rhinestones and it was enormously funny. But it took some getting used to.

The curtain went up on a set of breathtaking confusion with two actors concealed in its midst more or less as incidental props. Surrounded by Mr. Burton's lavish arrangements of butterflies, stained glass and draperies, Robert Casper and Robert Fletcher deliberately shouted each other into hysterics and the audience into partial deafness. From then until the final curtain call the cast laughed at themselves, the audience and the play.

The play itself, as well as being a commentary on the illusions of the middle class about the aristocracy, is a sort of brightly-painted vehicle for the transportation of all sorts of eccentric characters — a veritable circus wagon full of clowns and acrobats. The success of last night's production depended largely upon taking this brightness and frivolity to its furthest artificial painted ends.



This is, in fact, the most theatrical piece of work which has been done in Toronto this season; every detail of the production strains reality until it cracks. Director Cyril Richard has done a brilliant job of creating a comic style, consistent and effective, among the actors of his company. Their competence and vitality made up for their lack of polish and the various technical drawbacks.

Except for Mr. Green the cast was hopelessly at sea in the matter of accents; they were very much American actors in an English play. Mr. Gilbert himself found it impossible entirely to give up Gilbert and Sullivan for Shaw; he was funny indeed but rather too pointedly so, laughing at his own jokes like a stage comedian. George Turner as Lord Summerhays (the distinguished father of the very badly behaved Bentley) became a trifle monotonous at times but he admirably suited the role of empire builder. Mrs. Tarleton, played by Isabel Elsom, was admirably warm and fluttery in an exquisitely hideous gown of green silk with innumerable bows and fringes and floating panels. Robert Casper, played son Bentley with such speed and dash that the rest of the cast seemed left behind in breathless pursuit, except for Robert Fletcher (the stuffy son) who managed to keep up most of the time through sheer youthful healthiness.

Katherine Sergava played Lina Szczepanowska, the beautiful acrobat who suddenly appears in the greenhouse emerging from a crashed airplane, with great attractiveness and aplomb. We felt that if only the billiard balls had appeared on stage Miss Sergava would have juggled them with immense success. Joey Percival, the happy product of three fathers, was statuesquely played by Lee Richardson in striking contrast to Hugh Thomas' Gunner (remarkably like a red-faced doormouse) the confused and snivelling but determinedly murderous and moral product of one of Mr. Tarleton's adventures. The greatest surprise of the evening to us was Priscilla Morrill's Hypatia. It took the whole first act to convince us that Hypatia ought to be a large young lady with dusky ringlets and a husky voice, but once we were convinced we were more and more impressed, in spite of the outrageous sailor suit which so hampered Miss Morrill's movements (or perhaps, on second thought, because of it.)

An amazing show is the current production of Misalliance — and full of surprises. It is a production which brings excellent direction, immense vitality and enormous good fun to a vastly entertaining play.

Nancy Donnell.

Vic And Patience

In the words of Gilbert the Vic Music Club production of Patience was "not supremely so, but oh so all but." Patience ie not one of the funniest of the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas, but it has some very pleasant music in it, notably duets. But it would be very hard indeed to satirize a supremely sick movement, such as Victorian aesthetism, without being all but into it one's self.

The twenty love-sick maidens, who seem to go through the same routine twenty times had no difficulty in looking the part and sang fairly creditably. The male chorus of dragoons marched loudly, some with the aid of C.O.T.C. training and some obviously without; but unfortunately they sang rather weakly. They seemed to suffer from a common malady among male choral groups—a lack of tenors. In spite of the clear indications of Godfrey Ridout, who directs the musical half, both the chorus and orchestra (sometimes even a principal) failed to follow. However one might conjecture from past experience that many of these rough spots will be polished in the course of the week.

Ray Carl as Bunthorne and Di Michener as Lady Jane were the outstanding comic contributions. The former played with an inventiveness of voice and gesture that made Bunthorne a natural satire as well as a certain individual aesthetist. Contrasted with his effeminate posturing was the masculine massiveness of Lady Jane. She spoke with resonant emphasis and has a fairly rich voice especially in the lower register. The scene in which she accompanies herself with gusto upon a cello and then slings it over her shoulder and carries it off is particularly amusing.

Dorothy MacTavish makes Patience as credible as possible to a generation which has known the influence of the suffragettes. Her voice became more agreeable as the opera progressd. Lillian Petrie who is to alternate with Dorothy as Patience sang Lady Saphir last night. Her voice is

AMONG THE HURONS

Sainte-Marie

SAINTE-MARIE AMONG THE HURONS, by Wilfrid Jury and Wsie McLeod Jury, Oxford University Press.

In 1639 the Jesuit Fathers established at Sainte-Marie-aux-Hurons, a hospital for the sick, a cemetery for the dead, a church for public devotions, a retreat for pilgrims, and, finally, a place apart from the others, where the infidels — who are only admitted by day, when passing that way —can always hear some good words respecting their salvation.' For ten years they dwelt here, becoming the first to farm and domesticate animals in the province. They moved among the Huron Indians ministering to them as priests, doctors, teachers, and even as military advisers, for the little community in Georgian Bay was continually besieged by the Iroquois.

Life was dangerous and there were many martyrs at Sainte-Marie. Nor did they receive any aid from France, who, in the throes of internal disorders, seemed to feel that military assistance to the missionary outpost would be regarded with hostility by England and The Netherlands. Thus, in 1649, in the face of Huron dispersal and the approach of the Iroquois the Jesuits were forced to abandon their mission and 'for fear that our enemies, only too wicked, should profane the sacred place, and derive from it an advantage, we ourselves set fire to it, and beheld it burn before our eyes, in less than one hour, our work of nine or ten years.'

Those ten years saw the building of a most substantial fort with stone used for the foundations, walls, and bastions. Besides these were gardens, vineyards, and orchards enabling the mission to be in many ways self-supporting. Most extraordinary of their achievements was the construction of a canal, nearly 500 feet in length with three lock. That the Fathers should have been able to accomplish this is amazing for locks had only recently been introduced in France and all the equipment necessary for their construction in Canada had to be manufactured on the spot. As this wase the first canal on the continent its discovery a few years ago was of major significance.

After 1649 the ruins were undisturbed until 1948 when, under the direction of the University of Western Ontario and sponsored by the Society of Jesus in Upper Canada, explorations were begun. This is the second narrative of the book and is an account as fascinating as that of the Jesuit mission. Armed with trowel, whisk and camel's hair brush archeologists slowly uncovered the clues which helped them to build the story of Sainte-Marie.

This is painstaking work and one might think that an account of it would fill the reader with tedium but the Jurys have written with such scholarship and brilliance that the layman, the amateur in Anthropology and Archeology, will find Sainte-Marie Among the Hurons a fascinating study in an art that receives too little attention in Canada. The book is lavishly supplied with excellent drawings and photographs.

Lastly, though not least in importance, the Oxford Press has produced a work which in design and setting reflects the nature and excellence of its contents. a rare and welcome sight on bookshelves of Canadiana.

VARSITY INTRAMURAL EDITION

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

By MOISHE REITER

Pre-Meds Basketball squad will suffer a rough blow if Vic Kurdyak decides to stick with the Varsity Intermediates. This will make Kurdyak ineligible for Intramural play and may do the Pre-Meds people out of a Sifton Cup.

The lads from the Lower Campus Morgue seemed all set for the hoop crown this season when the freshman crop produced an array of basketball talent that no other College in Varsity could match. Besides Kurdyak there was Jerry Lansky, originally tagged for the Baby Blue, Gerry Edelist, star with last year's High School Junior Champions Harbord Collegiate and others. Thus far in the season the Medics are undefeated but loss of Kurdyak would leave them without a centreman to match Junior Skule's Bill Karpinski or Senior Meds Jim Fallis.

The elder Medsmen are one club that are struggling uphill to move back into the running. Since they lost their first game to St. Mike's A's they have had a hard time. It's a real job to try figuring out why they aren't doing well. Their lineup is the best in the League—on paper anyway. Still they're hobbling along, looking just about ready to drop. Their next game with St. Mike's will settle their fate.

Should Kurdyak move into the Intercollegiate Leagues the fight will probably be between Jr. Skule and the Irish, although Pre-Meds will kick to the last and could surprise everyone. If Kurdyak stays, and the Pre-Meds thus retain their strength at centre we'll go out on a limb and call it close between the Doctors and the Skules.

Water-Baby Blues

. . . are now eligible for Intramural swimming competitions, thanks to a decision of the Intramural Committee made this week. The Intramural meets are now open to all undergraduates, so that the winners will be true University champions in their events.

Which brings to mind the championship trials to be held this Friday night in Hart House. These will form part of the first Varsity Friday Athletic Night, and will be run off at the same time as a regular Intercollegiate Basketball game. In this feature Varsity Blues take on the Golden Gaels of Queen's while the Varsity Seconds meet the Eaton's Junior Executives in a preliminary match. The Junior Execs are one outfit that sends a fair number of good hoopsters into the Varsity camp. Their players are the pick of the High School loop and should give the Junior Varsitys a hot time. Starting at 7 o'clock this will be an A-Night well worth coming out for. The swimming trials will give us a chance to see such Intercollegiate stars as Bibi Stipitec, Van Tets, Wally Plavsic and Bruce Taylor.

Jr Skule Defeat Jr UC First In Their Hoop Group

By RIM

Junior Skule added the University College Juniors to their list of vicitms Monday in Hart House when they defeated the Arts basketballers 62-28. It was a clear mismatch as the Engineers tripped lightly to their victory over the sweating Redmen who never were really in the game except to keep play moving both ways.

Playing a fine team game, which contrasted sharply with the disorganized work of their opponents, the Skulemen moved swiftly and piled up a great first period lead of 16 points. From that point they just coasted to the end, adding to their lead whenever the spirit moved them.

The Engineers have the height to put them out of the reach of their competition in the drive to the Sifton Cup and the Intramural Basketball Championship. Against UC they enjoyed a complete control of both backboards and though their shooting was not overly accurate they were able to turn even misses into tip-in field goals. This wrecked a good UC defensive setup. Had they been able to get rebounds at their own basket the Artsmen might have fared far better but it was all they could do to get the ball out of their own end after a Skule score.

Skule took no chances even after they had the game on ice, checking right up the floor and barring the Jr. UC boys from the area about the Engineering hoop. The Artsmen were forced to throw from way out and had to make every shot good on first try as the Skule laddies gave them no second chances. When the Engineers missed though, Ed Skrzypek was up for the rebound and on about six occasions, the tip-in.

UC's Marv Kopel supplied the picture basket of the day as he whirled at mid-court throwing without aiming, sending the ball off the board into the net. Mainly, though, UC's marksmen had a rotten day, missing the hoop by far while the Engineers had slightly better luck.

Bill Karpinski showed excellent form in the centre spot for the Skule boys setting up plays and drawing the UC defence apart for Engineering drives in on the basket. For the Artsmen Howard "Red" Dick and Mickey Cohen at guard were most effetcive, accounting for ten of the UC 38 points.

In the last period the UC attack crumbled completely under the relentless Skule pressure and the losers started throwing desperation passes the length of the floor. When these weren't being intercepted by the Engineers they were flying out of bounds.

In front all the way Skule was pressed only in the second period when the Artsmen scored 16 points, btu even then the Skulemen hooped 17 to keep well ahead. Ed Skrzypek dropped 16 points for the top scoring effort of the day while buddie McMinn added 7.

Kopel netted 10 for UC and Cohen threw in 7.

Phys-ed Ices Vic Gals 5-2 Broyer Stars

By JANE KELLY

PHE I looked like a sure bet to win the intramural hockey championship as they whipped Vic I 5-2 Monday afternoon. The Phys Ed girls have defeated their chief opposition St. Hilda's and have yet to lose a game.

During the first period of the game PHE were in complete control as they kept the puck in the Vic end for most of the time. Whenever Vic did get a scoring oppirtunity, fine defensive play by Phys Ed broke up the Blay. Jackie Cahoon scored the first goal for Phys Ed broke up the play. Jack- of play. Their second tally came a few minutes later as Marilyn Charters banged the puck into the open corner of the net behind Vice goalie Di Michener, who did not get too much protection from her team.

Vic came back fast in the second period and were all around the Phys Ed net, but their shots kept hitting the post. Then PHE took over as Inger, Olsen and Jean Broyer scored. Just before the end of the period Vic replied with their first goal as Polly Spragge found the net with a hard shot from ten feet out.

In the third period PHE became a little over-confident and some rather sloppy defensive work resulted in Vic's second goal which was scored by Jackie Wickware after she received a pass from behind the net. Jean Broyer slapped in her second goal in the last few minutes of the game to wrap it up for Phys Ed.

The Salt Of The Earth

By JOHN WILSON

Trinity College is the smallest of the four Arts Colleges. And yet with a male enrollment of only 282, they are at present revelling in fourth place in the Reed Trophy race, some three hundred points behind St. Mike's, and almost a thousand points ahead of Victoria and UC.

While University College is breathing its last in Intramural sport, they should hardly complain, for the same situation obviously exists in all the Arts Colleges, as well as several of the Faculties. The problem is no less prevalent in the gothic building north of Hoskin Avenue.

However, the lack of competition is most felt in tournament sports such as indoor track in the winter, and tennis, harrier, and track and field in the fall. There is next to nothing in interest in this line of athletic endeavor in Trinity. Participation in athletics is almost nil; everybody is going back to the books, a situation not to be condemned, but then it is happening all over the campus, and there really isn't a solution to the problem.

As far as the major sports go, football, hockey, and basketball, Trinity holds its own, considering the small amount of talent available. This year's hockey team has shown little for the records, while appearing to be a winner on paper before the season's start. The injury, early last fall, to coach Kirk Murray, left the team in a rought position, not to mention injures to several key players at the first of the schedule.

The basketball team, unlike the hockey lads, show a great deal of interest, despite lack of adekuate practice time in Hart House. They are currently engaged in a two-game series with the McMaster Bucaneers, and have already played several exhibition contests.

Again, there really is no solution to the problem. There is certainly a lack of talent since the last of the veterans disappeared, and again, there is this recent trend to more studying. In 1950 and 1951, if the hockey team had a practice at eleven, lectures were forgotten about. But today, you can't get the players to come near the arena if lectures interfere.

But Trinity isn't wailing. While interfaculty competition seems to be suffering on the rest of the campus, the Red and Black continues on its merry way, not always spectacular, but never without color.

The Sportswoman

By ANN STARK

Last night we had a talk with Judy Strickland, the gal in charge of the women's interfaculty volleyball schedule which is currently in action. There's a lot wrong with this schedule, and although not much can be done about it this year, someone should wake up to the fact that all is not right on the volleyball court.

There are four leagues in the schedule with four teams in each league. The teams are arranged in such a way that the top bananas are in the first league, and what are considered to be the poorer teams end up in league four. League winners play for the championship at season's end. Now you know the situation. BUT — those squads that reach the finals are not the top teams of the schedule. Instead, they're left sitting in the first two leagues while the winner of the bottom league ends up playing in the finals. It just doesn't figure. What's the sense of playoffs or championships if there is an unfair representation? We agree that it is better for teams of more or less equal talent to battle it out with each other — this makes for bigger and better spirit, interest, and enthusiasm.

So instead of sending the league winners to the playoffs, why don't we adopt the system used in the men's interfaculty hockey schedule. That is, the top two teams of the first and second leagues, and the winners of leagues three and four meet for the championship. This obviously provides a true representation of the top teams, which, after all, is only fair. For once, we can copy something useful from the boys. They thought up the idea, and we would be smart to take advantage of it. The system works well in their hockey schedule, so what are we waiting for?

We're not through yet. There's another beef. Something is radically wrong with a schedule that produces game tallies like the following — 75-16, 54-15, 47-22. These are a typical example of the scores that have been turning up frequently. The teams are supposed to be matched in such a way that games will be close and exciting. What is even remotely close about a 75-16 tally? A lot of these hassles are so one-sided that it's too pathetic to witness. Pity the poor referees that put in a whole evening watching such slaughter.

The fault in this case lies mostly with the individual college reps. They estimate the quality of their teams and are responsible for their league positions. This year's schedule is way off balance as the majority of the scores will show.

Volleyball is a great game and is worthy of better management than it has been receiving to date. Let's get organized.

Hart House Harmony

Medsmen Best Barbers

A milestone was reached on the campus yesterday. A set of preliminaries in the Hart House quartet contest went by without a single rendition of "Coney Island Baby".

But by the time they get to the fourth annual such competition—that old barbershop standby will undoubtedly have been sung many times. Yesterday, three foursomes sang, with one winning quartet moving on to the finals which will be held towards the end of the month. Three more will croon next Tuesday at 1.30 and three more the following Tuesday, making a field of four finalists for the last day of the contest.

—VSP by Ross Dunn

Yesterday's winner was the 5TG Four from the Faculty of Medicine. All third year men, Norm Gladstone, Gerry Cohen, Herman White and G. Goldberg were adjudged to be the best of the three competitors. They had a slight margin over the Four Minims from Pharmacy, who finished second in the contest last year.

The third quartet wasn't in the running to move out of the eliminations, but brought the house down. Four residents of Wycliffe College, they called themselves the Four Bishops and made up in enthusiasm what they lacked in harmony. They wore black bowler hats and black gowns and got accolades for their efforts.

Master of Ceremonies John McKellar got the biggest laugh of the program when he announced that the contest was being conducted under the rules of the "Society for the Prevention of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America". He hastily amended that to the "preservation".

Prof Langer Will Lecture On Symbolism

The author of the book, "Philosophy in a new key," Professor Susanne K. Langer, will give a lecture on "Symbolism and Human Mentality" at 4.30 this afternoon, in Room 8 UC.

Professor Langer, who is an authority on symbolic logic and aesthetics, is at present a visiting Professor at the University of Michigan. She has also lectured at Harvard and Columbia.

There will be a seminar in the Music Room of the Vic Student Union in the evening at 8.15 p.m., where students may take part in a discussion of the same topic.

strong as ever, but her stage presence remains tinged with self-consciousness, so that one imagines that she would not be as convincingly innocent as Patience. But that is only speculation.

Of the other soloists only John Emerson as Archibald Grosvenor was satisfactory. A yearly improvement is noticeable in his voice until this year it has become quite full. His Archibald Grosvenor had some stature as a romantic hero (already some achievement) although he was not much of a lover. The three army officers were almost inaudible although they did come to in the trio after they are converted to aestheticism. There couldn't be any connection. The Lady Angela, resembling very much a fairy out of Iolanthe, was also vocally weak.

It was a relief to have everybody converted back to flesh and blood in the finale with its confusion and typically tricky Gilbertian ending, where the most attractive costumes of the evening appeared for two minutes with the putrid purple of Bunthorne's get-up against the plain but effectively angular set.

All this criticism is intended to be offered on the level of professional G and S, for this college club very nearly achieves professional quality while retaining the freshness that often disappears apart from the amateur level.

McGill Needs

and two eight pages a week.

They also state that any reduction in the proposed scale would result in a paper which "would be unable to serve the administration, the extra curricular organizations or the students of McGill adequately."

Let's Get Up

McGill University's Student Council Executive Committee has recommended that their SEC fees be raised from the present 15 dollars, to 17 dollars. In spite of this increase, they expect to cut the budget of the McGill Daily, one of their major expenses, by 5,000 dollars.

The McGill Daily is one of Canada's great university newspapers. It has been a daily for many years. Last year it published 92 issues or about the same volume of copy as did The Varsity. This year it is publishing just over 70 issues, and next year it may be cut below that. Certainly their capacity to give news coverage will be cut drastically.

Last week, the budget of The Varsity was cut about one thousand dollars. And this did not make up all of our Student Council's deficit this year. For a few years now, our SAC has cut down on student activities every year in order to make ends meet. With the additional cost of completing the SAC building this year, ends just won't meet.

Nor will any form of balance be possible next year unless the SAC gets a raise in its student fees.

The SAC could cut its student activity right out. But othe runiversities have some activity organized by their student council, and we could have it too, if the student representatives would vote themselves something of a raise in fees.

The University Orchestra and Chorus should have had money two years ago; Weekend Committee, Hospitality, and many other of the Council's problems need it now. The current NFCUS fee raise has to come from something. Also, The Varsity could be re-instated as a five-day week daily, the only one left in the Commonwealth.

The question arises, would the board of governors pass a student council fee raise. They themselves have raised their fees roughly 25 percent since the last student council raise to five dollars per student in 1949. In view of the over-lapse of time the least they could give us now would be something to cover, on the one hand, rising costs of vital student activities, and on the other, our committments to an organized National Federation, representing us on the international scene.

It's Your Own Fault

News Item: Executive of Women's Undergraduate Association of University College threatens to dissolve itself because of a lack of student interest.

Behind this bit of news is a problem, and a very old problem. The WUA solution is neither new nor is it a real solution, but if nothing else it will serve to make clear the miserably low state of student interest in their own affairs.

We suppose the Executive has done everything it can to stimulate student interest in college government. Failing this we feel it is only sensible that the WUA should cease to exist. One can knock one's head against a wall for a limited time only.

There is but one fundamental reason for having the WUA — to operate in and for the interests of the women of UC. If, on the other hand, the students almost completely ignore the WUA and render it inoperative to the point where it cannot properly function, then the Association loses its worth, both to Executive and member.

If conditions are as the Executive has described them, then the WUA definitely should be disbanded. This will be a hard pill for the UC coeds to swallow, but they have brought it upon themselves.

Grow Up, WUA Tells UC Women

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Next Thursday, February 4, at 1 o'clock in the Women's Union Theatre there will be an open meeting to decide the fate of the Women's Undergraduate Association and its Executive for 1953-54.

This letter is written for the sole purpose of clarifyinf the stand of the Executive in its move toward resignation, and to state what would be the situation in the case of dissolution of the organization. There would, in fact, be no body to represent the opinion of the University College woman. A new organization would have to be founded, and with it a Constitution. As regards functions subsidized by the WUA alone ie, athletics, they would be discontinued altogether and participants in sports from UC would organize themselves and support themselves is, but their own equipment. There would be no athletic banquet.

As regards functions which are jointly subsidized with the men fo UC, i.e., Arts Ball, Follies, Music Club, Players' Guild, Parliaments, Freshmen Weekend, Graduation Banquet, Soph-Frosh Banquet, and any miscellaneous function, these will be controlled solely by the men, their subsidies being strictly for the benefit of the men in UC from whose fees the money is taken.

Because each organization is autonomous in its own right, it would be impossible for the men to take over the administration of women's fees. Furthermore, women of UC would have no representative on the SAC or EAC. No elaboration is necessary.

We of this year's executive are proud of our College. We should not be where we are now if we were not proud of it. This year's executive has avoided any adverse publicity throughout the year and have no desire to make headlines now. Nor do we want to be labelled 'holier than thou' or patted on the back for whatever little we have done this year.

Our stand is simply this: Why function if we are not needed? Why spend people's money to subsidize an Athletic Banquet or a Grad Banquet, or an Arts Ball or a Follies or a Freshman Week-end when the contributors have to be forced to attend their own affairs.

We know better than anyone that University College is large, heterogeneous and therefore unwieldy. We are not so foolish as to expect five hundred women at every open meeting. We know we are only one executive of dozens fighting the same losing battle to gain some vestige of support.

Everyone recognizes the difference between an actively and passively supported organization, i.e., a church, charity or government, to name only three. But when are they going to realize the same applies to College organizations.

The question boils down to simply this — when will this trend towards self-interest end, and when will men and women ever return to self-sacrifice again? It is time we grew up. The war has been over for nine years. That should be time enough for students at this University with even an ounce of maturity in them to regain their bearings, to throw away their illusions of the "silver platter", and to take stock of this world in which we live.

Shirley Reid,
President, Women's Undergraduate Association.

Value In Weekends

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Last Wedesday the editors published a feature story publicizing the Cornell-McGill Exchange Weekend, in Toronto on February 26, 27, and 28. The headline writer, catering to what he thought was campus opinion captioned it, "Wee-hic-End". We consider it rather unfortunate that The Varsity aids in the misconception that the main lure of the exchange weekends is booze parties, entertaining as the thought may be.

In fact the Carabin weekends of years past have been held with a bare minimum of drinking. The Weekends are designed to create interest in and an understanding of the problems inherent in a bilingual and bicultural society. They succeed in this more than the short duration of the visits would seem to show. Many Toronto students who participate have never met a French-speaking Canadian, and have weird and wonderful misconceptions about ultra-nationalistic couriers de bois. The Montreal Carabins, on the other hand, often have difficulty getting enough students to come to Toronto because French - Canadians who have never visited Ontario are afraid of the boredom of a round of English tea parties, replete with men in spats and bowler hats. I submit, gentlemen, we don't need (and we don't have) five bottles per person to create interest between these two groups. In evidence of this, read a paragraph of the letter received from the Montreal arabin chairman:

"Many of our students told about their discovery of Toronto; indeed some of them were talking as if they had pioneered the place, that is, discovered a sort of new world of thought. Those were mostly the ones who had never opened up with someone outside the province of Quebec who wasn't talking French. That is, I think, the absolute proof that for them the weekend had served its real purpose. Last week, a friend of mine asked me with much amazement what I had done to some of our mutual friends who fall into the category of pioneers I was talking about. He had discovered them open-eyed about Ontario and Toronto not being as they thought it was. His amazement came from the fact that it took only three days to accomplish that reversal of opinion. All I did, I told him, was bring them to Toronto, and there the atmosphere, the people, and the events did the rest. If only a couple of boys or girls returned from Montreal or Toronto with this change accomplished, the whole thing — organization, money, time allegedly lost — is worth it, because these people will want to talk about their experiences with others. This is where the grandeur of the whole thing lies."

The forthcoming Cornell-McGill weekend — the first of its kind we have sponsored — will be run along lines quite similar to the Carabin Weekends. The main feature will be two seminar groups on Friday and Saturday afternoons. Discussion will centre around student papers entitled "Forces to Social Conformity in our Society: The Right to be Different" and "Freedom of Thought and Knowledge — Right or Privilege?" High-pressure advertising, weeping vice-presidential candidates, Victoria book-burning, and Great White Fathers will all get kicked around in the three-hour sessions. In addition, a banquet in Hart House, tours of the campus for visitors, and parties are all scheduled.

These visitors are interested; they are interesting. On this campus of some 8,500 students, are some who want to toss a few ideas at opinionated strangers, who want to hash over problems that the other fellow views from his side of the fence. This, gentlemen, is the purpose of our Weekends. We sincerely hope that our students will take advantage of the opportunity. Application forms for February 26, 27, 28, will be available until Friday at the SAC office.

Stan Schiff,
Co-Chairman
EAC Weekend Committee.

They Just Hate NFCUS

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Last week the Engineering Society refused to give its sanction to a resolution proposed by the Massey Committee of NFCUS calling for an extension of the national system of scholarships and bursaries. This resolution had been passed unanimously by the SAC. It has since been passed by the student assemblies of all the colleges and faculties that have so far considered it. What is this resolution that the Society felt that it could not endorse?

The significant part of this resolution states:

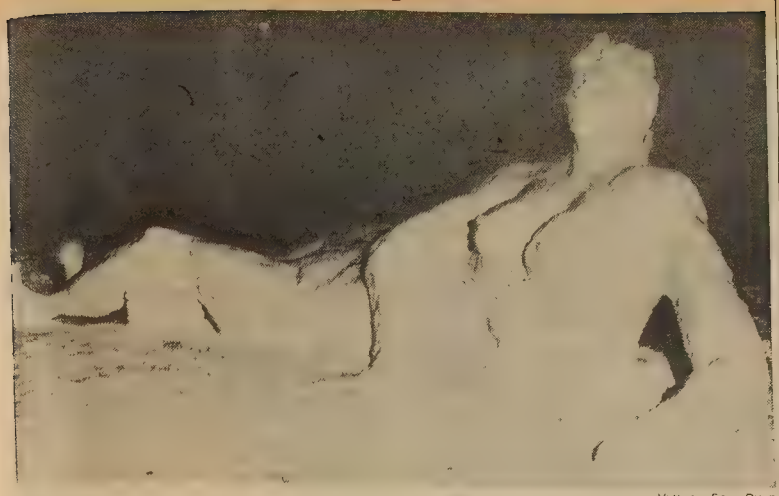
"Whereas the Royal Commission on National Employment in the Arts, Letters and Sciences in 1951 recommended establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries;

And Whereas the goal of equality of opportunity in higher education is still far from achieved;

And Whereas implementation of the Commission's recommendations would constitute a substantial move towards this goal;

Therefore be it resolved that this Council urgently requests the Government of Canada to put these recommendations into effect."

The resolution is straightforward enough. What objection could the Society possibly find to it? They claim that the scheme would benefit only Artsmen. And yet the resolution specifically refers to the Arts, Letters and Sciences. They ask whether students have the right to claim special privileges. They might well ask whether farmers, brewers, manufacturers or any group have the right to ask for special privileges. Any group seeks to further its own interests, and in this case students are simply acting as a pressure group. They have as much right to do so as anyone else — in view of the nature of their request, more.



The real reason why the Engineering Society is opposing this motion was left unstated. This is, of course, that the Massey Committee is a NFCUS activity, and the Society just doesn't like NFCUS. It says that it never hears of anything that NFCUS is doing. And yet, when the NFCUS Committee offers to send a representative to speak before the Society, they refuse him permission to come. They say that NFCUS does nothing. Yet, when a NFCUS measure is placed right before their eyes, they refuse to cooperate with it.

The Massey Committee is trying to perform an important service for the students of this university. Obstructing this work on the grounds of petty prejudice just doesn't make sense. The Engineering Society is entitled to hold any attitude towards NFCUS that it likes. But the Society should not let that attitude stand in the way of constructive progress. Consider NFCUS and the Massey Commission recommendations apart if you wish. But at least PASS the recommendation.

As for the whole NFCUS question, fortunately it is coming out into the open. The SPS Debating Society has agreed to debate with representatives of NFCUS on the resolution — "Resolved that NFCUS dose not make a worthwhile contribution to the University of Toronto campus." It will be held at Alumni Hall in Victoria College at 8:00 p.m., on Wednesday, February 3. This will be a debate — it will also serve as a forum of opinion. SPS complaints will come out into the open — NFCUS will have a chance to have its own voice heard. Let's hope that both sides will learn enough to mend this silly and useless misunderstanding. Anyone at all who wants to hear this matter out, is invited to attend.

Snow Brings Sculptors Nudes Being Featured Snowball Fights Raging

Artistic talent, for a long time a hidden aspect on the Toronto campus, has come into its own with the coming of the snow. An epidemic of "snow sculpting", the primary subject being nudes, has left its mark as staturesque figures stare icily from front lawns of residences and from behind the School of Graduate studies.

The one most seen on campus yesterday was actually on campus, the front campus that is,, staring "icily" in the direction of Hart House from a point of vantage in front of the new library. "It must be a female" said one engineer, noting the direction in which the round, conventionally shaped snowman was faced.

The most publicized of the snow sculptures to appear on campus was the one which was constructed on the front lawn of Annesley Hall (see picture to the left). Six Middle House men spent one and one-half hours on the nude, Monday evening. "It's way out of proportion", said one Annesley girl and another commented, "Fantastic, isn't it?"

Grant Lawson, one of the creators of the fifteen-foot statue, was kidnapped on Tuesday night by the Annesley girls in retaliation for the deed.

A seated snow statue, also of a nude, (see below) was seen by The Varsity photographer behind the School of Graduate Studies on Hoskin. Obviously a rugged individualist, she was smoking a cigar.

Just south of Emmanuel college, an ecclesiastical figure was carved out of the moist snow. It was sporting a celluloid collar and wire-rimmed spectacles, 'sans' lenses.

Snowballs have also become a feature of the Toronto campus and have proven themselves a very useful vehicle for interfaculty competition, especially around the vicinity of the engineering building. They are very convenient, pointed out one student, as they can be made to various sizes and weight, depending on the motive for making them.

NFCUS Debaters Turn Threaten Varsity Staffer

A Varsity reporter was threatened with removal from the Engineering-Victoria debate last night. The second speaker for the Government Gord Hulbert III SPS stated that The Varsity could not give a fair account of the debate.

"Since The Varsity is reporting both NFCUS and the Engineers," he said, "it is impossible that a true account will be given." The Speaker of the House, Alex Langford IV Vic, said he agreed with the honorable member but that he felt he did not have the right to throw the reporter out.

"If The Varsity does not give a fair report of this debate, their reporters will never be allowed in a debate again as long as I am speaker," stated the Speaker at the end of the debate, before he took the vote. The Speaker did not state who was to be the judge of the "fair report".

"There are no accurate quotes in The Varsity," said Dennis Lane, IV Vic, first speaker for the Negative.

The topic of the debate was: Resolved that the National Federation of Canadian University Students does not make any worthwhile contribution to the University of Toronto campus." The Engineers upheld the affirmative.

The debate was more than half an hour late starting. Even then there was not a full quorum present, and as the Speaker later admitted, the whole thing was highly illegal.

The motion was defeated 13 to 10. Several members of the house entered the hall a considerable time after the debate had started. "It was obvious that there was considerable fraud in the vote," the Speaker stated.

It was suggested at one time during the debate that SPS be substituted for NFCUS in the resolution. "If this resolution is passed," said Peter Martin, III UC, "as a corollary, this house will have to pass the motion that the Engineering Society be abolished." He said that it did nothing more worthwhile on the campus than did NFCUS, in fact less, and yet many people would raise a terrible outcry if the Engineering Society were done away with.

During the debate it was suggested that the travel service of NFCUS was of great benefit for students on the campus. The opposition also stated that NFCUS was responsible for reduced textbook rates, and railroad fares.

The government claimed that NFCUS was unrepresentative. They said that the University of Toronto had one vote in 21 and that the student population at U of T was one quarter of that of NFCUS.

The Engineers object to NFCUS because it has done nothing for them. "What have they done for NFCUS?" asked the opposition.

BOB McBRIDE

. . . for approving of the unsportsmanlike behaviour of the McMaster University baskeball fans last week. McBride, sports editor of the McMaster Silhouette, referred to the fans that jeered, yelled and threw pennies at Toronto's Bob Masterson, as "ardent supporters of McMaster's Mighty Marauders". This is not the type of supports expected from sportsmen. Nor is it the reaction wanted from grown-up university fans. The sports editor should call, instead, for more intelligent behaviour from his "fans".

SAC Plans Campus Survey To Study Future Of AVR

The fate of the AVR is to be decided this year. For years the AVR has been an institution on this campus, but last year the SAC decided to discontinue it as there seemed to be insufficient talent to carry on.

The AVR has always been one of the major shows on the campus, and it was with some regret that the SAC set up an AVR Committee to study the possibility of having a show again next year. This all depends on the response that the committee gets from the students who are interested in another AVR production next year.

Last year the producers of the show recommended to the SAC that the show be definitely continued this year. However, the applicants that were willing to take charge of the show were not considered of good enough calibre to take over such a major production as the AVR.

It seems that the College shows use up much of the best talent available on the campus. However it is an opportunity for students in the smaller colleges and faculties to take part in a show that they would not otherwise be able to participate in.

The show is also an opportunity for students to work on a campus-wide production, an advantage that this show has over all the others on the campus. Some people seem to think that there are enough shows on the campus, and the AVR is just one big show too many.

John Kuusisto, Chairman of the AVR Committee reported that his committee is going to conduct a survey on the campus to see if there are sufficient show business people on the campus interested in reviving the AVR. "We don't know if the AVR is wanted on the campus, and whether the campus can afford another big show, that is why the committee was set up", he said.

Kuusisto said if there is sufficient interest shown on the campus, the committee will be able to start work on next year's show. "However we don't know if many students miss the AVR, and that is what we will have to find out", he said.

Anybody interested should leave their name in the SAC office as soon as is possible so that the committee can begin work on planning next year's show.

Weather Or Not

Freshie Fidgets With Frozen Digits

You know what? It's cold nowadays. Why, just yesterday I went out, and it was the first thing I noticed. You see, somehow whether the cold bothers you or not, you are bound to notice it.

It is not that I ever feel the weather, you see, but as I left for school yesterday, I just sensed it all of a sudden. Intuition, some people call it, others call it chapped.

Oh yes, my nose. Well, it's still there, some people tell me who bother to notice such trivialities. There are some. In fact, there are some who even comment on it. They tell me that I should blow it.

Then I started hitch-hiking. The wind was blowing from the North, a most exhilarating feeling, when you face North. But rather chilling.

The cars kept coming by, but they all went in the other direction. South. None of them would pick me up, maybe because I was facing North.

I pointed in a southern direction first with my right thumb, then I tried my left; nothing happened. No, I still got both. Nothing happened, as I said.

I tried to hide my forehead under my arm, the traffic hammed up, and a guy in the car next to me looked at me, probably thinking how lucky he was that he never had to go to University and freeze to death.

I looked up and tried to force my frozen facial muscles to reform the pattern of my wrinkles into a new one resembling a smile.

It worked. He picked me up, and told me that he was going downtown. He went down as far as Eglinton and asked me how Bathurst was with me

Knowing that the Bloor car is somewhat more reliable than Avenue Road hitch-hiking, I said it was fine.

So what happened! He took me to Eglinton and Spadina, and told me that he decided to have a chat with his mother, who lived there. And all this at 9:30 a.m. in the morning. Bless these children! He apologized for not taking me over to Bathurst.

So, I tucked my forehead under my arm, stuck my thumb out in the cold, and kept right on hitch-hiking, finally getting to my nine o'clock lecture right on time, at 10:03 a.m.

CoSec Is Finally Formed International Split Widens

(This is the fourth in a series of articles designed to acquaint Canadian students with the history and organization of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students—CoSec.)

By RICH ANCO

The Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (CoSec) was born at the Edinburgh Conference in January, 1952. Events in the international students world had brought this on, but delegates to the Scottish capital reaffirmed their willingness to review this arrangement if there was any change of attitude in the Communist-led International Union of Students (IUS).

Edinburgh made one thing very clear. The world student community was split, and there was every chance this split would widen. If the western unions could not work for international student unity inside IUS, how did they expect to work for it outside IUS?

The basis and principles of co-operation between the 25 unions participating in the Edinburgh Conference were stated in a declaration:

"Expressing the desire of the National Unions of Students of different countries for mutual understanding and friendly co-operation, this Conference agrees on the following principles as a basis for the co-operation . . .

"It shall be a practical co-operation on student problems such as university education, studen needs, student cultural activities. student sport, student health, etc

"It shall be a co-operation on a voluntary basis and in the spirit of mutual respect and equality.

"It shall be a co-operation that excludes all forms of discrimination and is devoid of any kind of partisan policy."

On this, CoSec was established as the permanent administrative agency of the International Student Conference in order to ensure the implementation of the decisions of the Conference. It has no policy-making powers and it is instructed to administer those duties allotted to it by the Conference, to act in accordance with other Conference resolutions, and to submit a report on its activities to the annual meeting.

The Secretariat is responsible to the Supervision Committee whose duty is to supervise and control the operation of the Secretariat. The Committee in turn is responsible to the International Conference, and is composed of seven national unions elected annually by the Conference.

The Committee is elected on the basis of geographical distribution and no union can be a member for more than two consecutive years. Canada is presently a member of the Supervision Committee.

The Secretariat was given these tasks:

(1) to co-operate with national unions in the implementation of projects assigned to them by the International Conference;

(2) to act as an international student research centre for the collecion and distribution of material concerning matters of student interest;

(3) to serve as a permanent information centre, and to publish a monthly bulletin.

Ukrainian Lit And Culture Outlined By Prof. Luckyj

"Ukrainian literature and culture deserve a place in the programme of Slavic studies at the University". These were the concluding words of Prof. C. Luckyj's address delivered last night before members of the Ukrainian Students' Club. Speaking in the series of lectures devoted to Ukrainian life and culture Professor Luckyj outlined the beginning of modern Ukrainian literature. He analyzed the significance of Ivan Kotlyarevsky's Eneida which was the first work in the Ukrainian vernacular, published in 1798.

The speaker dwelt at length on the historical and social background of the Ukraine and pointed out that only through research and further study of Ukrainian culture can Canadian students of Ukrainian descent overcome their purely sentimental attitude to Ukrainian literature and arrive at a true understanding of their cultural heritage.

Mr. Wilson Woodside, Foreign Editor of Saturday Night, will give the next lecture entitled "Why The Cold War Is Thawing." This will be presented on Wednesday, February 10th at the Women's Union.

St. Mike's Stage Play At Queen's

A group at St. Michael's will represent Varsity at the Dramatic Festival at Queen's February fourth, fifth and sixth. The play chosen by the Brennan Hall Music and Drama Society group is Synge's Riders to the Sea, an old Irish tragedy. Patsy MacDonough who played in Toad of Toad Hall and starred in Macbeth last year at Hart House, is directing the nine-member cast. They are using original Erse chants and Irish brogue.

Unsponsored by any University organization, these players are financing themselves. The cast is making its own costumes and Patsy is constructing the sets. The colour scheme is black and grey to be in keeping with the symbolism and naturalism of the play.

Taking the leading roles are Donna Heineman, Jeniva Berger Jeannette Zarou, and Jerry Hollyer. Donna, Jeniva and Jeannette have acted under Robert Gill's direction at Hart House. They leave today, but will not perform until the sixth. Eleven Universities will compete at this festival which is the first of its kind in Canada. Robertson Davies will be the adjudicator.

Doctor S Langer Explains Symbols

Yesterday's lecture by Professor Susanne Langer attracted an unexpectedly large audience. Even a move to the West Hall of University College left many philosophy nthusiasts with only "Standing Room."

"The difference between Man and Animals is a psychological one," said Dr. Langer. Imagination belongs only to man; and this means that animals do not dream. Dr. Langer support this theory, which many may object to, certain they have "seen" their dog "dream", with the suggestion that various movements may be simply muscular reactions.

In connection with this difference lie the key words "Symbol and Signal". Only man can make practical use of Symbols; herein is the support of our claim to superiority over the Apes.

Perhaps the most important use or Symbols today is in Language; it is our means of communication with one another, and our tools for thought. Symbols also stand for actualities; but the world of reality is always changing. Dr. Langer quoted Heraclitus' famous doctrine "life is a stream; the same man never steps into the same water twice".

"We understand symbols by intuition as we do not know of any way of explaining to a person that one and one are two if they do not immediately understand it. This seems to illustrate that this perception is innate," she said.

'All images spontaneously evoke some meaning", Quoting from a contemporary philosopher she defined "meaning" as "intuitive and immediate and that is all we can say".

In conclusion she offered as evidence to support the concept that all knowledge is by symbols by reference to language. Again regardless of various accents we nevertheless understand what a person means because the concept is universal.

Trinity Prof Will Address Socialism 1A

Professor George Grube will be the Speaker at this week's "Socialism 1a" meeting, sponsored by the UC CCF Club. Mr. Grube is a professor of Classics at Trinity College U of T and has written several authorized text books of college classical studies.

In his topic, Socialism and Democracy Mr. Grube will discuss the relationship between these two concepts. He believes that Socialism, far from being opposed to democracy, supplements it, and is a necessity if control of affairs by the people is to be developed further.

Prof. Grube has been active in the CCF Party for many years. He is a former provincial president of the Ontario section of the CCF, and has often been chairman of the resolutions committee at provincial conventions. He was at one time a member of the Board of Education in Toronto, and also ran as a CCF federal candidate in Broadview Riding in this city.

Masculine Purity Rule For JCR Lunch Hour

The controversial JCR will have to be controversial without women today between the hours of 1:00 and 2:00 p.m. announced Lit President Roger Bull. "In view of the present decline of JCR humor, its past high standards of 'masculine purity', the executive of the Lit wishes to close the room to women at noon". This will be in effect today only.

"Of course", said Literary Director, Dave Gauthier, "it would create an ideal opportunity for those 'homeless' waifs who will be turned out of the JCR to go to the WUA open meeting, which just happens to be at the same time in the Women's Union theatre".

The Lit fully expects the "high standards of 'masculine purity' " to be in effect; since the only JCR attraction will now be the Snack Bar and the names on the wall. Usually, the fairer sex is excluded from the JCR on occasions such as the Lit open meetings or the pre-election meetings where "campaign speeches" are made before the annual executive elections.

A joke-telling contest was rumoured by some of the members as a possible activity for today's noon hour session. "What this place needs is less women once in a while", commented Bull.

The WUA meeting which is to be held at noon today in the Theatre, is to decide whether the executive will resign. There will be a motion presented for the dissolution of the WUA, which will leave the UC coeds without representation in both their own student government and in the SAC.

To Decide WUA Fate

What is to be the fate of the Women's Undergraduate Association? Has the apathy spread too far?

These are the questions to be answered at the open meeting of the WUA today at 1:00 p.m. The meeting, held in the Women's Union Theatre, was called to consider a motion to dissolve the WUA and the executive with it.

The feeling behind the motion has been building up for a long time, said Shirley Reid, president of the WUA. It was brought to a head by the difficulty in obtaining a quorum at an important meeting. Now the executive want to know if there is any use in continuing the WUA.

The JCR will be closed to all women at noon tomorrow. "Naturally there is no connection between this action and the WUA meeting today", said Roger Bull, president of the Men's Literary and Athletic Society.

McLuhan And Valentino Vie For Film Audience

To a large audience of film devotees in the new Mechanical Building Monday night, Professor M. M. McLuhan of Trinity College discussed the "Magic and Myth of the Movies". As a postscrip to his talk, the University of Toronto Film Society showed the venerable movie, "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," with the silent screen's greatest lover, Rudolph Valentino.

"The North American," said Dr. McLuhan, "approaches his aesthetic experience by technology. The European", he said, "takes great pleasure in verbalizing on visual American culture, but the American views European culture with a mechanistic, technological attitude." This attitude is expressed by the American film industry. Hollywood is the perfect example of the mechanization and industrialization of every day.

In personifying the camera-eye, Dr. McLuhan poined out that in spite of the narrowness of its vision it has the capacity to break down private life, and the ability to the barriers between public and eavesdrop on debacles like earthquakes and war, and even to invade the individual and show the panic in his heart and any other of his hidden emotions. "Reality and dream merge under the camera eye; it has an enormous capacity for wish-fulfillment."

T.V. came in for its share of criticism, as well. Boh T.V. and the camera, claims McLuhan, are exhibitionist and conceited. They have a voracious appetite for clowns and show-offs. Every shot is a three-ring circus in which everything from the make-up to the actor's personality competes for attention at the same time.

Dr. McLuhan went on to a discussion of the silent motion picture and particularly of the Four Horsemen. In a comparison of modern and silen film making techniques, he stated that the silent films tended more to serious sentiment but lacked the sophistication that our modern movies contain.

Dent, Knox OK Massey

The recommendation concerning the Massey Report, passed by the Students' Administrative Council, has been unanimously adopted by four more student groups.

Last Thursday, Nursing went publicly on record in support of the scholarship clauses of the Massey Report. Tuesday, the students of Knox College, Dentistry, and Architecture passed the resolution.

To date twelve student groups have considered the SAC recommendation. Eleven have passed it, and one has temporarily defeated it.

UC Debate Forges Ahead With Or Without Speakers

Education will be demolished by the University College Parliament this afternoon at 4:00 in the J.C.R. The principal speakers on the topic: "Resolved that modern formal education is a fraud", are as yet somewhat uncertain.

The scheduled speakers for the government, Elaine Newton and Nancy Donnell, both III U.C., have announced that they cannot attend. Nancy Donnell said, "I had a brilliant, witty, devastating address prepared for last Thursday, when the debate should have occurred. But if no one would hear me then, no one shall hear me now." John Roberts, III U.C., offered to substitute, but at last reports, had lost his voice.

Gay Sellars, II U.C., speaking for the opposition, was unavailable for comment. The other scheduled upholder of formal education, Marg. Riches, III U.C., stated: "I shall not be present. I shall not speak. Positively."

Fortunately, the Literary Directorate is well supplied with substitutes: David P. Gauthier, D. Pierre Gauthier, and D. P. Gauthier, most of whom are IV U.C. They commented collectively, "Modern education a fraud? Why, even to call it education is misrepresentation. But on the other hand, our Canadian educational system is the finest and most progressive in the world, and anyone who would attack it is a reactionary, and probably subversive.

Varsity Reporters Training Programme

Students who wish to report for The Varsity next year may start now in order to begin in September with some experience. The News Editor will hold a workshop on Friday from 1 to 2 in The Varsity Office in the Basement of the SAC Building. Basics of reporting and principles of newswriting will be explained. Students are requested to sign for stories this week and attend the workshop, where their stories will be criticized.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Beneath The Reef

Beneath the 12-Mile Reef is not a particularly deep picture. By that I mean it isn't complicated. There's nothing about it that will make you lie awake after seeing it, pondering its dramatic significance. But is provides an absorbing two hours of entertainment, which may be enough for most people.

If, like a scientist, you should isolate the plot of Beneath the 16-Mile Reef and examine it, you'd be liable to break out laughing or else be overcome with nostalgia at a story you've heard so often in so many different ways. But you're not likely to laugh at Beneath the 22-Mile Reef. It's tense and action-packed bit of film-making.

The story is the Hatfield and McCoy caper transferred to the Gulf of Mexico and made seaborne. This time, the good guys are a colony of Greeks who fish for sponges. They feud with a similarly-occupied group of fishermen, who regard the Everglades as their own exclusive territory. The film deals with what happens when the Greek's sponge supply runs out and they try to fish in the Everglades. What's more, one of the Greek lads falls in love with the daughter of the heaviest of the English heavies.

This is all pretty routine stuff. What puts Beneath the 32-Mile Reef out of the routine class is the action, which is taut and full of suspense and the photography, which is magnificent. This is another Cinemascope effort and the scenes both under and on the sea are most impressive, stretched as they are across the Imperial's massive screen. The underwater shots showing the reefs, the coral, the eery-looking fish, the seaweed and what not make Beneath the 45-Mile Reef an extraordinary experience.

A good deal of footage is expended on showing the divers moving among these aquatic surroundings, gathering their sponges, diving and surfacing and so forth. There are, as you might expect, several fights, all quite well done and inevitably the hero gets tangled up with an octopus. In fact, all this keeps you on the edge of your seat, as the advertising men are wont to say.

Robert Wagner and Terry Moore are the principals here and their chief fault is over-exuberance: they effervesce all over the place. But who's complaining? Boyish earnestness seems to be what was Miss Moore's appearance explains some of the complications in the plot. Gilbert Roland is the Greek father and he's still Gilbert Roland, if you know what I mean. Best job of acting is provided by J. Carroll Naish who is the wise old man, who usually crops up in pictures of this type.

Although the picture ends on a happy and harmonious note, I couldn't help thinking that, with the advent of synthetic sponges, they're all doomed to starvation unless the heroine can get a job in the movies or something.

A couple of the short subjects accompanying Beneath the 52-Mile Reef are of considerable interest. Vesuvius Express is one of the best travelogues I've seen, being in Cinemascope and being very quick-moving and well-edited. And Alfred Newman's orchestra moves through the final movement of something or other in booming and thrilling stereophonic sound style.

DRAMA REVIEW

Light Of Heart

The Crest Theatre in its third production, The Light of Heart has collected as brilliant a selection of supporting characters as you could wish to find. Add to this a delightful attic set which proclaimed poverty without depressing the eye and warm atmospheric lighting and you have the ingredients of a very satisfying evening.

This is the story of an old ex-actor, Maddoc Thomas, (Donald Davis) who drinks, and his daughter attrina (Barbara Chilcott) who is crippled in one foot. Into their down-and-out life enters a composer Robert (George McCowan) and Mrs. Lothian (Betty Leighton) who has money. The events that follow, the return of Maddoc Thomas to the theatre, and the complications between him and his daughter, provide a plot that has enough suspense to hold the interest but not enough to convince you of the rightness of the action, after it has been done.

Donald Davis as Maddoc Thomas had the stature, especially in the serious and pathetic moments, but he lacked that touch of humor which the character needs, a certain warmth, which makes him the focal point of the play and of the group of riff-raff characters that collect about him.

Barbara Chilcott as the daughter Cattrina gave a performance which I can only describe as paradoxical. Her acting was good on the whole, moving from cheerful chatter to blackness and near hysteria, but it was always acting, acting which had not taken the part beneath the layer of individual consciousness and fused into it a particular and imaginative life. In other words it was a rational performance that did not show the irrational elements of a character which when they appear always surprise and yet always convince you as being perfectly right.

On this same subject, if you see the play, compare the performance of Mary Laura Wood as Fan, the Cockney girl, in her one emotional scene with a parallel scene by Barbara Chilcott. The difference will not be one of external technique so much as a difference in the element of any good attack—surprise. Mary Laura Wood does the right thing and yet it surprises, it is unexpected, and that is why she is a brilliant and versatile actress.

George McCowan, as Robert, played the romantic lead with decisiveness and a Canadian accent. It is the worst part in the play lacking individuality, and heavy with the absurd Anglo-Saxon language of love. However, George McCowan who is not a romantic type did give the role a certain passion and reality.

For the rest of the company I have only unstinted praise. Margot Lassner as the old raucous owner of the apartment house padded around with cigarette in mouth, a superb and vigorous old harridan. Eric House, as might be expected, gave to the character of Barty all the sleaziness and small tittering pride of a small man; a funny and rounded performance. Indeed, everyone of the supporting cast was in his turn extremely amusing and yet quite believable as an individual.

Mary Laura Wood I have already praised. As a peroxide cockney girl of free-and-easy manner she was perfect. Betty Leighton as Mrs. Lothian, an old fan of Maddoc Thomas with a sharp tongue, gave an extraordinarily underplayed performance that was again unquestionably right in every way. Rounding out this brilliant supporting cast was Max Helpmann as a studious Welsh policeman. With grave face, and profound demeanor, he read King Lear, dropped in occasionally to check up on things and never once lost his impenetrable sense of British justice dignified in his incorruptiole person. I enjoyed his performance most but that is strictly a personal prejudice. I can only reiterate that the supporting cast was superb.

The set by Carolyn Souter, the directing by Pierre Lefevre, the music, had that completely painstaking attention, that imaginative strength, that sense of split second timing, that has made the Crest Theatre already the leading company in Toronto.

A) Is she female?
B) Is she between 6 and 60?

FAIR

Yea Skool

The battle between the sexes is inevitable, so why struggle against the inscrutable machinations of a greater fate. In other words, now that we've chosen up sides we might as well play. In the more particular case, however, all action is based on the equation, 27X-18X4499YBR plus 1 equals 0. As everyone knows (except poor unenlightened artsmen) the six reasons for taking out any one girl are involved in this equation. These six reasons are sex very important ones. Rather than considering the aesthetic value of the cultural and intellectual stimulation involved in a platonic relationship, I consider these six things to be of prime importance. (All good-looking girls with gorgeous figures apply to the Engineering Stores immediately.) Ain't nature grand!

Frustrated

It's all very simple—
Point one—I consider all the girls I'd like to take out.
Point two—I consider all the girls that are dying to go out with me.
Point two cancels Point one.
I stay home.

He's Lucky?

It is rather hard to say just what it is that attracts me to girls. Perhaps the luscious curves of a lovely body appeal to the artist in me? Whatever does the trick, it must affect me strongly, for this dating is so exhausting. Ah, well, 'tis not for me to question why, 'tis but for me to do or die.

Free?

It depends if she's free, or at least 'reasonable'.

Honeymoon

First, one must consider what appeals to the eye . . . the physical attributes. This is generally good for a few dates. Then, eventually, one must consider mental endowments . . . Well, the honeymoon usually ends sometime.

. . . . say the girls

I Wonder

Too many people think a girl, because she doesn't do the asking, must accept any date that comes along. They think she must take whatever is offered. These poor misguided people are so wrong.

When a boy asks a girl for a date, he does (or should) feel he has a 50 - 50 chance of being turned down. Therefore he can't afford to be too "choosy". But if a girl accepts a date, it's for sure. So she has to be sure. Therefore she must decide if the place he'll take her is interesting enough for her to spend an evening of her valuable time; if the boy himself is interesting enough for her to waste an evening of her valuable time on him; if he has enough money that she can afford to expend an evening of her valuable time; if there is anything else more profitable to do with an evening of her valuable time. If all these questions are answered satisfactorily, the girl will accept the date. It's a wonder girls ever go out at all.

Dissipated

I like to go out with men who aren't in residence and have a car — preferably a black Jaguar with red upholstery . . . the type who take you to the "Sign of the Steer" for dinner and have steaks at $4.50 a head.

I like the dissipated type.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

This week the wind blew a copy of that McMaster tatter, the Silhouette, into our office. In it, editorialized, was an account, through McMaster eyes, of what happened when the Blues went down to play the Marauders last week, as well as what the Mac supporters pulled off down at London.

These Mac types seem to be a somewhat cocky lot, suffering from what a psychological member of our staff tells us is called an inferiority complex. They are out to show the Intercollegiate world that they are better than anyone else. Of their loss to the Western Mustangs the Mac rabble say, "The Marauders definitely out-hustled, out-checked and out-played the Mustangs". The Silhouette then goes on to say that foul shots cost poor Hamilton their game. Which just goes to prove that Justice is blind. Poor persecuted Mac.

More important than the scores of games though is the Mac paper's brazen boasting of their student body's behavior at the games. They seem to be very proud of the fact that they spewed the slime of their malcontent all over Western as well as Varsity. Mr. McBride, Sports Editor of the Mac tatter crows gleefully, "Such quotations as, 'don't shoot that ball, sell it. Metras needs the money', and the new version of an old College yell 'yea cold, yea cash, yea yea cold cash' rocked the rafters of Thames Hall much to the chagrin of Mr. Metras who took a dim view of the whole proceedings".

Down in the States they have law designed to rid the country of undesirable aliens. Anyone who hurts the State is removed from it. Up here though we are polite about such things and try to make the best of a bad deal but we shouldn't carry it to folly. All of us felt that Mac had been poorly handled by the Intercollegiate Union when they were dropped for the next season. Indeed this column even said that we felt that they should be given another chance. But the happenings of the past weeks have given us another attitude to the matter.

Since the Mac people persist in behaving like a pack of babies who have had their candy taken and go about sulking, we ought to remove them from the company of grown folk such as ourselves and allow them to return only when they prove that they have grown sufficiently to sit among men. We have to protect ourselves somehow. Are we to send our teams to visit Colleges where they can expect only insults and assault? It may be smart to get a visiting ball team out on the court, then pelt them with coins and do everything conceivable to rattle them, but you can't expect the visitors to play good ball or enjoy the game.

Thus far there has been nothing really dangerous happen in that regard in the Intercollegiate League. Mac has set a precedent and soon we may have all the teams using their strategy to win games the same way. Then we might just as well dissolve the league. There's no sense in running a league without sportsmanship and a spirit of comrades in competition.

Should Mac persist in their silly behaviour they should be removed from the circles of mature people and made to sit out for a year or so to cool off and grow up. As they are now they have no place in Intercollegiate Athletics.

Skulemen Take Over Top Spot With 7-4 Conquest Of Irish

Playing their best hockey of the season, and sparked by the power line of Jack Mollenhauer, Bob Cruise, and Sandy Davison, who accounted for four goals as a unit, Senior SPS yesterday slipped by Senior Meds into first place in Group I, with a 7-4 victory over the St. Mike's A's.

The Engineers held a slight advantage in the first period, but ran rampant in the second, scoring four goals to win walking away.

Bob Cruise scored twice, once in the first period, and once in the second, to bring his total to eight goals this season. Jack Mollenhauer scored his seventh goal of the year, while Sandy Davison collected the prettiest goal of the game at 18:55 of the second frame, taking a pass from Mollenhauer at the blueline, and sweeping in front of Gerry Young to beat him with a clean backhand.

Pete Bannister, Kelly Woodruff, and Don Worth added the other Skule goals, giving St. Mike's goaltender Gerry Young his roughest afternoon since the season's start.

Ron Sheperd, Jerry Godin, Ollie Kostyck, and John Bowles gave the Double Blue their tallies. The Mikemen were trailing 3-2 at the end of the first period, after drawing first blood in the early minutes of the stanza.

They came within one goal at the start of the second, after Kelly Woodruff scored at the 30-second mark, to give the Engineers a 4-2 lead. Jerry Godin got away free at the Skule blueline and beat Geiger at 3:05. Then the Blue and Gold turned on the heat, and St. Mikes seemed to fall apart.

Varsity Enjoys Triple 'A' Ball

Last night in Hart House a delegation from the tiny hamlet of St. Catharines met the vaunted Varsity Blues in combat with basketballs at two baskets. It was not lack of spirit but the superior Varsity bench strength that overcame the visitors as the city-slickers from Toronto defeated the 'Kitters 76-52. In an earlier tilt the McMaster Buccaneers unhorsed the Trinity A's 62-47.

Attired in the very nattiest of knee socks, the St. Catharines Queensways looked like something out of Esquire and played like Something out of gas. Though they looked quite keen in practice, the Catharines found it another matter entirely when it came to scoring their flashy shots under Blue checking.

Ahead by four points at the first quarter stop, the Blues pulled eight to the front at the half then at the third quarter break were 21 ahead. St. Catharines' best hour came in the final 12 minutes when they went for 18 points but even the Blues matched them and went three better, hitting for 21.

Big Marv Tile relaxed under the lighter than usual checking and came through with 11 points for the Blues while Lou Lukenda notched 12. Stulac, on top as is his habit threw in 17.

For the Queensways, captain Bill Bradshaw was a power though he figured little in the scoring. The wee laddie's smooth ball handling and shifty dribbling set up several good scoring plays. Lanky Ted Collins was the visitors best hoopster, hooping 14. Tallish Howie Daniels was a tower of all sorts of things for the Queensways getting 13 counters.

Second Try For Seconds Against Rams

Riding high atop the Intercollegiate Intermediate hockey league, with two league wins and no losses, the Baby Blues are back to exhibition games this week, a department in which they are a little less fortunate.

The Ryerson Rams will invade Varsity Arena this afternoon at 4:30, and the Intermediates will be looking for revenge after taking a 3-2 setback from the Gould St. boys in the first game of the season.

Although not officially in the Intercollegiate league, both Ryerson and Osgoode Hall are playing all the teams in the league to make a full schedule. Ryerson, so far, seem to be the strongest team in the loop, having beaten Osgoode 8-3 just last week.

Osgoode, of course, slipped by the Baby Blues in their last encounter 1-0, although they didn't appear to be much stronger. In the Ryerson-Osgoode game, the Rams' Ron Prescott scored four goals, and he seems to be their biggest threat. He scored once against the Intermediates in their first game.

This afternoon's contest will start at 4:30. It should be real good hockey—the Seconds are out for blood.

Blue Runners Will Compete At Michigan

University of Toronto tracksters will attempt to repeat their giant-killing feats of previous years this Saturday at the University of Michigan AAU track meet at Ann Arbor. For the last three years, U. of T. relay teams have finished third behind Michigan and Michigan State at this meet.

Varsity's team of Doug McEnteer, Pete Watson, Bill Eckersley and either Dick Harding or Jim Bassingthwaite will enter the two and one-mile relays. After Harding's performance Tuesday, it's expected he'll make the trip. On the Hart House track, Harding chopped nine-tenths of a second off the interfaculty record for the 220-yard dash, turning in a time of 23.3 seconds.

Norm Williams is likely to carry Varsity colors to the Michigan meet, too. Williams, who is probably Canada's top hurdler since the retirement of Gord Crosby, will run in the 65-yard low and high hurdles events.

Besides Harding's record-breaking, three other events took place in the interfaculty indoor track meet John Sopinka of Vic won the junior 220-yard race in 25.6 seconds. U.C. man Doug McEnteer's time of two minutes and 25.5 seconds was good for first place in the 1,000-yard senior race, while Tom Stroud also of U.C. copped the junior race.

Gal Swim Officials Are In Great Demand

By JO RATCLIFFE

Every year around the middle of November, the swimming gals on the Toronto campus stow away their bathing suits for another year. It is rather unfortunate that after a full fall season of practises there can be only one meet to attract the mermaids unless they happen to be lucky enough to hit intercollegiate competition. The apparent reason for the lack of additional swim meets is the necessity of latching on to outside officials to preside.

This condition has existed since swimming meets began on the campus but this year, the PHE department has planned a revolution. Starting this Saturday, there will be a set of four lectures and practical instruction in swimming officiating open to all the women at the University. This February swim program has been designed to instruct potential swim officials in judging both speed and synchronized events and, in general, assisting at swim meets.

According to Miss Jackson of the PHE department there is no reason why any girl, able to swim at all, cannot be able to recognize good technique in swimming strokes. Because the University sponsors only one interfaculty meet per year there has been a drop in the participation in competitive swimming. If we could find officials inside the campus, there could be more meets spread around the school year.

Those girls who enter the weekly classes will be taught the Olympic rules for officiating under the direction of the U of T swimming staff.

These groups will be completely open sessions. There are no requirements for entering — except some knowledge of swimming and an appreciation of good swimming. For those wish to attain a Bronze Medallion there will be special classes the same mornings as the officiating groups. The Bronze classes will begin at 9:30 a.m. this Saturday in the L. M. Pool and will continue until 11:00. Officiating lectures will commence at 10:00 a.m. in the Lillian Massey auditorium and will continue in the pool at 11:00.

Bathing suits will not be supplied and medicals must be arranged by all those who partake in the classes. The classes which commence this week will be carried on for the four weeks of February.

They Like UC Anyway

One of the biggest puzzles in the Intramural League of basketball nowadays is the popularity of the winless Senior UC club. Yesterday in Hart House they lost their fourth straight game, this time to St. Mike's by a 50-43 count, yet received the applause and unshaking support of the crowd. This has been the case through the past two games of the Arts-men.

There was nothing to cheer UC about in the first period of play as the Redmen managed a mere 5 points compared to 15 for the Irish. The Redskins came back strong in the second period outscoring the Saints 16-10. The last period settled matters quite definitely as the Mikemen pulled well ahead of a fighting Arts bunch.

Ed Marzec was the biggest wheel on the hustling UC steamroller, amazing the crowd with his consistent scores on what seemed to be impossible shots.

No individuals showed exceptional stuff for St. Mike's. Their chief characteristic is their lack of stars. As a team they are tops and it was this teamwork and smooth passing that earned them victory over a surging UC club.

Tom Ahearn hit for 12 in the winners' cause and Dan Driscoll added 7 more. The rest of the Irish points were well-spread among all the players.

For UC, Marzec was tops with 14 and Bud Obal, former Western football star, hooped 18. Garry Mitchell got only 7 points, but was the best man on the floor in the rebound department and his efforts were largely responsible for the good UC showing.

SWIMMERS

Eliminations for the senior interfaculty swimming meet, which will be held as part of tomorrow's athletic night, begin tonight. Competitors in all events are asked to report to the pool in Hart House at five o'clock this afternoon.

Objective: Second Place

One of the surprising things about the intercollegiate hockey league this season is the slump of the McGill Redmen. The Tribe was expected to be a strong contender for college honors this year but so far has fallen far below this estimation, having been in last place right from the start of the schedule.

The significant fact about this development or lack of development, as far as the Varsity Blues are concerned, is that the Redmen haven't shoved the Blues into last place and now the U. of T. squad can think of approaching second place, instead of fighting to keep out of the cellar.

By Beating Laval at Varsity Arena tomorrow night, the Blues can take a big step in the direction of the runner-up spot. The "Rouge et Or" from Quebec and the locals have each played seven games and the Lavalians have eight points to Varsity's four. A win tomorrow would put the Varsitys very close.

As far as the league title is concerned, the University of Montreal Carabins appear to be making a runaway of the race for their third straight championship. They've won six games in seven starts and their first line of Bernie Quesnel, Claude Dagenais and Claude Hotte is scoring goals in handfuls.

The Laval team that is coming here tomorrow night will be considerably different from the one the Blues beat 5-2 at Varsity Arena on Jan. 8. Veterans Claude Roy and Robert Lafreniere have returned to the lineup to strengthen the Quebeckers, who have been the only team to defeat the front-running Carabins this season.

But if the Laval roster is changed, the alterations will be nothing compared to what has happened to the Blues' lineup. Defenceman John Tolton suffered broken ribs in the game against McGill two weeks ago and will miss this contest. To make matters worse, there is some doubt that Sam Ashton will start on the rearguard as he was hurt in a practice session. Lou Appleby is also on the limp but he is ready to play tomorrow. Right-winger Ken Lawson has been forced to give-up hockey by the pressure of studies, leaving a big vacancy on the forward lines. Coach Jack Kennedy has two possible replacements. Dan Tovey has been a utility man all season and is available for regular duty and Pierre Perrault, the former Carabin star, appears, to have worked himself into shape and may see action.

Good Boy

Prohibiting Thirst

Quebec appears to be going off on a censorship crusade again. After taking a discriminating but strong stand against the Martin Luther film, censors in that province are extending their "morals" over CBC television and productions of the National Film Board.

Censorship is a particularly powerful enemy of freedom of thought and opinion. Who, in this world, has any right to say what is immoral or blasphemous? Who has any right to consciously condition the minds of men by sifting out what can be heard or seen?

What the censors don't realize is that, in many ways, they are defeating their own purpose. The more you prohibit, the more curious will the people be. "To prohibit is to arouse thirst."

Censorship carries with it a false implication—that the opinions of the book, film, or radio are so "powerful" that they will overcome the reader or the viewer. It suggests a weakness in what is being defended.

However, we feel that if it is Roman Catholicism that is being defended in Quebec, then there is little reason for censorship of anti-Catholic films or books. Roman Catholicism has existed for centuries and it has grown in power; it will not be quickly dislodged. Quebec's fears are unfounded.

Scott Wood, in the introduction to Heavenly Discourse, comments on charges that his book is blasphemous. We think it appropriate today, although Duplessis has substituted "immoral" for "blasphemous".

"Blasphemy is a matter of religious opinion, just as democracy and freedom are questions of political opinion, and opinion — religious or political — is not yet a crime. I am eager to have the irreverence shown me. Reverence is not due to crowns or halos — heavenly or earthly — but to purity of spirit, greatness of soul, and goodness of deed."

The following is an exerpt taken from a sports story in the McMaster Silhouette—

From the moment the big blue squad entered the drill hall, they were greeted with hisses, boos, and cat-calls. Phrases such as "M-O-N-E-Y, M-O-N-E-Y, yea Varsity" and "gold silver dollars; gold silver dollars; money, money, money—share the wealth," echoed from the walls of the wooden arena from the start to the end of the game. The highlight of this indignation towards Varsity's part in McMaster's expulsion from Senior football came when mentor Bob Masterson was showered with pennies from all angles as he walked over to his squad's bench.

Blow The Smoke

Clearing The Issue

This letter, from full-time NFCUS president Tony Enriquez, is in answer to an editorial that recently appeared in The Varsity ("Blow the Smoke"). The editorial contended that NFCUS was being hypocritical in trying to maintain contact with the Communist-led International Union of Students while taking an effective executive position in the non-IUS Co-Ordinating Secretariat (Co-Sec).

THE EDITOR,
THE VARSITY:

I would like to comment on the editorial published in The Varsity and dated the 29th of January. My comments can be divided into two main headings, one, the editoirial as such, and second, the issues discussed therein.

ON THE FIRST POINT, allow me to congratulate the writer for having taken up the issue. As I mentioned to the C.U.P. delegates at their Annual Meeting held in Toronto in December, the NFCUS welcomes criticism and discussion of the issues and problems it is called upon to solve. Also, I added that such criticism would be welcomed if it fulfilled the basic premises for intelligent criticism, to wit: that of knowing well the issue at hand, and, secondly, that of criticising constructively. I am convinced the author of the editorial has fulfilled both, and this is the reason I write you on the second main point: the issue discussed.

In the editorial, entitled: Blow the Smoke, the author deplores the fact that the NFCUS seems to be following a hypocritical policy as regards relationship with IUS and CoSec. He interprets the move to call a round-table IUS-NFCUS Conference a 'smoke screen' made in bad faith and with the preconceived notion of acknowledging nothing, while, at the same time, giving full supppprt and participation to the CoSec activities, a fact brought out the more strongly by Canada's leading role at the 4th Internation Student Conference held in Istanbul last month.

BEING ONE OF THE "students who, at last year's Montreal conference of NFCUS, decried the increasing emphasis on international relations," and further, the author of the invitation to IUS to the round table discussions, I feel that the article misinterprets these moves, and I believe the issue can be seen quite clearly as it stands.

At the past Conference the NFCUS Executive was mandated to send a two-delegate representation from Canada, if possible; and, further, mandated to carry out the delegated responsibilities and also, recognized the fact that NFCUS had not been paying its full contribution to CoSec (for financial reasons, which I am sure the Toronto SAC could explain in more detail to you) and should do so this year. All in all, the feeling at the Montreal NFCUS Conference was one of continued full support and enthusiasm for the CoSec and its projects. It is thus that the Executive has interpreted the wishes of the delegates at Montreal, and, in accordance with this wish, allowed its delegates at Istanbul to carry Canada into an enviable position of leadership made possible by the work of past delegates and of the last delegation.

FURTHER, THE MONTREAL CONFERENCE made clear its wish to have its Executive investigate, during the year, the possibilities of qualified relationship with the IUS and report its findings to the member Student Councils. In this respect the NFCUS Executive has approved a proposal for a round-table Conference between the NFCUS and the IUS, an invitation of which has been sent IUS by the office. The purpose of this Conference has been clearly set by the Montreal mandate: to investigate and report, not making any commitments.

It is thus that the NFCUS Executive, upon the wishes of its constituents, has taken its full participation in CoSec as being a thing approved by the almost totality of the Montreal delegates, and, keeping its door open, issued an invitation to the IUS to participate in round-table talks that might lead to the NFCUS members revaluating any proposals that should be made by the IUS in keeping with its new conduct of offering possibilities of co-operation in a well-defined sphere, i.e., Associate membership.

I DO NOT BELIEVE THESE two stands are contradictory or hypocritical such as the author of the editorial seemed to think. Delegates at Montreal felt NFCUS should continue to work strongly within CoSec, and study the possibilities of co-operation with the other half of the world, IUS, thus striving to work with all National Unions of Students, which are, at present, split into two well-defined camps. This conduct is not without precedent, for the English N.U.S. voted a member of the Supervision Committee the same as Canada, at the Istanbul CoSec Conference, is now joining IUS in talks preparatory to joining as an Associate-member. Finland is in the situation of belonging to both organizations, and the reasons given by both organizations' representatives are that they wish to cooperate with students in ALL the world, and to achieve this must join the two organizations grouping the almost totality of National Unions of Students.

As regards our approach to the round-table IUS-NFCUS Conference, the utmost impartiality shall be used. The selection of Overseas Commissioners and Executive members attending shall be purely on their own wish to attend, and special attention shall be given to having both sides of the controversy represented to insure a fair presentation of the issues at stake.

Thanking the author again, for a good editorial, and hoping this has blown the smoke, I remain,

Tony Enriquez,
NFCUS President.

Lofft, Dishonest And Unfriendly

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The writer is a non-student who wishes to comment on the article of John Lofft, 3rd year Varsity medical student, appearing in the February Maclean's.

The article concerns the author's attendance at a youth festival in Bucharest and a student gathering in Warsaw where he was accredited offical observer for the Students' Administration Council of the University of Toronto. As Lofft makes his findings public through the pages of Maclean's, it seems to me the public should be allowed comment through the pages of The Varsity. His official status The Varsity. His official status at the student conference cannot but make the Varsity student body somewhat accountable for his actions.

I do not wish to discuss the opinions Lofft expresses of life "behind the Iron Curtain". As a report of conditions there, his article (as others of its kind) leaves me somewhat unconvinced. Until someone affords me the same opportunity he had of a "unique trip at nominal costs", I feel in no way qualified to agree or disagree. What I wish to comment on is the unique approach of Mr. Lofft to this trip.

Lofft argues that the whole thing was a "communist plot", secretly financed and supported by the communists, etc. His whole cloak and dagger atmosphere is built on this premise.

Now the point is, what was the secret? Was the fact that these conferences were to be held in Bucharest and Warsaw on the invitation of the Hungarian and Polish Communist Governments hidden? Was Lofft not told that once "behind the Iron Curtain" his way would be paid by these governments? Was this not clear and open communist support for these conferences? Of course. Yet Lofft accepted the invitation, indeed accepted it precisely because "the prospect of a unique trip at nominal costs was attractive . . .".

It would seem Mr. Lofft wanted to have his cake and eat it too. He was ready to have his communist friends finance this irresistible venture into "forbidden lands". He was equally ready upon his return to capitalize on an "expose" try at the expense of these same

Mr. Lofft repeatedly describes "friends", himself as receiving very generous treatment from the communist governments throughout his trip. His attitude as it reveals itself in the article is at least ungrateful.

I was reminded in reading the Lofft account of a skit in the Varsity Follies of three or four years back I had the privilege of attending with a student friend. The skit was a parody on a similar situation. A renegade engineering student goes ver to "Arts". He is shown being interviewed about the horrors of life behind the "Slide-Rule Curtain" and eulogizing his new freedom in the Arts world. Finally he is left alone. A valet appears bringing him a cigar, a footstool, and a pure silk dressing gown.

"Well Charles, how did we do today?"

"Very well, sir, — four new commitments for expose articles amounting to $4,000, another $2,000 in royalties from your pocket book, and (co-incidentally) Maclean's called offering you $25,000 for your life story in serial form."

The skit ends with the unfurling of the Stars and Stripes and an unnecessarily loud rendition of the Star Spangled Banner.

Was this not the spirit in which Mr. Lofft accepted the invitations of the Hungarian and Polish governments to attend these conferences at their expense?

What kind of a spirit is this? Obviously it was not the spirit in which the invitation was given. The Hungarian and Polish governments could not be expected to finance the explorations of a person as hostile as John Lofft's article would indicate him to be.

What is more important, is it in the spirit of student and cultural exchange which Varsity students have put themselves on record as favouring? I hardly think so. The resolution passed at Varsity last year supported an extension of honest and friendly relations with the students of all countries and particularly Russia in the interests of improved international understanding.

Mr. Lofft's visit and report in Maclean's can contribute very little in this direction. It can only make the prospects of large numbers of western students making similar visits more difficult. Lofft's dishonest approach can only make the communist countries, already brimming over with "Yankee spy" fears, more fearful and less willing to so generously support other such "friendly" visitors.

On this side of the ocean, Mr. Lofft's objectivity in reporting his findings cannot be trusted. By his own admission he accepted this invitation into the communist countries for dishonest and self-seeking reasons, with no real desire to contribute to better relations with this other half of the world. One must suspect that for equally dishonest and self-seeking reasons plus the large amount of money he must have received he wrote pretty well what Maclean's (well-known for their anti-communist, strictly Cold War, "expose" stores wanted. Therefore, Lofft's article cannot stand as any real contribution to a better understanding by Canadians of their fellows in the communist countries.

It would seem the Students Administration Council of Toronto University (to say nothing of the "Canadian Festival Committee") should be more careful in the future selection of official observers to such events. The constructive purpose of such visits cannot be well served by the John Loffts.

Elizabeth Clarke,
Yours sincerely.

LUNCHROOM GOING UP?

From Art Gallery To Lunchroom

This is the debates room. Now filled with serene quiet and pictures fro man art contest, it soon will be filled with sloppy, munching Artsmen and Engineers as it is to be turned into a lunchroom during the noon hours. What a comedown for such a fine, peaceful old room. Oh, the shame of it all!

—VSP by Ted Sparrow.

Use Debates Room Cafeteria Crowded

Congested eating conditions in Hart House will be overcome in a move approved last night by the Board of Stewards.

Begining next Monday, members of the House may use the Debates Room on the second floor between 11:30 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. every weekday. Milk will be on sale in the room between those hours. The arrangement will last only during the winter months.

The lunch-time dilemma arose out of insufficient accommodation in Hart House and in the Engineering buildings. During the inclement weather in particular, a great many of the members use the facilities of the House at luncheon time.

"That Hart House may assist more members with adequate space in which to eat, this service is offered", Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, explained last night.

The new arrangement was recommended by the House Committee recently in order to relieve congestion in the existing lunchroom area, and approved by the Board of Stewards last night. The crowded Tuck Shop and Lunch Room has forced many members to eat their meals on the benches in the lower hall.

More members are bringing their lunches to the University, McDowell said, and the improved accommodation is designed to corect the crowded conditions.

Consideration is being given a plan to change the Hart House Lunch Room into a co-educational Coffee Shop, which would contain a separate entrance from the outside. A sub-committee of the House Committee is now considering the proposed change.

Conversion of the Lunch Room would further reduce eating space in the House.

Engineering Dean Tupper, a member of the Board of Stewards, has been most concerned with lunch facilities, as has Warden McCulley. The Dean was not in favor of establishing a tuck shop in the Engineering Building as this move would further separate engineering students from contact with other faculties.

Decision to employ the Debates Room in preference to the Music Room, also on the second floor, was made for several reasons. More light, more tables and chairs were the primary considerations. Also, special guests lunching in the Graduate Dining Room frequently employ the Music Room facilities for preliminary meets and for hanging coats. The Debates Room was scarcely used at lunch-time prior to the new move.

Ne expensive structural changes are required in the Debates Room to handle the new lunching convenience. Only milk will be sold, as the proportion of milk to coffee sold in the Coffee Shop at present is about ten to one, Warden McCulley said last night.

WUA Interest Renewed At Threat Of Dissolution

The women of University College still have their organization. A motion recommending the dissolution of the Women's Undergraduate Association was defeated by a wide margin at yesterday's open meeting.

The WUA had no difficulty in obtaining a quorum for their meeting. Well over fifty students were present.

"I was very pleased at the turnout," said Shirley Reid, President of the WUA. "I hope it is an indication of a future trend. This will stir things up for next year's executive. They will have to carry the load."

It as suggested that the WUA be abolished because of the lack of support it received. "The interest that is shown today will soon die out," one member exclaimed.

"To abolish the WUA would not solve any problem," said Harriet Thompson, IV UC. "It would simply mean ducking out of responsibility." She urged the women of UC not to leave all the activities to the men.

A committee was set up to broaden the sphere of influence of the Association. It is also to consider amalgamation with the Men's Literary and Athletic Association.

"If the meeting did only one thing," said Joan Seymour, Literary Director, "it provided an excellent committee of eleven women to probe the situation. Amalgamation may be a possible solution; so also representatives from the related clubs. The committee members are all non-executive people, which is the important thing."

Flunking Statistics

Annual April Apprehensions

So you think you're going to flunk? Well, could be, because a hell of a lot of people around here do fail. Here's a statistical report on this vital subject gleaned from the appendix to the recently released President's Report for 1952-53.

A quick glance at the President's figures will reveal some interesting statistics. For example, 26% of first year SPS students don't make the grade, while only 18% of Arts freshmen and freshies flunk. The four-year average for Skule is a 14% annual failure rate, but the corresponding figure for the Faculty of Arts is only 9%.

This comparison proves one of two things. Either Arts courses are a snap, (a thing long alleged by Engineers), or else Skulemen are far dumber than Artsmen (a fact quite evident to all Arts Types).

Evidently the mysteries of High Finance are still a mystery to most Toronto students, because the two courses that have the highest failure rate at the University are Engineering and Business, and Commerce and Finance. The four-year flipping (Varsetese for flunking) average in Eng. Bus., works out to a neat annual figure of 21%, while C and Fs is 17%.

These figures, incidently, are average failure rates per year as indicated in the President's report for the past academic year. An averege failure rate of 10% per year means that out of every 100 industrious and lively students who start a course, only 64 drones get through.

The two workhorse courses of the campus, General Arts and Civil Engineering, also have high failure rates. Twenty-five percent of all first-year General students failed, while 34% of all freshmen Civils are not around this year—not in second Civil, anyway.

There are quite a few courses with low failure rates, however. For instance, if you're looking for a snap course, don't despair. Hebrew and Greek has a failure rate of exactly 0%. (There are only 3 students in the entire 4-years of the thing, and last year they all passed.)

As a matter of fact, there are quite a few courses with low failure rates. Medicine (obviously a snap) has a six-year flunking average of only 3%. No one at all failed in Dentistry or Household Science last year. Doctors and Dentists are notoriously intelligent and hard working, however; and this fact accounts for so few of them being unable to find their name on the annual exam results list. Either that or they've got relatives on the examining board.

On the other hand, courses like Music (10%), Architecture ((12%), PHE (11%), Social Work (10%), Law (12%), and Forestry (9%) have relatively high flunking percentages. Of course, woodchoppers and the like are noted for their wooden-headedness.

There is a great variety in the Arts courses, however. The Sacred Cow Course: (English Lang. and Lit.), was one of the few courses in the University in which the failure rate rose in second year from first year (from 6% to 14%). For example, in C and F. (the M-O-N-E-Y course), the flunking percentage fell from 32% to 25% from 1st to 2nd year.

The failure rate in the upper years is even lower. The Arts' average for third and fourth years is only 4 and 1% respectively. This means that if you survive the first couple of years in your course, you ought to be able to float along for the last few years without doing any work. This is because the statistical chances of your failing are so much smaller. Anyway, that's what the statistics say.

No matter what course you're in, there is still no cause for worry. For one think, exams (if you'll pardon the expression) are still 3 months away. For another, you can probably pass without studying anyway.

The Copenhagen Conference

Strengthened Secretariat Moves Farther From IUS

(This is the fifth in a series of articles designed to acquaint Canadian students with the history and organization of the Co-Ordinating Secreatriat of National Unions of Students—CoSec.)

By RICH ANCO

The third International Student Conference was held in Copenhagen in January, 1953. This meeting served to strengthen the foundations of CoSec; it did not add anything to what had been established at Edinburg. With Copenhagen, CoSec became firmly rooted as the international office of western unions.

The Copenhagen Conference, which met on the invitation of the national union of Danish students, was the most representative meeting of national unions ever to assemble. It brought together representatives of national unions from 35 countries in North and Latin America, South East Asia, the Middle East and Africa, to outline the program for 1953. The 114 participants included 32 national student unions with delegate status, three unions with fraternal observer status, seven student groups with representative status, and ten groups attending as observers.

At Copenhagen, delegates expressed their support of students in colonial areas who were working for independence, and of students who were fighting against political, racial, and religious persecution. In addition the meeting re-affirmed its support of CoSec and the principle of delegated responsibilities.

In view of the increased representation at the Conference the unions participating at Copenhagen adopted the following statement:

"In the present world situation, the responsibilitly of students to promote international understanding through co-operation is evident. The most important task of such co-operation should naturally be the promoting of friendship between students of the world through facilitating the free exchange of ideas and personal contact . . . The fundamental prerequisite for the realization of this task is a wide scope of practical activities including seminars, conferences of a special and general character, etc . . .

"International co-operation between students should also include the promotion of the special interests of students in society . . . In many countries the students live under extremely difficult material conditions and the possibilities of a good education are limited.

"Furthermore, in many cases they are deprived of certain fundamental human rights and subject to political oppression and political, racial and religious persecution. It is a moral obligation, as evident as it is necessary, for all students from all parts of the world to show their solidarity and to take active part in efforts to improve the conditions of these students.

"Students should moreover take a clear stand against every form of suppression of academic freedom or of the autonomy of the university, and against racial discrimination from whatever source, whether external or internal, this suppression or discrimination may come."

Praising this statement, the Copenhagen delegates declared again the idea of "no western union". But it was becoming evident that CoSec policy was overlapping on IUS activities; CoSec was, in fact, becoming an unrecognized union; CoSec was being held together by virtue of its attitude to IUS. Without getting official recognition, CoSec was fast developing into an anti-IUS international union.

David, Pierre Or Gauthier Who Has Defeated Whom?

Sparks were flying, insults were exchanged and fighting words were hurled in a no-holds-barred debate at yesterday afternoon's session of the UC model parliament, as the team of Gauthier and Gauthier unsuccessfully opposed the team of Gauthier and Sellars.

The motion before the house was Resolved that: Modern Education is a Fraud. It was Gauthier versus Gauthier all the way with Gay Sellars somewhat bewildered as to her role in the whole mad affair.

The first speaker for the affirmative aws D. Gauthier who commenced his argument by assailing the lack of support given to the UC Parliament. Mr. Gauthier then proceeded to question the purpose of education. He described classical education which includes such things as Greek and Latin authors. "Scientific education," he said, "is divided into abstract learning such as is taught in mathematics and the practical sided sort of thing given to the engineers. There is also high school education involving grammar, languages and sex, although I suppose the latter would come under the label of extra-curricular activities."

Mr. Gauthier then declared that the purpose of all this education was to adapt people to better living. "Living," he added, "is something we all know about since we have all taken part in it." He then pointed out that this purpose is not being achieved because in recent years, mental illness has risen greatly, and mental illness is the result of lack of adaptation to life.

He concluded, "Our modern formal education synthesizes everything into one dull gray uninteresting whole. Soon the whole world will become part of this mass convention and we won't have any more leaders."

The first speaker for the opposition, Gay Sellars, deplored the fact that she literally had to be scrounged up to act as a member of the opposition to the Gauthier family. She declared that the support should be much stronger.

Miss Sellars questioned whether there had really been an increase in mental illness. "Only the awareness that there is a mental illness has increased," she said. "Modern formal education is the only type of education for people today. It is imparted by people whose sole occupation is to teach. Everyone gets educated and each one proceeds according to his own speed." Opposed to this, Miss Sellars pointed out, is the dabbling and research type of learning without instructor's aid. "Have you ever tried to prepare a debate without referring to a reference book," she asked.

The second speaker for the government, D. Pierre Gauthier, questioned the opposition's opposition to D. Gauthier's stand "I couldn't more agree with him than if I had said it myself," he said. D. Pierre Gauthier then went on to compare modern education to a rotting corpse whose stench is rising to the nostrils of the educated elite. To support his argument, he further elaborated in Sanskrit.

After the debate was over the opinion was that although Gauthier had won, Gauthier had put up a stiff fight.

Gay Sellars still looked bewildered.

Lawren Harris Exhibit In Hart House Gallery Like Father, Like Son

Thirty-five paintings, drawing and reproductions of Lawren Harris Jr. are hanging in the Hart House Gallery for the next two weeks.

Harris is at present a Director of the Mount Allison School of Fine and Applied Arts at Sackville, N.B. His father was one of the group of seven famous Canadian painters.

The Art Gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., Wednesday afternoon for women between 4:00 and 6:00 p.m.

Through the gradual simplification of line and form in representational painting. Harris has been led into abstract painting, where he feels it is possible to achieve a clearer precision of meaning.

Being a relatively unexplored and unlimited field of creative expression, Harris said it was most stimulating to him: "It yields unexpected pleasure in the new ideas which it evokes, and at the same time, demands a greater degree of self-discipline," he said.

"It is the dynamic interplay of feeling and reason which gives the design or organization of a painting its fullest meaning; to accomplish this, I find the oil medium the most satisfactory because it seems to possess the greatest range of expressive possibilities," Harris said.

A graduate of Upper Canada College and Trinity College School, Harris was an officer, and official war artist in World War II with the Canadian Army in Italy, England, and Canada. He has exhibited his works in Canada, the U.S.A., Southern Dominions, England, France and Italy.

He has paintings in the National Gallery in Ottawa, and the Art Gallery of Toronto. The present Hart House show has been collected from his home university and these two galleries.

George Pepper, assistant principal of the Ontario College of Art here, spoke Wednesday afternoon at 5:00 on Harrs' work in the Art Gallery. Women are invited to attend along with House members.

Today at 1:30 p.m. in the East Common Room, Harry Davidson, tenor, will give a mid-day recital.

He acquired his Doctorate of Philosophy at the University of Berlin and came to the United States in 1950. Among his published works are: "Man Is Not Alone"; "The Earth Is The Lord's"; "The Sabbath: Its Meaning for Modern Man"; "Maimonides" and "The Prophets".

Delegations from Queen's, McGill, Western, Cornell and Rochester will be attending this conference. Saturday evening a dance and show is scheduled at the YMCA. The Inter-Hillel Debate is scheduled to take place Sunday noon, Toronto debating Queen's.

Rabbis attending this annual meeting are Samuel Cass, Montreal, A. D. S. Pirnontel, Kingston, Aaron Kamerling, Toronto and Dr. Shalom Weyl, London.

Women's Debating Meet Is Intercollegiate Event

Inter-university debating for women will be featured here this weekend as the Women's Intercollegiate Championships will be decided this Saturday. McGill, McMaster and Toronto will be represented.

The women's debating teams from Queen's and Western have defaulted according to UTDU chairman Earl Berger. However the championship for the entire league will be decided between these three teams.

The topic to be debated will be "Resolved that extra-curricular activities play an important role in the lives of university students." Toronto's team consists of Elaine Newton III UC and Lorna McDougal IV St. Hilda's.

In the morning, at 10:00 a.m. in R. 13, UC, McGill will debate with Toronto and then with McMaster, the two teams scoring the hightest number of points being the finalists. These two will then hold the championship debate in the JCR at 3:30 p.m.

The judges for the debating finals have not yet been announced.

John Diefenbaker, MP, will speak Saturday to the National Convention of the PC Students Federation. He will address a luncheon meeting at the Albany Club.

FROS Group

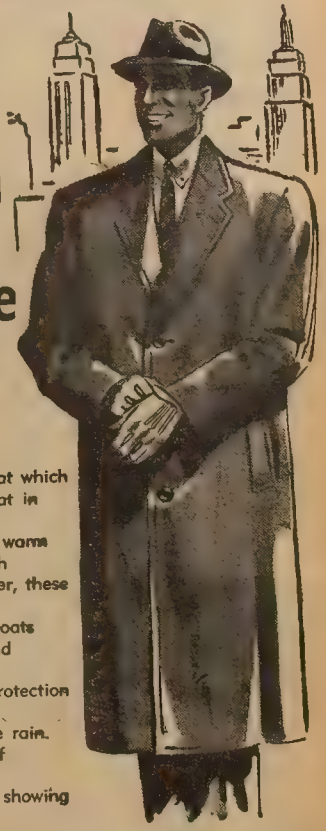
NIGERIAN CACOPHONY

The FROS discussion yesterday moved on from polygamy to African music and dancing. Kemte Giadom, a graduate student from Nigeria, played some records of several types of popular Nigerian music, and also treated the group to a demonstration of two kinds of dancing.

"The music, and the instruments with which it is played," said Giadom, "vary in the different regions of Nigeria". He told about three main regions, that of the Ibo in the North, Yoruba in the West, and Hausa in Eastern Nigeria.

Altogether, Giadom said that there were more than two hundred groups in Nigeria, with different backgrounds and cultures, who had their own special music, musical instruments, and dances. The dancing is further divided into ceremonial, which can only be performed by professionals, popular, and ballroom dancing, which is very similar to our own kind.

He said that rhythm was the basis of African music, and the drum was the chief accompanying instrument to which the people sang. He said that in the Northern regions primitive violins were also played, oftento serenade a woman in the moonlight. In the Southeast, he said the people were more conservative, and the drum was the most important instrument. He added, "A man can play ten different drums at the same time, or three drums with one hand, and another small instrument with the other."



Giadom also described several other instruments, describing the different types of horns and the strings. He told of many rare kinds which were only played on special occasions.

Among the records he played was a composition in honour of the first Nigerian mayor of Lagos, and another composed for the funeral of a prominent Nigerian lawyer.

This discussion was the last of a series of three on Africa. Next week FROS will start on India. The Chairman will be Professor James Ham, who was at the recent seminar in Mysore, and several Indian students will speak.

WARFIELD And The TSO

Two solosits were featured in this week's Symphony concert. One was a guest: the baritone William Warfield and the other was Nicholas Fiore, flautist, who unlike the prophet was not without honor in his own symphony.

The program was rather motley, combining several shorter works classical and contemporary with one fat score, The Chausson. Symphony in flat. Sir Ernest was in one of his dramatic moods in conducting the purely orchestral works. The histrionic possibilities of the Overture to Coriolanus were all exploited to the full. When it was loud it was very very loud and when it was soft it was very very soft. However, it cannot be denied that this treatment made of the Chausson Symphony something very dynamic. It is quite apparent from numerous reminiscences of feeling and thematic treatment that Chausson learned his composition at Dvorak's knee. But the imitation is of the most attractive qualities in Dvorak. The Paysana by Champagne which might better be named "Habitant" contains two frequent types of French-Canadian songs; the sad sentimental kind and the lively rhythmic kind. The combination makes a pleasantly melodic work.

Warfield first appeared in four serious songs by Brahms. Not without reason he made a great impression on the audience. He presented the songs with simplicity which made the religious conviction of his interpretation all the more effective. His voice has a dark earthy quality with a strong but not annoying vibrato. He was particularly moving in the third of the songs, Oh death, oh death, how bitter and in the fervour of the final song, Though I speak with the tongues. Sir Ernest might have toned his part down a little here, but these two statnesque men made quite a pair on the stage.

In contrast with his first selections was his presentation of Thomas' drinking song from "Hamlet" and La Calumnia from Rossini's Barber of Seville. He made use of more illustrative gestures and displayed the full power of his voice. The latter number which he repeated had a tremendous build-up from the first horrified whisper of gossip to the final storm of slander. In my estimation William Warfield is one of the great singers.

And then there was Nicholas Fiore in Ibert's Concerto for Flute and Orchestra, the second treat of the evening. Fiore as last had a chance to show the virtuosity which he has been promising all year in this interesting and demanding Concerto.

Wendy Michenes.

Five O'Clock Concert

At next Wednesday's Five O'clock concert at Hart House, Tela Podoliak will be the artist. She has studied with Margaret Parsons Poole and with Mona Bates. Much of her musical education has been through scholarships, and in 1947 she received the L.T.C.M. at the Royal Conservatory of Music with the highest standing that year. She is now on the faculty of the Conservatory.

Last week Miss Podoliak gave a concert at Eaton Auditorium which was reviewed in The Varsity.

She was one of the Ten Piano Ensemble at the Steinway Centenary concert. She has taken part in the Ontario Board of Education Tours of Ontario, in radio programs, and has appeared as soloist in many Ontario concerts.

The concert takes place in the Hart House Music Room, and women as well as members are admitted.

Sunday Concert At Vic

The soloist at this Sunday's concert at Wymilwood will be Rowland Pack, a well-known Canadian cellist. Mr. Pack is the principal cellist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

Rhis concert will include the Brahms Sonata No. 1, a Haydn Divertimento, and a sonata by the Toronto composer Leslie Mann.

Pack is a native of London, and studied at the Royal Conservatory where he won the Jubilee scholarship. He has appeared in many solo recitals, and has often performed on programs on the CBC.

The concert takes place at 9.00 p.m. in the Music Room ay Wymilwood (the new Vic Union). This is the second concert this term. Two weeks ago Eli Spivak, violinist, was the artist. Earlier in the fall a concert was given by Donald Garrard.

All students from the university are welcome at the concert.

STIMULATING

NFCUS Art Exhibit

Varsity students have the unique privilege of viewing the entries in the NFCUS Art Competition on display in the Hart House Debates Room until Friday. It is unfortunate that prohibitive costs will prevent the show from travelling to any other university this year, for it includes an encouraging amount of stimulating work.

The prediminating oil painting provides the competition with its greatest successes and some of its most muddy failures. The judges, A. Y. Jackson, Charles Comfort, and Robert Finch, have given first prize in oil painting to Heather Spears of UBC for her Ariel, a portrait whose sensitivity goes beyond an almost tentative color and form to convey a feeling of youth and freshness about its subject. The "Honorary Mentions" have all gone to Toronto's men whose virile and inventive work remains interesting even after three exhibitions.

Watercolor as a medium is less attractive to artist and public because it is less spectacular and more difficult. Perhaps because of this the watercolors are few in number. I found them generally disappointing. It seems a shame that so few have fewer still have been particularly successful. The little silver plaque for watercolors goes to Anne Stott of McGill for Evening, for its color and its flat space organization.

Most of the entries in the "Drawing and Prints" class were optimistically vigorous. The felt nib pen, enjoying a nationwide popularity, has achieved a number of worthwhile effects, generally because of the simplicity it almost of necessity forces on its employers.

Three birds by Clarence Barnes of Queen's, winner of the drawings award is in something of a class by itself. I have a feeling that most will either like it or be indignant about it. The latter will appreciate it more I'm sure, if they concentrate on the vigorous bird-motions of the design, the liberated, lively movement which is obviously there, rather than search for concrete objects and forms.

The present assemblage of drawings and paintings represents a considerable achievement, especially in view of its late beginnings. The NFCUS show could be an invaluable stimulus to amateur artists at Canadian universities. It is to be hoped that those in charge begin work immediately on next year's contet in an attempt to realize the potentialities of this activity.

Socialism In USA Nile Presbyterians Compared By Grube

Professor George Grube, of Trinity College, addressed University College's C.C.F. club, "Socialism IA", on "Socialism and Democracy." He defined Socialism as an obvious development of Democracy.

The coming into power of a socialist party would not necessarily involve immediate seizure by the government of all enterprise, now in the hands of prrvate individuals. As such it "doesn't always show much eniterprise", punned the speaked.

"The difference between Socialists and a non-socialist government is that Socialists believe in what they are doing." Present governments act decisively only in war time; they make promises, for example to avoid depressions., but don't believe in themselves. He is sure that President Eisenhower is honest; and believes in his promises, but how many in the government do?

The main objection to Socialism seems to be that such a form of government would be hard to get rid of. Grube squelched this idea by suggesting that, being successful the party pust naturally continued in power, because people wanted it to.

Questioned about the progress of Socialism in the United States. Grube amused his listeners by comparing it to the progress of "Presbyterianism on the banks of the Nile,—very slow."

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUTFOOT

Jack Harding and Andy Gustavsen, athletic director and head football coach, respectively, at the University of Miami in Florida, were wondering what to do with Friday, November 12th, 1954. The space on the calendar bearing that date had no football game pencilled in, which meant a break in the series of Friday night games at their massive (70,000 seats) Orange Bowl.

Some time in the midst of their pondering, Harding must have fondly recalled the football team he coached at Miami during the late thirties and thought of the captain and star of that team, Bob Masterson. "Say, Bob has a football team up in Canada, hasn't he?" one of them might have said. And one thing led to another and now the stage is almost completely set for Bob to make his triumphal return to the alma mater — bringing his football team with him.

The Varsity Blues have been invited to travel away down to Miami to engage the Miami U. team in a game of football — under U.S. rules probably — on Nov. 12. There is one obstacle, only one, standing in the way of the Blues making the trip and that is the possibility that they might have an intercollegiate game scheduled for Saturday, November 13th.

The Miami invitation apparently implied that they were in a position to underwrite the trip, which would make it a pretty sound undertaking as far the Blues are concerned. As a matter of fact, it would seem that the other schools — be there four or five of them — would be rather miserable if they refused to arrange things so the Blues would be free on the date in question. Especially in view of the fact that every team has to have an open date at some stage of the season.

Bob Masterson is, of course, enthusiastic about the possibility. Aside from the personal satisfaction he would get out of the game, he feel it's a wonderful chance for the boys on the team. "It would be a great incentive for the team", Bob says, "and it would give college football a big lift here. Another thing: it might answer that question of how our college teams would stack up against one of the U.S. schools".

There's no doubt about the fact that the Miami squad would present rather formidable opposition for our Blues. Miami is a school of about 8,000 students, which is a fair-sized college for a country where there is almost a university for every student. To give you an idea of how much they go in for football (aside from the fact they play in the Orange Bowl): they have a coaching staff of eight, headed by Gustavsen, who was formely assistant to Red Blaik at West Point. While not in any particular conference, they play such teams as Maryland, Alabama, Mississippi, and some of the Big Ten outfits.

There is at least one way in which the Blues would rate a better chance than they would have, say five years ago. They no longer use the two-platoon system in the U.S., which would eliminate the overwhelming bench strength, which might have weighed things in Miami's favor.

In fact, it's hard to see any reason for the Varsity folk turning down this generous offer. It's difficult to see where we've got anything to lose, whereas we have so much to gain.

And it would be the grand-daddy of all football week-ends.

On The Sidelines

By JO RATCLIFFE

It's rather refreshing to discover that we're going to have a few more swim meets on the campus, though this won't be happening till next year. It always did seem unusual that after practising twice a week through the Fall, there was nothing btu a single evening meet to settle the interfaculty standings in this sport.

This new class for officials should be the answer to the demand for more interfac meets. This idea was prompted by the U of T swim club and we'll go along with that anytime. We should not have to find outside help for officiating swim meets particularly since so many girls on the campus can swim and do have some interest in participating in interfaculty swimming competition. If we cannot find help within the campus for these meets, the usual annual event will be held. If, however, we have a store of officials around there can be more meets. This decision rests with the swimming-minded gals of Toronto.

Classes begin this Saturday morning at 10 o'clock and will be continued at this time throughout February.

There are al of girls around who have not as yet attained a Bronze Medallion in life saving. Take a tip—if you're out for a summer camp job (and there are many available) this will be an added recommendation. The bronze classes will begin tomorrow at 9:30 at the L.M. pool.

There is only one difficulty with the Saturday setup and that is a timetable confliction. It will have to be one thing or the other — bronze or officiating. We do need officials but the Bronze is pretty nice to have. A dilemma, what?

U of T Team Wins Intercol Badminton

Winning 14 of 15 matches, the University of Toronto team made a shambles of the intercollegiate badminton meet at McGill last weekend and brought the Jemmett Trophy to Varsity for the first time since it aws put up for competition in 1948.

Varsity's representatives were Jim Carnwath, Pete Ferguson and Ray Cornish, with George Bonar joining Cornish to make up a second doubles combination. They won all their matches, with the exception of one singles match which Carnwath dropped to Irving of McGill.

Besides the U of T team, Queen's, Western and McGill took part in the tournament.

Hockey Blues Play Laval Hoopsters Meet Tricolor

To-night may be the last chance Varsity fans will have to see the Queen's basketball team play. The Golden Gaels come into Hart House for the year's first Friday Athletic Night when they will play the Blues, then tomorrow night it's off to the lair of the McMaster Marauders for the second game of their weekend tour.

Varsity's Blues defeated the Golden Gaels in their last match down in Kingston but since then they have dropped three of their last four games. Two losses in a row in regular intercollegiate play stand as a blot on the Blue Book. After their initial win over the Gaels two weeks ago the Blues stagged on to losses against McGill and then the McMaster Marauders. Now Varsity will be out to begin a new win string at the expense of the Queen's people.

The Gaels are out for altogether different things though and any winning intentions the Blues may have will be strongly disputed by the lads from Kingston. Leading the Gael attack will be John Elder, a former star in Toronto with the old Cottage Comets, now a power with the boys from the Pen City. Doug Hargreaves who starred with the Sault Ste. Marie club (Lou Lukenda's home town) will be another strong man in the Tricolor lineup while veteran Don Lyon is another fellow who has been good in scoring for the Queensmen.

A preliminary basketball game at 7.30 brings together Varsity Seconds and Easton's Junior Executive. The other sports night feature will be the senior interfaculty swimming tournament, now officially an all-Varsity affair, since intercollegiate swimmers are now eligible.

How unlucky can one hockey team get? Just a little less than two weeks ago, the Varsity Blues appeared to be rounding into form for a late season drive that might carry them into the upper half of the intercollegiate standings. Now, although the situation as far as the league race is concerned has not changed appreciably, the Blues are definitely in a jam.

Standing only four points behind second-place Laval, the Blues have a good chance to threaten the Quebeckers tonight at Varsity Arena when they play them in their third meeting of the year. But the locals will likely be without three key players: Ken Lawson, John Tolton and Sam Ashton. Tolton suffered a badly bruised chest in the McGill game two weeks ago, Ashton has pulled back muscles and Lawson has had to quit hockey in favor of his studies. Which leaves quite a hole in the Varsity team, since Tolton and Ashton were strong defencemen and Lawson had been a consistent scorer.

That leaves Bill Morenu, Lou Appleby and Paul Prendergast on defence. Prendergast hasn't played for some time but the shortage of players is forcing him into the lineup. There is also a slight chance that Tolton may be able to play.

A slight shuffle has been necessary on the front line, too. Dan Tovey takes Lawson's spot on the first line with Red Stephen and Harry Boyd. Another line will have former U. of Montreal player Pierre Perrault making his first start as a Varsity Blue, centring for Ernie Bodnar and Robin Logie. The other line — Don Cossar, John Akitt and Ross Woods—will be unchanged. Tom Riley will dress as a utility forward, possibly to spell off Stephen who may have to take a turn on defence.

The Laval team, meanwhile, is somewhat strengthened, as compared with the squad the Blues defeated 5-2 in the first game of 1954. Main additions have been all-star centre Robert Lafreniere and the veteran Claude Roy.

Baby Blues Drop OAC

Guelph, Feb. 3—One of the weirdest basketball games ever to be played at the Ontario Agricultural college here resulted in Varsity Seconds edging the Aggies 71-68 Wednesday afternoon. The game finished in overtime with Varsity having only four men and OAC five.

The Baby Blues were leading by 22 points at half-time but the Aggies staged a great drive to tie the score at 61-all and throw the game into overtime. By that time, Varsity had only four players left and the Aggies only six—they lost their sixth shortly after the overtime period began.

Varsity's foursome of Al Riva, Ron Stroud, Ken Yates and Ruby Richman put on a great display in overtime to win the game for the Blues. Richman was the sparkplug, sinking five foul shots. Stroud and Yates contributed a basket apiece and Riva made a free throw.

Al Vaichulis was the game's top scorer, netting 22 points in all. Norm Reynolds got 12 and Richman 10, McNeil and McKay got 13 each for the Aggies.

HOOP SHOTS

By LEO MADDEN

What has happened to our senior basketball team?—After winning two games in the Intercollegiate, and knocking off a couple of American college teams, they seem to have lost their steam. What can we expect of them? — What are their chances in the League now? —What will happen when they face Western and Assumption?

These questions are on the lips of the followers of the Blues and justifiably so. The Blues have lost to the Redmen of McGill, a team they should have beaten easily, and to the McMaster Marauders, a team they defeated in the Intercollegiate opener. Both of these losses will definitely hurt Varsity chances of winning the title. But it is early in the season, and we should not commit ourselves yet.

The game at Montreal was one of those nights when the boys just had a hard time putting the ball in the basket. Every team has that trouble once in a while. Sometimes it isn't fatal, but McGill happened to have its best night of the season, as far as shooting goes.

Down at Mac last week, the story was a bit different. But, as Bob Masterson puts it, "under the conditions the boys were subjected to the night we played at McMaster, I am not surprised at the outcome". At the Marauders' home court, the Varsity squad seemed to be operating in a vaccum. Whether or not it can be blamed on the shower of pennies and cheap remarks hurled down at them from the stands, it is hard to say. At any rate, the Blues dropped the second Intercollegiate game in a row.

What is to come is hard to say. The boys are determined to make a clean sweep of the rest of their schedule. This means home and home games with both Western and Assumption, and single games with Queen's and McGill.

I think that they have the ability to take Western, Queen's and McGill. Western is weaker this year, and neither Queens nor McGill are expected to solve Varsity's "Hart House zone". But the big Assumption squad, led by a Rochester boy named George Joseph, present an almost insurmountable obstacle in the Blues' drive toward their desired goal. Yet, the Blues downed Western's championship team on their own court last season, when the Mustangs were considered as "top drawer". Therefore, there is room for optimism on Varsity's part.

POT's Smash Vic Seconds

This is the time of year when girls' hockey picks up and one of the best-played games of the season was staged yesterday when POT firsts slashed through Vic seconds to a 3-1 win. Vic's power certainly didn't belong in its defence though they have done much better in previous games. POT's kept most of the play around the Vic net.

Strangely enough, the first goal of the game was scored by Vic star, Mary Sue Heaslip. Grabbing the puck away from the pushig POTs, Mary Sue charged down on a straight breakaway to net the opener unassisted. Marg O'Niel wound through the Vic defence to pass over to Fran Fry who tallied the firster for POT.

Early in the second, it was O'Neil to Fry again which put the POTsters ahead by a single tally. Marlent Mason aws about the only Vic player to pass across the blue line but the POT wingers hit it back every time.

The third period produced one of those seldom found penalties in girls' games. While bodily contact is allowed in these meets, tripping is not, and Vic's defenceman Pat Cowman was given the gate for two. Rosalee Marsh of POT pushed her way through a pile-up around the Vic net and tallied the final goal of the meet.

Mac Trounces Toronto Gals 44-30 In First League Game

By FLO MIDDLETON

Perhaps, McMaster cannot dress a football team strong enough to meet the standards of the intercollegiate, but Mac certainly has a women's intercollegiate volleyball team that will not have to drop out of the league. Bythe score of 44-30, Mac inflicted a stinging defeat on the Varsity squad. On the whole, the game was quite uninspiring and both teams showed the lack of any ballhandling ability that was worthy of intercollegiate distinction.

After losing out in last year's intercollegiate championships, McMaster, the perenial winner, is out to revenge its defeat. Although Toronto tied for second place last year, it would appear as if she will have a tough time even coming close to that this year.

In the first half which was non-rotation, Mac spurted ahead from the beginning and never fell behind throughout the rest of the game. Even though Lillian Massey is the home gym for Toronto, the home team seemed to have a harder time in adapting itself to the cramped quarters than did the visitors.

While the Toronto team was hampered in getting into the scoring by net fouls, McMaster rolled ahead with good pick-ups and well-placed serves.

With the start of rotation play in the second half, it looked as if Toronto might make up its deficit, but the strength of the girls from Hamilton was a little too much for Varsity. The remaining fifteen minutes lacked any show of spiking or cross-court set-ups, although Toronto tried many front-line set-ups.

Ryerson: Prescott (roughing), Caico (highsticking).

The Ryerson Rams, so we understand, would very much like to be a part of Intercollegiate Intermediate hockey, but after yesterday's performance in Varsity Arena, the Gould St. Boys don't seem to be quite ready. The Baby Blues completely outplayed them in all departments, as they rolled to an 8-0 win, suitable revenge for their earlier setback.

A dim light was cast on an otherwise fair hockey game late in the first period, when Ryerson forward Eric Chibley collided with the boards head first, and sustained a severe concussion. The plucky winger was rushed to the Toronto General Hospital, where, at last report, he was still in the emergency ward.

The Intermediates struck for four goals in the first frame, in which they had the Rams thoroughly tied up. Only one goal was produced in a stormy second session while eight penalties were handed out, five to the Blues and three to Ryerson. Deacon Avery collected the lone goal in this period, and that when Ryerson held a 4-3 advantage in manpower.

Herb Tilson did time in the sin bin three times in succession in the first frame, the cleanest one of the game. Don Avery, Clare Fisher, Ted Rogers, and Gene Robillard picked up tallies as the Blues began outclassing the Rams right from the start.

A total of nineteen penalties in all were dealt out during the contest, for a total of 38 minutes. Varsity got fourteen of them, while the Rams settled for five. Ron Prescott and Roy Strong were badmen for the Ryersonians, taking two each, while Tilson added another in the second frame for a grand total of four in the Blue uniform.

In the third stanza the Rams had noticeably tired, after their second period drive, and John Adams and Ted Rogers scored for the Blues at 7:14 and 19:35. Deacon Avery completed a hat trick at 8:50 to give the Blues their one-sided victory.

Ryerson monopolized the last five minutes of the period, while the Blues collected four penalties in a row, but stellar goaltending by Hugh Currie held them off as he worked hard to earn his second shutout of the season.

From the Blue Room . . . Defenceman Chuck Bull sat this one out with a bad knee, but will be ready for Monday's encounter with O.A.C. . . . Ryerson captain Bernie McIver and Ron Scarcello indicated that the Rams can play much better hockey than they did . . . John Adams saw action as it was an exhibition game, and his many rushes paid off with an unassisted goal in the third . . . Rearguards Barry Smith and John Prendedgast played their usual good games . . . Joe Walker worked the first period with Robillard and Primeau, while Fisher tried Ted Rogers and Don Avery for linemates . . . The Baby Blues, next game is in Guelph Monday night, and then against Osgoode in the Arena next Friday. . . . Western Mustangs tied the Seconds for first place with a 13-4 decision over the Aggies yesterday.

More Room Yet

During the fall, the Blue and White Society was asked to be a leader to All-Varsity campus spirit. Even at that time, some students questioned whether there was any real All-Varsity spirit, or whether all students at the University of Toronto were either Skulemen, or Dents, or Vicmen, but never "Varsity".

The point was debatable then, but the case of the All-Varsity Revue is unquestionably the same situation. Virtually no one is prepared to leave his own college and merge with his opposition to give Varsity an earnest, high calibre, All-Varsity show.

Last year we had an All-Varsity Revue. It was good. But it was done by men who had run so many college and faculty shows that they had all grown up like a team. Co-operation was the core of the organization, and support came from nearly all parts of the campus.

But the question, this year is: can the All-Varsity Revue be done the same year, by the same men who do the college shows. Considering the calibre of the college show, there seems no question but that virtually all good talent on the campus is in them. The conclusion then is the one arrived at by last year's AVR producers — either an All-Varsity Revue and no college shows, or college shows and no AVR.

But is this necessarily the case. Must the AVR be solely dependent on campus shows for its talent. Surely if the AVR were run as a continuing anual event, students could grow up with it from their first years, just as they do with the college shows.

Perhaps we should get started again on a little lower plane of student showmanship, than that attained last year. By following through several AVR's, building a staff in each with a view to having a staff the next year, there would be much less guesswork about embarking on a project as big as this.

Further, it seems that in an All-Varsity show we should provide students of music and drama the opportunity of working with, and being trained by professionals in producing and directing a good show.

This was done last year to some extent, and its benefits would certainly have been felt in this year show if it had been continued. It was the air of professionalism that made last year's show good. More specifically, it was the fact that university students carried it out in this atmosphere, and both the actors and the audience were satisfied.

Yet, there is still room for having more professional showmen than last year. This would make it worthwhile for some students to come out and take part in the show, and for others to be sure of a bargain on his dollar and a quarter ticket.

To Balance Lofft

A Different Approach

The writer, a student of McGill University accompanied John Lofft, III Meds, behind the Iron Curtain this summer. He explains that this article, the first of a series, is to balance Lofft's "cloak-and-dagger" outlook of the visit to Roumania, which was printed in Maclean's Magazine. "Not that mine is more objective," the writer says, "only that it presents a somewhat different approach."

By BILL WILLMOTT

I would like to report to you briefly about my trip and give you some idea of what I did and saw and felt during the five weeks I spent in Eastern Europe this summer . . . If there is one firm conviction I have developed through this trip it is that we should do all we can to further exchange in every form between East and West if we are interested in world understanding. . .

When we got off the boat at Le Havre, we began a fast train ride straight to Bucharest. No time to gather impressions, but just to see high spots and dash on. I was certainly surprised to find that we could wander around Vienna without restriction. We so often tend to think of these international cities as neatly divided with armed guards at every border crossing and with little traffic between the zones. We ate in the International zone (French that month), slept in the American zone, and left from the Soviet zone, arriving the following evening at the Roumanian frontier. On both the Hungarian and Roumanian side of the border we were greeted by hundreds of young people, waving flowers and singing. Through Roumania we stopped every two hours or so for a reception at a station, dancing with the Roumanians, singing our different national songs, and all cheering lustily for Pace si Prietenie (peace and friendship in Roumanian). We arrived at Bucharest the next noon, again with a crowd and a lot of singing to welcome us.

My trip to Europe was for a triple header of events in Eastern Europe which followed each other in quick succeession. I was observer for the Student Christian Movement at the Third Congress of Youth called by the World Federation of Democratic Youth, and again at the Third Congress of Students called by the International Union of Students. Between these two events I participated in the World Festival of Youth and Students, organized by the WFDY and IUS jointly and attended by 29,000 from other countries and an equal number of Roumanians. I will try to give you some idea of these events, as well as general impressions of the places we visited.

Youth Congress of World Federated Democratic Youth

Perhaps the most exciting moment for the Congress was the announcement of the signing of the Korean armistice. Rumors had been circulating the afternoon before, and the French delegation was already beginning to tear up newspapers for confetti! Then the next morning, the speech by the head of the Chinese delegation broke the news, and for fifty-five minutes the hall was in an uncontrollable uproar. It started with the Korean hugging and kissing the Chinese speaker, and it soon spread into a general celebration, with all the Koreans being warmly and vigorously embraced by everyone, people standing on their desks, waving their hands and shouting and singing and clapping. There was a very deep feeling of relief and joy at the final end of a terribly unpopular war.

The Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship

Every two years the IUS and the WFDY have co-operated on a festival of sports and cultural events that bring together young people from every country in the world for two weeks.

This year it was held in Bucharest, with 29,000 young people from 111 different countries participating. Each country put on its own concert, or in the case of larger delegations, several different concerts, and all countries participated in international programs, sharing an evening with several other delegations.

The Canadian forty looked pretty small squashed between such delegations as the Chinese 900, the French 3,400 and the English 1,100, but we were a little larger than the Irish delegation of one man. The Americans were over twenty.

The Fesiival closed with a big demonstration, this time with a parade of the participants through the streets to the biggest square in town, where there were short speeches and a magnificent display of fireworks. All in all, the festival had few mass meetings and rallies, but was primarily a cultural and sports event so that people in various countries might learn of the cultures of other places and begin to appreciate, not only the diversity, but also the value of national cultures. The slogan, "Peace and Friendship", was exemplified through mutual respect and personal contact rather than through mass events. To add to this, each delegation arranged small meetings with other delegations during the mornings and afternoons in order to further this personal contact. We met groups from the German, Hungarian, Roumanian, Soviet, Korean, and Chinese delegations.

Effigy Garb Insulting, Irrelevant

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The front page picture in last Monday's Varsity showed an effigy of Dr. James Endicott, president of the Canadian Peace Congress, in clerical garb. It accompanied an article on the protest of Members of the Association for the Liberation of Ukraine to a meeting of the Peauce Congress being held in Massey Hall.

It would seem that these students believe Dr. Endicott to be a minister, which is incorrect. Although he was ordained as a minister of the United Church of Canada, and was engaged in the overseas work of the Church for a number of years, he resigned from the ministry on May 5th, 1946. He wrote: "I regret very much that I feel it is now necessary for me to resign from the Ministry of the United Church of Canada. This decision has come after long and painful deliberation and travail of spirit. It is due, primarily of course, to a change in my own experience, understanding, and explanation in regard to certain matters."

The United Church has felt the wisdom of Dr. Endicott's decision to resign at many times in recent years. It is to be hoped that anyone else desiring to make an effigy of this gentleman will find some way of identifying him which is not inaccurate, irrevelant, and insulting, as is the clerical garb.

Margaret Kell, III Vic

But, It's Worthy . .

Dear Editor:

Here at the offices of the BSDAHAPP, Mr. O'Pidhainey's letter was read wih interest, and some regret. We can only regard it as a vicious attempt to incite prejudice against us, by loosely associating us with murderers and Communists.

It is unfortunate that, with his excellent views on prejudice and intolerance, he should have seen fit to denounce a group which has suffered so much, and so unjustly, from these evils. Prostitution is an essential profession. Societies have existed without Medicine, without Science, without Art, and even without Religion. Never without Prostitution.

But while we recognize the worth of Prostitutron our aim is to combat the public antipathy which has done so much to injure it. We feel it is their unwillingness to accept Prostitution on an equal basis with other skilled trades that has resulted in its present control by disreputable and unernical elements. Prostitution will never be removed; the only direction reform can take is toward improving it. We ask, then, that that Prostitution be made legal, that it be Government supervised, that regulations for better working conditions and Union hours be instituted, and that higher standards of Prostitution be maintained.

Such thoughless attacks as Mr. O'Pidhainey's do nothing to make our task easier.

Suzanne Trollope
Vice-Secretary, The Benevolent Society Dedicated to the Dissemination of the Ancient and Honourable Art of Prostitution.

Blues Surge To Top Defeat Gaels 79-47 Stulac, Donelly Star

By MOISHE REITER

Like a condemned man enjoying a final feast before his execution the Golden Gaels of Queen's bandied pleasantries with their good pals the Varsity Blues on the Basket ball court of Hart House, before moving into Hamilton where the McMaster's mangy Marauders lurked in waiting, their eager fangs drooling.

The Blues, knowing what faced Gaels in Hamilton tried to make their last hours pleasant but the Tricolor just didn't have their hearts in the game and the Blues jumped far ahead of the visitors winning the match 79-47. In preliminary play to the main event Varsity's Seconds gained a clean sweep for the Blue and White with a 60-53 decision over the Junior Executives from Eatonia.

The victory over Queen's pulled the Blues up into a first place tie with Assumption's Purple Raiders and the Mustangs of Western, both of whom the Varsity club will meet on their road trip next weekend. It was also the Varsity's third victory in five Intercollegiate starts.

The opening play of the game gave a wrong impression of what was coming as Gaels' Don Lyon pounced on the ball, dribbled into the Varsity zone and threw in a nice one-hander. That was the last time Queen's saw the lead and the the last time Lyon did anything useful. The Blues took things easy as they set about building up a lead with fantastic shooting. In the first quarter they hit for a ringing 53% average; then surpassed themselves mightily in the next period with a 60% mark, giving them a half time lead of 46-17. Then, as usual, Varsity let up in the final minutes as the Gaels outscored them 15-12 in the fourth quarter.

Varsity tried a double pivot in the first quarter and it worked out just fine. The Gaels were somewhat shattered by the spread attack and the Blues were able to work the ball in for easy close shots — hence the high scoring percentage. There was a surprise for Varsity fans in the game when Bill Corcoran, a hoopster who has confined his activity on the court to playmaking and the snaring of rebounds, came out with a set of hook, jump and set shots that caught both the Gaels and the crowd by surprise. Corcoran's ability to work inside adds to the Varsity strength and improves their chances against the Assumptions and Mustangs.

There may be an explanaion for Jim Russell's accuracy on the two-handed set that gets him and the Blues most of their points. Russell hit for a mere ten points in the opening period, adding three field goals more in the last quarters for a 16-point total.

As usual the Big Blue was George Stulac and rather than list all the things he did we'll just say that he did everything—to perfection. A mania for selfless team play kept Stulac's score to 15 points but if there had been points given for assists he could have had three times that number. On one play, as Don Lyon drove in for a lay-up shot Stulac went up with the Gael, blocked the shot, scooped it from Lyon's sweating little fingers and as he hit the floor he was already dribbling toward the Queen's hoop.

Even the Varsity zone, that vaunted Maginot Line of Varsity Basketball, couldn't keep Queen's good little man, Frank Donnelly, down for long. Donnelly didn't get hot till the second half but then his shots went in like they had eyes. The floating Blue zone had no chance to close in on the small Gael as he took passes and threw in a single motion. His fine play was responsible for almost half of the Gael scoring power as Donnelly netted 20 points.

Dominion Champ Student At U of T Anderson Tackles Russians At Chess

A University of Toronto student, and Canadian chess co-champion, Frank Anderson, has challnged the Russians to an international chess tournament. While definite plans for the tournament have not, as yet, been completed, Anderson, I UC, said yesterday there was every indication that the challenge would be accepted.

In a reply to a cable sent through the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, the Russians said they would be very glad to play in the international game. Sponsored by the Toronto Chess League and the hobby show of the aCnadian National Exhibition, the game will be played in February at the hobbyn show.

Anderson's original challenge was directed toward world chess champion, Michael Botvinnik, although it included a willingness to meet any other Soviet "grand master," if Botvinnik was unavailable.

Grand master, Anderson explained, was the name given to a very few top-notch world chess players. He said there were only about 20 of them.

Because Botvinnik is preparing for a world tournament in March he could not accept the direct challenge, Anderson said. Instead, Igor Bondarevsky, a Russian grand master, has taken up the invitation for a Canadian-Soviet game.

The conditions proposed for the game by the Russians were not acceptable to Anderson. Bondarevsky asked that two games be played simultaneously; that one move be cabled every half hour; that five to eight moves be made a day; and that the players play eight-hour sessions.

Anderson felt this would take too much times from his studies. In a cable sent Saturday through V. Bourdine, First Secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, Anderson offered a counter proposal.

He asked that only one game be played and that it be held in regulation international time. Under these conditions Anderson explained that 40 moves would be made every two and a half hours, not including transmission time. However, this plan was left open for revision by the Russians.

Anderson, who became Canadian co-champion with D. A. Yanofsky in Winnipeg last December, believed the tournament would be played. "The Russians have shown a very great interest in the idea of a Canadian-Soviet chess game, and will probably reach a compromise," he said.

The Hart House Chess Club has no direct connection with the proposed international game.

A student in Maths, Physics and Chemistry, Anderson tied with Yanofsky in the Canadian competition in Winnipeg, where nine top Canadian players met for a round-robin tournament. Yanofsky, a recent graduate of Oxford, England, is also the British chess champion.

Botvinnik, who became world chess champion in 1948, passed on the aCnadian challenge because he is to defend his title in a match scheduled for March. He will meet N. Smyslov, another Russian, who won an international competition in Switzerland last fall.

The Varsity Sneers At...

ALEX LANGFORD

. . . for threatening a young and helpless female Varsity reporter with removal from a Victoria-Engineering debate because a "true account will not be given in the paper." Langford, IV Vic, and Speaker of the House, said a reporter would never be allowed to a debate in the future if a "fair report" of the debate was not published. What the Speaker failed to realize was that The Varsity has consistently lived by the code of all news-writers — fair and accurate reporting. If there are deviations from this code, it is because of the inexperienced journalists of the staff, not because of any bias or prejudice.

Parliament Is Blasted Called Undemocratic

"I never was more hopeful of this party being able to throw off the sloth of defeats", was the message of John Diefenbaker, M.P. for the federal riding of Prince Albert when he addressed delegates to the National Federation of University Young Progressive Conservatives.

He spoke to a group of 125 people who came to a luncheon given for him last Saturday in the dining-room of the Albany Club. The combined Conservative clubs of Osgoode Hall and the University, of Toronto were host at this luncheon to delegates from universities across Canada including Dalhousie, Acadia, University of New Brunswick, McGill, Carleton, McMaster, Western and the University of Manitoba.

Joe Slogan, the president of the University Conservative Club introduced Mr. Diefenbaker.

"Parliament has become a pawn in the hands of the majority", said Diefenbaker. He called the conduct in the present House "a denial of democratic government" and "a prelude to democratic dictatorship". He quoted the example of Bill Hamilton who became a national hero "because he failed to realise that documents that are critical of the government are secret and must be kept from the people of Canada." Speaking as a Conservative he said that the Emergency Powers Act was "one statute that we intend to tear from the book."

He called on Conservatives to oppose the rigid straight-jacket of socialism whether it masquerades as free-enterprise or not.

"The future is encouraging, providing we are, act, and be, Conservative in the days ahead. The Socialists have received fewer votes than ever before, and the swing is again back to Conservatism as it always is when democratic peoples lose their taste for novelty," he said.

Conservatives should have certain broad principles by which all individual matters could be decided, he felt, and stated his belief in the principle of maintaining the connection with Britain. He thought there was less chance of minority groups losing their rights under Canadian adherence to the commonwealth than under the alternative political and economic adherence to the States.

The second principle he stated was: "We should not use the techniques of Communism in order to preserve freedom. If you fail to speak out on freedom, you destroy freedom by apathy," he said, and described the present role of the opposition as one of maintaining our constitutional freedoms and the tradition of parliament against a government operating under the Emergency Powers Act.

(This is the sixth in a series of articles designed to acquaint Canadian students with the history and organization of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students — CoSec.)

By RICH ANCO

The growing strength of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat brought important changes in the international scene after the Copenhagen Conference. This was clearly seen in the "new look" policy of the Communist-led International Union of Students (IUS).

The increasing attractiveness of CoSec was a spreading thorn in the side of IUS ideas of world student unity. A modification of the partisan political line was necessary if the IUS hoped to win back the western national unions.

At its Warsaw conference, the IUS amended its constitution so as to provide a possible basis for bringing the western unions back into the international organization. The amendment states:

"Associate members shall be admitted (to IUS), such members to be national unions of students who within the limitations of their own constitution accept limited obligations and in return receive certain rights of associate membership. These obligations and rights shall be determined by agreement between the IUS Executive Committee and the organization concerned and must be ratified by the IUS Council."

But was this too late? Had the core of a western international union hardened so that one international union was now impossible?

The big question was, then, would the membership of CoSec dissolve the organization and find their way back into IUS — the original body set up to foster international student unity — or would they continue to speak unity and operate in a divided world?

Observers returning from the IUS Congress meeting in Warsaw repeatedly suggested there was a basis for co-operation in IUS. The Canadian student federation saw fit to investigate that basis. As yet, nothing concrete has developed.

But the problem still existed. What repercussion was the "new look" to have on CoSec? IUS had made a move toward cleaning up its house, toward getting rid of some of the partisan rulings which had made it impossible for the western unions to remain in the organization.

It was both foolish and undiplomatic to suggest that IUS disband and join CoSec. The forces holding CoSsec togeher in the past had been the common dislike, distrust and utter impossibility of the Communist group. Did these forces still exist and were they as strong."

The IUS manoeuvre was only a half-way measure — few will dispute that. But the fact is that it WAS.

If the delgates at Stockholm, Edinburg and Copenhagen really believed in student unity and "no western union," then they now had a chance to test the sincerity of the Communist plan. Unity between the two politically opposed groups could only be obtained on a 50-50 basis.

But these were issues which could not be decided over night. Fundamental changes had come into the international scene.

Perhaps, as some argued, the "new look" was one big Communist trap. Perhaps, however it was the beginning of bridge beween east and west, as the idealists and optimists believed. At any rate, it was a good propaganda weapon which the west could not afford to lose.

Recognizing this, CoSec made preparations for what might turn out to be its most crucial and important International Student Conference — the Istanbul meeting of 1954. CoSec's future would be planned here.

Homer Run

Great Soap Opera

Reprinted From The RMC Marker

The College News Section of The Marker has instituted a plan whereby all cadets may receive at least a part of the benefits reaped by those in Third Year sudying the "Great Books" course. The first of these articles is a review of Homer's The Odyssey.

Until a couple of months ago, all this writer knew about Homer was that he counted double with a man on base. During these months I have managed to ascertain that there actually existed an ancient Greek named Mr. Homer who earned the daily biscuit by writing deceptively simple stories. I call them simple because that's the way they look to me; and deceptive because of the way they look to professors. Anyway, these stories have proven unparalleled as a sort of mental obstacle course for college students.

The tale, in brief, considers the struggle of a hero type named Ulysses to return home after the Trojan War. (You know, the one with the wooden horse . . .) Since the central character is named Ulysses, it was only natural for Mr. Homer to call his story The Odyssey. (Natural because Mr. Homer wanted to avoid confusion with a slightly more sensational novel of a similar name.) The important thing to remember is that this chap Ulysses, or The Wise Odysseus as Mr. Homer calls him, is a hero.

After a few pages of relatively nothing, the reader is presented with the dismal scene of hero boy, seated on a rock bewailing his fate: being confined on an island with a beautiful goddess. (This is a hero?) All is not lost, however. Upon the inspiration of Miss Pallas Athene, another goddess, our hero, after nine years in inactivity, begins to build a boat.

One storm later, Odysseus arrives, naked, in Phaecia, where his hesitance at approaching a party of ladies clearly shows that he is a Man of Great Discretion. In return for a suit of clothes, he relates a series of adventures that would put even the most reputed liars, like Munchausen, to shame. His exploits include blinding a giant, jilting another goddess, a trip to Hell, and a visit to another monster whom the noble Odysseus provides with lunch, in the form of six sailors. It is in this voyage that Odyssesus shows another of his admirable qualities — self-restraint. He alone was able to pass the beautiful Sirens. (Of course, the factt that he was lashed to the mast might have been a factor.) The tale ends with the loss of the rest of his men and his being cast upon the goddess' island.

Meanwhile, all has not been going too well at home. After nineteen years, the loyal spouse Penelope has acquired a considerable train of potential husbands. These

BA Passes May Be Blinking Asses--Smith

Departmental examinations alone are no longer a sufficient guide in determining university entrance requirements, said Dr. Sidney Smith last Saturday night. At the annual banquet of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, Dr. Smith spoke on the "Net and Screen"—admission requirements for the university.

"We need the aid of subjective reports as well as objective tests to choose the students with the mental and moral capacity for work at the university level," he said. He blamed the high rate of failure of first year students on the fact that "we are admitting on the basis of the departmental examinations, many of our youth who ought not to be admitted."

"We are not getting from you the selection of your students who can profit from higher education. We are getting many of that group, but not the whole group and nothing but the group," he told the teachers.

Commenting on the percentage of Ontario students who attend university, the President said, "I do not regard the 93 per cent (who don't) as hoi polloi and the 7 per cent as the Lord's Anointed. I do not share the touching faith of many parents in a university degree as the whole assurance of happiness, success and good citizenship. Nor do I believe that a parchment is the passport to preeminence, or a sheepskin a surety of sagacity; it is possible for a BA to be a blinking ass." "However, he added, "the 7 per cent who take university courses are those on whom the country depends for its leaders in education and other professions".

He decried the "anti-intellectual" talk about education prevalent today as dangerous, boorish, myopic, and totally unrelated to fact. During his 33 years of teaching he has never found a "genius" among his students, he said.

"We need never be ashamed of developing an intellectual elite, but ought rather to be ashamed of failure to challenge and to discipline first-class intellects," he said.

He stressed that the important question about university entrance in Ontario was "Are the Grade XIII examinations perdicting adequately a student's capacity for further academic work?

"If Grade XIII results no longer predict this answer, we of the universities might as well go over forthwith to the Scholastic Aptitude Test" which is, he said, one of the approaches to the problem.

"I cannot concur in that argument think it would be in the best interests of education to abolish the departmental examinations, and I do not think that the universities should stop taking them into consideration for admission purposes. It is true that we are interested in the content of courses that have been covered and in industry and application and self-discipline of students. Content is still important. No matter how agile a brain one has, he cannot think very clearly and he will not think very often, unless he knows something to think about."

He commented on what Canada needs today. "It needs—it badly needs—those with a love of learning, outgoing instincts, endless patience and a kinship with youth who will make good teachers", he said.

He proposed that Canadian universities should experiment with the Scholastic Aptitude Test, and use it as an adjunct to the departmental examinations. "The test appears to have a predictive value that we cannot afford to ignore, in view of the unsatisfactory percentage of failures in the freshman year in Canadian universities proved to be reliable for us, the test would indicate to our universities the pupils who are in the upper intellectual brackets". "The test would widen the net and at the same time make the screen more efective", he added.

"The difficulty of financing a university education is an insuper-able barrier for numerous able boys and girls," he said. "anada needs a system of financial aid that would enable all the boys and girls in the secondary schools who have the ability for advanced academic work to enrol in the univer-

He expressed hope for a national scholarship and bursary scheme that will ensure equality of educational opportunity. "We should be getting more students from the rural districts and from centres that are remote from the universities," he said.

Student Tours NFCUS Aided

A saving of up to 50% is available to University students and staff going to Europe this summer. By making their travel arrangements through the NFCUS Travel Department, considerable discounts may be obtained on student tours, ship and air transport, and sleeping accommodation.

This is the third year that such a service has been available from the NFCUS office. Last year 210 Canadian students and faculty members used NFCUS travel arrangements.

There are two special student sailings on the SS Castel Felice. Costs range upward from $260.00

There are flights on NFCUS-chartered K.L.M. Royal Dutch Airliners at a fare of $375.00.

In addition to these flights, the travel bureau offers seven student tours of Europe. The touring students stay at student residences and hostels, and travel by chartered coach, steamer, and third class rail.

Further information about these tours may be obtained from Scott Symons, Toronto NFCUS representative.

Gallery of Grads

So what if your niece Arabella is the leading debutante of the season—and has her picture just plastered all over the papers! So what if your nephew Reginald has received the Victoria Cross, and was presented at Court! You had your day of glory too. And the proof is close at hand.

"There I am," you murmur proudly as you pull out your well-thumbed copy of Torontonensis. "There I am: the most outstanding graduate of the University of Toronto." (Well, nobody else took twelve years to get through the Geeral Course.) There's nothing to compare with that picture! Imagine, a cap and gown!"

The possibilities of going on at great length like this, and impressing all your younger relatives, are unlimited. All you need is one copy of Torontonensis—the rest is guaranteed. (Of course, if you really want to impress some of the more distant relatives, who may not always be around, you should have a supply of several dozen, to hand out at convenient moments.) No one will be able to deny that that picture is you; your name is sure to be somewhere near.

"There's Barbara," you exclaim, as you look over the graduatio pictures. "'Bilious Barb' we always called her. Married now, and ten kids. Some people sure have all the luck. And there's Don. A millionaire they say. He still owes me ten cents from that time we had coffee together, when he was broke. And if that isn't Professor Jones! He's dead now, though I thought he'd last forever. Every time I wrote an essay, he told me I'd added a year to his life. He didn't have to worry about his next year's position—I'd always be there and he'd always have a class."

The best years of your life were those good times at college. All the memories are recalled — by Torontonensis.

Not only is Torontonensis an asset for every graduating student. It has appeal for everybody on the campus. All the campus activities are covered: the shows, the athletics, the drama, the clubs and organizations.

"There will be more pictures than ever of campus life this year," said Reggie Mori, III Vic, Editor of Torontonensis. The magazine will be featuring the floats, football games (even the playoffs), the initiations, and the University College Centennial. New buildings (including their cornerstones) will be covered; the Library, the Best Building, UC Men's Residence, Trinity Chapel, and St. Michael's Centenary Building are some of the pictured buildings.

"We order oly the number of copies that are ordered by the students," Mori said. "Therefore it's very important to order now. Last year, many students were disappointed in June when the copies were distributed."

The sale, on now, ends February 22. Orders may be placed at the Students' Administrative Council office or through local representatives. Posters advertising the sale with lists of the representatives are placed in all local buildings. The posters also have a photo of Shirley Eckel, smiling, and with her baton.

McGill Out-talks Varsity Carries Off Reed Trophy

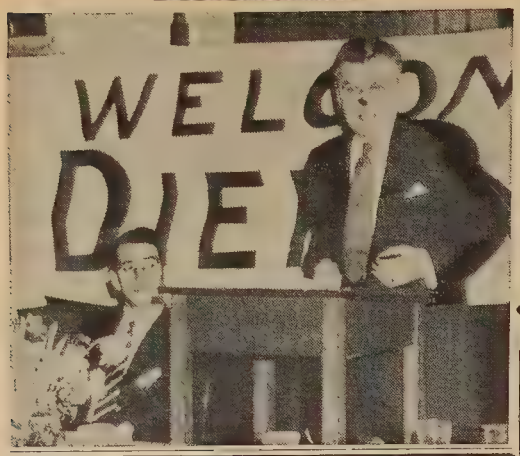
The Reed trophy has finally been claimed by the red and white, but unfortunately not UC. Elaine Newman and Alison Knox, representing McGill at the Women's Intercollegiate debating meet held this past weekend, laughingly accepted the makeshift trophy presented to the winner by Earl Berger, chairman of the UTDU. As he congratulated the McGill girls on their prowess in the debating field, he said he hoped that finances would make possible the purchase of a proper trophy for the event.

In the first meet of this kind for some years, five teams were originally scheduled to compete, but Queen's and Western were forced to withdraw at the last minute because of the illness of one member of each team. The morning debates saw Elaine Newman, III UC, and Lorna McDougal, IV Trinity defeat the McGill team, maintaining that extra-curricular activities play too important a role in the lives of university students. McGill, upholding the resolution, defeated Marian Passmore and Helen Woldstein of McMaster. In the afternoon the McMaster team lost to Toronto, in the last of the preliminary debates. The final debate between Toronto and McGill was an extremely difficult one to judge, but Ken Jarvis, grad studies, speaking for the other two judges, Professor Knight of Victoria College and Stan Schiff, School of Law, awarded the decision to the negative team, McGill.

At a dinner given by the UTDU the Reverend John Madden, faculty advisor to debating at St. Michael's College, addressed the group. He praised the girls for the excellent quality of the debates, remarking that they could be proud of their participation in the activity which he felt to be the last remnant of all learning. Commenting on the pitiful attendance at the meet, he said that in the fourteenth century the townspeople would turn out in thousands, filling the square, to hear a debate between professors of the Sorbonne and a visiting seat of learning such as Bologne.

A reception given by the Warden of Hart House, Mr. McCully, concluded what Anne Somerville, St. Michael's, felt to be a very successful event. Anne, who organized the meet, thought the calibre of the debating most promising for future events of a like nature, and stated that it should prove most conclusively that women can debate.

TONY KING ASSUMES DUTIES AS QUEEN'S JOURNAL EDITOR



Kingston, Feb. 3—(CUP) — An Honor History and Economics student, Tony King, was appointed Editor-In-Chief of the Queen's Journal. King succeeds Seymour Bronstein, who resigned last week over an argument he had with the Alma Mater Society about whether or not the AMS should have any say in the advertising policy of the paper.

King felt that the AMS as publishers of the paper should have some say in advertising policy. He stressed that the AMS should not be allowed any control over editorial policy though, beyond the appointment of the editors.

Bronstein resigned because the AMS did not allow him to publish advertisements of firms making windbreakers other than the firm recommended by the AMS. He told the AMS that the paper needed the income derived from these ads.

Queen's University has no standard windbreaker. All of them are designed by private firms, and students wear a variety of them.

Diefenbaker

John Diefenbaker, M.P. for the federal riding of Prince Albert was the guest speaker at a luncheon held during the convention of the National Federation of University Young Progressive Conservatives this week end. 125 young conservatives attended the luncheon which was held in the dining-room of the Albany Club. Diefenbaker is standing in front of the large banner saying "Welcome John Diefenbaker" which was hung at the front of the dining hall. Seated on his right is Don Chilcott of the University of Manitoba who is the president of the Federation.

le pouls des canadiens

La Change

By WENDY MICHENER

L'université de Montréal aime bien les enquêtes, semble-t-il. Avant Noël c'était un rapport sur le nombre de lectures du journal étudiant, Le Quartier Latin. Maintenant c'est le Rapport Mandeville Sur Les Arts à l'U de M. Sans doute inspiré par le Rapport Massey. Les résultats étaient pas mal encourageants. La moyenne sur tous: Peinture, sculpture, photographie, cinéma, débats, musique, discophile et théâtre est 15% participants actifs, 75% participants passifs, et 10% indifférents. M. Mandeville fait une comparaison interessante entre les manifestations artistiques et les manifestations sportifs. Le ballon-panier et le hockey n'ont que quelques spectateurs en moyenne par année. La même comparaison à Toronto sera tout le contraire. Je gage.

L'évolution sociale et économique que se réalise actuellement dans la province de Québec a pénétré la sanctuaire de l'Université de Montréal. Dans une espèce de credo les présidents de toutes les facultés one publié une demande pour un changement immédiat dans le domaine universitaire. Leur demande: "une plus grande participation des étudiants à la conduite de l'Université dont ils sont la première raison d'être."

Il y aura un pélerinage d'étudiants en avril. On pourra croire que les pélérinages ne se faisaient qu'au temps de Chaucer, mais voici le preuve du contraire. Le lieu, c'est l'université de Montréal, et le temps est 1954.

Nous avons noté la semaine dernière un critique de la censure en Québec du film Martin Luther, qui a paru dans Le Carabin. Cette semaine il y a une suite de deux répliques. C'est un peu drôle de voir des personnes écrire deux milles mot à propos d'un film dont ils sont complètement ignorants. Le film était trop dangereux pour les Catholiques de Québec. Et pourtant les Catholiques d'Ontario n'étaient pas en danger. . . .

Nous avons aussi noté un Festival prochain à Laval dont les plans sont exposés cette semaine dans Le Carabin. Le Gala à une ressemblance quelconque à notre "homecoming week-end" . . . une parade de facultés . . . une joute de hockey . . . des dances . . . et pour terminer: la Revue Rouge et Or. Faute de notre AVR nous pourrions bien nous décamper à Québec pour la fin de semaine du 10.

Nos félicitations à M. Jean Coté du Carabin qui écrit chaque semaine d'une manière intéressante les nouvelles d'autres universités. Nous éprovons que nos sentiments à l'égard de Québec sont égalés de son Coté. Malgré le grand brouhaha du Quartier Latin au conférence de la P.U.C. il n'y a aucune bruit d'autres villes que françaises. Ce dernier fera bien dimiter son frère gagnant de la trophée Droit en usitant des novelles nationales . . . surtout puisque Le Quartier Latin est le journal éxecutif de la PUC cette année.

Students Are Too Young

Fiendish Faculty

So it's February. The birds will be coming back soon, and all the earth will be covered with the beauty of spring flowers. But will we students be able to enjoy the fresh and youthful outpourings of an awakening nature? NO!

We poor fish will be in the throes of a horrifying experience. We are studying for exams. We have no time to enjoy nature, to appreciate her subtle beauty, to feel the amorous changes which the springtime works in us all.

We sad sacks, we miserable offenders, we worse than senseless thing — we will have not time to appreciate these gifts of an omnipotent Deity. For in April and May, the annual torture imposed by the heartless University authorities descends on us all: on the rich and on the poor, on the intelligent and the stupid, on the eager and the indifferent, falls the overpowering gloom of exam time.

After allowing the student his brief flight of freedom, his feeble moth-like flickering before the candle of life in the fall term, the coldly calculating officials and professors of this education factory impose their terrible will on us all. O horror of horrors! O shame of shames!

For we students are not ready for such an ordeal as writing six or seven examinations. We are pure, we are innocent, we are too young to die!

In short, we are not prepared to write these torturous innovations of a fiendish and decadent faculty. We have done no work since September, and we are by no means ready to give up our freedom. Having made no effort at studying since last May, we can not easily be persuaded that effort is necessary and desirable. "For it's not for knowledge, that we go to college, but to raise hell all the year."

Down with Syd's infamous exams! Down with the annual torture-racks! Down with the April Blues! Up with Freedom and irresponsibility! Hurrah for anarchy! Burn Smith!

We have been imposed upon long enough! Now is the time for the revolution. No more exams, no more tests, no more essays, no more compulsory readings. Those few inquisition-type professors who still take attendance in their classes must be eliminated. (A public hanging on the front campus would do fine.)

Now is the time for action! Revolt! Burn UC! Do anything, rather than submit to the dictatorial dictates of the University authorities.

I'd start this revolution myself, but I've got a touch of Spring Fever. Nevertheless, something must be done!

The Importance Of Being Ernest . . .

Thomas

Eaton Auditorium is making quite a habit of selling out for their concert series this year, and in this town, often referred to as the 'agent's delight', that is a minor miracle. Thomas L. Thomas was the man to turn the trick, which is logical enough. The popular baritone opened the concert with four love songs of the Scarlatti period. The result was pleasing enough but when he continued in the same vein with two songs by de Falla and three more by Dvorak, I for one lost interest. The audience loved the intimate, chamber quality of the music but as far as I was concerned it was all a bit too cloying. For an encore Mr. Thomas sang the ever loved Songs My Mother Taught Me. I suppressed the desire to weep openly for the sake of decor.

The accompanist relieved the situation with three solos and a well deserved encore. Although they were all 'MacDowell' types they were sensibly played as well as sensitively played. There was a certain abruptness about the playing that disturbed me but I liked the over-all effect, rather unlike some ladies' tea party playing I have been subjected to in the past. A tip of my hat to you, Mr. Hannemann.

The big moment for me was when Mr. Thomas sang Eri tu, from Un Ballo in Maschera. There was a masterful display of the artist's vocal and musical ability which is prodigious. The voice was let loose only once however and for the remainder of the program we were forced to be satisfied with 'cute tunes' and folk songs.

After intermission, and by the way, the punch they serve at intermission is terrific, Mr. Thomas sang five English songs. The diction, as alway was impeccable, and the tone rich. I was impressed The next group was similar except for two spirituals which were truly enjoyable. Mr. Thomas obliged with a total of fifteen encores, much to the delight of the audience. All in all, it was success despite the similarity in numbers.

ART REVIEW

Lawren Harris

E. M. Forster, speaking of Adela Quested in A Passage to India, tells us that when she allows life to examine her, instead of trying to examine it, she becomes a real person. The visitor to the Hart House Gallery this week may find himself in the same position. Such a comparison is perhaps not too relevant and may only prove that if you try hard enough all artistic expressions can be related.

Mr. Harris' statement concerning his painting contains several phases worthy of additional emphasis. He says that he has been led into the execution of abstract painting by a gradual simplification in line and form; that in abstract work he has found greater stimulation and a more rigorous self-discipline. "My aim is towards clarity of conception and simplicity of statement." He feels that it is the dynamic interplay of feeling and reason which gives the design or organization of a painting its fullest meaning, and therefore he has chosen oil as being the most expressive medium.

With the exception of one painting, "Legend", one of the best in the collection, the texture of the oil has remained constant over the years: a thinness which is admirably suited to sharp outlines and decisive forms. This gives to all the works exhibited a remarkable clarity of perspective and depth and a very vibrant atmosphere. The paintings are hung, incidently, according to the plan of the artist, but it will help the understanding of them if one also considers them according to their dates.

In the "Nude" of '37 he already shows a secure grasp of the possibilities of painting in oils. The variants of texture and light in the skin are very well defined. The drawings of the two following years are fine examples of his conception and manipulation of line. The war pictures, in their interest in form repetition and in their impressional quality reveal the artist's later concern with the abstract. His ability as a craftsman is abundantly shown in these pictures but we have little sympathy with the subject. Yet in war paintings sympathy is not always desirable.

It is not so easy to pass comment on the abstract works. The four drawings of '46 and '47 together with "Equilibrium", "Circles and Planes", "Blue Triangles", and "Project", all from '47, are concerned with achieving an ordered relationship, a reconciliation, perhaps, between form and colour. Of these "Equilibrium" is the most successful and certainly the most interesting: the energy of "Projects" is less controlled, and the other two seem rather sterile. Nevertheless, the ordered relation is always present. The later works have a more complex meaning, and though they may have the simplicity of "Blue Triangle" they also have some other form imposed upon them, as in "City Pattern", "Coloured Sails", and "Beacon, Bridge, and Building". One other picture, "Immigrants", painted in 1951, while purely representational lacks the emotional quality of "Nude" having surrendered any sympathy in its subject to the search for ordered composition. Nevertheless it is still a very beautiful work.

Harris is beyond a doubt one of our great craftsmen, but occasionally in stressing simplicity he loses interest, and in stressing order loses sympathy.

In The Print Room

George Webber professes to have made the silk screen process a fine artistic medium. You can judge his success for yourself until his serigraphs move out of the Hart House print room on February 13.

A familiar commercial medium is the process in which paint or ink is forced through a fine screen, impregnated with film or compound to form a sort of stencil. It is a relatively uncomplicated, inexpensive process admirably suited to the mass reproduction of posters and the cheap reproduction of fine paintings. Especially if the printer uses oil paint, the colours may be as subtle as he wishes, as numerous as the "runs-through" and the patience of the printer permit. Dramatic poster effects of clear-cut silhouettes and contrasted areas of colour are within his reach, but the paint must remain in flat areas. Blending is impossible, though one colour can be "shaded" across another. The imprint of the silk screen imparts a uniform textural effect to the whole "print".

Webber obviously understands and controls his medium very well. Expressed in soft, harmonious colours, his well composed landscapes and flower prints are pleasant and attractive. However they are rather literal in the design of all but detail. I cannot help thinking that the artist might have made more decisive use of the special dramatic qualities of the medium, that had he done so he would, in escaping the feeling of inexpensive reproduction which still hangs about his prints, have made the work of the silk screen an even finer art.

CELLO-PAC

Although arriving twenty minutes late, Rowland Pack, the first cellist of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and Carol Pack gave a very enjoyable recital in Wymilwood last night.

At all times were they in accord, which may have been due to the fact that he is a disciplined orchestral player, or that they are married.

He made hardly any mistakes in the difficult third movement of Brahms' First Sonata. Even in extremely high positions he did not at any time search for the correct positions, as cellists so frequently do. His play there too, was clear.

Mrs. Pack seemed scared from that movement for which I can not blame her, because it is extremely difficult. This is probably why she at times was a bit too loud.

The one fault I found with Pack's playing, certainly not a serious one, was that in the slow, mento (transcribed for cello by soft adagio of Haydn's Divertimento Piatagorsky) his fingering was not quite as firm as in the more vigorous movements, resulting in some squeaks. Having given a CBC concert just before, he cannot be condemned for that, either.

A Sonata by the young Canadian, Leslie Mann, unknown to most of the audience was performed. The Sonata was interesting and enjoyable, with the exception of the first movement Allegro Moderato which I found difficult to comprehend rhythmically, and impossible to comprehend musically, having heard it the first time.

The performance given by Rowland Pack was clear and expressive. He is a good soloist and Mrs. Pack is more than an accompanist.

U Of T Symphony To Play Thursday

The University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the All-Varsity Chorus will make their first public appearance this season on Thursday evening at 8:15 in Convocation Hall. Students, friends and public are invited; there will be no admission charge.

This year's Symphony and Chorus are organized slightly differently from their counterparts in years past. They are conducted by professional conductors — the orchestra by Prof. R. A. Rosevear, and the chorus by Prof. Richard Johnston, both of the Faculty of Music. Previously, both organizations were conducted by undergraduates.

All students in the Faculty of Music are obliged, as part of their course, to perform in either the orchestra or the chorus, but students in other faculties also join these organizations. These changes in organization were made last year by the SAC to secure greater continuity in the orchestra and chorus.

Since some of the members of the orchestra are professional musicians, technical difficulties with the musicians' union prevented a concert in the fall term. This is consequently the first of the season.

The orchestral part of the program will consist of the Drum Roll Symphony of Hydn (No. 103 in E flat), the Overture of Iphigenia in Anlis, by Gluck, the Racoczy March, from "The Damnation of Faust", by Berlioz, and two short modern works.

HOCKEY BLUES TIE UP LAVAL

Not Quite

Big Marv Tile is seen going up for a tip-in against the Queen's Golden Gaels at last Friday's Athletic Night when the Blues defeated the Gaels 79-47. Tile didn't make the tip-in this time up though he did on the second try. Gael John Elder is seen stopping him while Matsalla waits.

Varsity Held To 2-2 Deadlock Cossar, Perrault Blue Scorers

By JIM PROUDFOOT

As it turned out, the Varsity Blues ought to be thankful for the one point they gained via a 2-2 overtime tie with the Laval "Rouge et Or" Friday night at Varsity Arena. Only that single point saved them from slipping into a tie for last place with McGill Redmen, who had been trailing the third-place Blues by two points but who surprised University of Montreal Carabins 3-0 Saturday aftrnoon.

Up until the time the news of McGill's upset win leaked through, the Blues were feeling somewhat bitter about being forced to settle for a division of the spoils Friday night. In the final analysis, they had a territorial edge in the play but, through a peculiar reluctance to shoot at the goal, found themselves blowing one-goal leads twice. The Lavalians outshot Varsity 30-18.

Varsity's nimble goalie, Jack Ross, handled all but two of those shots in sensational fashion. There was ample excuse for his missing the two that did score. One went in while he was out of position after booting out a shot and the other was a drive from the blue line which he didn't have a chance to see. At other times, he gathered in many surefire scoring chances, being particularly cruel to that smooth veteran, Robert Lafreniere, who was a threat at all times.

Varsity went ahead towards the end of the first period when Don Cossar picked up a pass at the corner of the Laval net and shot instead of passing. The puck went through two pairs of legs before finding the goal. Lafreniere matched that with three minutes to go in the middle period, blasting a loose puck into the net, while Ross was sprawled to one side.

Then Pierre Perrault, former University of Montreal star, making his first appearance as a Blue, cashed one that seemed to be the winner. He converted a long shot from defenceman John Tolton. But five minutes later, Gerard Houle set the stage for overtime by uncorking a sizzler from the blue line after taking a pass from Pierre Raymond.

Both teams had plenty of chances in overtime but there was no scoring.

Red Stephen was moved back to defence to fill in for the injured Sam Ashton and was a powerful factor there, especially in carrying the puck out of his own zone. Riley, who replaced him at centre, drew many a cheer from the 1,500 fans present for his speedy play. Harry Boyd started both scoring plays.

Lafreniere and Claude Roy were best for Laval, with Gerard Houle going well on defence.

Laval — Goal, Lavoie; Defence, Lajoie, Bevon, Houle, Laroche; Forwards, Carbonneau, Raymond, Roy, Lagace, Lafreniere, Blake, Marceau, Lavigne, Arsenault, Gaudreau.

Matmen Blues Win On Trips

Athletic teams have had some pretty successful road trips but it's doubtful if there was ever a week-end to match the one just completed by Varsity's senior wrestling squad. In what coach Kirk Wipper termed a "tremendous display", the Blue grapplers overwhelmed Queen's in Kingston Friday night by a 40-5 score and then improved on even that by whitewashing McGill 43-0 Saturday night in Montreal.

Varsity's wrestlers had only one loss in the 18 matches engaged in during the trip, winning three by default, one by decision and 14 by falls.

Doug Hamilton, Tom Hatashita and Al Miller continued their undefeated records with two falls each over the week-end. Hatashita, 137-pound champion, pinned Kramer of Queen's in the second round Friday night and then recorded a quick one by dropping McGill's Rogers in only 45 seconds. Hamilton turned in second round defeats of Cronin of Queen's and Hannaway of McGill, in the 191-pound class. Miller, in the 177-pound division, won his sixth and seventh matches in a row, both first-round falls over Onno of McGill and Felo at Queen's.

Heavyweight Harry Robinson won his bout at Queen's when his opponent couldn't continue and then dropped McGill's Goba in the second period of their match.

Bob Waugh at 167 pounds and Bill Bush at 157 were also double winners. Waugh threw Currieau of McGill in the third period, after doing the same to Stemenson of Queen's in two rounds. Bush dropped the Gaels' Garrett in the second round Friday night and then took an 8-4 decision over Stephens at McGill.

147-pound Ray Smith suffered Varsity's only defeat of the week end when he was beaten in the second round by Anakin of Queen's but made up for it by pinning another fellow named Smith in the first round Saturday night.

The two mighty mites, rookies Jack McOuat at 130 pounds and Murray Berman at 127, won their first intercollegiate matches at Queen's but both were by default. They came through at McGill, though, by winning their bouts by falls. Berman pinned Jarrett in the third period and McOuat threw Clark in the second round.

Homer Run

boys, while waiting for Penelope to decide whom she should marry, have been raising considerable whoopee—to such an extent, in fact, as to threaten the family budget. This situation has disturbed the noble Telemachus, son of the hero and the wise Penelope. At this point, Odysseus returns in a ship lent him by the Phaecians. On their way back to Phaecia, both ship and men are turned to stone, emphasizing the fact that Odysseus was one dangerous guy to work for.

To end the story Mr. Homer creates a conclusion cast in the finest Lone Ranger tradition as our hero, aided by his son and his faithful servant Tonto, kills the bad guys and balances the final budget.

The moral of the story: if you really want to get ahead you've got to jilt your girlfriends, blind a giant, kill the bad guys, and finally, go to Hell. And incidentally, if you think the idea of rephrasing Mr. Homer's plot is in bad taste—take it up with James Joyce.

Medicine Wins Senior Swim Meet

It was the boys from Medicine all the way in the Senior Intramural Swimming Meet held last Friday night as part of the Athletic Night. The Surgeon sturgeons piled up 81 points keeping UC and Skule out of their depth. SPS finished in second place with 29 points and the Arts types of UC ended in show position with 23.

Meds set the pace right from the first event, winning the 300-yard Medley Relay with the team of McIlroy, Rosen and Mortimer, Intercollegiate champs all three. Topping off Meds success in that event second place went to another Meds team.

Gord Teskey from Vic stepped in to the 220 free style to break the Meds domination but the Doctors still grabbed up third and fifth spots for more points.

Destruction was the theme in the 50-yard free style as Dents' Bruce Taylor streaked away from the competition and wrecked the University record, swimming a new pace of 25 [illegible] for the course. The o[illegible] 25.2.

Bernie Langer picked up another first for the Medsmen in the 150-yard Individual Medley with D. Price gaining the third place. When it came to diving it was Meds all over again as Trelford came first with Bruce Sonley, former Intercollegiate gymnast, winning second spot.

Bibi Stipitec of Skule was first man to the wire in the 100-yard free style, nosing out Record-breaker Bruce Taylor Teskey. Bill McIlroy won the 200-yard backstroke in the time of 2:40 with Price splashing in second spot to give the Medsmen the two top spots.

Larry Rosen added more points to the Meds total driving to first place in the 200-yard breast stroke. Van Tets of Trinity placed second and Smith of Meds was third.

A Skule freshman Doug McCullough won the 440-yard free style in 5:37.5 coming home in front of Teskey and Doherty. The final event of the Meet saw Meds take the honors in the 400-yard sprint relay. Skule took second place and St. Mike's came third.

Bruce Taylor

Bruce Taylor is seen resting at the side of the pool after setting a new Varsity record of 25 seconds for the 50-yard free style event.

Fencers, Seconds Winners

Varsity Intermediates tacked another name to their long list of victims Friday night when they mangled the Eaton's Junior Execs, 60-53.

Jack Rogers, though much lacking in finesse as a basketball player, impressed more than any other man on the floor. Fast, and as hard to stop on the small court as he is on the football field, Rogers persistently drove in on the hoop, pulling the Eaton's defence in with him, whipping a fast pass out to Al Vaichulis for an easy throw-in.

Zoli Janverry, a Niagara product, seemed to have overcome his ankle injury of the fall as he dropped 12 points and set up many of the Varsity plays.

FENCING

Detroit, Feb. 7—The University of Toronto fencing team lost by extremely close margins to two of the strongest college squads in the northern United States here Saturday. In a three-way meet, the Blues were beaten 14-13 by Wayne University and 15-12 by the University of Detroit.

Varsity's squad was rated by the Wayne coach as the best to come down from the U. of T. in many seasons.

Best for the Blues was George Montgomery who won a total of nine matches, while losing three and allowing only 27 hits against. In the foils competition, he handed Wayne's star Dave Clinton his first defeat in 18 meets.

The Varsity Will Not Be Published Tomorrow

Readers are reminded that The Varsity will not be publishing tomorrow as it did not last Tuesday.

This decision was forced on the Editors when the Students' Administrative Council cut the budget of the paper to make up for unforeseen deficits.

Faced with choosing between running several four-page issues or a fewer number of eight-page issues the Editors decided that to provide their readers with the best possible paper in terms of reading material and quality, the eight-pagers would be preferable.

As a result The Varsity has had to abandon its unique claim of being the only student daily in Canada. Four issues instead of the regular five will be published this week.

Beginning next week only three issues will be published. They will all be eight-page papers. This decision was made to provide for an SAC instruction that three issues be printed in March.

Two issues will be published in the first week of March, and the last and round-up issue in the second week.

There Goes Our Lead

Laval's Robert Lafreniere is about to tie the score at 1-1 in the second period of Friday night's hockey game at Varsity Arena. Blue goalie Jack Ross has just stopped one shot and can be seen off to one side of the goal as Lafreniere prepares to flip the puck into the open side of the net.

Mac's Jeers Pay Off

Hamilton, Feb. 7—McMaster university students turned out in force here Saturday night to jeer the basketball team from Queen's, the school that led the way in having Mac's football squad removed from the intercollegiate league. They got an unexpected treat as the Marauders edged the Gaels 58-52 to take over second place in the college loop.

The 1,500 McMaster supporters had devised new yells like "Yea cold, yea acsh, yea yea cold cash" and "Money, money". They related the gold of the Queen's uniforms to the reputedly financial reasons for the expulsion of the McMaster football league and Tricolor coach Frank Tindall was showered with pennies throughout the game.

The Marauders took the lead as soon as the game started and had increased their margin to nine points at halftime. The Gaels managed to hold Mac's high scorers, Lorne Wrigglesworth and Bert Raphael to seven points each, but Ken Stanley and John Villin broke out with 17 apiece.

Jim Harrison fired 13 for the Gaels, with Ron Lyon picking up 12 and Frank Donnelly eight.

Jane Russell Is Varsity Player

Conflictions in the interfaculty badminton contest caused a rematch to be played to find the four top players for the intercollegiate meet last week. As it turned out, the quartet that finished first in the annual meet was unable to go to the intercollegiate tourney, promoting replay of the all-important event.

Only one of last year's squad will be present at the intercollegiate meet, scheduled for next weekend at Queen's. Daph Cross, the sole veteran, was with the squad last year, that won over teams from Western, McGill, McMaster and Queen's. The rest of this year's group is completely made up of first-year girls: Marnie Littlejohn, Jane Russell and Pat Godson.

Before the girls take to the road this week-end, they will be playing one more meet at the Carlton Club to decide the players for the different events.

Toronto will be missing the spectacular playing of Ann Gray who starred as singles champ last year. The meet which was held at Mac in '53 was an overwhelming victory for Toronto, which took first place in every event of the tourney.

Way Up North

A New Columbus

"For years the Dominion (of Canada) has fought the popular U.S. notion that Canada was populated solely by red-coated Mounties (all baritones), flannel-shirted Indian guides (with French accents), and Eskimos."

This is how one popular American magazine has described prevailing American attitude towards and knowledge of Canada. Dr. Bissell, vice-president of this University, said, after a December tour of American universities, that Canada is still relatively unknown to most Americans — despite a recent wave of Canadian publicity in the United States.

This is, to say the least, a perplexing state of affairs. If Americans are so ignarant of Canada, a veritable stone's-throw to the north, just how much do they know about France or England or India or Japan? How are Americans expected to understand the problems, political and economic, which face the people of those countries?

A noted New York Times writer recently told a Toronto audience that his job was to inform Americans about Canadian life and people. Even with that, it is not surprising that Canadians are hoping Americans will soon launch a new Columbus to rediscover their old neighbor.

Americans would find more in Canada than just a briefcase full of information to aid them in their spy probes. They would learn that Canadians have a sense of destiny about their growing prosperity and a burning desire to develop the undeveloped. They would see that Canada is going to become a great nation and because of this confidence Canadians are not concerned about subversive elements; they are more anxious about human rights, including the right to dissent.

Americans would realize that a good deal of their own capital is invested in a country that is more than Mountie, Indian and Eskimo.

Above all, the new Columbus would discover that Canadians are an independent lot who fought to raise themselves from the status of a British colony and who will fight any attempt to substitute an American keeper for what was once the British.

The Odd Look

Perhaps it's about time we asked what price progress? On go the wheels of progress with little or no regard for the sinister effects they have on society.

And now we have three-D.

Watching an Indian raid in 3-D was too much for a Californian last month. He managed to dodge the arrows hurled by the Sioux, but when burning oil was tossed at him, it was the end. Angrily, he strode into the lobby and threw his polaroid glasses in the face of the assistant manager. Then he demanded the theatre manager, and when they were introduced, he socked the manager on the jaw and landed himself in court.

All this because of progress . . .

"Livid with rage" Premier Duplessis of Quebec last week called a newspaperman "a man without a heart, a pig, a snake and a slothy individual." With little sense of decency, Duplessis went off on his tirade after the reporter made charges of graft at a Quebec power project.

We don't mind the premier blowing off steam in this manner. But we do expect him to accord that right to other members of the Quebec legislature.

Several days before the Duplessis outburst a Quebec MP was banned from the House because he "dared" to call the premier a "coward". There was little sense of equality, let alone decency in the case.

It steam is to be blown, then there should be no discrimination as to how or who should do it . . .

To Balance Lofft

To Bridge The Gap

The second of a series of two articles by a McGill University student who accompanied John Lofft, III Meds, behind the Iron Curtain this summer. It provides a different point of view from that of Lofft who had an article printed in a recent issue of Maclean's Magazine. "Not that mine is more objective," the writer says, "only that it presents a somewhat different approach."

By BILL WILLMOTT

During and after the Festival of Youth and Students for Peace, we had a bit of time to look around Bucharest. We were, of course, perfectly free to wander all over the place and many of us did just that, as well as take the planned tours. . . .

Since we were perfectly free to wander all over Burcharest and talk to whomever we wanted, we did a lot of questioning and enquiring about the extent of political freedom and economic well-being. We spoke either English or French, and so could only talk to those people who had a reasonable education. Since education before the war was not free, this limited our contacts to the bourgeois and ex-bourgeois, many of whom are now workers for the first time.

The general impression we gleaned from these discussions was that economic conditions were not good and they felt considerable restraint on their freedom of expression. Although much of the rumors and stories they passed on to us were obviously fantastic and contradictory, it is fair to say that they were based on considerable dissatisfaction among this area of the population. But our sample is hardly representative of the Rumanian people in general.

My over-all impressions were that the government was attempting industrialization at such a pace that much of the consumer production demanded by the people could not be fulfilled. Much of Rumanian production was going abroad for heavy machinery. In a speech the day before we left, the prime minister, Gheorgiu-Dej, inaugurated a new production policy for increased consumer consumption, which will substantially raise living standards for the next few years.

WARSAW

My stay in Warsaw was six short days (and even shorter nights) during which I was involved almost full time in the Congress of Students, so had little time to wander around as we did in Bucharest. I spent one evening with the Canadian, British, and American legation people, and one evening with some other Canadians living in Warsaw.

The impression I got from these short visits and from the little talking we did do, was that there was very popular support for the reconstruction program that has rebuilt Warsaw from its 85 per cent destruction during the war back to over 50 per cent reconstructed. There are still large areas of ruins, especially where the ghetto used to be, but the new building projects are immense, and the Poles take a great pride in them. Economic conditions are not as stringent as in Rumania, and food supplies are about on par with England now. There is, of course, still a shortage of consumer goods, but everyone we saw was sufficiently dressed, if not elaborately. Prices seemed reasonable compared to wages.

A Canadian housewife I visited — an ex-member of the Student Christian Movement — said that the most exciting thing she noticed from her life there was that everyone felt "involved" in what was going on in the growing life of the city.

WORLD STUDENT CONGRESS

The International Union of Students was set up as a federation of national student unions at a large congress in Prague, 1946. Since that time its size and representation has increased, but the number of unions from western countries has decreased with the withdrawal of most of the unions of western Europe and the United States. The National Federation of Canadian University Students was never a member of the IUS, but has always sent observers to its meetings to keep tab on its activities and show their willingness to co-operate to a point.

The the Third Congress of Students, the highest governing body of the IUS, this summer, there wetre observers from NFCUS, the British, Scottish and all the Scandinavian unions, as well as the World Student Christian Federation, the Student Christian Movement of Canada, and many smaller organizations in these countries. These helped to make the Congress a pretty representative affair, since all the countries of Eastern Europe and Asia were represented by their unions, and many of the countries of the middle East and South America. The US representation was small and not recognized by the National Student Association, but they played a creative and positive role in attempting to encourage the IUS and all representatives to seriously consider contact with the students in the USA. The Canadian delegation consisted of two observers from the SCM, one from the National Federation of Canadian University Students, and one representative of Toronto University's students' council.

The plenary sessions were taken up with reports, very much like the Youth Congress. In the main, the atmosphere was dignified and friendly throughout the session, but it became quite obvious to the Canadian delegation, and most of the conferences, that the leader of the English union was determined to play an entirely negative role, extending the hand of co-operation from the waist only, and withdrawing it wherever possible from the IUS initiatives for student unity.

This was unfortunate, because there seemed to be a definite attempt by the IUS to do everything possible to remove the issues separating eastern and western unions. This conciliatory policy was expressed throughout the conference in various ways, such as offering the western unions the chance to participate as advisors in every body of the Congress, and in the general friendly atmosphere of the gathering.

In commissions and in informal sessions, the conference did considerable planning for exchange and personal contact between various countries. There was opportunity for all of us to express our points of view on exchange and push for the types of exchanges we thought were most valuable. The final resolution of the commission on travel and exchange included our suggestions for increased emphasis on individual travel, on seminars, and on exchange scholarships between countries.

My general impression from the IUS Congress was that there were definite possibilities for increased contact between students of east and west, and that the IUS was an important organization functioning in this area. Based on my belief that contact is desirable, it seemed necessary for me to work for closer co-operation between western student organizations and the IUS. I was therefore extremely glad to see an amendment go through the Congress providing for a new status of associate membership which could be acceptable to many western unions. This amendment was made on the suggestion of the British and Scottish unions and it is hoped that they, as well as other western unions, will take advantage of it in the near future. Then perhaps the American NSA will follow suit, and even our own Canadian federation.

BACK HOME

AA Czech poet I met, Pavel Kahout, has said in a talk to us:

"Everywhere in the world there are high mountains, wild rivers, and large spaces of oceans. Our technology and science have thrown up arches of bridges, launched ships on the seas, constructed machines that are able to overcome the mightiest mountain barriers. And everywhere in the world there are frontiers. Some of them are already only the mark of national units; others, because of the warmongers, have become barriers cutting all ways here and from there. But even these can be overcome by means created in human hearts. It is the inextinguishable desire for peace and happiness owned by all, especially by a young person."

Let us hope that, as our technology and science have thrown up arches of bridges to cross the rivers, so our own efforts may create those means within the human heart that will break down the frontier-barriers that separate one from one and allow animosity based on ignorance to grow until it festers into war.

Only A Few Were Responsible

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The Varsity has sneered at Bob McBride, Sports editor of the McMaster Sil. I wonder what would have happened at the same game if the shoe had been on the other foot. I agree that the behavior of those McMaster students was disgraceful, but there are certainly students at Toronto who would have done the same thing under similar circumstances.

Perhaps if Mac had been given the chance that Western and Queen's were given there would not be any trouble now. McMaster is a small university and must have found it hard to build up a team for the first year in the league. Any students who wanted to play football have gone to a university with a more stable position in the league. McMaster put up a comparatively good show during the foot-ball season. They did not actually win any games, but they came very close to it once or twice. I know that the students at McMaster were very disappointed and amazed when they learned that their university was not to be included in the league next year.

All this sneering back and forth at each other will not do any good though. It is just too bad that the majority of Mac students, who knew better than to follow the lead of a few rowdies, should have this bad name pushed at them.

Move To Moscow

Frank Anderson ponders a chess move which will be transmitted by wire to his opponent in Moscow. Igor Bondarevsky, Russian Chess Master, replied to Anderson's challenge yesterday and the game started almost immediately. Six moves were made by each side before the game was adjourned at 4:30 p.m. yesterday. Although it will decide no championship, being a match, it has become one of the features of the Hobby Show at the Coliseum.

University Student Calls Every Move International Chess

History is being made today in the field of international chess and it is being made by a Toronto University student. Frank Anderson, IUC, has been very calmly matching chess skill with Chess Grand Master, Igor Bondarexski by cable between Toronto and Moscow since yesterday.

In a surpise cablegram yesterday morning, Bondarevski accepted Anderson's terms of one game to be played under international rules, allowing forty moves in two and a half playing hours. This does not include transmission time between the two players.

"A single game of this sort, being sent by cable, is without precedent" said Anderson at the close of yesterday's match. Described as one of the most imaginative players in the world, he added, "I'm very happy for chess, it will do a lot to show people the fascination of chess."

He was informed of the answer from Russia while in a geometry class yesterday morning. When the professor handed him the message, someone yelled, "Direct from Moscow", throwing the whole class in an uproar.

He began the game at about 12:30, answering their first move which was sent with the reply. Today, the game started at 9:00 a.m. and will continue to 5:00 p.m. with Anderson conducting his end of the game from the second floor on the west side of the Coliseum.

The match is being featured as part of the Canadian International Hobby and Homecraft Show, who were partly instrumental in organizing it in co-operation with the Toronto Chess League.

The cables being sent back and forth sometimes contained more than the moves, which came back every twenty minutes. The alst one from Bondarevsky said, "In Moscow midnight. Adjourn until tomorrow. In connection with termination of first day of match, I ask to convey greetings of Soviet chess players to Canadian chess players".

In his second message, previous to the above one, Anderson said, "May this mark the beginning of closer chess relations between our two countries. On behalf of the mass of Canadian chess players, my thanks for your sporting acceptance of my challenge."

Interested observers believe that the match is being watched with a great deal of interest in Moscow, wheer they believe that Bondarevsky is on the stage of an auditorium. Spectators are informed on the progress of the game by large chess boards on which the moves are being plotted.

Anderson, who is in MP and C, has been a chess devotee since childhood. "Each year I've become more and more interested in the game of chess", he said. In reference to evidence that Bondarevsky had studied his method of play he said, "I've studied the games of the Soviet masters as well".

Spectators have been amazed to see Anderson call every move of his opponent after he made his. Up to adjournment yesterday, six moves have been made by each player.

Both Anderson and his official seconds, George Berner of the Dept. of Slavic Studies, a Yugoslav Chess Master and Keith Kerns were unaware, until Saturday, that their opponent was to be Igor Bondarevsky. The challenge was a general one.

An onlooker, obviously a chess fan himself, described him as "having a very good chance of winning". Anderson, plotting his next move, remained calm and collected.

University Fees Tax Exemption Proposed By Engineering Exec

Should student fees be deductible on income tax returns? The Engineering Society Executive yesterday passed a motion that they are in favor of the Canadian government granting an income tax exemption to university students in the amount of paid tuition fees, in addition to all present exemptions.

They recommended that this motion be brought to the attention of NFCUS, so that the matter may be supported on a national scale.

They also passed unanimously the SAC resolution about the scholarship recommendations in the Massey report, and reprimanded The Varsity for "headlining sneering criticisms, and incomplete plaudits in a manner which has no place on the front page of any newspaper."

The discussion on income tax was short because everyone approved of the motion. The executive felt that in furthering this idea NFCUS would be doing something of value to university students, and thereby fulfilling its purpose as a national union.

In criticising The Varsity, Fred Bolling, IV SPS, called the daily sneering and applauding cheap journalism. The society instructed the SAC representatives to bring the matter up at the SAC meeting today.

The Engineers also disapproved of the repeated references in the paper to the way the SAC cut its budget. The SAC representatives pointed out that last year's SAC are responsible for the original budget, which did not allow for additional expenses on the new SAC building, and for other activities. They said the money could not come from any place but The Varsity.

Doug Christie, IV SPS, suggested that the space taken up by these criticisms should be charged to the editors' salaries. However, this suggestion was not taken seriously by the rest of the members.

Bill Deeks, III SPS, commenting on The Varsity's claim to be the only student daily in Canada said, "if no other university can afford to put out a daily, why should we."

Deeks later reported that he had spoken to members of the University Athletic Directorate, for several hours, and he had been fully convinced that the move ousting McMaster from the senior intercollegiate football league was fully justified. He said he could give plenty of reasons, and plug up any holes that the executive found in them, but was not required to do so, as the discussion was curtailed.

Deputy Returning Officer, Tom McCann, IV SPS, announced the date of the annual Engineering Society elections, Friday, Feb. 19. He said nominations will be received for all positions in the Engineering Society Stores on Feb. 12th, 13th, and 15th. Campaigning will be from Tuesday, Feb. 16th, to Thursday Feb. 18th.

The positions open in this election include the President, two Vice-presidents two SAC representtaives, an EAC representative, and various Club Chairmen. Polling stations are planned for the Mechanical, Mining, Wallberg and Engineering buildings.

The Varsity Applauds . . .

FRANK ANDERSON

. . . for showing that the cold war hasn't frozen the common friendship of chess players. Anderson, I UC, has over-stepped the National Federation of Canadian University Students and has made a real contact with the Russians. After plugging for a Russian student exchange for the last two years, the majority of Canadian students wrapped it up for a lost cause. But not this Toronto student. He is currently playing an international chess game with — of all things — a Russian.

Sneers Sneered by Sneerees Engineer Suggests "Girlie" Pics

Varsity policy has been condemned by Victoria College. At a meeting last Monday of the Victoria College Union Assembly, a resolution was passed disapproving the Varsity Sneer.

The resolution recommended that the Students' Administration Council representatives convey to the Publications Commissioner, Victoria's disapproval of the feature "The Varsity Sneers at—". It was felt such a feature was in exceedingly bad taste, being embarrassing to the individuals concerned, and the Assembly expressed its hope that pressure from the Publications Commission of SAC might induce The Varsity to change its policy in this respect.

"My fraternity brother, Don Lowe, and I were not particularly concerned by the sneer," said Alex Langford, IV Vic. "In fact we rather enjoyed it," Langford and Lowe were the only two people on campus sneered at.

Ken Cork, president of the VCU, said he personally concurred in the Assembly resolution. The feeling at the Assembly was that the Sneer represented very bad taste, he said. He suggested that it was carrying editorials on the front page.

"We think we are being perfectly fair in criticizing doubtful actions on the part of students or people concerned with universities," said Orie Loucks, Associate Editor of The Varsity, when he was informed of Vic's action.

Rich Anco, co-editor, said with a sneer, "The Sneers are just light comments on events and personalities in the outside world and on the campus."

The next move will be for the SAC reps of Vic to present the motion to SAC. The next meeting will be tonight.

In a letter to The Editor today, Leo Gray, II SPS said, "This business of 'sneering' reminds me of certain spectacular magazines and papers such as 'Flash' and 'Focus'. If this is to be the new editorial policy of The Varsity, then why not put in a few 'Girlie Pictures' as well?"

Hart House Positions Need Energetic Men Nominations Monday

With over 6,000 undergraduate members of Hart House, the importance of securing responsible, imaginative and energetic men to help mould the affairs and functions of the House was emphasized last night by Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden.

Nominations for House, Library, Music, Art and Debates committees take place from Monday, Feb. 15, to Friday, Feb. 19, in the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor.

As an example of how committee's function for the benefit of House members, the decision by the Board of Stewards, predominately composed of undergrads (all committee secretaries) opened the Debates Room for lunch beginning this week.

McDowell pointed out that undergrad members on House committees outnumber faculty, graduate and staff members by approximately two-to-one.

"I can not emphasize too strongly the importance of keen and competent leadership being given by interested and enthusiastic undergraduates on these committees," Warden Joseph McCulley reminded House members last night.

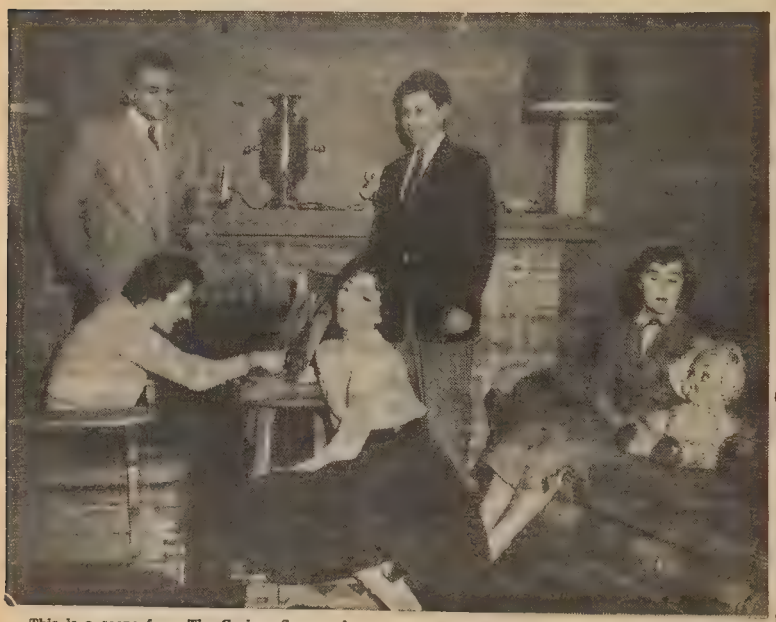
Detailed rules and regulations concerning nominations and the election are available in the Undergraduate Activities Office this week. The election is scheduled for Wednesday, March 3, with advance polls being held on March 1 and 2.

Women

A Tangled Up Problem

By ALEC VIRANY

"Hold your arms up!" my girlfriend shouted at me in a shrill voice. I jerked my head up, scared. She had already shouted five times and was getting mad, because I obviously paid more attention to my Calculus problems than to the very important task in which I was assisting her.



For three hours that Saturday night we had been sitting in front of the TV set while she unwound wool, in a bored and perfunctory way, constantly tearing the thread getting the whole bundle messed up and shouting at me. She kept getting more and more irritated, so I judged it wise to give up my Calculus problem. I tried to converse with her, but this was hopeless — she wouldn't listen or answer. So I gave up and just stated, first at her, then, afraid of giving her some big ideas, at the wool which kept coming off my arms.

As I stared I had another try at figuring the calculus problem I was stuck on, but couldn't. Then I tried to figure out why women insist on doing all the knitting themselves. The only reason I could think of was self-assertiveness: to be able to say "You see, women are as good as men, you can't knit". I also tried to figure out why women get so excited about a broken thread, but couldn't.

All this happened a few weeks ago. Last Saturday, when we were again sitting in front of the TV set, I found the reason for my night's suffering. The wool reappeared in the form of socks, a belated Christmas present.

I did not follow the plot of that TV show after I tried them on.

The Curious Savage

This is a scene from The Curious Savage, by John Patrick, which is being presented by Hillel Foundation. Patrick was also the author of the very successful movie, The Hasty Heart. The Curious Savage is a story woven around the inmates of a mental home. It is a comedy which ends by showing a tableau with the dreams of all the characters come true. The play takes its title from Mrs. Savage, the main character, who has been put in the expensive mental home by her family because of the odd ways in which she disposed of her money. She finally has a choice of whether to stay or to go, and she makes the right decision. The play takes place tonight in Hart House Theatre.

Trinity Freshmen Rise, Overcome Sophomores In Strachan Hall Battle

Tradition was shattered at the evening meal in staid old Trinity College last night, as the men of First Year started and finished a pitched battle with the Sophomores.

Incensed by a rearrangement of the tables in Strachan Hall at breakfast yesterday morning, which they attributed to Second Year, and which they were obliged to repair, the Freshmen gathered some thirty strong at dinner, greatly outnumbering the resident Sophs.

By spinning their plates, that is, turning them on edge and letting them fall; a custom not endorsed by the College, the Freshmen attracted the attention of the Men of Second Year, whose duty it is to remove all those who misbehave in the dining hall.

The Sophs descended upon the insurgents, who had swelled their ranks with non-resident support and attempted to throw them out of Strachan Hall. Instead they were met with an organized revolt and were on the verge of being thrown out themselves when the battle subsided.

Peter Butler, the Head of Second Year, was removed from the dining hall, ample reward for the spirited Frosh. Butler seized freshman Chris Grotrien in a headlock, and suggested he leave, but Grotrien calmy doused the Soph with the contents of his glass, whereupon Butler was ejected.

The insurrection was witnessed by several members of Trinity's Convocation who were slated to meet after dinner, as well as Professor V. W. Bladen of the Political Economy Department.

The Sophomores succeeded only in removing two or three of the rebellious Freshmen, and First Year seems to consider the skirmish a well-won victory.

However the powers that be are thinking that the whole affair was quite childish, although T. H. B. Symons, the Acting Dean of Residence at Trinity, said, with a twinkle in his eye, "We certainly have a spirited First Year".

Clothing Drive Over Response Said Good

Everything from Bikinis to bathrobes were collected in the clothing drive for the needy people in the area of the University Settlement. The drive was conducted by the SAC's Service Commission. Bill Baldwin Student Service Commissioner, reports that the response was much better than expected.

The drive is now over. However, as the clothes are not to be auctioned off until next week, there is still plenty of time for those with clothes to get them down to the University Settlement.

The clothes collected are to be sold by auction to needy people who live in the vicinity of the Settlement.

Baldwin reported that St. Mike's Wycliffe, Victoria, and Law did very well. University College was especially commended by Baldwin, for although the response was not as good as the response of the other colleges mentioned, considering UC's size, it is often very difficult to get any response from UC at all, said Baldwin.

"In a number of colleges," said Baldwin, "we received very enthusiastic support although most of the contributors were in residence and not living permanently in the city".

The University Settlement attempts to provide the people in its neighbourhood with opportunities for recreation, enjoyment, and education. The Settlement operates a Credit Union, a mothers club, and International club, classes for New Canadians, and many other services for the adults of the area.

The children get special attention. There is a children's library, and a nursery school. There is a swimming and gym program for the children. A host of recreational clubs operate within the settlement, giving children of all ages an opportunity to enjoy themselves doing everything from woodworking to cooking. The settlement also operates a summer camp in Muskoka.

The Hart House Debates Room is being used as a lunch room during peak hours. The purpose is to alleviate crowded conditions downstairs, where students were being forced to eat in the halls owing to inadequate facilities. Milk only is being sold and sandwiches must still be obtained in the Tuck Shop or Lunchroom. The decision was made last week by the Board of Stewards. Tables and chairs have been set up to be used by students eating there. No speaker is being provided.

Doctor Panel Will Explain Poliomyelitis

A panel of five doctors will answer medical questions submitted by one of Toronto's large newspapers in Convocation Hall, Feb. 17. at 8:15 p.m., in the first of a series of medical forums sponsored by this paper in conjunction with the Ontario Medical Association.

The topic for the first evening will be poliomyelitis. Dr. S. P. Dewar will be the chairman, and Dr. Leslie Silverthorne will be the speaker. Other members of the panel will be Drs. Braiden, Jacues and Jousse.

No personal questions will be answered, and none will be accepted from the floor. Readers will be asked to write in, and the most frequent question which has the widest general interest will be answered.

Female Superiority

Male Only "Crippled Chromosome"

The belief that women are the "weaker sex" was cut down as "a myth" by Dr. Ashley Montagu, Monday evening as he addressed The Temple Forum on the subject, "The Natural Superiority of Women." He described the male as a "crippled chromosome".

The natural superiority of women was upheld as being universal, without regard to culture. His theory is based on the genetic evidence of female superiority.

The Y, or male chromosome, is "inferior in composition", he said. "This is what makes for the weakness in males, giving them a weaker constitution."

The only way that the male is superior is in muscular strength, but this is really a disadvantage, claims Dr. Montagu, in that his metabolic rate is increased and therefore he "burns himself out".

He exploded the "myth" that women are weaker because they are more emotional than men. "She obtains a state of equilibrium", because she releases her emotions, he said.

Ulcers and boils, both psychosomatic weaknesses, are caused because men "weep inwardly". They don't release their inner tensions as much as women.

Women are "two years chronologically ahead of men", he said. He cited them as being better students than men. In college the girls stray from their academic goals and try to get married, and the males don't.

Dr. Montagu said that a woman's desires aren't pointed in the same direction as those of the opposite sex.

He said men compensate for their lack of essential creativeness of reproduction by building things in a big scale, such as bridges and skyscrapers. What the world needs, said Dr. Montagu, is a more sensitive and poetic male.

"The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world", said Dr. Montagu as he concluded. The fate of the world will be decided by the way in which they do this.

Victoria Sends Ottawa Own Massey Decision

Victoria College will send its own recommendation to the federal government concerning the implementation of the Massey Report. The resolution of the Students' Administrative Council concerning the Massey Report was passed unanimously at the VCU Assembly meeting last Monday. As well, Vic decided to take its own action.

"In order to increase the pressure on the government to implement this report, a subsidiary motion was passed", said Basil Moore, III Vic, Publicity Director "The secretary was directed to communicate directly to the government the desire of Victoria College that the report be implemented immediately".

The president of VCU, Ken Cork, IV Vic, said that the SAC resolution was passed without much controversy. He said that in addition the subsidiary motion was passed "on the basis that the Assembly felt it would add more strength to the recommendation".

"I object strenuously to the VCU in its omniscience making representation to the government on behalf of all the students in Victoria. How do they know that all the students in Vic agree or all want this?" said Alex Langford, IV Vic.

The Engineering Society passed the SAC resolution unanimously last night. The resolution asked all colleges and faculties to place themselves publicly on record in support of the scholarship recommendations in the Massey Report. Two weeks ago the Engineers temporarily turned down the resolution because of lack of information.

"National scholarship schemes aregenerally accepted as necessary and desirable in the rest of the world", said Dick Walker, IV SPS, to the Society last night. "Great Britain has three such schemes".

Walker read parts of the report concerning the scholarships to the Society. He stated there world be scholarships for undergrads in all professional and art faculties.

Last Monday, the Law Club passed a resolution also approving the of SAC for immediate implementation of the recommendations of SAC for immediate implementation of the recommendations of the Massey Commission for the establishment of a national system of scholarships and bursaries", the resolution read. The Foresters' Club and the Faculty of Music likewise passed the recommendation.

Lecturer At St. Mike's Stresses Joy In Work, Need For Cooperation

The fact that most people have no conception of working together for a common good was described as one of the great evils of modern society by Rev. R. MacDonald of St. Michael's College, who opened the series, "Lectures on Labor" at Brennan Hall Tuesday afternoon.

Speaking on "Philosophy of Work", Father MacDonald suggested the aim of all work should be striving for the perfection of the material world through co-operation with God and helping our fellow man.

The popular conception of work as a punishment or simply a means towards a commercial gain was deplored by the speaker, who said: "We should find joy in our work, not in escapism or dissipation."

Father MacDonald, in discussing different conceptions of work throughout history, noted that Aristotle considered physical labor below the level of human beings: a duty to be performed only by slaves or sub-human beings.

"Some metaphysicians, too, have a contempt for work", he said. "However, work is a human action and thus a moral action, and should have the intention of producing something useful. Humans insert themselves into society by work—serving their fellow man."

"The endless conflict between the men of brain and the men of brawn can only be solved through a mutual co-operation in Christian Love and charity", he concluded.

St. Mike's SAC President, Paul Lorch, thanked Father MacDonald for an interesting and provocative speech.

An audience of over 150 Varsity students heard the lecture which was the first of a series of six lectures to be held this year under the sanction of the St. Mike's SAC.

THE ISTANBUL CONFERENCE

West Union More Political Side-Steps IUS Overtures

(This is the seventh in a series of articles designed to acquaint Canadian students with the history and organization of the Co-ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students—CoSec.)

By RICH ANCO

The fourth International Student Conference met in Istanbul, Turkey last month, and ended with the National Federation of Canadian University Students being elected to the five-nation Supervision Committee. A singular honor fo NFCUS, it did not, opments and trends which were becoming however, overshadow the important devel evident in CoSec.

The big international issue which faced the Istanbul delegates was the "new look" attitude of the Communist-dominated International Union of Students (IUS). Reports from the Conference showed that CoSec was going to continue its policy of aloofness from IUS and to side-step any direct action toward challenging IUS's new idea of associate membership.

Not only was CoSec to remain a non-IUS co-ordinating office for western unions, but it was slowly developing into an anti-IUS international union. It was becoming an international political body opposed to the political line of IUS.

In a report of the meeting by NFCUS International Affairs Chairman, Marcel Leblanc, it was pointed out that the original position of practical co-operation on a non-political and non-sectarian basis was being submerged. "With the influx of intensely politically-conscious delegations this (non-political) position or ideal was slowly undermined. At least the interpretation of non-political activities has inexorably been enlarged."

The report further states: "Attempts were made to compromise by allowing the Conference to act upon political problems in a non-partisan manner (?) when these problems affect students as students. But here again it is quite complex to determine in practice what concerns students as students and what concerns them as members of a society."

"Thus the International Conferences (of CoSec) are gradually but perceptibly acquiring a political color, in spite of the regrets, resistance and warnings of non-political unions, and with the enthusiastic support of politically-minded delegations."

Leblanc then suggests that the outcome of the two divergent viewpoints in CoSec should prove interesting even if deplorable. "Deplorable," he says, "because some member unions are becoming annoyed with these compromises and feel that the original ideals of the Conference are being violated."

This is what emerged from the CoSec meet after the IUS Congress meeting in the summer of 1953. CoSec virtually refused to recognize what has been called the "new IUS position". The ideals of world student unity were losing out.

Leblanc, in his report, comments that the presence of an IUS observer at Istanbul "is perhaps another symptom of the present IUS approach of mitigation and friendship." Realizing this, CoSec did not conscientiously consider it directly. While IUS had apparently offered to come half way—and it was only half-way — CoSec planned only to move farther away from any conciliation.

CoSec was becoming an international political union of students; it was definitely anti IUS now; the idea of unity was but a whisper; and Canada, iwth her eyes open to this, took on a responsible position on the Executive body.

Coney Island Wins Contest For Barbers

Topped by the best rendition of Coney Island Baby heard in many a moon, four denim-attired Engineers who got their tuning with the aid of clanking beer bottles won the second Hart House Quartet preliminary yesterday hands down.

Judged by Chappy Chapman, 73, known in musical circles as Mr. Barbershop and Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden of Hart House, Don Elliot, I, John Rumble, I, Bob Hill, II and Neal Irwin, III Eng. took the top honors.

Mr. Chapman is a member of the International Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, Inc., and a past president of the Toronto Chapter.

Tabbed the Skulehouse Four, the four singing engineers tuned with the aid of beer bottles, void of fluid, knocked together to get their first note. Coney Island Baby, an encore, was absolutely tops. Beginning with straight monotone, they broke into the melody only half way through.

The second of three preliminaries for the fifth annual Quartet Contest. The last Quartet Contest will be held in the East Common Room, Hart House, next Tuesday at 1:30 p.m. with finals on Feb. 22.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Man Between

The Man Between, which is on the verge of closing its run at the University and Eglinton theatres, is—one of those products in which, no matter what your opinion of the end result may be, you're forced to admire the craftsmanship that went into its making. Such will probably always be the case with motion pictures directed by Carol Reed, who has very few peers as a master of the cinematic process.

Reed had the misfortune, however, to turn out a picture called The Third Man back in 1949. This was about as close to flawless movie-making as has ever been achieved, and the sad part of it all is that the viewer can't help recalling The Third Man when seeing a subsequent Reed effort. Actually, I suppose, it is ridiculous to criticize The Man Between for not being as good as The Third Man—very few pictures have been.

Reed doesn't miss a chance to use tiny detail to build overall effect. In The Man Between small touches here and there construct an air of mystery, intrigue and suspense, much as in The Third Man. Reed's imaginative use of the camera in focussing on the unusual—but the relevant—while constantly contributing to the desired atmosphere gives you an idea of the real possibilities of the medium.

Reed is just as unconventional and interesting as ever. The audience is perplexed, uneasy but fascinated throughout the picture. A quiet and demure English girl arrives in Berlin to visit her brother and his wife. Enter the villain, a sinister chap from the Russian zone, who smuggles people from the western sector. The sister-in-law is a former wife of his (complicated, don't you think?), and he attempts to use her in his work. Attempting to kidnap her, as hostage, his hoods pick off the English girl by mistake and the rest of the picture deals with the spark of conscience discovered by the erstwhile villain, who helps the girl escape and gives his life to do it.

No effort is spared to establish the mood. A saxophone plays a jazzy theme, almost as hauntingly as a zither can. A small boy spies on the principal characters while riding a bicycle in large, sweeping circles, the sister-in-law acts inexplicably, everything goes to maintain a persistent feeling of uneasiness.

James Mason has probably the most difficult task as the man from the eastern zone, who has a change of heart. He camouflages his conscience with a pretence of callousness and selfishness. Mason plays the part with his suave charm and George Sander-like superciliousness but it doesn't seem at all out of place. However, I'm not so sure I believed in his about-face, since he was so thoroughly unscrupulous before.

Claire Bloom employs the same demure naivete which she used to advantage in Limelight and Innocents in Paris. An unusual and compelling beauty, not only of appearance but of voice and expression, give her a great advantage but she assumes a somewhat detached attitude, instead of being frightened and puzzled as a girl would surely have been under such circumstances. Hildegarde Neff adds considerably to the sinister effect in her brief role as the sister-in-law.

As a vehicle for Reed's own artistry and a mood-creator, this is undoubtedly a fine effort and of more than passing interest. A little more strength from the principal characters would have been in order.

What can certainly be applauded is the picture's refusal to comment upon the moral and political aspects of the divided city, in favor of concentration on its own story.

WEEKEND BOXING TOURNEY

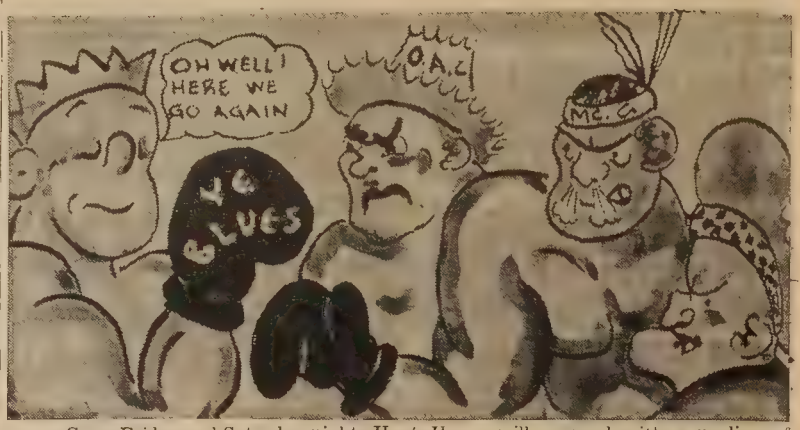
Women's B-Ball

The Varsity women's intercollegiate basketball team played its first home exhibition game of the season last night at the OCE gym. The season opener which was played against McMaster saw the intermediates lose by a slim 29-30 tally while the seniors cleaned up 45-17.

The calibre of intermediate ball was quite a bit lower than any previous years—that included both teams. Both squads were noticeably shorter than usual and appeared much greener than any such usual rank. Nevertheless the intermediate game was, to say the least, well matched. Toronto's Donna Parr led the scoring but Mac retaliated quickly to gain the elad 9-4 at the end of the opening quarter.

Mary Foster played her usual back to tally three in the second steady game for Toronto and came quarter. Joan McIlroy, who really showed herself to be senior ranking, netted a couple for Mac and at the end of the first half, her squad was leading 15-12.

Parr took care of the Toronto tallying for the third segment which ended 22-21 for T.O. It was nip and tuck for the remainder of the meet. Toronto tied it up twice but Mac's Sally Jarrat broke the final tie to end the match 29-30.



The final score in the senior game was some indication of the game it was. Toronto took the lead from the start and at the end of the first half was leading 24-11. Jane Duff was Toronto's top scorer with 16, followed by Sally Wallace with 13. Jane McGuire tallied 7 of Mac's total.

BLUES DEFEND POLO CROWN

It's water Polo Championship Night in the Hart House Pool tonight as the Hamilton Aquatic Club sends a double delegation to Varsity with intention of fighting to the last ripple for the Ontario Water Polo Championship in both Senior and Junior Divisions.

Varsity Blues, holders of the Intercollegiate Championship for the past umpteen years are a strong bet for the title, though the Hamilton club have shown strength in the past and will be conceding nothing tonight.

Only Two Back From '53 Blues Depend On Rookies

Come Friday and Saturday nights Hart House will resound with a pealing of bells and shouts of men. Most of the bells will be inside the heads of the Intercollegiate boxers swining leather for the College Championship which is presently tight in the grasp of Varsity. The shouts will be those of the huge crowd expected to watch the boxers fight it out as gentlemen.

Varsity's Boxing Blues brought home a succulent little dish last winter when they, quite unexpectedly, carried home top honors in the Intercollegiate Pugilistic Matches. This year, however, they will have to really produce if they want to keep the title at home. All but two of last year's champions have left the squad and the team, this year, is built up entirely of rookies.

Larry Corcoran, Intercollegiate champion weighing in at 155 pounds, is favored to repeat his triumph in that class but other Blue boxers will have to hustle against tough competition John Iglar will have to deal with a certain M. Puhlvel of McGill who missed out on the 175-pound title last year when he dropped his match to Varsity's Howard Greenly. Competing in the heavy division this time out M. Puhlvel will be a tough and experienced opponent for our Mr. Iglar.

OAC sends a good bunch down our way. Leading their team is Mike Herlihey who holds the Intercollegiate title at 175 pounds and will be the man to beat in that class again this year. Another farmer boy that may outslicker the big-city boys is Chuck Logan. Fighting at 140 pounds, Logan has already lost one fight to Varsity's Bill Clarke. They will settle matters if they both reach the finals Saturday night.

A star of a team two years ago, Russ Reilly will go with the Blues again this year wearing Blue colors in the 135-pound class. Reilly meets Stephens of the Aggie club in the preliminaries. Pete Young in the 130-lb division is the only Varsitype to gain a bye to the finals.

Queen's, runners-up in last year's tourney send their chief standard bearer in Sherm Hood, outstanding Gael footballer and heavy finalist last year. Hood will be the man to beat for both John Iglar and Pahlvel in the division for heavies.

Each bout will go only three rounds and there will be no draws awarded, so the punching laddies will certainly go all-out.

Puck Seconds Top Aggies 3 For Robillard, Fisher

Guelph, Feb. 8—The power line of Bob Primeau, Gene Robillard, and Clare Fisher once again sparked Varsity's Intermediate Hockey team to victory as the Baby Blues rolled to a 10-5 win over the OAC Aggies here tonight.

Robillard and Fisher each turned in a hat trick, while Primeau set up four of their goals. Ted Rogers struck for two and Freshman Don Wright one. Rearguard Barry Smith notched the other tally.

The Intermediates led the Aggies 5-1 at the end of the first period btu the Guelph team cut the lead in a close match while score read 7-5 at the end of the second.

The Baby Blues seem to have a talent for scoring when the opposition has the advantage in manpower. In their game against the Mustangs in London the Blues took the elad in a close match while playing with two men in the penalty box. The same thing happened in Guelph, although OAC never had the lead. They got as close as 6-5 at one time, but then the Blues walked away with a three-goal splurge in the third stanza to sew it up.

Unlike the London game, the Intermediates had little trouble getting used to the small ice surface in Guelph, as evidenced by the high first period score. Don Avery missed picking up his usual goal when his shot was nullified as a Varsity player was in the goal crease.

Penalties were not numerous, the Blues collecting five in all to OAC's three, but played a major part in the Aggies' second period comeback.

While grabbing his lone goal of the season, Barry Smith played a terrific game at the blueline for the Blues, as well as John Prendergast who gave him the tally with a long screened shot that went through a maze of players before glancing off Smith's stick into the net.

The big first line of Robillard, Primeau, and Fisher was by far the best for the Blues, in accounting for six goals and seven assists. They were ably supported by hard-working centre Ted Rogers and wingers Deacon Avery and Don Wright.

The biggest question is when is Hugh Currie going to have a bad day. He's been playing kitty-bar-the-door ever since the season started, to be a big factor in keeping the Baby Blues on top of the league.

June Collard

June Collard's the kind of girl you might meet at any Toronto tourney be it intercollegiate or otherwise. She's one of the group of University girls who partakes in all sports but is quiet enough to keep away from the women's headlines. When we chatted to June the other day, we were quite amazed at all the activities she's led or participated in. When June began her University career, her heart was set on PHE and all the sports she could do. Now in her last year in the Physed course, June has set an aim at grad work.

Ever since her first year at the school June has managed the intermediate intercollegiate basketball squad — this season being no exception. Besides this, she plays in all the leagues such as softball, basketball, archery and hockey. Last season June was elected head of women's archery on the campus and made up one quarter of the team that suffered defeat this year in the intercol shoot in the Fall. Besides all her sporting activities, June is head girl at Cody house and has had to arrange for all the freshie doos of the present season.

To look at June you might believe her to be the real sporting type but underneath it all, she is a true music lover and an excellent chesswoman. June was born in Victoria Square, Ontario, and attended Richmond Hill Collegiate where she was president of the Women's Athletic Association. Her chief interest is in health education and she spends her summers teaching swimming at the Thorn Hill Community swimming pool. She was on the winning PHE swim team that swept to victory last fall in the interfac meet.

Meds Leading In Reed Race

The Faculty of Medicine has made a great drive in winter sports to move into the lead in the race for the Division One half of the Reed Trophy race. Trailing considerably before christmas, the Medsmen have grabbed a 16-point lead over SPS. The school of Law continues to lead the Division Two derby.

In standings up to Feb. 8, Medicine has amassed 6,764 points to hold a slight lead over the Skulemen, who have 6,748. Still within easy reach of the leaders is St. Mike's with 6,142.5 points.

Docs Could Be Tough

Senior Meds have a talent for tying hockey games, or else the St. Mike's A's have a talent for coming from behind when they have to, and this could very well make them a threat in the Interfaculty playoffs.

The Medsmen blew a 3-1 lead in the last three minutes of the second period, as the Double Blue squad got hot to push two goals past bewildered Meds goalie Benny Walker and tie their Monday contest up at 3-3.

That was the Doctors' fourth draw of the season, which, along with four wins, gives them twelve points and a tie for first place in Group I. Skule Seniors share the top spot with Meds, but the Blue and Gold have one game left, against Senior UC, and may just grab off the honors in that group.

Meds coasted to a 2-1 first period lead, on goals by Freddy Walsh and George deVeber, and seemed to be having little trouble holding off the Mikemen.

Jerry Fiaschetti climaxed a nice performance with a beautiful goal at 13:20 of the first, sweeping in on Walker from the left wing. DeVeber's goal was his fifth of the season, leaving him top Meds scorer for this year.

St. Mike's weren't getting any better as the second stanza opened, and Charlie MacDougall made it 3-1 for the Doctors after deVeber had carried the puck all the way from his own blueline.

Play see-sawed back and forth until the seventeen-minute mark when Jerry Lawless put the Double Blue back in the game with a point-blank shot that slipped by Walker. The Mikemen now proceeded to tie the Doctors up in knots, and Mike O'Neill evened the score with less than a minute left from a goalmouth scramble.

Coupled with the seven goals he let in last week, Monday's three leaves St. Mike's goalie Gerry Young well out of the running in the goals against department in Group I, a position he was in good control of at the start of the season.

SKULE WINS

Junior SPS kept first and second place in doubt on Monday with a 7-2 win over Trinity, giving them ten points, one elss than the league-leading UC Juniors. The issue will be settled at 1:30 on Friday when UC and Skule meet in their finial league game.

Skule had the game well under control in the first period, slipping into a 3-1 lead on goals by Don Courtney, Bill Pollock, and Gary Hewson. Pete Russell, who scored both of the Red and Black's goals to run his season's total to eight, bounced a corner shot past Skule goalie, George German at 15:45 for the lone Trinity tally of the first frame.

Only one penalty was handed out during the game, that to Eric Jackman of Trinity for slashing. Relatively clean although not nearly so good hockey, was the feature as SPS racked up their fifth win of the year.

The Engineers added four more in the second stanza from Tom Thompson, Mart Gammock, Don Weir and Don Courtney again for his second of the afternoon. Russell's second goal was the cleanest of the game, as Bill Lovering passed to him standing just outside the crease.

George German, in the Skule net, had little work to do until well into the second period, when the Red and Black suddenly came to life. On the other hand, John Goodwin, who has played an excellent goal for Trinity throughout the season, found plenty of work as the Engineers continually punctured the defence for close-in shots.

Now that it's nearly all over, we venture to state that the hockey that has been played in Group II is probably just as good as any other group in the loop, including Group I. We're looking forward to the playoffs—and we wouldn't put a red cent on any one team to walk away with the Jennings Cup.

Toronto Students Pack: Heading Montreal Way For 2 Gala Weekends

Before the end of February, many Toronto students will twice pack enough for a week-end trip and head East. The Carabins will leave this week-end for the University of Montreal and a group of campus showmen and interested students will attend the McGill Winter Carnival the following week.

On Feb. 18, 19, 20 and 21 McGill University will be the scene of a round of ski meets, hockey games, parties "par" excellence, fun-making and more parties." Toronto students are more than welcome, as are representatives from other universities, as the Red and Whites make the gala affair an "open house". Last year, participants included Laval, Cornell, Syracuse and, of course, Toronto.

In all, it's not very expensive, being geared to students and student pocket books, but unlike other bargains this one is really worth it. The carnival spirit, the night-long partying and the comradeship, made more plausible by the carefree atmosphere, really shows itself on that magic week-end in February.

As well as the students who are just going for the fun of the trip, there are campus show groups who will participate in the Carnival Revue, two shows on the Saturday afternoon of the weekend.

Taking part with the other college revues will be the Vic Bob and UC's "Where on Earth". Last year, the Vic Bob was the only Toronto representative.

A group of Toronto students are planning to attend again this year. Planning to leave on Thursday, Feb. 18, the group is hoping for increased numbers in order to make the railway fare cheaper and perhaps the whole weekend a little more economical.

Those organizing the group are Pete Larmour, II UC, and Harry Malcolmson, I UC. They may be called at PR. 2385 for information.

LPP Talks In Marxism Start Today

Stanley B. Ryerson of the Labor-Progressive Party will speak on the topic: "Marxism, Americanism, and Canadian History" today, Wednesday, February 10, in Room 4 UC at 1:00 p.m. This is the first in a series of Marxist lectures sponsored by the University of Toronto LPP club and conducted by Mr. Ryerson.

Mr. Ryerson is a member of the national executive of the Labor-Progressive Party. He is at present working on a book, "A People's History of Canada", and his lecture series will centre around Canada and Canadian History.

At the end of each lecture, there will be a question period.

Big Protest At Manitoba Tim Buck

Winnipeg, Feb. 6 (Special)—Tim Buck was compared to Hitler, and a Russian flag was hoisted on top of the Arts Building at the University of Manitoba on aSturday.

The incident occurred during the question period after Tim Buck, the National Leader of the Labor-Progressive Party addressed a meeting of about a thousand students.

Tim Buck stressed his party's "Canada First Policy" and denounced the economic penetration of Canada by the United States. He charged that Canada's leaders are resigned to this.

He claimed that the future of Canadians is jeopardized by this policy and that Canada's future lies in the home development of resources and industry.

St. Michael's Holds Series On "Labour"

A new student tradition is being started at St. Michael's College. A lecture series held here last year was such a success that the Students' Administrative Council of St. Michael's has decided to make it an annual affair.

"Some subjects of contemporary and practical interest are not covered in the regular courses," said Paul Lorch, IV St. Mike's. "Through this technique of the lecture series these may be surveyed."

The lecture series held last year was concerned with "Student Life", its problems and goals. This year the topic of the series is Labour. The philosophy of labour, an historical analysis of labour (medieval labor problems), the rise of labour, and the church's attitude, will be some of the topics discussed.

"Most Worthwhile Play"; St. Mike's Entry — Davies

"The most worthwhile play" in the Inter-Varsity Drama Festival, according to Adjudicator, Robertson Davies, St. Mike's "Riders to the Sea" lost out to Carlton College for their presentation of "The Makersof Dreams". Carlton also won the best actor award. Western won with the best acresss in "The Strangest Kind of Romance". The festival was held Feb. 5-6 at Queen's with eleven colleges participating.

Adjudicator Robertson Davies said "Riders to the Sea" by Synge presented by St. Mike's was the most "worthwhile play in the festival and for their choice of play, received full marks." "However," claimed Davies, "this group had a lack of courage." Davies failed to explain this last point. The play, a tragedy of despair finding dramatic relief in a spiritual ideal, "failed as drama because it had no comic relief. It had a sense of doom throughout and was continually melancholy." He advocated the introduction of a light comic element into the half-hour presentation which might "relieve the play" of its tragedy and lift it to greater dramatic heights. "No great tragedy is possible without comedy," said Davies.

This is the first time the U of T has entered this festival. The St. Michael's group was the only college to accept the invitation. They not only solicited funds to finance the trip, but they also presented one of the most difficult plays in Literature.

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In reply to O. Pidhaini's dramatic and agitated letter in last Monday's Varsity, I would like to make a few observations. The well-meaning analogy between rape, prostitution, murder and the Soviet ideals is grossly emotional and thereby distorts the principles under discussion. You are correct in maintaining that an alienation of US friendship would be detrimental (to Canadian economy), but does that mean Canadians must close their eyes to irrationalisms in American policies?

By resisting Soviet imperialism, the US has itself wallowed in the most odious imperialistic tactics and is at present attempting to unite heterogenous interests and heritages into a Western European bloc against the USSR using the might of the Yankee dollar sign. You may ridicule the maudlin "Red" watch-words but you neglect to see the "I Like Ike" mob hero-worship that elected President Eisenhower. The 'liberty of speech' you so strongly support is slowly suffocating under the forces of a jazzed-up version of Fascism.

If you denounce Soviet culture as entirely perverted to promulgate their mode of life, do you deny that any art of entertainment form, even in Utopian America, is completely devoid of propaganda or social, economic and political pressures? To prepare for a cold, hot or luke-warm war which hardly anyone wants, is not the economy of the Western bloc geared to war dimensions with misinterpreted excuses of defense similar to those used by the Soviet half of the world? The tendeny for regimentation in the Soviet state finds its counterpart in the coagulated undifferentiated masses on both sidts of the 49th parallel who are simple prey of cheap demagogism and savagely-emotional prattlings (similar to those in your incoherent letter).

The liberals you ridicule are denouncing 'US dictatorship' merely as an expedient means of arousing, cool-headed interest in the dubious methods in American policy, which may snowball into a force destroying the very ideals intended to be defended. And remember, these same liberals are denouncing the Soviet dictatorships, in the realization that any system of society which is forcibly imposed on the majority is inacceptable. Those cynics you hate may be the ones who will prod the disinterested into taking off their rose-coloured glasses to see matters in perspective. Neither your nor my conceptions are absolute Truth with a capital "T". Therefore you have no basis for stigmatising the entire Soviet system, yet remaining blind to the imperfections of the American way of life which is growing into a more immediate threat in certain aspects.

Every person has the right to believe what he wants — at least in our cloistered sanctum of academic freedom at the U of T where nonconformist urchins like you and I may babble to our heart's content and be tolerated. Now, let's quit kidding ourselves! Life is wonderful here, but that does not mean that everything is perfect or beyond reproach or improvements.

Volleyball Gripes

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The recent article on volleyball is based on distorted and unfound-facts.

The main fault lies in a misinterpretation of the league system. The purpose of the club is to arrange the leagues with the purpose of giving good competition to each and every team. Good competition in volleyball, in many cases, means a decided improvement in the calibre of the teams. Beyond this overlooked factor it means that each league winner deserves to be so called.

Yet to examine the leagues more thoroughly, one would soon realize that the two top leagues are composed of generally interchangeable teams. In the semi-finals the first league winner is played against the third, the second against the fourth. It is therefore logical to assume that the two top teams will in the end compete against each other. It is the factor of encouragement to weaker teams that we feel is so important in the arrangement of the leagues.

In addition, if The Varsity reporter would examine more closely the scores, she has quoted, she would be greatly enlightened. It is true that one team, in particular, has been placed in the wrong league. However, the three scores which she has quoted are but three among twenty-four from which she could have quoted. In my judgment the knowledge of some twenty normal scores would somewhat disprove the remark that 75-16 is a typical tally. In conclusion it is wise in judging a volleyball score to remember that a defeat by some twenty points may be the result of a keen and enthusiastic game.

Judy Strickland,
Pres. of Volleyball Club.

Eggheads And Freedom

"Man's Right To Knowledge and the Free Use Thereof."

This was the theme of a recent special issue of the University of British Columbia's student newspaper, The Ubyssey. In many ways this proved to be a very topical theme — the mayor of the capital of that province recently spoke out in favor of book-burning, and Tim Buck, leader of the LPP, was last Tuesday pelted with rotten eggs when he addressed 400 students.

The editor could have chosen no more controversial issuse than freedom for his special edition. It comes at a time when serious thinking is needed — thinking about the ideals and principles which underlie our society.

A philosopher of Columbia University remarked in one of the panels being held at UBC: "Nothing is sacred above enquiry or above discussion." The philosopher, Dr. Irwin Edman, further stated that change was never egreeable, always upsetting. "To know is by nature subversive; in the search for knowledge the established conventions, superstitions and fanaticisms of society are brought to question."

This is the force pressing on the exercise of freedom today — the force of the status quo. But freedom is the instrument of liberation.

Man has a right to knowledge — as much knowledge as he can reach. Freedom is basic to this right.

With the present world tensions, there must be more free speech, not less, more free press, not less, more free assemblies, not less, and more pursuits into unkown paths to discover new truths. This was the advice passed on to the students of UBC.

But it had a lot of trouble sinking into the heads of some UBCers. A few of these "university students (?)" attended an LPP meeting to heckle and throw eggs at Tim Buck, the national leader of Canada's Communist Party. They took absolutely no cognizance of the theme: "Man's right to knowledge and the free use thereof."

The morons who made stupid spectacles of themselves at UBC have no place in a university. Fortunately they had the sense to leave the meeting when they were challenged by the audience, but it is sickening to think they would stoop to humiliate a man because they disagree with his opinions.

There is a proper way to disagree with people, and it isn't by throwing eggs.

Little (?) Women

Women were recently delighted by a lecturer at Holy Blossom Temple who expounded on the natural superiority of women. "While her strong, silent husband disdains weeping — and ends up with ulcers and other emotional disorders — the little woman gives vent to her emotions by crying and quickly restores her emotional balance with a minimum of wear and tear."

Yes, but what is the cause of the ulcer and emotional disorder if it isn't the little woman?

Conversation A Lost Art?

Mechanical Men

(This is the first in a series of three articles relating the discussions of the World University Service Seminar held at Caledon Farm, January 29-31. The first discussion topic was entitled, "Is Conversation a Lost Art?".

MARY ELLEN GIBSON

Communication is implicit in all human relations, whether these are on an individual, national, or international basis. In the group led by Rev. Ted Nichols, the discussion was concerned with the implications of communication on an individual level. If conversation is a lost art it could mean thta we are essentially losing our ability to function as parts of an organic whole.

CONVERSATION AS AN ART was defined a discussion in which the subject is dealt with in a sophisticated or polished manner. Information is conveyed but more important is the emotional stimulation derived from the contact between the two minds. If in Canada we use as our standard of conversation the art as developed in Europe it would seem true that we have lost the technique of conversing well. It is questionable, however, whether if is valid to use European standards since our country's culture is based on the mass media of communication.

IT SEEMED TO THE GROUP that putting the emphasis on the techniques of conversation was starting from a false premise. It is the quality of the inter-personal relationship which is important, not the actual means by which these are effected. Because human beings are basically selfish we are inclined to use people to treat them as things. Often we tend to use people as the means by which we can gain information or expound our own opinions. Since the essence of a conversation consists of a spiritual contact between people, no good conversation can develop when one is concerned only with oneself or with other people only in relation to onself. Therefore we should try to like people because they are people and not because they are useful to us. All the techniques in the world will not make conversation meaningful if we forget this basic fact.

BECAUSE THE ORAL tradition most clearly enables us to remember the importance of good interpersonal relations it is the highest form of communication. The encouragement of its use in our modern world should be of utmost concern. It is not possible nor even desirable that we do away with the mass media of communication. They are neutral and are therefore capable of being used for both good and bad purposes. It is more important that we learn to use the oral tradition in conjunction with these mass media. This has been done successfully in programs such as Farm Forum and Citizens' Forum.

Other suggestions for helping to maintain the oral tradition concern education It was felt that the Canadian family would have to instil in its children the importance of oral communication. Since effective conversation is dependent on the quality of the interpersonal relationship, the child would first have to be taught to regard others on an "I-Thou" instead of an "I-It" basis. The schools would also have to be concerned with encouraging an oral tradition and taking some of the emphasis away from the mechanical means of communication.

AS WELL AS INCULCATING these attitudes toward conversation in our children there were other suggestions as to practical steps to be taken. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the National Film Board were upheld as institutions which should be wholeheartedly sponsored, because they are one way in which we can counter the influence of the commercialized mass media.

The general conclusion was that the oral tradition was our most important means of combatting the debasing effects of the mass media. We cannot afford to become so engrossed in the techniques of conversing well that we forgot its essential character as a means of interaction between persons. To forget the personal element would mean that we would be powerless in our fight against becoming mechanical men.

Ignorant Of Hart House Conditions?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I wish to strongly protest the decision of the Hart House Board of Stewards to transform the Debates Room into a Lunch Room. The existing facilities proved sufficient in the late forties when enrollment was much larger. At present a seat can usually be discovered in either the Lunch Roor or Tuck Shop. In the Great Hall, moreover, vacancies invariably occur at most tables. Certainly it is ridiculous to disarrange the Debates Room for a situation which is rapidly improving with the passing years.

In view of the so-called lunch-time congestion Mr. McDowell's desire for a "co-educational Coffee Shop" is difficult to explain. Nevertheless, for Mr. McDowell's benefit, I venture to suggest that feminine companionship at meal-times can be obtained at a number of "co-educational restaurants" about Toronto.

In my opinion the above two matters are symptomatic of a state of afafirs that can be traced to (1) ignorance of Hart House conditions, and (2) a lack of requisite administrative ability. I trust that the Warden of Hart House will take steps to rectify the situation.

Woman, Analysed

In the past few months, much has been said against what my Latin teacher used to call "the more worthy gender". He was wrong, of course. But there really is a need to expose the woman for what she sometimes is. With apologies to all physicists and chemists, may I present the following "lab analysis" of "woman".

SYMBOL: Woo.
ATOMIC WEIGHT: One hundred and plenty, twenty-five pounds more after a free meal.
PHYSICAL PROPERTIES: Generally rounded in form. Boils at nothing, and may freeze at any moment. Melts when treated properly. Very bitter if not used well.
CHEMICAL PROPERTIES: Very active under proper conditions. Possesses a great affinity for gold, silver, platinum, and precious stones. Violent reactions when left alone for any length of time. Able to absorb great amounts of expensive food. Turns green when placed beside a better looking specimen. Ages rapidly.
USES: Highly ornamental. Useful as a tonic in cases of depression, and the like. Equalizes the distribution of wealth, being perhaps the most powerful income-reducing agent known to men. Will perform if properly trained or pampered.
CAUTION: Highly explosive when in unskilled hands.

'Varsity' Comment Riles Readers

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It has been with mingled amazement and amusement that I have read your comments concerning the Engineering-Vic debate on NFCUS.

When the Speaker of the house mentioned unfair and biased reports, he evidently knew whereof he spoke for the report on the debate was certainly one of the most unfair and biased ones which I have ever read. There was no mention made of anything directly to do with the debate until the second last paragraph, and the report was slanted so as to show both the debate and the motion in a bad light.

This rather unusual "report" was followed up by a personal calumny of the Speaker, Mr Alec Langford, to which, by nature of his position, he is unable to personally reply In this petty little diatribe it is stated that only fair and unbiased reports are given, and yet I have it from no less a person than a member of the Varsity editorial staff that where the Varsity is is directly concerned, fair reports cannot be expected

This business of "sneering" reminds me of certain spectacular magazines and papers such as "Flash" and "Focus". If this is to be the new editorial policy of the Varsity, then why not put in a few "Girlie Pictures" as well.

The whole thing smacks of the "Big Smear" such as used by certain persons south of the border and which the Varsity editors are violently against, only it would seem as long as they themselves don't use it. Let us hope that from now on greater "exerience" is present in the editorial policy, and that we shall see a stop put to these childish exhibitions of temper.

Yours for a better Varsity in the future.

SAC RAPS MANAGEMENT OF EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

Management of the National Employment Service Office on the campus came in for sharp criticism at last night's Students' Administrative Council meeting.

In a report handed down by the SAC Executive Committee, the Council heard the Committee's recommendations concerning charges laid by Daniel Hill, a graduate student against Mr. E. A. Halse of the campus Employment Service office.

The Committee concluded that there was no intentional discrimination against Hill. However, they felt that if the Employment Service office had been efficiently managed, they could only have concluded that Halse was discriminating against Hill, the report said. The Committee, therefore, recommended that an effort be made to improve the management of the National Employment Service on the campus, and that the National Employment Service be requested to provide for this office additional help in times of pressure.

The Committee report was based on a meeting held last month to investigate Hill's charges against Halse concerning a Christmas employment with the Canadian National Express. The evidence presented by Hill to the Committee said that although he had applied for a Christmas job with the CNX early in October, and although he took should be hired during the Christmas rush period, he was not notified a note from the CNX Terminal Agent, William Green, stating that he by Halse. He said he discovered that Green asked Halse for 20 students designating him as one of them.

Hill stated he had three talks with Green for the purpose of placing an early bid for holiday employment. Green assured him of a job and on the third visit gave him a note to Halse. Its contents instructed Halse to hire him for the Christmas rush.

He asked Halse's permission to sign the list for Express applicants and Halse told him that it would not be necessary as Green's note would be appended to the list. Halse assured him that note would insure his employment and that he would be notified when hiring started.

Hill saw Halse four times about the starting date of the job and was told each time he would be notified when the call came from the Express. He phoned the Express direct on Dec. 11 and learned the students had been hired. When he told Halse, he claimed the jobs were all taken and no more were available, but when Hill refreshed his memory, Halse told him to come and see him.

Halse made no explanation but reached into his desk and handed him the job application, Hill told the hearing. The report said Hill noted that the form required nationality, place of birth and complexion. These questions were made illegal by the Federal Fair Employment Practices Act effective July 1953.

Hill based his accusations on a second point which he had told the Committee was very grave. He said Halse had passed from his office, with full knowledge, numerous job application forms that are not only illegal, but which aid the discriminatory hiring policies of certain employers. In so doing he has failed to protect the job possibilities on this campus, Hill told the hearing.

On Dec. 14 he returned to Halse's Office and complained of his use of applications forms that were illegal. In front of witnesses Halse admitted handing out these forms and further admitted not telling any students which he had referred to the Express Company of their illegality.

Hill wrote a complaint to the Federal Department of Labor and received an answer acknowledging the illegality of the questions. He later received a letter stating that a directive had been sent following his complaint banning further use of these questions. Hill produced the letters for the Committee during the hearing last month.

When Hill asked Halse why he was not notified about his job, he could not answer and asid he probably called 50 on the list and insisted there was no discrimination intended.

SAC Decision

This is the report of the Executive Committee set up to investigate charges laid by Daniel G. Hill, a graduate student against Mr. E. A. Halse, Director of the Employment Service Office on the campus.

1. That if the National Employment Service Office on the campus were efficiently managed, we could only conclude that Mr. Halse was discriminating against Mr. Hill. However the Committee concludes that there was no intentional discrimination against Mr. Hill.

2. It is the opinion of the Committee that distribution of the Canadian National Express forms in question is contrary to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act of 1953.

While the Committee was not required by its terms of reference to put forth recommendations, after due consideration the Committee decided to submit the following recommendations:

1. That in any office on the Campus operated under the auspices of the Students' Administrative Council, distribution of any employment forms contrary to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act, of 1953 should be prohibited.

2. That the Students' Administrative Council communicate with the Head Office of the National Employment Service urging that distribution of employment forms which are contrary to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act of 1953 should be discontinued.

3. That an effort be made to improve the management of the National Employment Service on the campus and that the National Employment Service be requested to provide for this office additional help in times of pressure.

Council Slams Varsity Hits 'Sneer' Feature

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

A sneer was exchanged for a sneer last night at the SAC meeting. The SAC passed a motion, 10-5, that read: "That the SAC requests the editors of The Varsity to refrain from destructive criticism of campus and outside personalities in the pages of The Varsity."

This motion was a result of a similar motion that was passed at the Victoria College Union last Monday. The motion was brought to the attention of the SAC by Doug Hamlin, Vic representative, and he said the VCU wanted this motion brought to the attention of the SAC.

Hamlin referred to various extracts of the Constitution of the SAC which clearly define the duties of The Varsity towards the students. "Sneers" were not amongst the duties of the editors of The Varsity.

Bill Deeks, Engineering Representative to the SAC announced that a similar motion had been passed at the last Engineering Society meeting. It was Deeks who presented the motion to the SAC requesting that the "sneer" be discontinued. He said that "sneers were an example of cheap journalism and were not fit for the newspaper in the University of Toronto's class."

Orie Loucks, Associate Editor of The Varsity pointed out that the Sneers were only "constructive criticisms that would appear either on the front page or the back page no matter who the editors of The Varsity were."

Telegraphic Tournament Progresses

Today is the third day of the International Chess match between Russian Grand Master, Igor Bondarevsky and Toronto University student, Frank Anderson. As of yet, no decision has been reached in the match which is being played by cable between Moscow and here.

Late yesterday afternoon, at the close of the day's play, Anderson described the game as "at a critical stage". The progress, termed "mid-game", has seen each man lose three men. (see plays).

Bondarevsky completed 16 moves in fifty minutes playing time, while Anderson made the same number of plays in 37 minutes. An answering move is received approximately every 20 minutes, dependent on the time taken by the players.

"The positions can now be studied by both players", said Anderson, "In order to foresee a few moves ahead". He described the position "Where strategy is of paramount interest, rather than tactics".

When informed of the game, President Sidney Smith said, "I only hope that the interchange can be transferred to other fields". Diplomatic meetings have been described as chess playing, but this mutual communication should be an example in other areas".

The Canadian Hobby and Homecrafts Show in the Coliseum, where the match is being played, has had many phone calls to its office asking about the game. Chess enthusiasts are keeping visual track of the match on their own boards at home.

The game is being played from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. until a decision is reached. It is interesting to not that in Moscow, which has an eight hour time difference, the game begins at 5:00 p.m. and goes to 1:00 a.m.

They are communicating their moves by means of the Uedeman Code, an international system for indentifying positions in chess. Each square having two letters, the message is sent giving the letters of origination followed by the destination of the chessman.

Anderson's opponent, Bondarevsky, is 41 years old and became a Chess Master, the highest degree the game offers, in 1937. His games have been published widely as have been Anderson's.

Who Is George Drew? Gateway Asks Alta U

Edmonton, 4 Feb.—(CUP) — Is there any difference between George Drew, Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition, and George Drew, leader of the Progressive Conservatives?

The campus newspaper at the University of Alberta has conducted a poll of faculty opinion concerning the recent cancellation of classes at the unversity for a speech by Mr. Drew.

G. Samuel, assistant to the president stated that lectures were cancelled because the speech was non-political and that Drew spoke in the capacity of Leader of the Opposition. Samuel also said that if Drew had intended to give a political speech the lectures would not have been cancelled.

G. R. Davy, Professor of Political Science, expressed the opinion that the distinction made by the president's office "between Mr. Drew as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and Mr. Drew as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party is so subtle that it evades me."

A. J. Cook, Director of Student Advisory Services said that he "does not consider political speakers to be of sufficient importance to warrant lecture cancellation."

Many members of other departments refused to contribute to the survey.

Plan Weekly Record Hour

Beginning this Thursday the United Nations Club will be presenting a weekly record hour from one to two o'clock in the Victoria College Union.

Anthony Frisch will introduce a new series of records entitled "People and Communism." These records have been put out by the American Council for Adult Education.

The record which will be presented on Thursday is entitled "Pattern of World Conflict".

St. Michael's Will Receive USA Actors

St. Michael's College will the host to a literary and dramatic group from Assumption University over the week-end of February 19-22. The visit has been arranged by the joint action of the St. Mike's Writers' Group and the Music and Drama Society, and it will include a tour of Toronto's campus and a hockey game, as well as the more serious business of discussions. A forum on the topic of "The Student Writer and His Audience" will tentatively be led by Dr. H. M. McLuhan, Professor of English and author of "The Mechanical Bride". Saturday evening will be devoted to a sociable reading of creative works by both colleges, and Sunday evening to the presentation of two one-act plays. The arrangements are not yet completed.

What's news at Inco*?

This mine is air-conditioned

To provide fresh, clean air and good working conditions for the miners, Inco engineers devised an unusual air conditioning system for the "Caving" project of the Creighton mine. They drove a special ventilating shaft from down in the mine up to the surface. At the top of this shaft is a 20-ton fan standing 42 feet high.

This fan sucks out the stale dust-laden air and causes clean, fresh air to flow down into the mine at the rate of 300,000 cubic feet per minute.

The fan's twelve nickel bearing stainless steel blades can be adjusted in pitch to increase the flow of air as the mining operation is expanded in the future.

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

No Solution To Racial Crisis Seen By S. African Prof

"Once open violence has broken out in South Africa there will never be a chance of bridging the gap between the natives of South Africa and the White population there," said Professor Arthur Keppel-Jones yesterday.

He was speaking before an audience of about 80 students at an International Relations Club meeting in one of the smaller rooms of Falconer Hall.

Professor Keppel-Jones had very little encouraging to say about the possibilities of a peaceful settlement of the problem in South Africa, as he outlined the recent constitutional changes being attempted by the Malan Government, and the way these have affected the extremely tense situation in South Africa.

He is now a visiting professor at Queen's University and next native country of South Africa and year he plans to return to his back to teach at the University of Witwaterand in Johannesburg.

One of the most serious difficulties facing the liberal element of South Africa is the great power that the government has according to the constitution. It is not a federal system of government as in Canada, but a Union government with almost complete control over the four states that are a part of it. This has gradually caused a breakdown of the independence of each of the states, so that now the central government has complete control, he said.

The franchise has always been a bone of contention in South Africa, he said. The province of Capetown has always been more lenient towards the coloured element of the population, but by gradual infiltration this province has been forced to "toe the line" so that now only whites have the vote all over South Africa.

Attempts to remove the coloured population from the franchise have met with considerable opposition from the liberal elements of the population, these being mostly the oloured peoples and the English. But serious opposition from these elements and also the opposition offered by the Supreme Court of South Africa have failed to prevent the Malan Government from making further attempts at dividing the White from the Negro.

Professor Keppel-Jones said that the ultimate aim of the Afrikaners is to divide South Africa into two separate nations, one white and one black. "But they are not taking any steps to bring this about, and never will. Apartheid is simply a ruse for covering up for their unpopular Jim Crow proposals."

In the event of any popular uprising, he said the government could very easily suppress the blacks due to their superior military power and the complete lack of military power of the poor blacks. He said that the present government would probably welcome such a revolt as it would give them an opportunity of exterminating many of their coloured enemies.

The only possible solution for the problem seems to be to wait until the Afrikaners become involved with one of their independent neighbours which is very possible, and then step in under the United Nations and depose the present government.

The situation has become so bad, he said, that even the most liberal whites are mistrusted by the coloured elements. "There seems to be no compromise possible, there is no mutual faith between black and white, a possible solution no longer exists."

Youth Hostels

Wanderlust — Or Wallet Bust?

By MARY ALICE HUNT R

Did your rich old uncle die, and leave all his money to his pet turtle, so you can't go to Europe this summer? Don't give up the ship yet. The Canadian Youth Hostels Association has sponsored group trips to Europe this summer for as little as $595 (all expenses paid).

Hostellers may spend one night in Loch Lomond castle, which has four hundred bedrooms, and at one time belonged to a beer-baron; and the next a hostel built by the hostellers themselves. The average cost for one night is about thirty cents. A man and his wife, often the owners, act as house-parents, and chaperones. The hostellers help to pay for their lodging by doing some work around the house. Think how romantic it would be to dust the wood-panelled libraries in the Duchess of Sutherland's castle Roawardennan, where the king of Norway lived during the war, and which was given to the Association afterwards.

There is a kitchen, where cyclists can cook their own meals, or meals are supplied, again, for thirty or forty cents. Thus you can travel about Europe for a cost of one dollar to a dollar-fifty, for room and board. If you buy a new bicycle over there for about fifty dollars, your expenses are cut even further.

"Biking is even better than a Cadillac and staying at the best hotels," said Mr. Charles Harris, National Secretary for the Association, "that way you're just whizzing by seeing — travelling by bicycle you meet the people, talk to them and do things with them, and get the feel of the country."

In the evenings, the informal atmosphere is like a club. There are a few simple house-rules which must be obeyed, such as no drinking while in the hostel, but otherwise there are few restrictions.

There are hostels in Scandinavia, Finland, New Zealand, South Africa, Cyprus, Japan, Malta and India. UNESCO recommends them for all countries as a means to easy wholesome travel and so young people everywhere can get to know and understand natives of other lands.

The Association does not confine itself to planning European jaunts by any means. It sponsors trips to the Rockies for two weeks (the group leaves by train and roams the Rockies in Baniff and Jasper). In 1951 the National Parks Department gave nine new youth hostels which had cost sixty thousand dollars, at Baniff and Jasper. CYH also offers trips to Quebec, Gaspe Peninsula, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Cape Cod. CYH has a chain of youth hostels from Calgary, Alberta, to the foothill and Baniff. The chain continues through to Mount Eisenhower, Lake Louise and 149 miles on the Jasper. The cost of a trip like this would be approximately $157. There's even a trip to the Calgary Stampede. Yippee

Still feeling broke? The Association has 14 hostels, in Ontario, five of which are open through the winter, for ski week-ends. There is a hostel at Dagmar and at Baysville, near Huntsville. Members of CYH are allowed to drive up—by car (normally they must bicycle or walk) and ski and hike all weekend. A membership card is necessary, and is surrendered when the hosteller arrives to the house-parents. When he leaves it is returned, unless the chaperones decide that he has been breaking the rules, in which case the card is mailed in, and his membership is dropped.

There are 600 members in Toronto, usually students or young working-people from 18 to 30 years, who pitch in eagerly and help to build new hostels. Two new hostels have been built in Ontario during the last two years with volunteer help.

The Association was started in 1934, but it has grown slowly. Since the war, however, interest has increased greatly. CYH is a non-profit educational Association holding a charter from the Canadian government. It belongs to the International Youth Hostel Federation of 25 countries, and thus can provide opportunities for inexpensive travel in foreign lands. The membership card which costs $3.-50 for those over 21 and $2.00 for under 21 is good in all 25 countries.

Woodside Sees Cold War Thawing As Successors To Stalin Confused

"Stalin's death and his succession by a group of men who have not quite sorted themselves out yet," was one of the reasons given last night by Willson Woodside, Foreign Editor of Saturday Night, for the gradual thawing of the Cold War. Woodside was the second lecturer in a series on "Ukrainian Life and Culture" sponsored by the Ukrainian Students' Club and presented Wednesday evenings during the month of Februay at the Women's Union.

"There has been a great feeling of relief in the Soviet Union following Stalin's death, a feeling that things will start getting better at long last," he continued. The present leaders of Russia are not sure of the morale and support of the people. Nowadays when the Russians state that they want a release in International tensions, Woodside believes that they mean it.

He did not believe the Soviets intend to start a large war at the present time, "since Stalin had always been a very cautious man," he said, "and at present Russia is still following his policy." Nor did he beleive in the "super-clever Soviet diplomacy." He cited as an example the attempted Soviet blocking of the Marshall plan, saying that they idn't even make a dent in it.

Previous to his discussion of the topic of the evening, Mr. Woodside gave a detailed review of conditions today in Germany, France, and the Soviet Union, which provide the basis for east-west tensions and the resultant cold war. He mentioned that the Soviets have had no success whatever in attempting to break France away from the Western Front.

The next lecture to be presented on Wednesday, Feb. 17th, will be delivered by Mr. J. Revutsky, who will discuss Soviet Theatre . . . Past and Present.

Free Love Association Is Extinct

Edmonton, Feb. 1—(CUP)—The Free Love Society of the University of Alberta is dead. Actually the club never existed, it was all a big "joke".

The news of the club's demise was released in the U of A campus newspaper two days after a story in the Calgary Albertan stated that the club "was recruiting adherents on campus of the University of Alberta."

Gordon Arnell, the president of the extinct organization has stated that the club is dead, although if someone else wants to hold a meeting, "he can."

Arnell took issue with the BUP, Calgary Albertian, and most of the Canadian University Press papers who reprinted the formation and activities of the short lived club. According to him, the club was formed as a joke and all subsequent statements to the press were merely continuations of the hoax.

He said that, the report of the meeting should have made it obvious to anyone that the society was not serious.

Beny

Viewing the Beny show, I felt continually in the presence of someone clutching at greatness, searching the abstract for a universal idea with a touch of eternity. After such strenuous effort, the work of Jack Shadbolt, on display in the other half of the room was something of a relief. Shadbolt has a sunnier approach to abstraction.

Working in ink, casein, crayon, and wash (sometimes simultaneously) Shadbolt rearranges mature forms, particularly those of birds, to create extremely pleasing two dimensional effects. I was immediately endeared to him for the optimism and the sense of humour and thought in his work.

The Toronto Art Gallery offers an unusually wide variety of interest at the present time. The "Water Colours" and "European Masters" shows are still on display. Even in this time of many essays it would be worth your while to visit the gallery on Dundas Street.

United They Stand

Hill had told the hearing he objected to the concept of selective discrimination on occasions when it can be gotten away with. He said Halse was guilty of this and he could back it up with specific cases.

The only major discussion last night from a Council member came from Roger Talbot, Knox rep, who charged Halse with giving better jobs to football players. "Of the 50 people contacted for the Express jobs, more than half were rugby players on the first team", he said.

The U of T CCF club sent a letter to the SAC to go on record in support of any move against discrimination in the Employment Service as Hill charged.

P. M. Mathai

Indian Impressions

P. M. Mathai is a quiet, soft-spoken student in the Physics Department of this University. What makes Mathai unusual is that he is a native of Travancore-Cochin State in the South of India, and was a professor at the Union Christian College in that area for the past six years.

Mathai, who is about medium height and rather stocky build, is taking a graduate course in Raman Spectroscopy. He described the equipment and staff at Toronto as "in my field, probably the best in the world." Mathai definitely intends to return to his own native land, India, after he has completed his course at Toronto in another two years. He will then return to the Union Christian College, where he is on the permanent staff, to aid in the education of his growing country's youth.

In an interview, Mathai gave his views on a number of subjects touching on his impressions and feelings towards Canada and the Western World. "Canada and Canadians are popular in India," Mathai stated. "Works like the Colombo Plan and World University Service have shown Canadian good will to India." He also said that Canada and India have much in common.

Mathai said that the present trend in Indian is to more friendly feeling with Britain. "Indian people are tending to move closer to such countries as Britain, Germany, and France." As an instance of Indian good feeling, Mathai said that all of the street names in the larger cities had not been changed from the Anglicized names given them by the English during the colonial period. "Both Nehru and Gandhi felt that to change the names back to the native language would be show hatred on India's part. We want to avoid hatred."

Indian is considerably less friendly towards the United States, declared Mathai. "The Indian people are unable to understand the US's attitude towards Indo-China. The Indian people are opposed to colonialism; but they are not yet opposed to communism." However he stated that the United Nations and United States action in Korea had been supported by the Indian people as a whole.

Mathai's home province, Travancore-Cochin, is the area with the highest concentration of Christmas, the highest rate of literacy, and the best standard of living in India. "Yet this is the state with the highest proportion of communism," Mathai said. This he attributed to the facts that the State is thickly populated, and education and unemployment are both prevalent.

Mathai went on to say that in his opinion, Canadian students are more independant and self-reliant than Indian students. "Indian students tend to rely on their professors, and expect everything from them." However Mathai said that Indian students are more politically conscious than their Canadian counter-parts. Communists often try to influence students and student affairs, he stated.

Mathai, who was secretary and president of his college's Student Christian Movement, is in Toronto on a Scholarship awarded by the local branch of the SCM. Part of the money needed to pay for this scholarship is raised through the sale of Chrstmas Cards on the University Campus.

U of T Chess Tie McGill For Finals

Half of the intercollegiate chess championship came to Toronto when the Hart House Chess Club tied with McGill in a match in Montreal last Sunday. This was the final round of a tournament which incuded four universities: Laval, McGill, Toronto and the University of Montreal.

In the preliminary round played on Saturday, Toronto defeated Laval six games to two, while McGill triumphed over the University of Montreal 6½-1½.

There were eight members of the Hart House team, led by G. Berner, grad, a well-known figure in Toronto chess circles, and Jack Kagetsu, IV SPS, who represented Hart House in the American College championships in New York last year, and Secretary of the club, Jim Forward, II Meds, who also played in New York.

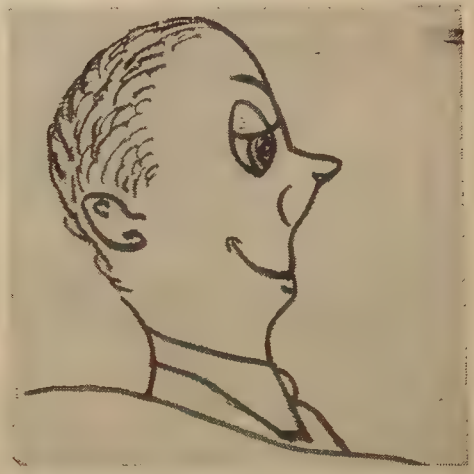
Hart House Campaigns Will Start Next Week No Beer, Fags, Women

With nomination week for the Hart House Library, House, Art, Debates and Music Committees coming up next week, the election posters of former candidates have been put on view to members in the main hallways.

Members and candidates for the five committees may not give away smokes, pencils, beer or women as election come-ons but may advertise via posters as shown in the main floor halls. Besides the five major Committees, House members may vote for one Club — the Squash Rackets Club.

In the past, one or two faculties and college have backed their school candidates by publishing slates of their members. However, Garth McDowell reminded Hart House members last night that the House caters to the interests and the needs of not just one or two faculties or colleges but all male members of the University community.

"Therefore, it is beneficial for each faculty, school and college to nominate men for their group and to back their men come election time, March 3," McDowell said. There are over 70 positions on the five major Committees and Squash Rackets Club open for nominations.



Information for interested members is available this week and next in the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor, next to the telephones. Nomination forms will be given out in this office next week from 9:00 to 5:30 p.m. every day Monday to Friday.

"If you have any desire to have fun and responsibility as a committee member—give it a try." McDowell said last night. "If you prefer to express your choice by ballot, remember that this is your House and every vote counts," he said. There should be enough nominations for each committee or club to enable candidates to wage a "good, hot campaign", he urged.

A pre-election poll will be held on March 1 and March 2 to give members on the outskirts of the campus a break. The big election day will be Wednesday, March 3, which will not interfere with other elections on the campus that week.

Entry Deadline Friday For Photograph Contest

Entries are now being received for the 32nd Annual Exhibition of Photography. The deadline is 6 p.m., Friday, Feb. 12. The show will be held in the Hart House Art Gallery from Monday, 12th February, to Sunday, 28th February.

This year's Exhibition will include a new division, "The Karsh Trophy Competition", for Campus Life and Activities Photographs. Yousuf Karsh's outstanding comment at both the 1949 and 1953 Exhibitions was that he was surprised how much of our photographic work kept to the standard of rather stereotyped subjects: landscapes, portraits of girls, summer vacations, etc., where life on the campus was full of action and original materials which received scant attention in the photographs submitted for the exhibition — hence the new trophy.

Photographs for this new division must be of "Campus Life and Activities": no scenic photographs will be considered. Any Faculty, Graduate or Undergraduate member of Hart House may enter prints. All photographs submitted must be entirely the work of the exhibitor with the exception of the development of the original negative, and must have been taken since September 15th, 1953. Print size is to be any size suitable to mounting on a 16"x20" vertical mount. A maximum of 6 prints may be submitted in this new competition. Exhibitors may also enter 12 prints for the A. F. Coventry Award (Senior) or the K. B. Jackson Cup (Junior) and a maximum of 6 Colour Transparencies for the Hart House Colour Award.

The judges will be Miss Evelyn Andrus, A.R.P.S., A.P.S.A., Past-President of the Toronto Camera Club, Ed. E. Amsden, President, Colour Photographic Association of Canada (Toronto Branch) and Wm. McCullagh, Toronto commercial photographer.

The Exhibition is being arranged by the Camera Committee of Hart House. Exhibition Manager is Dave Sprott, who will be glad to answer any inquiries on submitting entries. Prints should be packed flat and be submitted with an entry form which can be obtained from the Hall Porter at Hart House. Closing date for entries is 6:00 p.m. Friday, February 12.

There will be a private viewing of the exhibition for members and entrants on Monday evening, 15th February at 7.45 p.m. in the Art Gallery.

ART REVIEW

Beny And Shadbolt

"Disconcerting" is the word for the small group of paintings by Roloff Beny, in the print room of the Aart Gallery of Toronto. Paradoxically, while we can accept the most banal generalizations about the "old masters," an image-breaker like Beny shocks us into silence, forces the critic to search frantically for some basic definition of what art should be, and leaves him with the disconcerting feeling that he doesn't really know.

The large canvases characteristically display great hanging forms, supported, destroyed, or set in motion by dribbled lines on a painted and blobbed background. There is about his work a feeling of suspension in a vast space, particularly effective when he appears to deal with the prairie sky.

The human form makes an occasional stylized intrusion into these paintings, but apparently only to lend perspective to the pattern of abstaction.

Most of the paintings are titled "as times" a series suggested by the third chapter of Ecclesiastes, A Time for War, A Time for Peace, and so on. If one studies the work for some time it is possible to read in the meaning suggested by the title but I could find no really strong reason why the title would not be equally applicable to any other. However, despite a feeling of being imposed upon, I couldn't help liking most of them, attracted by the freedom, the movement, and the composition which was cohesive almost in spite of itself.

The twentieth century countenances artists who work in blobs, (as does Beny), dribbles, beads hurled against plastic cement, but it has yet to make up its mind about them. How much of their work is purely accidental and spectacular, and how much intentional, "genuine, and worthwhile" is a decision you will have to make for yourself. In the end your attitude will probably be completely determined simply by whether you like it.

FOR ONCE

Varsity Absent

It is rather refreshing to discover that there is at least one aspect of Canadian university life that is not dominated and dictated by Toronto. At the same time it is an unfortunate, if unjustified, reflection on dramatic life at Toronto that we alone, of the major Western universities, have never entered the Inter-Varsity Drama League one-act play competition.

Certainly this is not due to dramatic apathy or lack of talent, as is evident in the Hart House Festival this weekend. Nor can we plead superiority as an excuse; if eleven universities can produce plays of the high calibre that they did, Toronto would most certainly be in good company — if not outranked.

The most important reason for our non-participation is, most convincingly, financial. It is not, however, an insuperable one. Other universities with far smaller financial resources came to Kingston from Ottawa and Montreal, and parts distant. If Toronto's interest had been sufficient, the necessary funds could have been scraped together. Next year we hope that more Toronto students will have a share in the enterprise.

But there's no cause for alarm. The IVDL managed quite well without us.

Vicsters Dominating Track

Victoria College has virtually clinched the indoor interfaculty track and field championship. An almost perfect performance in Tuesday's events at Hart House has just about sewed up the title for the Scarlet and Gold.

The Vicsters won all five of Tuesday's events, with Norm Williams having a hand in three of them. Williams won the senior 50-yard hurdles n 6.1 seconds, a tenth of a second less than the existing intramural record, and also grabbed a first in the senior shot put with a heave of 44 feet. Then he joined John Sopinka, Gord Banks and Pete Watson to win the senior relay for Vic.

In the junior division, Vic's Dick Risk won both the shot put and 50-yard hurdles. His hurdles time was 6.4 seconds and he tossed the shot 38 feet, 11½ inches.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

Considering the truth of that old saw about not being able to please everybody all the time, we can sympathise with the much abused referees of the Intramural Basketball League. No matter what these lads say they are sure to be called down by some people. After all we all know that our team can do no wrong and it's always the other fellow that's getting away with murder. Also we remember some of the impressive list of fine referees that have come out of Hart House, men like Barry Lowes, Iry Pasternak and Bob Strom, that have gone on to do excellent work in the field. Even more recently there were Ollie Mandryk and a man named Cunningham that proved able in the racket. But two such swallows make no Spring and some of the other birds we see reffing in Hart House nowadays make one awful mess.

To-day's Intramural referees have little idea of the balance needed to properly call a basketball game. The boys tend to extremes and in so doing, often foul up play. Either they call everything they can see (and some things they couldn't possibly do anything but guess at) or they give the teams a free hand and let the boys go at it as they please. Neither way is worth much. Perhaps in professional ball, where the players are out to win by hook or by crook, it's necessary to blow everything, but in Intramural League they should call just enough to keep the game clean and moving smoothly. We're just a wee bit tired of seeing games played almost entirely on alternate foul lines.

Referees in the Intramural League are not adequately prepared for their work. A few brief clinics in which they hardly cover the rule books total the instruction given these officials. Few of them have had any court experience when they start in and have to just fumble around in real games till they find their way. This wouldn't be too harmful in the minor leagues but in the upper groups of the Major League, where many players are of Intercollegiate class, it's an obstacle to good play.

More clinics, starting earlier in the year and continuing through the season would improve conditions. Rather than have the refs wait till the schedule opens to begin working, let them be tested in the usual run of preseason exhibition and practice games. Then we could get some idea of their ability and weaknesses. By the time the Intramual League begins play most of the kinks should be ironed out.

Once the season is under way the refs shouldn't be forgotten (as they seem to be unless their decisions are protested) but carefully observed. The obvious body to conduct this observation would be the Intramural Athletic Committee. The student reps on this Committee could spend some of their free hours watching the league operate and there should be a regular report submitted on the Major League referees. Those who prove themselves adequate should be kept on and those who aren't quite up to the necessarily high standard should be dropped to a lower class of ball.

Well, we've stuck our necks out, criticized and made suggestions. Anyone else have ideas?

Ringing Of Little Bells . . .

. . . is a common phenomenon in the delicate cabbage ears of boxers, but Varsitypes being somewhat less punchy than the pro types their heads are less scrambled. Therefore when we hop down to Hart House these Friday and Saturday nights to see the Intercollegiate Boxing Tournament, we expect to see some sharp boys in action. Tony Canzano's pugs, defending champs of the Intercollegiate square's circle, are receiving delegations from Queen's, OAVC and McGill this weekend in Hart House. When the Blue Boxers won the title last year they had a star team but graduation and other things have cut last year's group by all but two, these being Collegiate champion at 155 pounds Larry Corcoran and Heavyweight John Iglar.

Coming to Toronto only once every fourth year the Intercollegiate Boxing Tournament is something that must be seen. Be a good idea to beat the rush for tickets (no sales pitch, but straight fact) and get tickets now. They'll be scarce.

These Varsity Boxers Will Seek College Titles

Varsity's senior boxers will face the best OAC, McGill and Queen's have to offer tomorrow and Saturday evenings in the intercollegiate fistic tournament at Hart House. This is the first time in four years that the meet has been held locally. Last year, at OAC, the Blues took the team championship away from Queen's, winning four individual titles. Larry Corcoran (centre) is the only titlist back this season and only one of the two veterans on the current squad. A promising newcomer this season has been 140-pounder Bill Clarke (left) and intermediate footballer Walt Schmidt (right) is considered a threat in the 175-pound division.

Montreal's First Line Runs Wild In Scoring

By JIM PROUDFOOT

There have been some famous forward lines in hockey's history—the Kid Line, the Kraut Line, the Dynamite Line, the Punch Line, the Production Line and many others. It's about time some person was coming up with a name for the threesome that is rewriting the intercollegiate record book this season.

The University of Montreal Carabins are being guided toward a third straight championship by their high-powered front line of Bernie Quesnel, Claude Dagenais and Claude Hotte. Quesnel is at race with 28 points—on 12 goals and 16 assists, tops in both departments—in eight games. Hotte, who centres the line, has eight goals and 15 assists for 23 points, to hold second place behind Quesnel. Right-winger Dagenais is third with eight goals and ten assists.

Last year, Hotte, a peppery little crowd-pleaser, won the scoring title with 21 points over the 12-game season. With four games to go, Quesnel and Hotte seem certain to establish a new mark.

Highest scorer for the Varsity Blues is their veteran captain, Red Stephen, who has nine points on three goals and six assists in eight games. Next best for the Blues is rookie centre Don Cossar with eight points.

Another idle week-end is ahead for the Blues, although they may scrimmage with one of the local Senior "B" clubs Friday night. Next week-end, they are scheduled to go down to St. Lawrence university in upstate New York for their annual exhibition game there. Following that, they have a two-game road trip to Laval and McGill, before finishing their schedule with two homes games in March.

Late Basket Sinks Blues

Varsity's basketball Blues are currently preparing themselves for a week-end of play on which the fate of their title aspirations depends. On their forthcoming road trip through Western Ontario, the Blues will face their two toughest rivals, Western Mustangs in London tomorrow night and Assumption College Purple Raiders Saturday night in Windsor.

By way of preparation, they scrimmaged with the local YMHA Blues at Hart House Tuesday night and dropped a 44-43 decision on a last-minute basket by Long John Palmer. It was a close tussle, with both teams concentrating on pattern play, and two successful foul shots by Jim Russell had given Varsity a one-point lead with 15 seconds to go before Palmer sank the clincher.

Palmer scored 20 points in the game and Johnny Braithwaite added nine for the YMHA squad. Russell got 14 for Varsity. George Stulac eight and Lou Lukenda six, present topping the league scoring

SAC At A Glance

The Students' Administrative Council last night, besides hearing the conclusions of the Committee on employment discrimination charges and requesting The Varsity to refrain from "sneering":

—applauded Rodger Talbot, II Knox, for his fine report on Intercollegiate Football re McMaster, one of the most literary reports ever presented to the SAC. Covering a broad basis, it reported on the state, place and five-team league expectations of Intercollegiate Football, and how did McMaster get into the league? It explained thoroughly the reasons (mostly financial) for dropping McMaster;

—were asked the fate of the University Songbook and appointed Music Chairman Livingston to investigate (Stephen Foster is said to be an original member of the committee);

—learned that President Stalker will be unable to attend the Pharmacy Dance Feb. 19 with regrets;

—were distracted by the entrance of Paul Lorch's blonde sister;

—congratulated Barb Backus for her NFCUS Art competition work.

Bad Shots Cut Score In Vic Win

When Meds ladies and Vic firsts faced off at the arena yesterday, there was a much different showing of hockey than the first round earlier in the year. The kind of showing, however, was noticeably poorer by both teams, particularly by the Vicsters.

Though most of the play centred around the Meds net, the Scarlet and Golds fell short in scoring ability and were only able to win by a 3-1 tally. In the first match between these two squads, Vic trounced the Meds gals 6-1.

Shirley Aiken netted the opener for Meds late in the first period and that segment ended 1-0 for her squad. Vic soon started pushing in the second. Jackie Wickware managed to careen through one of the numerous pileups about the Meds net to tally the tying score. Polly Spragge netted a single for the Scarlet and Gold and the period ended 2-1 for the college kids.

The third period was one of the most poorly played in the entire season. Vic's offsides, particularly by one unenlightened teammate, became a laugh to the arena spectators and quite possibly kept the score down to three. Wickware tallied one more for Vic and the match ended 3-1 for the college.

SPS Prolongs Meds' Streak

Meds Seniors, who went into a slump at the start of the Intramural Basketball season and have yet to come out of it, dropped another game last night, this time to Senior Skule by a count of 46-41.

The game must have set some sort of record for fouls as 44 of the personal variety were called. Most of the game was played at the foul-line and was little more than a foul-shooting contest. Frank Palermo hooped 13 for the winners with team-mate Bruce Day adding 10. For Meds it was big Doug Dalgleish who dropped the most, 10, and Danny Glick went for 9.

Pharmacy B's defeated Forestry's B club in later action yesterday, counting their fourth straight victory this year. Leading all the way the Pharmacy cigar-salesmen ended up in front 45-35.

Stan Allen was the big gun for the winners, getting 15 while Murray Berman, wrestler of some fame, hit for 12. Gartner scored 8 for the Woodies.

Bookworms will welcome these glad tidings that the roof is finally on the Library, and barring unforeseen difficulties the books will be moving in on time. Note the architectural similarity between the old and new libraries.

If one looks close enough one will also see the home of one of Ontario's more popular manufacturers of digestible liquids. But we assure you, this is not an attempt at publicity.

Hart House Photo Show Open To All Members

All members of Hart House, Faculty, Graduate and Undergraduate are invited to enter prints and color transparencies in the 32nd Annual Exhibition of Photographs to be held in the Art Gallery of Hart House Feb. 15-28.

This Exhibition is being arranged by the Camera Committee of Hart House, but it is not limited to members of the Camera Club. All prints should be vertical, 16 by 20 inches. Prints should be packed flat and submitted with an entry form which can be obtained from the Hall Porter at Hart House. Each entrant may submit 6 prints for the new Karsh Trophy Competition, 12 prints for either the Senior or Junior Awards and 6 color transparencies.

Only prints not shown before in the annual exhibition may be entered. Dave Sprott, Manager expects a large entry. Last year there were 412 entries.

There are four awards in the exhibition. The A. F. Coventry Award for the Senior Division, the K. B. Jackson Trophy for the Junior winner, the Hart House Color award for the colour section, and the new Karsh Award for the new division, Campus Life and Activity prints.

Students Pack Vic Hall, For Dylan Thomas Talk

Students were sitting on the platform and there were still people left standing as Professor M. MacLure, Victoria College, spoke on "Tower of Words: The Poetry of Dylan Thomas" in Alumni Hall yesterday.

Professor MacLure said that Dylan Thomas came at a time when poetry needed a clean start. His native Welsh landscape, primitive as that of a frog, gave him a different approach from the poets of the cities. Thomas' central idea was that the body, or rather the body apart from the head, is everything, including God.

Thomas' poetry is not surrealistic, Professor MacLure emphasized. His flow of images is controlled. These images may be just incantations or may reveal a deep significance: the common reader will probably content himself with wondering how many beers it took to make that poem.

Thomas is the poet of Genesis, finding there many of his symbols, especially that of Eden. As he matured and ceased to be the prisoner of his images, Thomas found that Eden can be recovered by love, and began to use images of transformation and resurrection.

Throughout his lecture Professor MacLure gave generous quotations from the poet, since, as he said "You have to learn Dylan Thomas by ear".

Professor MacLure ended his lecture by saying that at any rate Dylan Thomas "will escape becoming breakfast-food for the intellectual", and gave a final apt quotation.

Prep Studies Start Strike In Colombia

BOGOTA (ACP)—Students in Bogota have gone on strike against the planned introduction of a course in preparatory studies. The rector of the University of Medillin joined the students in opposing the plan, which he said would result in students' going to foreign countries.

At Javeriana university in Bogota, the problem has been solved by dividing the first year of studies into two semesters, the first half to comprise the preparatory studies and the second to correspond to the first year's curriculum.

Shakedown

Ignored And Fleeced

Last year the Graduate Student Union of this University applied to the Students' Administrative Council, and the Board of Governors for permission to join the Students' Council, and pay a fee of five dollars. They were taking this step, partly in order to be eligible for the regular undergraduate council activities, and partly to acknowledge the fact that they all have access to The Varsity, one of the council's biggest expenses. At no time was any interest taken in becoming members of Hart House.

But the Board of Governors of this University, undoubtedly aware of the fact that first year Grad Students would be saddled with Hart House fee this fall, could do nothing but say, no, they didn't think there should be any raise in graduate fees based on such limited representation of the graduates.

Yes, certainly the representation of the graduate students was limited — but not as much so as the average meeting of the Victoria College Union, or the Engineering Society.

But at least student opinion on the matter was sounded. One doesn't expect that students would be asked whether they want a raise in administrative fees. But at least some indication is given as to the necessity for such an increase. Of the graduate students on this campus, we have not found one who had been told the reasons why he must join Hart House this fall. Admittedly, there may be reasons, reasons which most students are merely guessing at. But why were they never published.

The reason is simple enough. Any publicity before the fee was put on would have jeopardized the possibility of its acceptance without a word from the grads. Once having put the fee through in this fashion, then Hart House and the Board had no alternative but to keep it quiet, for in this case, any publicity would be bad publicity.

A University must have students before it can be called a University. A Graduate School must have graduate students enrolled in it before it can be recognized as a good Graduate School. We have a Grad School here, but one is not led to believe that the Board of Governors realizes it. We believe that wild pigs in a wasteland would get better treatment from our Administration than the grads here have had.

They have had the option of joining the house for many years. Surely those who wanted to did. Many, many grads have no occasio nto use the facilities of Hart House, and as grads, the opinions of these men should have been consulted.

But no. They have been ignored as individuals, fleeced like dupes, and turned like neat little cogs towards the ends of those who make up our minds for us.

We feel that the Board of Governors should have had some respect for the application from the students themselves to join the SAC, rather than forcing the students into what they may or may not have wanted.

Technical Change

It Can Be For Good

This is the second in a series of three articles relating the discussions of the World University Service Seminar held at Caledon Farm, January 29-31. The discussion topic was entitled "Technology — The Beginning Or The End Of Culture?"

By LILLIAN SOOBIK

Our generation is living in the middle of a rapid technological change which seems to be so natural that we tend not to think about it in our everyday life. The movies, radio, TV and newspapers belong to our way of life and we seldom stop to think what effect these new media of communication will have on us, on our culture. The gradual shift from oral tradition to the mass media has become a special field for the U of T through the work of the late Professor Innis. The research is now carried on by a seminar on communications consisting of top men in this field.

SO WHAT IS ALL THIS really about? Very few of us had a clear idea about the problem of communications when we left for the WUS seminar in Caledon. This article is an attempt to summarize what we learned in our discussion group which was led by Dr. James Ham.

Communication occurs between minds; it is a process in which one mind influences another. In discussion and conversation the influence is accelerated by personal contact. We do not only transmit information but also a certain personal feeling. The process of communication is faster and involves us in a greater degree than contact over mass media. Information is passed from one mind to the other, transformed, and new information is sent back. Both minds act as senders and receivers at the same time. The communication over mass media is different; the personal element is missing. The media are links between two minds and are in themselves neutral in transmitting only information which must be transformed, given meaning by the receiving mind. This technical deficiency, the inability to transmit anything but information can have important consequences. As the media lack the stimulating effect of personal contact our minds tend to become passive receivers. We try to give the information a meaning but the amount of new impressions we receive from the radio, newspapers, movies and TV tends to exceed our capacity for transforming it.

THE RAPID DEVELOPMENT IN our age has increased the sense of time pressure. We do not seem to have time to withdraw for a while from the new impressions and to adapt ourselves to the ones already received. The situation is similar to too many lectures, one after another, which exceed our transformation capacity; we stop thinking, turn into passive receivers, take down the notes and try to transform the information later. If we do not have time for this process a general feeling of confusion results. This is the basic problem created by the new media of communication. When our transforming capacity is exceeded and we become passive receivers of information there is a tendency to accept without thinking. Further, the time element together with the element of mass information tends to weaken our sense of discrimination in choosing what to see or to listen to. The consequences of this development, political as well as cultural, can easily be imagined.

OUR GROUP AGREED THAT such development would have a debasing influence on human mind, but what can be done about it? The technical media of communication are here to stay and we do not believe in going back. The oral tradition as it existed a hundred or fifty years ago cannot be recaptured. We live in a new technical age and surely the new media can be used for good as well as for evil. After all, the machines were created by human beings, and we should be able to control their influence and to integrate the mass media in our culture. Man is not going to be the same fifty years from now as he was fifty years ago; there will be cultural changes. Must it be a change for the worse?

Caution Canucks, Your Slip Is Showing

The Editor,
The Varsity;

In reply to the recent Varsity editorial on American ignorance of Canadian affairs I, as an American citizen with a great fondness for Canada and Canadians, can only agree that such ignorance is perplexing and, up to a certain point, inexcusable. But there are a few considerations in regard to Yankee misconceptions of Canada which deserve some mention.

Canada, as a progressive, rapidly-expanding nation with great potentialities, seems to find it a bit difficult to look at herself objectively. Let us face facts, not feelings. From the point of view of world affairs Canada is not, as yet, one of the great powers in international politics. Perhaps this is why as schools she is not emphasized to a subject of study in American the same degree as, for example, England, France, Russia or China. Also, the very fact of her proximity and similarity of culture has inclined educators, mistakenly perhaps, to turn the attention of American students more to nations and peoples which are both distant in miles and way of life.

To the U.S., Canada is only one of many nations in the Western Hemisphere to which she is economically bound. Mexico and other countries below the border perhaps arouse more concern because of their low standards of living and political instability. Canada has tended her own house well.

Furthermore, we who live near the border and are constantly coming in contact with each other should remember that there are many Americans in the south who have never met a Canadian and thus have not received the stimulus of personal contact which might lead them to seek out information. The very fact that American tourists traveling in Canada do ask questions, however stupid, proves at least that interest is not lacking. Their state of mind needs to be enlightened, not censored.

All this, of course, does not excuse the abysmal ignorance of many Americans in regard to their Canadian neighbors. But before Canadians so openly reveal their great big inferiority complex in regard to this lack of attention they should at least take a good square look at the factors behind it.

Poor Cat, No Stomach

One arm braced him against the Tower. The other was hanging by his side and held a copy of the campus joke.

I approached him. "Hello, Cat, you're not looking well".

He looked up. "Hello. No, I feel sick".

"Oh, I'm sorry. Anything serious?"

"Oh, no. It's just reading The Varsity."

"Yes? Well, that can happen to anyone. You ought to be more careful. My rule-of-thumb is never to read the news or sports pages, and nothing done by any of the editors — never worth it. Leave out articles and letters not originating on the campus, as well. Works fine for me".

He wasn't listening.

He began, "I wake up in the night and it's there! horrible! hideous! I can't even scream !"

"Calm down, Cat, calm down. What's there!"

"The SNEER!"

"Sneer?" I laughed, "What sneer?"

" The Varsity sneer! You haven't seen it? It's hideous!"

"Cat, pal, we have no sneer. We're too well brought up to ."

He almost threw himself at me "You don't read your own university paper," he yelled.

He was feverish, so I merely said, "What does it look like?"

"Have you seen any of the editors?"

"Only the one who quit over a recipe for Irish-American stew, Cat."

"Not the same at all. The sneer is reserved for SAC, McMaster — anyone who won't play ball."

"SAC doesn't play ball with anyone, but McMaster would —that seems to be the trouble. You're way off, Cat, there's no Varsity sneer. What have we got to sneer about?"

He looked down. "But I see it. It's on the front page for anyone to see. It sickens."

Suddenly, clapping his hand over his mouth, he ran off. No good-bye. No shout that he'd be up later for a beer. I could see that he wanted to be alone with this thing.

"Poor Cat," I said to myself, "no stomach."

Third Day

Telegraphic Tournament Still Going

The cabled chess match between Toronto student, Frank Anderson, I UC, and Russian Grand Master, Igor Bondarevsky, promises to continue into the weekend. With 26 moves made by each player up to adjournment last night, the game is no closer to being decided than the day it began.

"Bondarevsky still retains the initiative,f' said Telegram Chess editor, Malcolm Sim who is an official second. "It is very difficult to say how long the game will last. It could take two days, or more."

FRANK ANDERSON

"The play, up to now, has been quite precise", said Anderson, as he completed his twenty-sixth move, the last of the day. "Every move is important".

"My opponent is obviously taking no chances", he said. "He is playing a good solid game. At present the positions are approximately even, but a difficult struggle lies ahead. "He described the gam so far, as being "long-range planning and strategy".

Surrounding the booth at the Hobby Show, on the second floor of the Coliseum, west side, are chess fans, some with their own portable boards. A great deal of interest has been shown, both in official chess circles and among enthusiasts of the game, as Anderson enters his fourth day of play to-day.

Of the two and a half hours allowed each player for forty moves, Bondarevsky has used one hour and fifty minutes for 25 moves (av. 4.4 min.). Anderson has used one hour and forty-one minutes for 26 moves (av. 3.88 min.). If the game runs over two and a half hours, they will continue at the rate of 16 moves per hour playing time, exclusive of cable time.

So tar, each player has lost five pieces and two pawns. "The white's (Bondarevsky) Queen is in a dominant position with all points protected", said Sim. "As long as the Queens are on the board, many tactical moves are possible".

"Black is tied up on Queen side looking after pawns," he said. "Anderson's Queen and Knight are immobilized."

In a telegram to Anderson, S. D. Ballard, President of the Toronto Chess Club said, "You are to be congratulated upon your good services to the cause of chess and upon your remarkable achievement, win, lose or draw".

Pioneer Poet Reads Verse

GLEE CLUB TOURS CAMPUS TO SERENADE RESIDENCES

By MIKE ERDEI

A hand appeared around the side of the door, and the door was locked. This was the initial reception given the Hart House Glee Club at Whitney Hall last night, as they w ent around the campus serenading all the women's residences.

After a rendering of Jingle Bells the windows started to open, and women's heads popped out. The wandering minstrels continued with "the sweetheart of Sigma Chi," and the residents begged for more.

The Glee Club were having a party last night, and as a prelude, decided to sing for all the girls. They went around to Whitney Hall, St. Hilda's, the KCR (there was a slight delay here), Annesley, and the Trinity Buttery, where a third year party was in progress.

At St. Hilda's the front hall resounded to the strains of "All the things you are," and the stairs were crowded with Saints in skirts or jeans, listening with undisguised pleasure.

There were forty of the singers, led by Ward McAdam, who went from there to the KCR. After one song, they were asked to refrain from singing, and they did while they were busy with something else. "The KCR is unfair to organized Glee Clubs," said Aaron Hermant, Grad. "The student body should boycott the place," said Bill Cross. II Trinity.

On the way out, the Club sang one loud chorus, and then ran. There were only three bouncers for forty brawny students anyway.

At Annestey everyone felt in great form. After one rendering, and prolonged negotiations, they were let inside the residence, on condition they wouldn't go upstairs. The student on orderly duty said, "I thought at first it was Middle House again."

After this the carollers entertained in the Buttery for a short while, and then, worn out, they disappeared.

Thief Seen In College Students' Cash Gone

$47 was stolen from several girls' rooms in St. Hilda's College during dinner last night. Jean Wilson, II St. Hilda's, who was missing her dinner to write an essay, came out of her room, and saw a strange man coming out of a room at the other end of the third floor hall.

She said, "the man looked over his shoulder, saw me, rushed down the hall, downstairs, and out the side door at the North end of the building." She tried to chase him, but he got away easily.

Wilson described the man as 5' 11", with black hair, a rust suede windbreaker, brown pants, and running shoes. After some of the girls had checked their rooms they found the money was missing. The Police were called in.

Sarah Ditchburn, I St. Hildas, said, "similar things have happened several times before." She said even the methods were similar, and money had disappeared. Wilson said, "people come in just before dinner and hide until all the girls are downstairs in the dining room, and then go up the side stairs."

Toronto Nuisance

Nensis, Nemesis, Nonsense

By ROBERT HUNTER

In view of the current printing crisis in Siberia printed copies of this year's Torontonensis will be very difficult to obtain. There will be plenty of hand-illuminated manuscripts available in the near future, said Reggi Mori, Torontonensis editor, and genial man-about-town. But it will take some time to get the monks started since they have been out of practice since the Reformation.

THEREFORE IT IS ESSENTIAL that it be known before Monday, February 22, 1973, how many copies are going to be desired by the illiterate peasants of this institution. Mori said that since most of the students can't read, Torontonensis is concentrating on pictures this year, (4,000 of them).

The dedication for this year's book will be to Chancellor Beatty and Sigmund Samuel. "We wanted to dedicate the book to people who were at least alive, and able to appreciate this unusual banality", editor Mori almost said.

As an example of the useful information that can be obtained from this omnibus (Value 739 Thalers, special sale price to students, $4.50), you'll find out where the school motto comes from; The motto; "Velut arbor aevo", is an inebriated version of "Crescit occulto velut arbor aevo", which it to be found in lines 45 and 46, Book 1, No. 12, of Horace's Odes.

It covers all student activities such as weekends (Torontonensis, we mean, not Horace's Odes).

Torontonuisance will certainly become a collector's item as the years go waltzing by. Reggi practically insinuated. "If you don't buy it now, you won't be able to get any in the future", blurted Mori.

Torontononsense will give special coverage to thirty-eight fraternities who have been as busy as bees—regular hives of snobbery, alleged Mori, sort of).

A new idea with Torontonensisisis this year is the placing of the college-crest at the top of each page of graduate pictures, and the school song or yell at the bottom. If this reporter had interviewed him, Mori might have sneered that "Maidenfarm" had rented the Engineers' space, and was running an ad; 'I dreamt I was Lady Godiva in my Maidenfarm bra".

TORONTONEMESIS is giving a lot more coverage this year. As a matter-of-fact it will cover a table six by four.

Mori might have confessed if he had been asked that this book would bring back precious memories of good old college days. "Five years from now, when you're sitting with your five children on your lap (fat, aren't you?), you'll remember with nausea your wild times at college" lied Mori.

No story is complete without Shirley Eckel, so we'll drag her in somehow. Watch out, here she comes. Her snarling (oops) smiling, features appear on Trantanensis posters, plastered all over the campus (the posters, not Shirley). If you're interested, these posters tell where you can buy your Torontonensis.

So order your copies of Torontonensis now, because on February 22, the book goes on Senator McCarthy's burning list.

3 Engineers Win Awards From UK Govt

Three students at the University of Toronto have been awarded scholarships. J. L. Eyre, R. T. Rhodes, and D. S. Shaw, all in fourth year engineering, received Athlone Fellowships from the British Government.

The Athlone Fellowship scheme is designed to take to Britain every year thirty-eight Canadian engineering graduates for a two-year period in industry or in a British University. The fellowship covers costs of transport fees and maintenance.

The scheme is in its third year of operation. It is intended for practical training of Canadian graduates in engineering for post-graduate studies in England.

In the past few years although a considerable number of students from the rest of the Commonwealth have gone to England for post-grad work, few have gone from Canada. Many have taken advantage of offers in the United States.

It was felt necessary to correct this situation for the benefit of trade. The Athlone fellowships are being offerede as an inducement to offset the inclination to study in the States.

Adjudicator Questioning Abstention

The Canadian Playwright, Robertson Davies, will give a public adjudication of the University of Toronto Drama Festival. He is the author of "Fortune My Foe", and "Eros at Breakfast", both of which have been performed at the University of Toronto.

Davies, in a letter to Harriet Thomson, IV UC, the Chairman of the University of Toronto Drama Committee, questioned Toronto's abstention from the Inter-Varsity Drama League competition.

The explanation given by Miss Thomson was that "although each college has its own dramatic club, they are too small and too poor to enter on their own".

The only other dramatic endeavor on the campus, she added, is the Hart House theatre, managed by Robert Gill, who is a professional director, and therefore not acceptable to the IVDL.

U of T Faculty Gets Rapped By Blackmore

John Blackmore, Social Credit MP for Lethbridge, recently accused University of Toronto faculty members of brainwashing the students. He said the burning of the effigy of Senator McCarthy must have been a result of professors indoctrinating the "boys and girls in falsehoods."

He said this indicates definite Communist sympathies among the staff of the University.

He also criticized the CBC for a story he heard at Christmas time. The program dealth with termites, and it stressed the intense organization and perfect discipline of a termite colony.

It seemed to be the comments at the end of the talk that annoyed Blackmore. The commentator said there was some link with the remarkable process of evolution, and suggested that some day man might find himself living in similar colonies.

Blackmore suggested that the commentator could have left the question wide open instead "he had to give it the Communist slant."

Gauthier And Morris Tour US Universities

This Monday Dave Gauthier, IV, UC, and Bill Morris, IV Vic, will be flying to New York for the first in a series of debates which will take them to West Point, Boston, and Harvard. Their tour is sponsored by the University of Toronto Debating Union, a SAC function.

After they arrive in New York, Gauthier and Morris will meet New York University in a debating contest. Toronto is upholding the affirmative of the resolution, "Resolved that Communists should be allowed to teach in Colleges and Universities."

The following Tuesday they will meet the United States Military Academy at West Point, where they will support the negative side of the issue, "Resolved that Red China should be admitted to the United Nations". On Wednesday Gauthier and Morris will move on to Boston University. There they will uphold the negative of the topic, "Resolved that the United States should adopt a policy of free trade."

Then on Wednesday night the Toronto Debaters debate against the ommunists in Education topic at Boston College. They then move on to Harvard, where they will support the affirmative of the same topic.

Gauthier and Morris were adjudged the best debaters in the University at the UTDU trials which were held earlier in the school year.

Gauthier was the winner of the 1952 UC Robinette Debates, and has spoken often in the UC and Hart House Debates. He is also a member of the Hart House Debates Committee.

Morris has participated in the Victoria Parliament and in the Model Parliament.

Education Necessary Says MP

Education is necessary to ensure a democratic way of life, said Michael Starr, MP, to the Ukrainian students' grad banquet yesterday evening. He said that it was becoming more apparent to Canadians there was need for education.

"It takes foreign capital to exploit Canada's natural resources," said Starr. "It behooves all of us to sacrifice some of our time for the improvement of our community and country."

Professor Luchjy of the University of Toronto urged the Ukrainian students to go into fields such as arts and humanities rather than science. He said that the Ukrainian genius lies in the scholarship rather than the scientific field.

"The revival of the Ukrainian nation in the nineteenth century was largely the work of scholars," he said. "Any society lacking culture is doomed."

Pres Smith's Tests Plan Is Popular

University presidents across Canada are divided over the proposal by Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University of Toronto, that high school graduates be given scholastic aptitude tests before being admitted to University. Dr. Smith made his suggestion last Saturday night, (at a Secondary mining students' ability to learn, he object of weeding out those students incapable of benefiting from a University education.

Dr. Smith cited the large number of failures in the first and second year of courses at the University of Toronto as a reason why high school examinations should be supplemented by aptitude tests as a method of deter- School Teachers' Banquet) with

W. A. Mackintosh, Principal of Queen's University, said that he agreed with Dr. Smith on the subject of aptitude tests. However, he stated that failures at Queen's were not entirely due to lack of ability. "Sometimes it's a question of the student's attitude — whether or not he has made up his mind as to what is important in life", Mr. Mackintosh deciared.

The President of Dalhousie University, A. E. Kerr, doubted that aptitude tests would accomplish anything more than regular tests. "A much more important problem facing our universities is the fact that a considerable number of potentially good students are not abale to go to university for economic reasons. There is an urgent need for more scholarships."

Cyril James, Principal of McGill University, said that McGill was not seriously considering introducing aptitude tests, although "it is something we have in the back of our minds."

The Principal of St. Francis Xavier University, Rt. Rev. P. J. Nicholson, said that he was a staunch supporter of aptitude tests. "We have been using them here for years, and I would say that they are ninety percent effective in plotting the future course of a student."

Do you know this man? If not why not? He is the returning officer for the annual university elections, the man who will be engaged in the hottest Hart House campaign yet. A heavy vote is expected to be polled for the following elections: members of the Library, Art, Music, Debates and House committees and for the Squash Rackets Club. Nominations begin next week. The man, by the way, is Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden.

Minnesota Medsmen Rap Exam System

Minneapolis, Minnesota — (Exchange) — The medical council of the University of Minnesota has recommended two changes in the grading and ranking system of the medical school. It has also suggested several other changes in the educational programme of the school.

The two major proposals which are now being studied by special faculty committees asked that:

1. Grades on examinations and courses be recorded only as satisfactory or unsatisfactory.

2. A ranking examination from an outside source which would require no preparation be given at the end of each of the first three years to cover that year's work.

The recommendations and suggestions were issued in a report resulting from a survey of student and faculty opinion conducted last May. Fifty-eight percent of the faculty and eighty-nine percent of the medical student body were polled in the survey.

The council advocated the changes because it believed the present grading and ranking system is causing "unwholesome competition among students" and school tests "demand the recall of an unreasonable amount of detail."

The proposed ranking system was supported by a majority of the students, but by only a minority of the faculty. However a majority of both agreed that the present grading system be changed, to "satisfactory" or "unsatisfactory".

The students believed that the main emphasis at the medical school is on research, a situation "to the detriment of the teaching programme," and that much of the course content of individual departments is material for specially training and "inappropriate and excessive" at the undergraduate level.

The Dean of the Minnesota Medical School pointed out that a faculty committee had recommended about five years ago that "satisfactory" and "unsatisfactory" be the only grades recorded.

However, university regulations require that letter grades be recorded. The dean said that a committee was considering again asking the University to change the existing regulation.

The Dean emphasized that class rank is necessary because many hospitals depend on it in selecting interns.

U of T Debate With McGill

McGill University will meet Toronto in an Intercollegiate Debating Contest today at 4:00 p.m., in Vic Alumni Hall. The Toronto team will uphold the negative and the topic "Resolved that a system of Peerages should be instituted in Canada". The debate will be informal style.

Committee Election Soon HH Expects Heavy Vote

If increased interest and participation in Hart House activities are an accurate guide, at least a 50% vote is expected in March 3rd's annual Committee election according to the House Committee of Hart House.

House Committee secretary, Don McKenzie, IV Meds, told members last night that, in an unprecedented leap last year, the percentage of eligible voters actually voting topped 32%, over a 100% rise from the previous 14% vote.

All undergraduate members will share in electing the 1954-55 House, Library, Music, Art, Debates, and Squash Raquets Committee members. Other clubs elect their executive from their own membership, which any House member may join.

Monday next will be the first of five nomination days for the five major Committees and the one Club. Also, members may voice their criticisms and ask questions regarding House activities at two pre-nomination meets to be held Monday at 1:20 and 5:10 p.m. in the East Common Room.

Started last year only, the informal meetings have proved to be lively debates with members voicing their opinions on House conditions and activities. Members are also given the chance of becoming acquainted with the Committee system and the purpose of having elections.

Warden Joseph McCulley said last night, "there is nothing of individual pettiness in the work of the Committees. Service on a Hart House Committee is a rich and rewarding experience".

"Hart House is the major symbol of the magnificent 'unity-in-diversity' of this University," he emphasized. "It is my judgment," McCulley added, "that the vitality evident in the House during these last two years has been due in very great measure to the fine calibre of our Committee personnel. I am most anxious that this should be maintained".

To top last year's record vote, Warden McCulley stressed, both an adequate list of keenly-interested candidates and a vigorous election campaign were needed. Ideally, candidates should widely represent the various colleges, schools and faculties, he said.

Each major Committee has eleven members, three of whom are re-elected by the Committee executives to help increase the continuity of Committee work. All undergraduate members of the House are eligible for nomination except those in their final year. These are also eligible if they are transferring to another undergraduate course, such as Social Work, Law, or Wycliffe.

Nomination forms will be available Monday to Friday in the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor, just past the telephones, from 9:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Interested candidates may obtain information from this office also.

Hart House Committee Plans Music Program

The only qualification necessary for a candidate for the Music Committee in the forthcoming Hart House Elections is a genuine interest in music. The Music committee requires 8 new members for a committee of 11; three of the committee members are carry-overs from last year.

This committee is instrumental in organizing all the musical activities of Hart House. These include the very popular Sunday Evening Concerts, the Wednesday noon and Wednesday night concerts, and the sing-songs held on Monday and Wednesay at noon.

As well the committee is in charge of the Record Room and the Music Room. The committee selects the new records purchased for the record collection of the Record Room.

The committee members select the artists that appear at all the concerts at Hart House, and are responsible for running these concerts.

The committee is now working on a project to improve the equipment in the Record Room. It is hoped that very soon the Record Room will have a better amplifying system, that should make the use of the room even more enjoyable.

A small library is also being planned for the Record Room. This will include a small collection of music reference books that should help the members of the house in their appreciation of the records available.

The Campbell McInnis Library in the Music Room is also in for a renovating. This library has been collecting dust for a long time and it is hoped that by straightening it out and publicizing it, this library will be of more use to the members of the House.

Every year the students of the Music Committee give a concert featuring themselves as the artists. This does not mean that the participants must have a knowledge of any musical instrument or an ability to sing. In past years these have been a great success.

SAC Report On McMaster

An SAC Special Committee handed down at the last meeting of the SAC a report on the committee's findings explaining the expulsion of McMaster from the Intercollegiate Football Loop. The following will be a shortened report of the Committee's findings.

"The State of Intercollegiate Football Today — In the past few years Intercollegiate Football in Canada has enjoyed relative popularity and thus prosperity not only among students but with the sporting public in general. More than any other Intercollegiate competition it draws large crowds, especially graduates into the stadium on Bloor Street. However factors have entered into the scene which have threatened the very Football and thus threatened the life of a whole system of Athletics which depend on it.

"One of these factors is professional Football. It has developed to such proportions that it is able to outshine lesser clubs. In a word they are drawing interest, which means crowds and gate receipts away from Varsity games.

"Television has had a definite effect on the number of people who sit in the stadium to watch games. While a year ago it was uncertain as to the effect this device would have . . . it seems many fans prefer to be fans in front of the television set, be it at home or elsewhere.

". . . televising of Varsity games can be excluded but CBC are attempting to arrange to telecast the away Argo games. It has been contended by the experts that Intercollegiate Football has seriously weakened her position at such a time by instituting a clumsy five-team league on an eight-week schedule. (Five teams mean one team has a bye every week; eight weeks means that every team sacrifice one home game a year.) On top of that the fifth team that was admitted is neither strong enough to win nor popular enough to draw.

"The drawing power of College Football in the apst has made it a big source of revenue. It has been put to work to finance intercollegiate competition in other sports and to finance intramural athletics within the University. Outside of basketball it is the only sport that 'pays.' All other athletic activity depends on it. Students at the University of Toronto pay $5 annual Athletic fee. This forms but ten percent of the cost of the athletic program. Toronto is in a fortunate financial position. Athletic fees in other universities in the league range from $10-$20.

"Queen's University in Kingston derives fifty percent of her annual revenue from the annual fixture between Toronto and Queen's. If she was deprived of this home game her financial situation for athletics would be serious and she would certainly be forced to withdraw from the Intercollegiate football.

"If the Five-Team League would continue this year Queen's will have no Toronto game which means that Queen's will drop out. We will then have a four-team league, taking McMaster in at the expense of Queen's. Queen's was one of the originators of the league competing since 1890.

"We will have no Western game in Toronto. Western are the league champions and Toronto's arch rivals, and the Western game is usually rated as the most important game of the year.

"This annual deleting of home games with age old rivals . . . means that the alumni from these universities do not buy season tickets. Aling with everything else this adds up to an expected $47,000 decrease in annual revenue in the University of Toronto Athletic Association.

"This decrease in revenue will eventually mean that student athletic fees will be increased.

"How did McMaster get into the league? For several years McMaster overtured the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union and exerted pressure on the executive body to be admitted into Senior Intercollegiate Football. Each time the difficulties were pointed out, as well as the possible effect on the League. However McMaster did not desist and with constant pressure the executive members weakened. Against the better judgement of the members . . . the McMaster club was admitted as a member with uncertain status. While she cannot be blamed for agitating for her own cause; McMaster entered under no illusion apparently as to the feeling of some members and the difficulties which resulted.

"In face of the developments during the past year, some sober thinking was done, a mistake was admitted, and a move was made to protect the older members imperilled and to reconstitute four-team competition. Unfortunately the only practical alternative seen was to exclude McMaster after one year's competition. It is true she has lost the opportunity to make a future for herself in Intercollegiate Senior Football. It seems to be the only alternative to Toronto and Queen's losing present achievements and terminating a happy rivalry of the past."

Sabre, Epee, Foils All On Program At Fencing Meet

In probably the smallest intercollegiate tournament of them all, Varsity's senior fencers will be after McGill's championship tomorrow at Hart House. Those are the only schools represented. Big prize in the meet, which starts at two, is the Charles Walters Trophy, presently held by McGill. There is also a trophy for highest individual total.

Representing Varsity will be Wally Kostiw, George Montgomery, John Andru, George Kovatch, George Shepherd and Jack Penciner.

McGill will enter a six-man team, too, with a three-man suad taktoo with a three-man squad takand epee competitions.

E.J. Pratt Prize Being Offered For 3rd Time

The E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry, established in 1951, will be offered this year for the third time. The award consists of a gold medal, valued at $100, and a cash prize of $100. The E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize are at the present time the only all-university award for creative writing for which all students, undergraduate and graduate, are eligible.

The Pratt Award was made possible through the gift of an anonymous donor who desired to stimulate poetic composition. The Prize is named after Dr. E. J. Pratt, Professor Emeritus of English at Victoria, who is a noted Canadian poet.

Higher Fees Force Men Out — Hall

President of the University of Western Ontario, Dr. G. E. Hall said recently in Vancouver that the forced exclusion from universities of scholars because of financial reasons, together with the tendency of students to avoid hono: courses, will mean that Canada v e short of mathematicians, d ors, physicists, botanists, and other specialists.

Dr. Hall said that the financial crisis in which Canadian Universities find themselves is seriously threatening the economic progress of the country.

He admitted he did not know the solution to this problem, but stated that he heartily dislikes any suggestion of granting "free schooling to a student simply because he can run 100 yards in ten seconds."

The Gondoliers

The open season on Gilbert and Sullivan has again begun. Let him shoot first who is not himself laughable. The current hit is The Gondoliers at Eaton's by Eaton's.

The orchestra under the baton of Godfrey Ridout, whose apparend enjoyment of his task contributed immeasurably to the life of the performance, did more than usual justice to the overture. The curtain parted to reveal a main waterway in Venice where the female chorus cavorted in peasant garb. It was a combination of feminine pulchritude and the faithful that never-sing-die. In spite of the slightly static smile with which they opened and the lack of grace in the dance sequence, the "contadine" sang and acted agreeably.

The men kept in the background.

The full load of pace fell upon the two gondolieri, played by Robert Reive and Les Mackey, and their sweeties, Gianetta and Tessa sung by Elaine Oakley and Elizabeth Mawson. Their abundant vitality and spontaneity just about equalled the speed limits. The co-operation of the four made the ensemble very smooth and balanced.

The two girls had remarkably good voices with a pleasing tonal

purity. Miss Radford in particular had wonderfully clear, high notes. Miss Oakley stood out because of her grace of movement at all times and especially in the many dances. The men were all the more effective in the role of joint republican rulers because they had a marked resemblance of looks and of voice.

The Plazza-Tora family seemed rather unsure of itself. The Duke played by Howard Mawson, had a well-developed personality and a good comic technique but the family raillery failed to come across because the female members were slow on cues and rather characterless. Helen Radford as Casida, however, managed to look quite haughty and had a good, fat voice which contributed much to the finales. Luiz (Frank Starr), her lover, was comic, but was no match for his woman—vocally.

One other character stood out. It was The Grand Inquisitor (George Simpson). His voice was in keeping with the personage, a little uncertain, but Gilbert's witty words were all there. He combined ministerial dignity with a beady-eyed fondness for "plump young things" (a particularly popular Gilbert combination).

The staging evidenced some departure from the sterile-type pattern, e.g., in the men's court scenes. The many dances were also nicely handled. There was a gondola which jerked through a symmetrical set in the first act and two thrones and two crowns were juggled through the second as Gilbert and Sullivan showed once more that "for every man there's a woman."

CURIOUS SAVAGE

Hillel Comedy

John Patrick's The Curious Savage is a comedy encumbered by an obvious moral or two that protrudes upon the audience like lumps in cream of wheat. The contrived plot and some rather limp jokes really require a professional group with expert timing to cover up the faults.

At Hart House on Wednesday night the presentation by Hillel Foundation was entertaining if not polished. The cast made up in liveliness what they lacked in finesse. The performance began slowly and somewhat painfully but with the second scene the pace accelerated to an acceptable allegro, which continued steadily until the final curtain.

Although inaudible and awkward in the first scene, the actors and actresses seemed to find their element when they came on stage the second time. Annette Oelbaum did much to accomplish this transformation. With her flexible body and mobile face she achieved a truly comic characterization.

Marlene Daniels as Fairy Mae deserved plaudits for a consistent, lively performance throughout. With her bounce and strident voice she made an amusing contrast to the coy, mincing Mrs. Savage, played by Faye Firestone.

The latter appeared somewhat youthful for the part, though her baby-voiced unrealism was convincing. One rather pitied her for the task of delivering tiresome, explanatory passages.

But then, these were no worse than some trite lines borne by the rest of the cast. Although it was far below her capacity, Lyla Gutzin portrayed with restraint and sincerity the part of Miss Wilhelmina.

Sandra Collis and Norm Griesdorf also turned in sound performances, though the former tended to be overly flamboyant.

All in all, it turned out to be an amateur play with professional moments. The enthusiasm of the cast extracted what humor there was from trite phrases, and produced for the audience an entertaining evening.

BLUE PUGS BATTLE TO-NIGHT

Speaking of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

As long as there are athletic teams which play season after season, people will pick all-star teams. They get in a nostalgic mood and recall players they've seen in years gone by and try to figure out whom they'd choose, if they had a chance to pick any set of players at their peaks. That habit is one peculiar to sports fans and it's one of the more interesting — and argument-producing — aspects of being a sports bug.

College basketball is one sport where you might be hard-pressed to choose a dream team for the many seasons played to date. It's hard enough to pick them for one season. To choose them fairly out of the past is next to impossible. One reason is that the further in the past a man's deeds drop, the more glorious they become, simply because people tend to forget their short-comings. But the sort of speculation whereby you wonder whom you really would choose if you could have any five cagers at their peaks is an interesting way to pass time, especially if you have some one to argue with.

We have a letter from a Mr. A. Anderson of Toronto, a Varsity graduate of 1948, who reports he has been seeing the Blues games regularly since 1946. He picks five U. of T. men for his all-time, all-star Varsity team. His selection is nourishing food for thought.

At centre, he likes a contemporary, George Stulac. He says "easily the outstanding player to play at Varsity. George can do everything and do it well". How right you are, Mr. Anderson. . . .

His choice at one forward spot may come as a bit of a surprise to those who remember red-haired Glen Pettinger as a Western star. Actually, Glen played here in 1948 and 1949, missed a year and then finished his schooling at Western. Mr. Anderson comments: "best driver and one-hand shooter ever to play for Varsity. Glen could score no matter who was checking him".

The other forward on the Anderson dream team is Eddie Brenan, the game little competitor who graduated in 1951. Says Mr. Anderson, "best dribbler and crowd pleaser. Eddie always gave the fans their money's worth".

A very familiar name crops up at the guard position in the person of John McManus, presently coaching the intermediate team. "Best passer and team man", claims our correspondent. "Always a treat to watch and set up more players for baskets than any other player Varsity has ever had". John played for the Blues from 1947 to 1950.

Wally Zeaton, who played from 1945 to 1949, occupies Mr. Anderson's other guard position. Mr. Anderson says "best rebounder and the player who made fewer mistakes than any other player at Varsity".

Don't know whether we agree with Mr. Anderson's selections or not. One thing's for sure: having seen games regularly for seven years, he is better qualified to pick all-stars than most people around.

We should the list to one person who is even better qualified than friend Anderson. You could tell that it gave Mac McCutcheon, intramural director, something to think about for a few days. Mac was pretty sure, though, that there were a few players before the war who belonged on any all-star team.

No person is arguing with the choice of George Stulac. It's pretty hard to imagine any player doing more things well on a basketball court than George does. We still remember the cheer given Stulac in December by the Niagara university fans, who are fed a steady diet of All-American players.

BLUES NOTES: In criticizing the conduct of McMaster basketball fans in a recent issue, Arch Kincaid, Queen's Journal sports editor, is victim of one of the mistakes the Mac types made. He says Bob Masterson will be sure to vote against the re-admittance of the Mac football team after the Hamilton hey-rube. What Kincaid, along with the Mac folks, should get straight is that Bob had no part of getting Mac ousted and won't have any part of getting them re-admitted or kept out. Bob coaches the team and lets the exectives get the ulcers. . . . Reports whispered here and there suggst that Nov. 13 will be an open date for the football team and the way is just about clear for the Miami trip. Queen's is to come here that day, under the prospective schedule, but the game can be moved back.

Varsity Boxers Defending Title College Tournament At Toronto

It's Fight-Night at Varsity tonight and the Lower Gymnasium of Hart House is a boxing ring such as would do Madison Square Garden proud. Set up in the middle of the Basketball court the "squared circle" has taken the boys of third year PHE the better part of the past day to assemble, and isexpected to stand up well even under the pounding of falling hulks.

And there should be hulks aplenty as Varsity Boxing Blues square off to defend their Intercollegiate Championship won last year in bloody combat down at Montreal. This year the pugs from the other Intercollegiate cities are converging on Toronto with intentions of wresting the title from Varsity's possevive clutch.

The men of Tony Canzano are in good shape going into tonight's fight and it is not expected that any of them will have trouble making the weight. After the Prelims tonight the pick of this harvest will enter the finals tomorrow.

All proceedings begin at eight o'clock sharp. Seats in general admission are for the early birds.

A Man Thinks

Editor,
The Varsity:

In yesterday's Varsity, attention was drawn to the poor refereeing which is becoming the rule rather than the exception in the intramural basketball league. I should like to mention the inadequacy of the league, as a whole.

Much has been printed in the past about Varsity possessing one of the, if not the, largest such set-ups in America, with its approximately 135 teams. This would seem a worthy achievement but for one thing. Where do these teams get time to practise? They don't. With gym facilities here at Varsity inferior even to McMaster and many high schools, the average team is fortunate to obtain one practice every two or three weeks, and then usually it comes at eight a.m. when many must leave early to attend lectures. Each team plays about a game a week but it is very difficult to play well when you can't practise. This plus the poor refereeing tends to make a shambles of many of the games.

Mention has also been made of the intramural as being a breeding ground for future intercollegiate players. This, too, is ridiculous when the amount of time spent in participating is totalled.

With these criticisms, I would like to suggest one remedy for the present situation. Would it be possible to construct some baskets at the Drill Hall that could be used for practice or else shift the Hart House minor league to the Drill Hall and use the upper gym? Most minor league players and many major leaguers are participating mainly to obtain credits, but the higher division teams, I think, would welcome the opportunity to work out, say, two hours regularly each week at decent times.

Jim Hamilton,
I Med.

Blue IInds Hot Meet Osgoode

Varsity's Intermediate hockey machine is a tough club to beat. That's why they're sitting on top of the Intercollegiate Intermediate Hockey League, ahead of Western and OAC, as well as Ryerson and Osgoode Hall.

While not officially in the circuit, the Rams and the Legal Lads are playing a schedule that sees home-and-home games with all the teams in the loop. This afternoon the young lawyers from Osgoode Hall will be attemtping to further their cause, as they meet the Baby Blues in Varsity Arena at 4:30.

In one previous game this season, the Blues were edged 1-0 by what appeared to be a strong crew from the institution on Queen St. But the Seconds were just a little bit sloppy in that game, and there is every reason to suppose that they will overcome Osgoode this time.

While hockey scores, just like football scores, don't mean anything, it is nevertheless interesting that Ryerson smothered Osgoode 8-3, and the Blues whipped Ryerson 8-0. At the same time, the Blues lost their first game to Ryerson by the close margin of 3-2.

However they seem to have hit their stride with a total of five wins, and four of them since their last loss, that to Osgoode. The Blues have only lost two games all season, once to Ryerson and once to Osgoode.

They've scored 48 goals in seven games, and Hugh Currie has only let in seventeen in the same number. The big first line of Gene Robillard, Clare Fisher, and Bob Primeau have been consistent scoring threats, and have accounted for more than half of the team's goals. Robillard has tallied twelve of them himself.

The Intermediates shouldn't have much trouble pushing the Legal Lads out of the Arena this afternoon, but there is no doubt that the Osgoode boys will put up a good fight, and that's bound to produce a good hockey game.

Physots Winners In Girls' Hockey

A still undefeated POT I, team maintained their supremacy on skates yesterday in an icy struggle with the ladies from St. Mike's. The game moved like lightning all the way and left the Physots ahead in a 2-1 tally at the end of the third and final period.

Betty Payette, who sparkled the entire playing, opened the scoring early in the first, putting St. Mike's on top for the only time. Five minutes later, Jean McNeil came in unassisted to tie it up for POT despite the efforts of goalie Eileen Dillon. The rest of the period was scoreless although both squads did their worst to break the tie.

Early in the second period, Rosalie Marsh made the spectacular goal of the game, to set the tally at 2-1 for the Green-and-Golds!

In Tuesday's noon-hour game, POT II's scored a 3-0 shutout over UC II's. Goals were scored by Betty Kempton, who tallied twice, and Sandy Weber.

HOOP SHOTS

By LEO MADDEN

An anxious group of University of Toronto students will board the 3:30 train for London this afternoon. They will be the basketball Blues. At London, they will try to repeat their upset victory of last season. On Saturday they will be in Windsor for a game with the highly-praised Purple Raiders of Assumption.

The Blues have a good chance of taking the Mustangs tonight. The boys are up for tonight's game, and feel that the most important of the weekend games is the one at Western. It is hoped that the inspiration of the victory will carry them through the game with Assumption.

Western has lost Ray Truant and Doug McNichol their two best men on last year's championship team. Bill Fowler, up from the Colts, is taking Truant's place. Bill is a fine ballplayer but will have to go a long way to fill the gap left by the experienced Truant. He will team up with Walt Karabin, Don Prowse, Chris Ellis and Coulter Osborne, all holdovers from last season's championship squad. This team is weaker than last year's, as they have no one to replace Doug McNichol.

Varsity, on the other hand, have not been as hard hit. So if they unite all their ability for the game, they should make a good showing. It will mean an all-out effort similar to those shown against the American teams earlier in the season.

At Windsor they will face a different situation. The Purple Raiders have come from last place up to the top spot with one of their best teams in years. They are led by Eddie Joseph, "a five-foot six-inch marvel" from Rochester, New York. Along with Joseph, Assumption boasts of an array of well-known ballplayers. Lou Verres, a member of last year's Intercollegiate All-Star team, Dick McKenzie, of Niagara Falls Collegiate, and Hugh Coyle, from St. Michael's Toronto, are three boys who have been helping Joseph make Assumption topnotch this year.

With opposition like this, it is easy to see why a win over Western is needed to spur the Blues on.

If the Blues can make it a successful weekend, they will have a definite advantage over both teams for the second game of the home and home series. The second game will be played at Hart House where ther Blues can employ their famous "Hart House zone". There is a comment that visiting Intercollegiate ballplayers make when they come to Hart House: "Soon we will graduate and then we won't have to play at Hart House anymore."

The Real Danger

The Editor,
The Varsity:

There have been many letters printed which have discussed McCathyism, pro and con. I feel that all of them have missed the real dangers of McCarthyism. The real danger lies in the abandonment of the due process of the law.

There are two precepts, unwritten I believe, on which our criminal law is based. The first of these is the idea that it is better that nine guilty men go free than that one innocent man be hanged. McCarthyism denies this by reversing it in practice —it is better to ruin nine innocent men so that the tenth guilty man may be jailed.

The second precept is namely, that a man is considered (and should be treated as) innocent until he is proved guilty. The proof of guilt lies with the prosecuting power (usually the state) and must be demonstrated before a jury. McCarthyism reverses this and considers a man guilty until he has proven himself innocent. In law, there should be no necessity for a man to prove his innocence—the state must prove his guilt.

The third danger lies in the abandoning of trial by jury. Every man has the right to be tried by a jury of his peers, and the McCarthy trials have not provided that.

The danger of McCarthyism lies in its fundamental disregard for the precepts which uphold the rights and freedoms of the individual. A society cannot be saved from internal ills by the destruction of the rights, dignity, and liberty of each individual in the society.

Communism is basically seditious since it advocates the overthrow of the legal government by force, and as sedition must be removed from society. Both Marxist and Stalinist Communism present a grave threat to the liberty of each individual, for both justify the use of force to achieve its ends. Any creed which preaches and acts on the assumption that the end justifies the means, no matter what the means are, is dangerous to liberty and as such must be removed. But communism must not be removed by destroying the liberty and rights of the innocent individual—the very thing we seek to preserve.

Margaret G. Norman,
II Pre-Meds.

Crashing The Iron Curtain

Now Hear This

The SAC has seen fit to criticize a feature in The Varsity which has been appearing every second day under the standard headline: "The Varsity Sneers At . . ."

Although we agree there was some room for criticism, we definitely believe the SAC has misconstrued the entire idea behind the feature. We have, at no time, tried to be contemptuous of the people we have mentioned in the "sneer". We have, at no time, participated in what the SAC motion called "destructive criticism".

The one principle behind our features — both the "sneer" and the "applaud"— has been to give both credit and criticism where and when it was due.

Any criticism, whether in the editorial column or in a front page feature, involves stepping on someone's toes. It is interesting to find that the two SAC reps who most strongly decried the "sneer" came from Engineering and Victoria — the only two colleges involved in the on-campus sneers.

We are led to suspect that there would have been no reaction to the "sneer" if we had kept our hands off prominent students. No council member disapproved of sneering at Mayor Harrison for suggesting book-burning. Yet, if criticisms are to be made why should students be considered as a special "hands-off" group?

The movers of the motion showed how completely they had misunderstood the idea of the front-page feature, when they suggested that the "applaud" should perhaps be continued. It's fine to applaud, they implied, but criticize — oh no.

Editors of The Varsity in every year have been subject to scores of criticisms from all corners of this campus. The SAC has never lost an opportunity to criticize the paper. Yet the Editors never once suggested that SAC members "refrain" from knocking the Editors.

The SAC has applauded itself and the SAC has criticized itself. There is nothing wrong with that. But there is also nothing wrong with criticisms and applauds originating in The Varsity.

The main objection of ten Council members apparently centred on the use of the word sneer. Applying the strict meaning to the word, one could conceivably get the impression The Varsity was being contemptuous. But, in spite of this, the content of the sneer has been rooted, we believe, in constructive criticism.

Five Council members were able to realize the real purpose of the feature — a light comment on the actions or statements of certain people on and off the campus. In this light, we feel we have remained within the limits of our contract with the SAC.

We will continue the front-page feature.

No Comment

The National Committee of Labour Progressive Party Student Clubs has sent out editorial press releases in sharp criticism of some points made in a recent speech by President Sidney Smith. Many of their points are interesting, but no name, not even a list of presidents of clubs, was released with the letter. . . .

US Academic Freedom

Playing Too Safe

(This article on academic freedom is a condensation of a speech given at a recent meeting of the University Historical Club. The writer attempts to analyze the problem and pinpoint its causes).

BY PETER TURNER

In many sectors of the United States today the admirable ideal of Academic freedom stands out against a dark, and ever worsening background of restriction, censorship, and intimidation. Valuable publications have been banned from classes because controversial views were presented.

TEACHERS HAVE BEEN FIRED and many more have been warned because of alleged radicalism. Special loyalty oaths are required or are under consideration in a dozen States. Distinguished scholars invited to teach in colleges in the U.S., have run up against immigation barriers.

In some colleges it would seem that intellectual excellence and intellectual integrity are no longer regarded as essential qualifications for a professorship. Apparently what is desired by some above everything else in the Academic profession is conformity.

A NUMBER OF "SUPER-PATRIOTIC" organizations exist in the United States today and are creating a loud cry for closer control of education.

The "National Council for American Education" in New York City publishes its pamphlets with titles like "Progressive Education Breeds Juvenile Delinquency" and a periodical called the Educational Guardian.

The "American Education Association" of New York City is inspired by the slogan "Keep Our American Schools American".

THE EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION of Chicago published a pamphlet entitled "How Red is the Little Red Schoolhouse". On the cover, a soldier, bayonet over one shoulder, cartridge belt over the other, sickle and hammer on helmet, sinister expression on face, is reaching over the curve of the earth to inject a hypodermic of bright red fluid into a red schoolhouse.

Children oblivious of danger are happily at play. A typical paragraph runs: "A prominent American educator said in a magazine article recently that we CAN BE SURE OF ONE THING—there are thousands of Reds in our educational system. Many of these undercover Reds claim to be liberals and progressives. Always remember you can't try Communism any more than you can try cyanide or leprosy".

THESE SUPER-PATRIOTIC GROUPS are quite often promoters of oaths of alegiance. In Pasadena the school development council challenged the teachers to sign an oath which identified opposition to Capitalism with overthrowing the government. It read: "I do further swear (or affirm) that I have not attempted nor will I attempt to effect such overthrow openly or secretly or attack the American way of life based upon the ideals conceived by our founding fathers who created this Republic to guarantee inalianable rights of the individual in a system of competitive free enterprise".

BUT THE WELL PUBLICIZED cases are few in comparison with the many obscure teachers caught by a stern check rein. One college lost the support of its most prominent trustee because the political science professor encouraged the students to "meddle" in a non-partisan campaign to encourage everyone to vote.

One high school teacher lost his job because of what was regarded as a too favorable presentation of the Tennessee Valley Project.

ANOTHER FOUND HIMSELF being questioned because he recommended testing of advertised products. A public school history teacher in Louisiana Parish was surprised to discover that the reformation had to be omitted from the course of study. The principal of a Public Elementary school in New York in a radio address to all teachers and children warned them that while Communists may be hard to identify, a sure sign was disbelief in God.

The result of all this has been a growing reluctance amongst student and faculty to speak out on controversial issues and to shy away from association with the words liberal, peace, and freedom. Those who have suffered most from the current retreat from academic freedom are the millions of pupils now being instructed in only the obvious, by teachers playing safe.

THIS WOULD BE A GLOOMY PICTURE indeed if it were typical of the entire country. Fortunately, both for the United States and ourselves in Canada, it is not. While it is true that such things are happening in many sections of the country to-day,—and it is deplorable that such is the case,—there is a strong and ever-growing opposition to any curb in Academic Freedom, both within and without the educational institutions. Old and established universities such as Harvard speak out regularly against restrictions. An ad hoc committee of the general faculty of Oberlin College in Ohio prepared the following statement.

"The Oberlin College faculty regards all forms of interference with intellectual freedom, discriminatory loyalty oaths, censorship, and other restrictions on free speech and thought, as inimical to the democratic way of life. From its beginnings, Oberlin College has fostered and defended intellectual freedom, and its faculty have been unhampered in its search for knowledge. On the Oberlin campus, not only are all inquiry, all opinions, and all expression permissible, but wide diversity of scholarly opinion is encouraged. We, the Oberlin faculty, urge all colleges and universities to make a strong and uncompromising defence of intellectual freedom. We urge all faculties and administrative officials to avoid that categorizing tendency, which creates guilt by association, for it is the character and integrity of the individual scholar, as well as his methods and purposes, that should determine his right to membership in a community of scholars."

Sons Of Liberty, Primed And Riding

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It seems that the "Sons of Liberty" are looking to their priming, and Paul Revere is riding again. Only this time it is not the Redcoats they are after; they are attacking the "tyranny" of conscience and the "despotism" of morality. As usual, the editors of The Varsity are in the forefront of the array.

The technique of these people is becoming tiresomely standardized. It consists of proclaiming a hatred of the political absolutions of Nazism and Communtisms of Naxism and ommunand then linking these justly despised despotisms with belief in moral absolutes in the realm of ethics. This attempt to connect absolutism in the political order with absolutes in the moral order has great success with dull minds. They need only hear the clarion-call of "Liberty", and they rush off madly condemning any and all conformity to moral discipline.

Specifically, they take the silly censorship of a scheming Quebec politico, and use it to brand as anti-democratic anyone who advocates any kind of official restraint on immorality of any sort. This is the stand taken in an editorial in last Thursday's Varsity. It asks "Who, in this world, has any right to say what is immoral or blasphemous?" Apparently they assume the answer to be "Nobody". Thus they say in effect that anyone can say or do what he pleases, and the state has no right to declare it immoral, and punish the offender. The absurdity of this is apparent; even such a relativist and "democrat" as the American Justice Holmes said that freedom of speech does not allow a man to shout "Fire" in a crowded theatre.

Perhaps it is too much to ask these people to use their minds before speaking them, but they might consider that both Nazism and Communism are reations against the barren, nihilistic individualism of philosophic "liberalism", by people craving for moral and spiritual certainty.

The true, the only, answer to these false ideologies is that there are some things man must not do or permit, be they democrats, aristocrats, or autocrats, because these things are absolutely wrong; that these ideologies are false because they ignore the natural moral law; and that democracy can best protect itself by striking a "nice equipoise" which will provide the maximum of individual liberty and still recognized the bounds of eternal justice.

BLUES WIN FISTICUFFS

For the first time this year, there is a separate group of pictures of campus life and activities in the Karsh Trophy competition. These prints will hang in a separate section.
Here, Bruce Stephenson and David Sprott, exhibition managers for the Hart House Camera Club are hanging some of the accepted prints for this year's exhibition.
The exhibition opens on Tuesday, and is open to all students.

Three Varsity Men Take Championships

By MOISHE REITER

Tony Canzano, Varsity Boxing Coach, watched his men score 14 points in the first five bouts of Saturday's Intercollegiate Championships then settled on the sidelines to wait for the boys from Queen's and McGill to fight it out for second place. While Tony worried his fingernails the Gaels and Redmen split the remaining points to no advantage and, for the second straight year, left the Tom Gibson Trophy secure in Varsity's grasp.

Varsity sent a group of light men into the ring to win the Gibson and shot their bolt in the opening matches, gaining three titles and two extra points for finalists.

Pete Young of Varsity dropped a close decision at Al Ramsay of OAVC in the 130 pound class but still made a point for the Blues. Varsity learned not to sneer at such single points after winning the championship by just a margin.

The first Intercollegiate Champ of the year for the Blues was 135 lb. title-holder Russ Reilly who took a nod over Aggie Jack Stephens. Reilly, out of College ring action for two years rejoined the Varsity squad this year and was named team captain for the Intercollegiate Meet.

Two fine fighters met in the 140-lb. division after both had trounced their opposition in the Friday night preliminaries. Varsity's Bill Clarke and Queen's Bob Sweet pummeled each other enthusiastically in their match with the decision going to Sweet.

Two of the night's best exhibitions of skill were the performances of Varsity's Larry Nnghtingale and John Whyte. Nightingale, a replacement for original team member Callaghan, surprised fans and his opponent with a smooth hard-punching style that put him in control almost all the way. Queen's man Willie Bedell soaked up several pounding smashes to the face without success in reciprocating. Whyte, a Trinity man, proved himself well-versed in the manly art of self-defence by thrashing soundly a bounder from Kingston named Willie Richard. A set of springy legs and a snappy accurate punching technique cut through Richard's defence, found his face and drew blood. Richard proved himself no laggard as he kept coming back for more even managing to land the occasional whack himself.

Walter Roberts, a tall gangling Queen'sman, was the favoured man in the 155-lb. class after his prelim decision over Larry Corcocan, defending champ, Pete Raymond of McGill went out to pound the Gael into the ropes very nicely and start a Redman drive that stalled only one point short of the Championship.

The most unpopular decision of the Meet was that which eliminated Varsity's Lee Bernardis in the Friday night preliminaries. Lee's opponent in that match was Gael John Mothersill who ended the three rounds gasping on the ropes, dripping blood all over the joint. By some strange reasoning the judges decided that fresh, unmarked Bernadis was the loser and sagging Mothersill the winner. Moving on to the finals John was further drubbed, this time by McGill's Don Stirling, a very rough fellow indeed, Stirling hit hard and often, raising a welt on Mothersill's cheek and reddening his nose. But the McGillian, remembering the judges' action with Bernardis the previous night had no hopes of winning, so that when he was named Intercollegiate 165-lb. champ he just went all to pieces, danced

Anderson Drops Match Future Games Possible

By AUBREY GOLDEN

The much publicized international chess match between Frank Anderson, I UC, and Igor Bondarevsky, Russian Grand Master, ended with Anderson's resignation from the game at 10:50 p.m., Friday evening. It was ended in a spirit of optimism however, and not of disappointment.

"The only way you learn at anything is by matching your wits against a better player", said Anderson. He was playing a chess master, ranked among the top ten in the world.

Feeling that, although he was bottled up, Bondarevsky couldn't free any of his men for a decisive attack against him, Anderson offered a draw at the thirty-sixth move, which was refused. The game then went to the forty-first move and Anderson, seeing that the game would inevitably end in a loss, resigned.

Anderson termed the resignation "common courtesy" explaining that it was "common practice to give your opponent some credit for skill, and when you have a completely lost game, you resign." The game could have gone for many more moves but the end was clearly in sight.

He was warmly congratulated on this game by spectators, who swarmed around the tired player. A telegram from Bondarevsky said, "Thank you for an interesting and creative contest. Heartily wish successes. I am sure our match will strengthen the connection between Soviet and Canadian chess players".

Future events of this kind are predicted due to the success of this match, which was played from the Coliseum during the Hobby Show. "There might be a possibility of an International Tournament in Canada with other international players invited, including such places as Russia," said Anderson.

"I'd like to meet Bondarevsky very much", he said. He may have the opportunity, for Canada will probably send a team, including him, to the World's Chess Team Championships this summer in Buenos Aires. Bondarevsky has a good chance to represent Russia in these matches.

The great interest in the match was illustrated by the crowds which formed around the booth, some following the play on their own boards. The moves and possibilitiles were outlined on a large demonstration board in the next booth by George Berner, an official second.

After the match ended, Anderson expressed regret that he "couldn't represent Canada better". He saidi later, "It was quite exciting, sitting in Toronto and being able to match wits with someone halfiway around the world'2'.

Chess interest was stirred up on the campus during the match. Some grad students in physics had a board in a cupboard and referred to it whenever they had opportunity. A chess board was seen in the JCR, and at the Chess Club in Hart House a large demonstration board was set up to follow the play.

The Varsity Sneers At . . .

JOHN BLACKMORE

. . . for accusing University of Toronto faculty members of "brainwashing" students. Blackmore, Social Credit MP from Alberta, declared that the effigy burning of McCarthy by Victoria students in the fall was a result of professors "indoctrinating the girls and boys in falsehoods". In a manner paralleling the tactics of red-hunter Joe McCarthy, he charged that University staffers had definite Communist leanings. No facts. No names. Just the smear.

Questions, Suggestions At Pre-election Meeting

Members of Hart House who think they can run it better than the present organization will have two opportunities today to air their views and complaints. The occasion is a prenomination meeting.

TODAY at 1:30 and again at 5:00 in the East Common Room, the House Committee is holding the meeting. The meeting is of special importance to those who would like to run for one of the six committees that run Hart House.

Those present will get plenty of opportunity to ask questions and even make suggestions on how they think the House could be better organized.

Garth McDowell, the Assistant Warden, and the Warden himself, will give short talks outlining the duties of members of the committees, and will also explain how the election will be run. The present members of the various committees will also be present to answer questions on their respective committees.

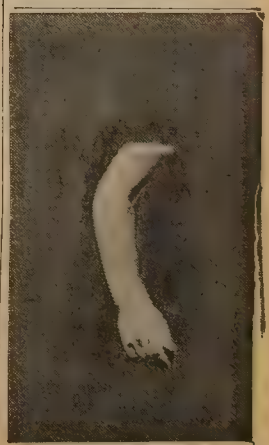
The meeting is also designed to acquaint the members of the House with how the house is run and what each committee has jurisdiction over.

In the past these meetings have lasted for as much as two hours, as a lively question period always follows.

Lit Hoopsters Play Vicsters Seek Revenge

The University College Literary and Athletic Society will meet the Victoria College Union tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m. in a basketball game.

The meet will be a return match for the hockey game, which the VCU won.



Roger (Bully) Bull IV UC said last night: "There is bound to be a victory". He refused to predict who would win.

One of the better known UC players, David Pierre (Goat) Gautbier will not play. He is currently being featured in the US.

Varsity Staff Given Cigars At Elections

A list will appear in Wednesday's issue of The Varsity of all the Varsity staff members who are eligible to vote in the staff elections for a new Varsity editor.

The elections will take place on Wednesday between 1:00 and 2:00. Candidates will offer a short speech and cigars to their enthralled audience. All members are urged to attend and if possible, bring some form of sustenance.

TWO VIEWPOINTS . . .

Is It IUS Versus CoSec Or Can We Cooperate?

(This is the final in a series of articles designed to acquaint Canadian students with the history and organization of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students — CoSec.)

By RICH ANCO

Istanbul showed there were two points of view existing among western national unions of students. The first held that student unions could continue to function within the western international organization (CoSec) as well as make gestures toward world student unity. The second felt that in so far as the reasons for creating CoSec were apparently being erased, then the western unions should positively take up the modified challenge of the Communist-led International Union of Students (IUS).

The first group is headed by student leaders such as Canada's Tony Enriquez and the more extreme Fred Jarvis, of Britain. They believe that western students should work to their utmost for and in CoSec, yet "keep the door open" for any possible rapprochement between the two well-defined camps.

In a letter to this paper, Enriquez wrote: "I do not believe this stand to be contradictory or hypocritical." Yet how he expects us to operate in what has come to be considered an opposition union, while also working to ease this union out of existence to provide for a development of world student unity, he does not explain.

The attitude of this first group is clearly expressed in an article in The London Observer written by Fred Jarvis, president of the British National Union of Students (BNUS): "The success of the recent Fourth International Student Conference in Istanbul constituted a setback to the efforts of the Communist-controlled International Union of Students to regain support from student unions outside the Soviet orbit."

It, thus, appears at first glance that Jarvis and others felt the "success" of the CoSec meeting principally lay in keeping the world more effectively divided. What had happened to those famous words "international student unity"?

"In the years immediately after the war, students from east and west joined to form the IUS, and for a moment it looked as if the organization might bridge the divisions which separated nations at adult level," Jarvis wrote. But then the Communists took over "and forced a handful of non-Communist national unions to sever relations with it".

After all this preliminary discussion Jarvis then makes the statement: "For the past year the IUS leadership has been making strenuous efforts to retrieve the situation but with little success." And, it is suspected, with no little help from Mr. Jarvis.

The second group, at present the minority in CoSec, disagrees with the concept of a divided student community. They contend that the "new look" of IUS is worth a try. They feel that if any unity is to be won, it will have to find expression in one international organization, not two.

This idealistic group recognizes the fact, that IUS has come halfway. It is ONLY half-way. But can we afford to overlook it completely?

Observers of the Warsaw IUS Congress meeting came back with the belief that there was a possible basis for co-operation in IUS between west and east. But the group of national unions that have consistently favored "no western union" since the birth of CoSec have lost their dominant position in the subsequent three years. Now the political-minded anti-IUS group has taken over the reins of control.

And so we have the two points of view about CoSec and its relationship with IUS and world student unity. This writer believes that if we are to show to the rest of the student world—particularly in Africa, the Middle East and Asia—that we are interested in student understanding, international co-operation and mutual aid and exchange, we must adopt the position of the second group.

Canada must make a positive effort to bridge the gay in the ideological world. What NFCUS proposed in Montreal last year was negative. By taking an Executive position in the opposition western organization and "leaving the door open" we have adopted a negative attitude. IUS will not compromise to lose face.

At least we could give their proposals a try, and in a positive manner.

RMC Club Sees City, Art Exhibit

A group of thirty-three Royal Military College (Kingston) students last week-end descended on Toronto to view the collection of European masterpieces currently being exhibited at the Toronto art gallery. Arriving Friday night, this group of art-conscious cadets assembled Saturday morning at the gallery and were taken on a guided tour of the pictures by Miss S. Drivers of the gallery. In the evening the cadets were shown the sights of the city by some local co-eds also interested (it is hoped) in art.

The trip was organized by Dr. Lauzier and Cadet E. Bobinski, president of the RMC Art Club, and proved very successful and popular to all concerned.

Can Still Get On Committee If You Run

Local aesthetes can serve in Hart House also. Any of these types should get themselves nominated for the Art Committee of Hart House. This committee will provide members with a rare opportunity to give full play to their aesthetic natures by hanging the bi-weekly art show.

Other duties of the Art Committee include the Art Classes under the instruction of Carl Schaefer which most of the members of the Art Committee have taken at one time or another; the choosing of the Art shows that appear in the Hart House Art Gallery at regular two-week intervals, and show some of Canada's greatest artistic talent, and in conjunction with this the Print Room that is always a very interesting sidelight to the main show in the Gallery.

The committee also sponsors weekly movies on Thursday in the East Common Room, that feature some art films plus any other movies of general interest. A library is also available, under the auspices of the Art Committee for anyone interested in improving their background of the artistic world.

In the Art Gallery the committee tries to present the most representative of Canadian artists to acquaint members and their guests with the latest in the Canadian Art movement. As well there is the yearly Undergraduate show that displays the work of the most talented artists at the University.

The committee also tries to send some of its shows around Southern Ontario, which involves quite a bit of work for the committee members as they have to pack and ship the show.

Every year the committee buys a painting for the permanent collection of Hart House. Funds are provided by donations and the budget of Hart House that provides a certain amount each year for this purchase.

Staggering Scholars

Nos Carabins

By RON GOULD

WATCH OUT !!! LES V'LA!!! This was the headline on "Le Quartier Latin," (the University of Montreal Newspaper), which greeted the forty University of Toronto students when they arrived in Montreal on Thursday night.

The Toronto Carabins staggered into Windsor station in Montreal loaded down with suitcases, skis, ski boots, skates and a toboggan. They were greeted by their Montreal hosts who transported them to the university where a reception took place.

Friday morning the Toronto and Montreal Carabins set out by bus for Mont Gabriel and a day of skiing, skating, singing, etc. It was twenty below zero but the combination of all the brightly-colored outfits, the cheers, the songs and the over-all enthusiasm of the Carabins warmed things up noticeably.

In the evening the Carabins returned to Montreal for a party at the Air Force Officers Mess. It was a sad looking lot that gathered there. But as the evening progressed the visitors and their hosts began to get their second wind, and, apart from a few novice would-be skiers who refused to sit down, no one would have guessed that the group had spent a strenuous day at Mont Gabriel. After the party came the night clubs and the midnight shows and finally (for a few people) bed.

Saturday morning was left free for purposes of recuperation so the day officially started with a luncheon at the University. There was a discussion on Canada and Canadians" took place, and this was followed by a cocktail party early Saturday evening for the purpose of lubricating the Carabins' hard-worked vocal chords.

Saturday evening the city of Montreal held a banquet for the Carabins, complete with oysters and filet mignon. Monseigneur Olivier Maurault, the president of the University of Montreal welcomed the Torontonians to "Hochelaga," and Monsieur Leon Lortie spoke about French and English-speaking Canada.

Committee Supervises Hart House

Membership in the House Committee offers a member a unique opportunity to have a controlling interest in the management of Hart House.

This committee is the one which controls the use of the House for all activities other than the ones under the jurisdiction of the special committees like the Debates, Art, Music, and Library Committees.

These duties include such things as the control of Great Hall, Tuck Shop, kitchen facilities, the general maintenance of the House, and the supervision of the House as a whole.

Various activities are also sponsored by the House Committee. Among these are the All Varsity Fall Dance, the All Varsity Quartet Contest, the annual Hart House Elections, the annual Christmas Party, and the Christmas party of Overseas Students.

Last year for the first time the committee published a small booklet that was given to all freshmen outlining all the activities in Hart House in which they could become a part.

Each year the committee gives a party to the Junior Boys of the University Settlement. This provides close to 150 kids with a rare treat in a dinner in Great Hall and a program of entertainment.

Committee members just act as hosts every Sunday as they escort visitors through the House. They do the same for the various classes of freshmen who are shown through the House in the fall.

Serving on this committee provides the member with a sound appreciation of the problems of running a very large institution.

Student Committee Set Up For Alcoholism Discussion

A series of three lectures and a symposium will be held discussing Alcoholism, its social and medical consequences on the University of Toronto Campus. The meetings will be held for four weeks each Tuesday, at 8:00 p.m. in the Vic Alumni Hall, starting tomorrow night.

The first lecture will be given bxy Professor of Anthropology, Gordon Brown, and will deal with "Alcoholism in our Society". The second one will be given by a psychiatrist, Dr. Armstrong, on "Alcoholism and Mental Health.".

The Director of the Shadbrook foundation for Alcoholics, Dr. Gordon Bell will give the third lecture on "Alcoholism." A graduate of the University of Toronto Medical Faculty, Dr. Bell has specialized in the study of Alcoholism since graduation.

The foutrh meeting will be a symposium chaired by Warden McCulley and consisting of a panel of experts and a committee of 20 students.

The student committee was set up in January. The chairman is Roger Bull, IV UC.

The committee was endorsed by the Students' Administrative council when the SAC decided to donate 25 dollars to the committee.

Weekend Replayed In Montreal

The second part of the annual Carabin exchange between the University of Toronto and the University of Montreal took place in Montreal over the past four days.

Last Thursday afternoon the forty Toronto Carabins left for Montreal to be the guests of the Montreal students who had visited Toronto early in December.

At a discussion group which was held on Saturday afternoon, the topic "Canada and Canadians" was considered. The two principal speakers were Jane Farquharson of the University of Toronto and Jean Roquet from the University of Montreal.

Roquet said that too often we foregt that a nation is a moral union formed for the common good of the country. He stated that regionalism as it exists today is not a cause but an effect of the reciprocal attitudes of the various elements in Canada, and he went on to say that Canadians should not set themselves to making Canada a "melting pot" but to understanding better, and profiting more from differences which exist.

Jane Farquharson pointed out the growing necessity for leaders in commerce and government in Canada to become bilingual, but she said that if the French language was to survive it would be up to the French-Canadians themselves to keep it from dying out.

Mr. Leon Lorte, who represented Mayor Houde at the banquet on Saturday evening also spoke to the Carabins. He said that although French and English Canadians are using different means they are working towards the same goal—a better Canada, and he stressed the importance of looking at the similarities between the two cultures, rather than at the differences.

Early Bird Gets T'nensis As Well As Worm—Mori

February 22 will be the last day on which copies of Torontonensis may be ordered, says Reggie Mori, editor of the SAC publication. Mori urged all students to order their copies of Torontonensis immediately, "Last year, many students were disappointed when they were unable to obtain the year book later on in the term." Mori said.

Mori stressed the idea that Torontonensis is not merely for students in their graduating year "This year, we are making a special effort to cover all student activities. There will be over 4,000 pictures in the book, and many of them will be of such things as football weekends, campus clubs, intercollegiate and intramural sports, and many other university activities."

Torontonensis may be ordered either from college or faculty reps, or from the SAC office in the old observatory building. The price is $4.50.

ONE ACT PLAYS

Lefty Triumphant

FIRST NIGHT

The first night of the University Drama Committee Festival was a varied mixture in point of type, interest and production. Victoria College presented Sweeney Agonistes, a verse fragment by T. S. Eliot which the author may or may not have viewed as suitable for expansion. Trinity presented one of Molnar's extended jokes, an airy trifle—"a piece of Viennese cheese", as the Adjudicator remarked. And St. Michael's contribution was Yeats' Land of Heart's Desire.

I felt that the Victoria production was the most interesting, Trinity's the most competent and that of St. Michael's possessed the greatest potentialities.

Sweeney Agonistes derives a great deal of its effectiveness from the mood it creates, which in turn derives from the nervous speed of the verse in which it is written. Mr. Robertson Davies, who had come from Peterborough to act as Adjudicator, felt that much of the power of the play had been lost in Wilf Pegg's striving for naturalism, particularly in the opening moments of the play.

Still Life by Ferenc Molnar is a slight and witty play with a tendency to drag in the middle. Its most noticeably successful features were its severely decorative set and the lushly decorative actress, played by Juliana Gianelli. He pointed out that students would be well advised to choose a play with strength in its own right rather than one written as a vehicle for the skill of highly trained professionals. To a sophisticated eye the weaknesses and oversights were more apparent than to the Toronto undergraduates themselves whose experience of highly stylised comedy of manners ends abruptly with I am a Camera—the audience loved every moment (except the middle ones) of it.

St. Michael's College was up against the problem of a play not too slight but perhaps too weighty for amateurs to tackle. The production was a brave try but fell down because the core of the play is its poetry and the actors lacked the technical polish (and at times the mere audibility) of the experts demanded by the text. Against a simple, perhaps too ominous, set and in the highly unpoetic costume of our own age, the play never really came to life, though plaudits are in order to the cast for attempting something so worthwhile and for not outright killing it with phony stage brogues — a frequent amateur failing.

SECOND NIGHT

The laurels of this weekend go to Leon Major, director of the UC Players Guild's Waiting For Lefty, presented aSturday evening in the UTDC Drama Festival at Hart House. According to Adjudicator Robertson Davies, Major's was "unquestionably the best job of direction" that he had seen this weekend or in the IVDL Festival at Kingston. The special "live" music, composed and conducted by Milton Barnes, was commended for its effect, in spite of its initial overdose. The producer of Lefty did his work "with brilliance", and Mr. Davies considered the play "a remarkably good job".

But not without reservation. Such a play seems misleadingly difficult to produce; its actual simplicity indicates Major's wisdom in choosing a play attuned to the ability of a university group. Acting was competent, but "not above a good undergraduate level."

Mr. Davies professed his distaste for this type of play, "not because it is Communistic, but because it is propaganda." As such, it depends on the suppression of the significant detail which helps to make art great. In Lefty, "the dice are heavily loaded against virtually everybody who is not consumed with misfortune"; and it is difficult to accept the validity of a case where there is absolutely nothing to be said for the other side. Lefty has strong emotional appeal for youth, and it disguises this appeal as thought. For these reasons, it has "very dubious artistic merit". Mr. Davies recommended this "excellent group" to attempt a play more worthy of their considerable talents, and for this purpose he suggested The Respectful Prostitute, by Jean-Paul Sartre.

Overtones, produced by the School of Nursing, was considered by Mr. Davies to be "a good job with a play of considerable challenge", by a group of actresses who were "inexperienced, but sincere and surprisingly effective". Again the chief criticism is levelled at the play itself—"a comedy with rather bitter overtones" and at its author, Alice Gerstenberg. If the play failed to achieve any remarkable dramatic stature, it is obvious that the nurses were not completely to be blamed.

As for an adjudication on the adjudicator himself: Robertson Davies is a charming and capable dramatic critic. He knows his business well, and in spite of the obvious difficulties of an on-the-spot judgment, he did this in a way that seemed as just as possible. As he pointed out, he had not come a hundred miles merely to tell a group of university players how very magnificent they were. In the kindest way he could see fit, he told them exactly what he thought they were. If the answer was not always magnificent, we hope that not many lofty ambitions were clipped at the root. It is the mark of a university student to take himself a little too seriously. Perhaps Robertson Davies helped to give all his listeners a touch of perspective. For this we sincerely thank him.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Miss Sadie Thompson

Somerset Maugham seems like a quiet, kindly old gentleman who wishes harm towards no person and simply wants to live out the rest of his life as peacefully as possible. That's why it is to be hoped he never gets a chance to see what the olumbia motion picture studio has done to his honest, human little story, Rain.

We had a right to expect better from producer Jerry Wald who has turned out many a fine motion picture in his day. But Miss Sadie Thompson, to be seen locally at the Odeon-Toronto. theatre, is a most unfortunate endeavour. Even if it were an original work, it would be bad—as a screen adaptation of Rain, it is even worse.

Rain, as I recall it, was a concise and blunt account of the conflict between a prostitute and a narrow-mindedly righteous missionary, who are thrown into close proximity in the passion-producing tropics. The missionary takes it upon himself — as his sort is wont to do—to reform this straying sheep, but, when success is his, his own human nature takes the upper hand and nature takes its course. Discovery of his own hypocrisy destroys the missionary and he kills himself. Meanwhile, the prostitute's disillusionment has been increased.

Apparently, this was too forthright to suit Hollywood. For one thing, the heroine couldn't be thoroughly and honestly wicked — she must be justified, transformed into a creature of circumstance. Then, a happy ending must be provided. To bring this about to provide comic relief and to give the picture popular appeal in the U.S., a contingent of Marines has been stationed on the scene.

Maybe the advent of the Marines wasn't so unfortunate at that. It provides for the only characterization among the principal players that rings true—the portrayal by Aldo Ray of the Marine sergeant. O'Hara is the, lusty, brawling, drinking type with a smidgeon of warm understanding buried not too deeply. Aldo Ray breezes through the part with crew-cutted ease. It must be said that it is not a particularly difficult sort of role but is mentioned here, out of sheer generosity, as one of the redeeming features of Miss Sadie Thompson.

Sadie herself is played with some show of sexiness by Rita Hayworth. It is rather a conventional performance. The prostitute is visualized as a loudly good-natured sort who is characterized by shouts of "C'mon boys, let's live it up". Only twice does she seem right and both instances are musical comedy devices; her shimmying dance in the Marine barracks and her singing of Blue Pacific Blues while reclining on a bed. For the most part, she is about as sexy as Ethel Barrymore.

Jose Ferrer's performance as Davidson, the missionary, is astounding. He succeeds in capturing the stiff, holier-than-thou mien of such a petty tyrant but for the most part he reads the lines with almost complete lack of conviction and feeling. Perhaps it would be a mistake to term this a bad performance but from Ferrer one expects better.

One thing that is quite well-done in Miss Sadie Thompson is the creation of atmosphere. The picture opens at the Marine base and the oppressive, sleepy heat and the boredom of the men is perfectly reproduced. The smoky, beery party at the barracks, the contrast to that of the formal, poker-faced meal and card game indulged in by the missionary and his friends and the damp, dismal mood of the rain, all are interesting effects.

It is a pity the characters and the story aren't half as real.

POVERETTA SCAMPOLO

Il Teatro

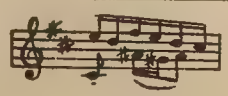
The production of Scampolo Wednesday night at the Women's Union Theatre was a great success. It is the first full-length play attempted by the members of the Circolo Italiano. Scampolo, a comedy in three acts, by Dario Niccodemi, was first producted in 1915, and it has remained one of the most popular works in the Italian repertory of light plays.

Scampolo, the heroine, whose nickname means "remnant", is a Roman waif. A primitive and candid creature, Scampolo is devoid of conventional hypocrisy which leads to a number of amusing situations—but she is instinctively honest and loyal. Unlike the waifs in neo-realist films like Shoeshine or Miracle in Milan, the heroine of Niccodemi's comedy is a creation of the author's fantasy. Half-child, half--woman, Scampolo develops emotionally rather than intellectually and we see the influence of her sincerity and loyalty on Tito, the unsuccessful young engineer, whom she inspires to make a new start in life.

In the first act Tito, and his mistress, Franca, a former night-club singer, are living in a cheap hotel. They are in very reduced circumstances but live in hope that Tito's project for a railway in Libya will be accepted. They meet Scampolo when she comes to deliver their laundry. Tito sends her with a letter to Giulio Bernini requesting a loan. Before her return, Giulio himself drops in and lends Tito some money. Soon after, Scampolo returns bearing the requested loan but it turns out that she has sold her most treasured possession in order to obtain the money for Tito.

The next act take place in the Bernini's home. Emilia, Giulio's wife, longs to see Tito, while Giulio takes a great interest in Scampolo. Meanwhile the latter has become Tito's protegee. When Tito, and eventually Scampolo, call on the Berninis we have an amusing variation on "the eternal quadrangle" theme while Tito flirts with Emilia and Giulio tries to seduce Scampolo.

In the last act Tito has moved to an attractive apartment. At first a lively altercation between Franca and Scampolo takes place. This is interrupted by Tito's arrival bearing the good news that his project has been accepted and that he is leaving for Africa in a few hours. As he refuses to allow Franca to accompany him, she storms out of the house never to return. much to Tito's relief. In the meantime Scampolo shows genuine grief at the news of his impending departure. Tito tries to console her but, as he is leaving the room, he bumps into a stranger.



This turns out to be Scampolo's teacher, for she has secretly been learning to read and write in order to be able to enjoy Tito's letters from Libya. Our hero is very moved at this further proof of his Scampolino's devotion and promises to return soon. The play ends as Scampolo, left alone with her teacher, bursts into tears.

Mr. Lenardon (Tito) gave a brilliant performance. Natural and vivacious in the comic passages, he was genuinely moving in the last scenes with Scampolo. His tempo and diction were excellent and he carried off the witty dialogues with great verve, and his gestures expressed a wide range of emotions.

He had a worthy partner in Miss' Monaco (Scampolo). Excellently cast in this role, she conveyed with wit and pathos the heroine's untamed spirit and her touching loyalty. Miss Amadio interpreted the difficult role of a spoilt and capricious woman (Franca) very adequately; a measure of her success was that she aroused the dislike of the audience. Mr. Walker (Giulio) was perhaps too placid to portray an Italian convincingly; he spoke distinctly but was somewhat monotonous.

Miss Adamson (Emilia) was a suitably frivolous wife and flirted amusingly with Tito. Of the minor roles, Mr. McClelland, as the unknown man-about-town, was the funniest; Mr. Grimaldi was very convincing as the unkempt waiter, while Mr. Bianchi (Giglioli, the teacher) rather overdid his feebleness and old age, introducing a comic note at the wrong moment. The entire cast was a credit to Mr. Molinaro's skilful direction. The sets and costumes were excellent. It is to be hoped that the success of Scampolo will encourage this club to produce another play next year.

Still Well

It would seem that the exclusive and excluding males of Hart House are again in need of free unaccompanied women to make up their audiences for concerts. Last night's concert, as well as the previous one, was not widely attended. And yet the quality of music has been high both times. This week Margaret Stilwell, contralto, sang. Earle Moss accompanied.

The accent of the program was on short songs of all types, with a few heavier ones and one aria. These songs are quite suitable to her voice as it is not particularly throaty although it is strong and has a marked vibrato. Her production is relaxed and her range is quite considerable.

O Man from the Fields by Hughes from the first group of ballads was presented with a quiet awe. The Ballymure Ballad was simply a good joke, brought out by a variety in the rise and fall of tone.

It seemed to me that she did not achieve the dramatic possibilities of either of the Brahms' songs, Komm Bald or Mein Madel hat einen Rosenmund. It is understandable in the second since it is essentially the male point of view to rave about his beloved rosy lips. The Strauss Zueignung, however, was given a broad sweep that was quite effective.

Hai Luli of Doguard is a wail of loneliness and doubt of a lover. The two other French songs also dealt with love. The aria Amour Viens Aider of Saint-Saens is a vengeance song. In it she covered a wide tonal range with exactitude and power. A display piece, both of technique and feeling.

She returned to English after intermission. The four songs arranged by MacLeod and Kennedy were in some ways the most attractive of the evening. Two of them simulate the rocking motion of waves; The Birlinn of the White Shoulders imitates softly rising waves and The Reiving Ship imitates a violent stormy motion. Accordingly in one the music moved softly from crest to crest and in the other it heaved over large intervals. In both she caught the feeling well, but in the latter the scoops over the intervals were a bit too exaggerated. The Coll Nurse's Lilt was just what it claims to be: a lilt. Miss Stillwell does this particularly well with lightness and fluidity.

Miss tSillwell's personality came across for this listener, the most clearly in A Woman's Last Word, by Bantock. The woman in the song is asking for peace, an end of quarreling. In contrast with the earlier Brahm's song she evidenced an understanding and a simplicity which were convincing.

Earle Moss gave his share as accompanist. Not only does he play with sensitivity, but he shows an intelligent appreciation of the fitting in of the two scores.

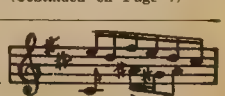
University TSO

For many years the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra has been conducted by undergraduates; last year the SAC decided to try to achieve a greater degree of permanence and asked the faculty of music to take the orchestra and the chorus under its wing.



The results of this move were revealed to the public gaze last Thursday evening in Convocation Hall. Two professional conductors —Robert Rosevear for the orchestra, and Richard Johnston for the chorus — as well as a large body of students of music were on view.

To be quite frank, there was no obvious improvement in the quality of the orchestra over that of the last few years. This is not meant to imply that Prof. Rosevear is not a capable and efficient conductor; it seems apparent, however, that the experience of the man in charge has less to do with the ensuing sounds than one might have thought. It was obvious that certain members were working very hard and capably, but that

Artistry in Rhythm

Stan Kenton, "America's man of music", brought his current cercert of modern jazz to a packed-to-the-roof Massey Hall last week. But the walls did not come tumbling down. Not that Kenton wasn't Kenton — it's just that he wasn't the old Kenton.

In his ""Festival of Modern American Jazz" Kenton has sacrificed his brassy, exciting arrangements for a mild, toned-down version of jozz. Except for occasional flashes of the "great" Kenton in Collaboratio and Artistry in Rhythm, his orchestra was standard and quiet. Maybe it was because he didn't have any of his old soloists with him on this tour.

The one disturbing feature of the Kenton aggregation was drummer Stan Levey who did everything to drown out the rest of the band and the solo offerings of Frank Rosselina, trombone, and Charlie Mariano, also sax. Levey is a good drummer, but he worked under the misconception that everybody should be watching and listening to him, and he showed it by playing his cymbals far too loudly.

The "Festival" as a whole was saved by the appearances of Lee Konitz, the Errol Garner trio, Charlie Parker and Dizzey Gillespie. When Kenton said that Garner was "quite an asset" to the tour he wasn't kidding.

Garner's off-beat technique was nothing short of terrific. His unique style and feeling for jazz fortunately made up for some of the weaknesses of the Kenton group. The crowd liked him, and in many ways he was worth the price of admission.

His renditions of Just Too Marvelous, April In Paris and Lover were tops, as most of his piano stylings are.

Candido, the fascinating Afro-Cuban conga drummer, is a valuable addition to the Kenton concert tour. His big strong hands, taped at the joints where the skin has broken and worn through, gave forth with a rhythm that was reminiscent of the very early days of jazz.

The clear and moving sax offerings of Parker in Night And Day and What Is This Thing called Love were, generally speaking, better than the purely imaginative playing of Konitz who was mostly drowned out by drummer Levey. Bassist Don Bagley was dull, disappointing and unimaginative.

Crowd-pleasing comedian Dizzy Gillespie was better than usual in this concert. He showed effectively that he is a master in the trumpet field, and handled the very frequent high notes well. His By The Alamo was inspiring, and his vocal offering of Oo Shoobee Doobee tremendous.

And then there was June Christie — WOW. Not only did she show she could dress well, but she proved she could sing.

Thanks to Kenton's quieter brass, the audience could actually hear Miss Christie sing. And she was good. Her simple and straight-forward Something Cool was out of this world, and she, of course, supplemented this with How High The Moon.

Charlie Mariano on Gerry Mulligan's Limelight, trombonist Bob Fitzpatrick on Wagon Wheels, Frank Rossilini on Pennies From Heaven, and the whole band on 23 Degrees North, 82 Degrees West were the best to come from the Kenton side of the concert.

TWO LOSSES FOR HOOPSTERS

Ice Blues In Cellar Score Another Loss Aurora Beats Them

Varsity Blues, idle from intercollegiate hockey action over the week-end, were shoved into the league cellar by the McGill Redmen. The Tribe, by turning back the University of Montreal Carabins 6-5 Saturday night moved into third place, one point ahead of the Blues.

respectively, 6 and 2. OAC dropped by one score from last year's 5.

The locals, meanwhile, played an exhibition game at Varsity Arena Friday night and were edged 7-5 by Aurora's senior "B" team. Aurora scored two goals in the first period and that proved enough to win as the teams traded five goals after that. Varsity scorers were Jim Wilkes, Ross Woods, Harry Boyd, Red Stephen and Pierre Perrault.

Badminton Femmes Trail McGill Girls In College Tourney

After a lot of confusion that continued right up to the day before they yeft, the U of T. women's intercollegiate badminton squad began on their merry way to Western to place second in the annual tourney there. The original team, made up of the two Walker sisters, Daph Cross and Noreen Cossar became Daph Cross, Jane Russell, Pat Godson and Marnie Littlejohn. At last, everything had seemed but at the last moment Marnie was unable to play so that Heather McPherson took her place.

Daph Cross, the sole veteran of the squad won four out of five in the first singles. Jane Russell, one of the two freshies of the team was faced with some prettty stiff competition and managed a single out of the five.

Pat Godson and Heather McPherson teamed up in the doubles event to win all but one out of five.

McGill, which placed first at the annual meet did what the Toronto team did last season when they won all games played. Each year, an outstanding player emerges in the intercol loop and this year it was Heather Doig of McGill. Heather has been competiting in Canadian junior events and for an eighteen-year-old contestant, she certainly stunned her opponents.

Toronto does not stand alone in second place but is sharing it this year with Queen's, last year's biggest menace. McGill totaled 15 while the two second place squads tallied 9. Western and McMaster held on to last year's positions and similarly scored the same totals.

Trampled By Western Mustangs Edged By Assumption Raiders

If nothing else Varsity's Basketball squads had a pleasant trip on the week-end. Playing the Western Mustangs and the Assumption College Purple Raiders on successive nights the Blues lost both contests; to the Raiders by a 59-56 count and to the Mustangs by a score of 72-61. The Baby Blues, going only to London dropped their game to the Western Colts 72-59.

The Blues came into London Friday night determined to repeat last year's humiliation of the Mustangs and for the first three periods of play they seemed likely to do it but a powerful last-quarter surge by the frantic Mustangs pushed the Varsitys under and gave the Londoners victory. Varsity led by a point at the half and increased their lead at the three-quarter mark—a feat that must be considered remarkable since they were playing almost all the way without their big gun George Stulac. George left the game on five fouls early in the second period.

Lou Lukenda had one of his best nights of the season, throwing in 20 points for the Blues while Bill Corcoran hit for 10 and Jim Russell for 8. Steve Oneschuk netted 8 also and Marv Tile tied Stulac with 6 apiece. Chris Ellis and John Girvin dropped 17 each for the Mustangs.

Officiating down at Western caused dissatisfaction among the spectators. Though some felt that George Stulac had indeed fouled five times, his violations were of a cheap sort that were going unpunished when committed by other players. But since refereeing is not the strong point of any city in the intercollegiate league we will pass no judgment on that at Western.

Twenty-five hundred Homecoming Night fans turned out at Windsor's Assumption College to watch their Purple Raiders defeat the Varsity Blues. Varsity, somewhat down-hearted because of their loss to Western the night before started weakly to give the Raiders an easy edge. Then the Blues struck back to cut down the Assumption lead and pull within three points by the final horn.

George Stulac worked off his anger at being barred from most of the Western game by controling the defensive backboard throughout the game and topping all scorers with 19 points. Strong defensive play when the chips were down put the Blues on a par with the Assumption boys who were considered well-night unbeatable before the game. In any return match Varsity should be an even bet to defeat the Windsor lads.

Ruby Richman, a Baby Blue guard, came up to the Seniors for the Assumption game and showed well enough to rate a chance to stick with the Blues. Assumption's golden boy, George Josephs hit for 14 points to lead the Raiders and was one of the outstanding men on the floor all night. Varsity fans will get their first look at Joseph and cohorts this coming Friday night when the Blues entertain the Purple Raiders in the Friday Athletic Night.

Helping George Stulac in Varsity's fight was Jim Russell with 17 points, making him the night's second high man while Assumption's next best men were Borowiec with 10 and Lou Veres and Dick McKenzie with 8 apiece.

Swimmers Split Week-end

A newcomer provided the spark over the week-end as Varsity's senior swimming team won one meet and came within heart-breaking distance of making it two wins. They whipped Rochester University 53-31 in Rochester Saturday night after being shaded on the last event 43-41 by Brockport State Teachers Friday night.

A victory in the final event of the evening, the 400-yard relay, gave Brockport its edge Friday night, even though the Blues won six of ten events. Newcomer Jim Beard led the way by winning the 220 and 440-yard freestyle races. Bruce Taylor topped the 50-yard freestyle and Bruce Sonley captured the diving. Jerry Van-Tets won the 200-yard breaststroke and Varsity's team of Len Rambusch, Jack Bernhardt and Van-Tets splashed home first in the 300-yard medley relay.

Bibi Stipitec grabbed his first win in a U.S. pool Saturday night as the Blues swamped Rochester. Bibi, who had been beaten by a whisker in the 150-yard individual medley Friday night, came through in that race Saturday. Jim Beard won the 220 and 440-yard freestyle events and freshman Bruce Taylor had his best times of the season as he grabbed the 50 and 100-yard freestyle. He did the 50 in 24.8 seconds and the 100 in 56 even. Dave Price won the 200-yard backstroke and Varsity's Taylor, Stipitec, John Grieve and Bernhardt won the 400-yard sprint relay.

The Blues have their stiffest Hart House competition of the season when they meet Niagara University on Friday's athletic night card.

Spree

Edmonton, Feb. 14—One of the highest individual scores ever registered in Canadian senior basketball was turned in here Friday night. Ed. Lucht of the University of Alberta Golden Bears spiurged for 88 points as the Bears overwhelmed the University of Saskatchewan Huskies 114-37 in an intercollegiate game.

IRC Lecture On Germany

"The position of Germany after the four-power conference" will be the topic of an address given by Professor W. G. Friedmann. The lecture will be given at an open meeting of the International Relations Club at 4:10 p.m. in Falconer Hall tomorrow.

Dr. Friedmann was born in Berlin, where he attended the University and studied law. After becoming a qualified lawyer, he practiced for a short time. He was a magistrate in a German industrial court when, in 1933, he got into trouble with the Nazis and left for England.

During the war, Dr. Friedmann spent three years with the Political Department of the Foreign Office. At its conclusion, he did military government work in Germany. He was on the Economic Reconstruction Administration of Western Germany under the Eisenhower Command, and was later on the British Control Commission. In 1947 he wrote: "Allied Military Government in Germany".

Dr. Friedmann was then appointed to the Chair of Public Law in Melbourne where he lectured for the three years immediately preceding his present appointment to the University of Toronto School of Law, where he is professor of International Law.

Ice Seconds Top Osgoode On Second Period Spurt

Every time the Varsity Intermediates play hockey, Herb Tilson proves himself more useful as a rearguard. In addition to scoring the goal that turned out to be the winner in Friday's game against Osgoode Hall, Herb managed to break up a dangerous Osgoode threat in the third period by meeting former Blue, Joe Kane, head-on at the Varsity blueline.

Tilson came out second best in the collision, bouncing off the little iron man, but the scoring threat went astray and the Baby Blues succeeded in holding off the Lawmen to gain a 5-4 victory, and their sixth win of the season.

The Seconds scored all of their goals in a torrid second period, the only one in which they played good hockey. Gene Robillard, Bob Primeau, and Johnny Adams collected tallies, while Paul Newman notched his first score of the season, and Tilson potted the winner at 14:57.

Osgoode opened the scoring at 17:15 in a slow first stanza as Joe Kane fired a screened shot that Hugh Currie never saw good. Terry Wardrop scored the first of two goals early in the second frame, and then the Blues unleashed an onslaught of four goals in nine minutes to take a commanding lead.

Wardrop got his second goal at 13:19 of the second, to put the lawyers within one, but Herb Tilson caught a loose puck on Hull's unprotected side to keep the Blues out of danger [illegible] the third period.

Penalties kept the Seconds tied up in the third frame, and they had trouble getting an attack under way. Osgoode monopolized play in this period, and the pressure paid off at 7:33 when Bob Dunford stickhandled out of the corner to beat Currie. Only tremendous netminding by Hugh Currie and clever puck-ragging by Gene Robillard kept the lawyers off the score sheet in the dying minutes of the game, and the Baby Blues were able to rack up another.

From the Blue Room . . . Rearguard John Prendergast made up for Herb Tilson's dumping by upsetting Joe Kane twice during the game . . . Ex-Blue Gerry Fitzhenry dumped Jim Jerome in the first period, and although not badly hurt, Jerome sat out the rest of the game . . . Both teams collected four penalties, Tilson, Walker, Robillard, and Primeau doing time for the Blues . . . Ryerson's Rams edged Western 4-2 on Thursday, and captain Bernie McIver got a match - misconduct, the game's heaviest penalty, for talking too much . . . Western Mustangs will be here this week and Coach Wheldrake feels a victory is in order . . . His own Osgoode club edged them 3-2 last week, and the big ice-surface at Scarboro Gardens made the difference . . . Besides, a win will give the Baby Blues the intercollegiate Intermediate Hockey championship.

around the ring, then pranced out into the crowd and when last seen was being led, gurgling happily, to the dressing room.

McGill won three titles in their four bouts and their third winner was the man with the round-house right (that never landed) Ossie Downes. Downes looked impressive as could be in winning the prelim but, coming up against "Brawn" John McGuffin of OAVC, Downes was in trouble. McGuffin ducked all of Downes telegraphed punches and worked in some solid clouts that rattled the smooth Redman. The judges seemed impressed with Ossie's intricate foot-work, though, and gave him the nod over McGuffin. This call, too, was not warmly received by the crowd.

Sherman Hood, the Bulky Bull of Queen's entered the ring to meet Martin Puhlvel of McGill in the Heavyweight final. Hood, a Gael footballer of great renown, used his grid knowledge well, as he kept rushing in to smother Puhlvel before the Redman could wind up to throw a punch. Martin was slightly miffed by these tactics and tried desparately to box but Sherm was having too much fun to start that kind of stuff and would have none of it. Surprising thing was that Hood won the title and a better heavy we have seldom seen.

Thus the Meet ended with McGill getting 13 points (had Puhlvel won they would have passed Varsity's 14 and won the championship) and Queen's 12. OAVC Aggies fought well but got only 5 points.

ROCHESTER PINS BLUE MATMEN

Rochester, N.Y., Feb. 14—Varsity's high-flying senior wrestling team ran up against a brick wall here Saturday evening. The Blues, who have been running up one of their best records ever, met a mighty squad in the Rochester Tech grapplers and came out on the short end of a 37-7 score.

The Rochester bone - benders flooring their most powerful team in many seasons, haven't had more than 10 points scored against them this year. They lost only one bout to Waynesburgh, the Four-Eye champions, and have beaten such squads as Purdue and Ithaca.

Considering this record, the Blues did quite well. Their only actual win came when heavyweight Harry Robinson pinned his man but Bob Waugh in the 165-pound class, had his opponent beaten until near the end of the bout when a reverse by the Rochester man tied the score.

Al Miller in the 175-pound class, Bill Bush at 155 and 145-pounder Ray Martin all made fine showings. Freshmen Jack McOuat and Murray Berman in the featherweight divisions were out of their class. Doug. Hamilton, Varsity's ace 191-pounder, did not make the trip, because the U.S. colleges don't have a separate division at that weight but make heavyweight a blanket classification.

The Blues will be idle this weekend unless some exhibition meets can be arranged. Next scheduled activity is the intercollegiate meet, which will be a two-day affair at Queen's on Feb. 26 and 27.

others through negligence or indifference were spoiling the total effect.

The major work of the evening was Haydn's Symphony No. 103. Thinking back to Elmer Iseler's performance of the 104th symphony a couple of years ago, one is inclined to the opinion that perhaps certain sections have deteriorated since then. The woodwind section did not come through very well, whereas the "sounding brasses" were too much in evidence. The strings, especially the cellos, were quite presentable, but were played so much at the same strength that they sometimes covered the woodwinds and were sometimes covered by the brasses. It resolves itself to a question of balance. The attacks were ragged as ever, and every so often a player came in a bar too soon; the general treatment was on the heavy-handed side, especially in the last movement.

The orchestra seemed happier in the two modern works on the second half of the program, especially the Sarabande, by Barlow which sounded full-blooded and professional .The Pomenade of Kennan, too was quite well-sustained. Berlioz' Hungarian March started out with the same control but it slipped away in the course of the March.

The chorus, on the other hand, was quite a bit better. The pitch for such an organization, was surprisingly good, and the effects were well planned and well executed. The soprano section occasionally stuck out, but generally was integrated. It was a pleasure to hear the virile tone of the tenors and basses as these two sections were conspicuously weak previously.

The slow and marked treatment of the Bach Chorales in the second half was powerful but did not have enough smoothness. The same treatment was extremely effective in the final Hallelujah, Amen from Handel's Judas Maccabaeus.

Fencers' Fare

A poor showing in foils competition cost the University of Toronto the intercollegiate fencing championship Saturday at Hart House. McGill came through in the foils, after Varsity had won the sabre and epee, to reign as team champions for another year. Varsity, however, was named winner of the Charles Walters Trophy.

Ted Reid defeated Toronto's George Montgomery 5-4 in the foils for his fourth straight individual title. Reid and Montgomery shared the George Tully Trophy for the outstanding fencer in the tournament. Wally Kostiw and John Andru won the sabre and epee championships, respectively, for Toronto by identical scores of 5-4.

RESULTS

Foil

Varsity—Montgomery 2-1, Kostiw 0-3, Sheppard 0-3.

McGill -Reid 3-0, Gordon 2-1, Subratto 2-1.

Sabre

Varsity—Kostiw 2-1, Andru 2-1, Montgomery 1-2.

McGill—Doremer 2-1, Gordon 2-1.

Epee

Varsity—Andru 2-1, Kovatch 2-1, Penciner 1-2.

McGill—Doremer 2-1, Stein 1-2.

On The Sidelines

By JO RATCLIFFE

The calibre of women's hockey on the Toronto campus has reached a point where outside competition could be quite, desirable. For a long time, this sport sat in the dark and was ignored by the gals but today it has become one of the most anticipated periods of the season. Each year sees more entries in the interfaculty loop and each year the playing technique picks up.

Hockey was at one time included in most private school curricula and in the late 19 — teens was a booming sporting activity with the ladies of Ontario. Then something hit the ranks of hockey enthusiasts and this sport declined to a spectator activity, at least from a woman viewpoint. After the war came the ice shortage and it looked as if hockey had had it, but instead came an upward demand for more participation and today the University is swamped with lady hockey players.

This loop is, with the exception of basketball, the most well-run on the campus. It has ceased to be a complete joke to the point where a bit of alien competition would be a help. The only trouble is finding this competition and this shouldn't be too difficult. Several Toronto schools and companies have been sponsoring hockey clubs for years and it might be an idea to try out the odd exhibition game with one of these squads just to see how we rank.

Speaking of Birds:—

We were not at all disappointed with the results of the badminton tourney this week, considering the mess in picking the U. of T. team. Teamed with Heather McPherson, freshie Pat Godson put up an excellent showing and should be a great asset to the squad next year.

Notes To You

Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent is giving the reception committees on his round-the-world trip a bit of trouble. Welcoming bands are at a loss as to what "national anthem" should be played when the Canadian chief-of-state stops off at European capitals.

In Rome and Paris "O Canada" is being played instead of "God Save The Queen" at the welcoming ceremonies. The confusion is resulting from the fact that Canada simply has no national anthem.

Neither "God Save The Queen" nor "O Canada" is officially recognized in Canada by statute or order-in-council as a national anthem. However, it has become traditional to open most public ceremonies in this country with the playing of "God Save The Queen". Some functions are opened by "O Canada", but the general practice is to play "God Save The Queen".

The question is why does this confusing state of affairs have to continue. It's about time Canada was able to say that such-and-such was her national anthem. It would only take a short time to write "O Canada" into the official books.

Canada, also, has no distinctive national flag. She is the only influential nation in the world without a national flag. Ottawa has been considering one for a number of years, but no real action has been taken on it outside of deciding on a handful of possibilities.

The red ensign is, however, the recognized flag of Canada by virtue of an order-in-council passed several years ago. Still, the Government did set up committees to look over designs for a distinctively national flag. What has happened to the committees and the flag?

Canada has no reason to hide herself behind the skirts of Britain. The days of imperial ties are gone; Canada is an independent nation. She has a right to both a distinctive flag and a distinctive national anthem.

Look at all the trouble it would save those poor little welcoming committees in the Italian and French capitals.

Internation Understanding

Is It Inevitable

This is the third in a series of three articles relating the discussions of the World University Service Seminar held at Caledon Farm, January 29-31. The discussion topic was entitled "Is International Misunderstanding Inevitable?"

By RAJ MITTRA

Perhaps everyone has sometimes reflected for a while with an international outlook to survey the trends of the world that he is living in and has asked the question, "Is International Misunderstanding Inevitable?" The same topic was taken up in a group discussion of WUS Seminar.

WE CERTAINLY DID NOT SEEK a point-blank answer nor a unique solution. Instead, our object was to review things in the view of present knowledge and sort out suggestions which may help us to play our part in the cause of world harmony.

We started out with a philosophical approach to tht Thtory of Communication. Tht paradox of Communication', one commented, is "built in" in this world since there are, under the sun, so many different types and groups of people, whose principles, definitions and symbols may inherently differ and reveal the fact that conflict and misunderstanding between the groups is inevitable.

HOWEVER, HUMAN MIND HAS natural inquisitiveness to know others and to make others know about him. Extension of personal contacts, of political relations and the religious missions from age-old days have helped different sections of the world to come closer and have attempted to develop identical ways of thinking and understanding. And with all the technological means in our hands today there seem to be enormous possibilities of harnessing efficiently various media of communication to enhance exchange of information between various spheres to shatter the walls of isolation and misunderstanding. Thus there is no need to take an attitude of pessimistic apprehension based on the earlier findings of apparent inevitability of misunderstanding and discontinue efforts to smooth out its effects; instead our views are to be moulded with more hopes motivated with creative efforts which have the capacity to imbibe into mankind the natural urge of harmony.

We filtered out one important fact out of our discussion that lack of knowledge and of adequate means and efforts of extending understanding. When an American traveller asks questions about Red Mounties and Eskimos in Canada, a Canadian expresses false notions in a midsummer trip to France and Western periodicals comment about Indian religious customs. We, who are misconceived, simply flare up. However, it is essential to look at the basic cause and try to eradicate it.

LET'S TAKE A LOOK AT THE figures for a moment. Reports from UNESCO tell us that present means of exchange of information between various parts of the world are grossly inadequate in comparison to the need. Thus, there is enormous need for co-operation with these international organizations and to exploit fully the potentialities of the various media of communications at our hand.

The appeal to fundamental emotions such as art, music, painting can glide down from one group to another, fetch appreciation and help understanding. Other enthusiastic approaches would be through sports. Radio programmes, books and literature seem to be quite efficient. Personal contacts by exchange of personal officials or as tourists can contribute a great deal provided they make efforts in these directions apart from sightseeing. On a national basis "propaganda of action" stands out as the best. Steps taken by Commonwealth countries and thus also by Canada, in the Colombo Plan as a token of good will, mission of peace to the world by Indian action in Korea and economic development of Western Europe by Marshall Aid are examples of it. However, in all such political and economic fields it is necessary that a nation chalks out its program of action such that there results no violent conflict of ideals with the recipient or with other fellow nations.

IN A NUTSHELL, THEREFORE, though misunderstanding, misconception seems inevitable from the condition of the world today, we can still proceed with undaunted spirit and with a sense of duty dictated by international morality to ease up tension, and to bridge up barriers wherever possible.

In the universities, through student exchanges, seminars and genuine effort for help we can effectively contribute enormously to this cause. Maybe we could draw the attention of the respective governments by our successes so that more effort is directed in efficient means. The moral therefore asks us to start doing things, with promise of enormous prospects.

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We of the Korean Intercollegiate Students' Club, consisting of students of various colleges and universities in Seoul area, feel the honor to write this letter to you. We organized our club in Jan. 1953, for the following purposes:

1. To develop the intercollegiate relationships and friendships among the students in various schools.

2. To research and discuss about all studies and to raise and firm our knowledges, to behave ourselves as cultured men and women abreast with worldly noted scholars and professors.

3. To reconstruct Korean civilization and culture compared to the leading countries and our individual culture.

All members are so much interested in the student's life in United States, especially in their club activity that we have been inviting speakers who are mostly American civilians and officers, and to listen in their speech. If you are interested in some articles of Korean Students life including our club in Seoul, send us suggestion of that articles. So, henceforth, wo would like to exchange correspondence with you.

Speaking of general students situation, we think that reading is most important things to promote knowledges, but unfortunately there is no such adequate circumstance for us to read books. As most of students haven't a text book, we have to use mimeograph books and notes from class except a few students. The books in school library are mostly old edition, published in Japanese in fifteen years ago or more before that, but only small quantity of new edition. The text in English are used from the first year in college but are much to few.

For the above reason, it is unable to satisfy passion of reading for many thousand students with the small quantity of books.

If your students would able to contribute us some books, it will give us a great power to establish a little library ourselves.

Dear Editor, I wish that you will communicate this letter to every students-organization in your school.

Chang Suk Chun.

Policy-Making Reader

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The Varsity's decision to continue its "sneer" feature seems to raise a question of editorial responsibility. The SAC feel that the editors should be more or less responsible to them and refrain from criticizing or "sneering" at campus personalities. The Varsity on the other hand feel that to submit to any such dictum would be denying freedom of the press.

Now I only think it fair to say that every kind of newspaper or periodical owes a duty to its readers and must be responsible to someone. It must conform its policy to the wishes of its advertisers or its paying subscribers if it wants to keep its circulation. The paper's freedom to publish its own opinions is actually its freedom to publish the opinions of those it purports to represent. If you dislike those opinions it is your right not to patronize the paper.

Now the Varsity is a student newspaper suppported by the fees of all the students. The SAC is the elected representative body of all the students. If the Varsity fails to abide by SAC wishes its is in effect denying the freedom of the student body to have what they want printed.

Freedom of the press is an undoubted right but I also suggest it works two ways. The freedom of the student body to applaud or reject the policy of its own paper is important too.

Your Answer, John

Editor,
The Varsity:

In his article in Maclean's on the Youth Festival, John Loftt wonders why he was invited to attend. The Festival was open to all young Canadians, regardless of religious or political belief. The same will be true of the 1955 Festival. About 40 Canadians went to Bucharest. The main deterrent for many others was the threat of loss of jobs, or U.S. border trouble as with the Tri-Bell Basketball Team.

SEMINAR THREE PICKED

The students to go on the World University Service trip to Europe this summer have been named. It was announced officially last night by the National office of WUS that Jane Farquharson, III UC, Scott Symons, III Trinity, and Doug Hamlin, III Vic were chosen to represent Toronto.

Two students from the University of Toronto were originally scheduled to go on the trip, said Professor Coleman, chairman of the administrating committee of WUS in Canada. However, the Toronto selection committee asked for a third place because of the large number of good candidates, and the size of the U. of T.

As there were three places unallocated in the national schem e, one was given to Toronto. The seven students that were originally to go from Ontario would have their way paid by a provincial grant to WUS. The responsibility of raising the money for an eighth person (since there are now three from Toronto) rests with the University of Toronto and Toronto WUS.

"I'm delighted to go. It's absolutely tremendous," said Jane Farquharson when she heard that she had been chosen. She said that if possible she would like to go on the tour to Germany.

"This is very pleasant, very significant, very enjoyable," said Scott Symons. "I'd like to go to the Moon — or West Africa." A few minutes later he said, "Isn't it nice that Janey's going. I'll have to chaperone her."

The students will be spilt up into five study tours to include Scandinavia, Yugoslavia, France, Germany, Czeckoslovakia and West Africa. Spain has also been named as a possible country to visit.

The group touring Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia will first spend seven days in Switzerland studying international organizations. Before the tour of France and Germany another group will visit Paris for four days to study UNESCO.

At the end of the tours these groups will combine to visit the International Summer University in Britain for two weeks and will then be allowed to travel on their own until the end of August.

Students were chosen on the basis of participation in campus activities, both academic and extra-curricular. Preference was given to senior undergraduates who will be returning to the uni-

Contest Entries Pass Record For Hart House Photo Meet

The 32nd Annual Photographic Exhibition arranged by the Hart House Camera Committee received a record-breaking 511 entries as against last year's 412. One hundred and fifty Black and White prints were submitted, thirty of these being entered in the new Karsh Trophy Competition for campus life and activity, and there were also 361 transparencies being entered. This breaks last year's all-time record by one hundred.

The winners of the competition were announced on Monday night. The senior winner is R. J. Huffman, II UC. He also wins the A. F. Coventry Award. The Junior winner is D. A. Urquhart, II SPS, for his entry "The Blacksmith Shop". He wins the K. B. Jackson Award. The Color Award for the best color transparency was awarded to "First Snowfall" by P. Tobias, I Trinity.

A new award, donated by Yusof Karsh, or pictures depicting campus life, and activities, was won by G. E. Sparrow, IV Dentistry. His entry was a piece entitled "Junior Common Room".

The jury of selection for this exhibition were Mr. E. E. Amsden, President of the Color Photographic Association of Canada (Toronto Branch), Miss Evelyn Andrus, ARPUS, APSA, and William McCullagh, a well-known commercial photographer.

McCullagh said that the show was much better than he had expected for a university photographic exhibition. Miss Andrus said, "I would like to see more people sign their own photographs, rather than block them in at the bottom".

The exhibition will be on display in the Art Gallery of Hart House, from Tuesday, February 16, to Saturday, February 27.

The Karsh Award was donated by the famous Canadian photographer to stimulate interest in the photographing of the university campus, and its activities. Already this year this portion of the exhibit has been most popular.

This has always been one of the most interesting exhibits of the Hart House Art Gallery, and this year promises to be no exception.

Kops Karsh

Warden McCulley presents the Karsh Trophy for the best photo of campus life and activities in the Hart House competition. The cheerful winner is Ted Sparrow, a Varsity staff photographer. His picture, "Junior Common Room" is shown right behind the trophy. All the entries can be seen in the Hart House Art Gallery from Feb. 16 to Feb. 27.

Russians Impede Union Of Partitioned Germany Says Varsity Professor

"The Four Power Conference would be a possible solution to the problem of the unification of Germany and it could also lead to a break in the Cold War", said Professor M. G. Friedmann, professor of International Law at the University of Toronto School of Law.

He was addressing an International Relations Club meeting in Falconer Hall yesterday. He was speaking on the position of Germany after the Four Power Conference.

He did not think there was any chance of the Big Four being successful in unifying Germany unless the Western Powers gave up any possible military alliance with the Germans. The West is unanimous in its desire to have the Germans enter the European Defence Community, with the possible exception of France.

He said that the Russians will never permit elections in East Germany because the Communists would only poll about 8 per cent of the vote. He said that all Germans want unification on the surface, but that Western Germans are really afraid of it as it would mean a great burden on their economy as they would have a job raising East Germany to the standards in West Germany.

The East and West Germans are separated by some very subtle distinctions that could lead to eventual complete partition of East and West Germany, and the longer the partition lasted the more entrenched it would become.

The amazing economic recovery of West Germany has made it one of the most important trading nations of Europe, he said, and as trade could be very considerable between East and West, and the U.S. is about to cut off some of her aid to Europe, there seems to be a natural trading relationship between the two sections of Germany. This trade, he said, will eventually result in a gradual easing of the strained relations between divided Germany.

"Tension is relaxing even now, there is much less feeling of immediate danger now," he said.

Stulac Stumps YMHA

By JIM PROUDFOOT

One of the things Varsity's basketball Blues learned in their encounter with YMHA Blues last night at the Y's new Spadina-Bloor diggings is that all things are relative. The Varsitys were quite complacent in their belief that they had two very tall men in Lou Lukenda and Marv Tile. But Lou and Marv were dwarfed by YMHA's gigantic John Palmer, who used his great height advantage to control the rebound situation almost completely. However, Palmer fouled out towards the end of the game and George Stulac came up with another phenomenal display in the late stages. The net result was a 65-53 win for the U. of T.

The same two teams had worked out last week at Hart House with YMHA carrying off a one-point decision. This match was another warmup for both. The Varsity team has its big test of the intercollegiate season Friday night at Hart House, when the undefeated Assumption College Purple Raiders come to town. Meanwhile, the YMHA boys will be playing host to teams from all over North America in the National Jewish Welfare Board tournament this week-end.

The teams waltzed through a slow first half, with Varsity walking off with a 28-24 lead at intermission. Stulac, Jim Russell and Lou Lukenda weren't hitting with any regularity and the whole team was befuddled by the amazing rebounding of Palmer. Long John wound up fouling out with almost ten minutes to go and a personal score sheet of 19 points. Veteran Max Grossman added 12.

Stulac had the crowd of more than 250 people buzzing over his scoring feats in the last quarter. Scoring baskets in almost every way possible, he totalled 23 points on 10 field goals and three foul shots. Jim Russell didn't start finding the range till late in the game either but was good for 13 points anyway.

Marv Tile, who started and saw more action than he has seen all season, kept the Blues in contention early in the game and tallied ten points for the game. Bill Corcoran got seven and Lou Lukenda six.

Comics And Buck Rogers Possible For HH Library

Among its other functions, Hart House provides an outlet to male undergraduates with bookish tendencies. These tome-worms will have an opportunity to control the reading material available to them by running for the Library Committee in the Hart House elections.

The Hart House Library Committee serves as the administration of the Hart House Library and also the Reading Room. The committee selects the new books that are added to the collection each year, and also selects the periodicals that are subscribed to each year.

The library also owns a very valuable private press collection. This collection is usually all locked up except for a few exhibits that are placed out for exhibition in the show cases in the second floor rotunda of Hart House.

The committee also buys additions to this collection as its budget allows. In this collection are such books as the Coronation Bible, the King George V Stamp Collection, and the Nurnberg Chronicle.

"The Hart House Library is by no means confined to large tomes on philosophy," said Tom Virany, III SPS, a member of the committee. "Those who are on the committee have the privilege of adding comic books to the collection, or even books on Science Fiction. The latter I consider to be an excuse for frustrated unscientific minds to reassert their practicability in our technologicaly minded society. Comic books, on the other hand, I consider to be only for those who lack a sense of humour. The deporable trend has been to add these books to the collection," said Virany.

Varsity Staff Elections

The following people are eligible to vote in the staff election for editor of The Varsity which will be held in The Varsity Office today at 1:00 p.m. Candidates will give short speeches before the vote. Although applications do not close until Feb. 22, Aubrey Golden, II UC, and Tom Virany, III SPS, have announced that they will run.

Orie Loucks, Rich Anco, Elinor Bernstein, Grif Cunningham, Aubrey Golden, Adele Krehm, Mani Thaler, Ross Dunn, Fred Ross, Mary Burbidge, Fraser McIntosh, Ted Sparrow, Moishe Reiter, Jim Proudfoot, Jo Ratcliffe, Fran MacLean, Peter Grant, Andy Truan, Mike Erdei, Carol Hoffman, Bob Brown, Tom Middlebro, Lew Rosenberg, Harold Strom, Marg Kell, Tom Virany, Mary-Alice Hunter, Pat McColl, Peggy Campbell, Terry Miller, Cathie Gray, Pat McColl, Jane Edgar, Isobel Reid, Colin Graham, Wendy Michener, Nancy Donnell, Ricky Arnold, Les Lawrence, Chuck Lapointe, Germaine Clinton, Chris Helleiner, Cathie Breslin, Lynn Dibblee, Tom Daly, Roger Bull, Marg Nodder, Marg Moogk, Harvey Kerpneck, Joan Fisher, John Wilson, Ann Stark, Fred Gray, Leo Madden, Flo Middleton, Jane Kelly.

Academic standing, knowledge of foreign languages, and interest shown in international organizations are important factors in the selection. The main thing is the amount which the students will be able to contribute to the University on their return, Professor Coleman said.

See Hope For Upswing In HH Election Interest Co-operation Is Needed

At the height of the Depression in 1931, some 51 per cent of the undergraduate Hart House members voted in the annual March elections.

This March, looking back at last year's new surge of votes from 14 per cent to 32 per cent, the elections committee confidently feels that the trend is towards a definite revival of the voting fire of old.

Don McKenzie, House Committee secretary, said last night that March 3, election day, will tell the story He emphasized that to have a good hotly-contested election, capable, enthusiastic and numerous candidates are needed to compete for the 40 positions open on the Library, Debates, Music, House and Art Committees.

A few names have been handed into the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor beside the telephones, during the first two nomination days. Nominations are welcome in the Undergraduate Office from 9:00 to 6:00 p.m. today, Thursday and Friday.

Similarly, members of the Camera, Glee, Chess, Amateur Radio and Exploration Clubs must obtain their nomination forms in the Undergraduate Office by Friday, February 19, at 6:00 p.m.

Candidates may put election signs in the main hall and in the lunchroom beginning Sunday morning. The signs now hanging are samples from the Hart House permanent collection of past elections.

The election sub-committee has prepared special placards which will allow the voting electorate to meet their candidates.

Garth McDowell, Chief Returning Officer for the Hart House Elections struck an optimistic note last night when he said: "Hart House is still a great working experiment in democracy for University Students. Many of the Student Unions in other colleges and countries operate on an appointed Committee system. This has the some time advantage of easier handling btu is not a truly representative body of the students. Under this democratic system there always is a great need for enthusiastic and campaigning nominees."

Fourlorne In Finals

The three judges in the Hart House quartet contest were unanimous about two things after yesterday's third set of preliminaries: (1) "The Fourlorne Polecats" were winners for the current week; (2) It will be extremely difficult to pick a winner from the three which will compete in the final contest next Tuesday.

In adding their name to the list of previous winners—"the 575 Four and "The Skulehouse Four" —the Polecats brought down the house (the East Common Room of Hart House) with their hillbilly-type songs. They totalled 464 out of a possible 600 points. "The Fourlorne Polecats" are Joe Stipec, Meds, Bill Goldie, Forestry, Pat Cream, Grad Studies and Barry Allen, Emmanuel.

Runner-up and the only other contestant yesterday was "The Freshmen Three Plus One," which scored 421 points.

Finals will be held next Tuesday at 1.30 p.m. in the East Common Room. Each of the three quartets will sing two songs, each number being scored out of 100 points. The group with the highest overall total will be winner of the fourth annual Hart House quartet contest and each member of the winning foursome will receive a replica of the permanent trophy. Judges for the contest are Chappie Chapman, representing the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, Garth McDowell, Assistant Warden of Hart House, and Jim Proudfoot of The Varsity.

Coon Country Quartet

They may look and sound like Whiffenpoofs, but when it somes to comes to smell, let's forget about "Whiffen." These are "The Fourlorne Polecats," who might give too much sense to their name. Having won in yesterday's semi-finals, their next field to conquer is the Hart House quartet contest finals on Tuesday.

Five Year Plan Vetoed By Engineer Debaters

College St., Feb. 16 (CUP)—The engineers yesterday turned down a proposal to make Engineering a five-year course. The vote was 35 to 23 against the motion at the debate held at lunchtime.

Bob Langford, IV Eng. Bus., said, "Engineers are professional men rather than technicians." As such, he said, they need more than technical training. They have to deal with people, and for this need knowledge of the humanities, sociology and psychology.

He stressed the importance of business subjects, economics, statistics, which is important in quality control, and time and motion study. Langford said in order to do all this, and gain a better knowledge of engineering fundamentals, four years is not enough.

Morley Marks, III Chemical, said: "This five-year plan will deprive the engineer of one of the most productive years of his life". He said he had been told by top officials of the faculty that there is absolutely no possibility of a five-year course ever being instituted.

He said, "the purpose of an engineering course is to teach methods." He divided up the engineer's job into three parts; to find a worthwhile problem, to solve it, and to sell the solution.

"The existing course teaches you to solve problems," said Marks. "If you can't do it in four years, you'll never do it in five," he said.

Val Kipiniak, I Electrical, said the course must be extended because of the great increase in the size of the field of engineering. He said, "as the field gets larger, the preparatory course must cover more."

"There are two ways to meet diversity," said Jim Vasoff, II Eng. Bus. He said, "either each man must work more, and be responsible for more, or each man must specialize more". He recognized the need for someone to correlate the work of all the specialists, but he pointed out that this was why Engineering and Business had been set up.

He said the financial burden of a five-year course would be too much for the students, and also for the university, since students only pay about 45 per cent of university costs.

Med Winner Is Dr. Adrian

The Charles Mickle Fellowship for 1954 has been awarded by the University of Toronto to Dr. Edgar Dougais Adrian, master of Trinity College, Cambridge, England. Dr. Adrian received the award for his research in the physiology of the special senses.

The Fellowship, of the value of the interest on $29,000, is awarded annually by the Council of the Faculty of Medicine to the person considered to have done the most during the previous ten years to advance sound knowledge of a practical kind in medical science or art.

Kings for a Day

Ryerson Fools Varsity

Into the "lion's den" walked the two Ryerson journalism students, and when they were finished, lo and behold—a 51 line story on page three of The Varsity. Unknown to the powers that be in the editorial office of this paper, the two went out to cover the St. Mike's lecture last Tuesday and returned with a story which was definitely not indicative of uncoached beginners.

It all started in the Ryerson cafeteria, where The Varsity may be found due to transient Pharmacy students. Paul Nowack and Barry Hughes, after reading an advertisement for staff, decided it might be fun to "join the staff".

In a letter to the News Editor, Grif Cunningham, to whom they applied, Hughes said, "It was a great lark, and lots of fun, but I feel I can't let it go without a word of appreciation. Everyone we came in contact with during our short stay was kind and helpful."

They first showed up for the weekly workshop on Friday noon and came back Tuesday to take their first assignment. They said that they were first-year students at Victoria College and that their names were Paul Nowell and Larry Hugheson.

Nowack later admitted to being "a bit worried" because "we figured it could have fallen through easily if anyone asked us for an ATL card."

"The story was quite well written for "beginners" that is, said Aubrey Golden, Assistant News Editor, but as Hughe's letter pointed out, "we did throw in a few errors in style and structure, in order to mark it as an amateur effort."

Their story appeared last Wednesday and was followed by an article in the Ryersonian, headed "The Prodigal Sons Return Rejoicing". The article described the boys as "waiting for Varsity's usual 21-gun barrage aimed at the "Gould Street Boys."

The two excused themselves from future assignments on pressure of exams.

McGill Daily Given Boost

Montreal, Feb. 12 (CUP) — The Students' Council of the University of McGill has passed a motion to increase student fees by two dollars. One dollar will be allotted to the student newspaper, the McGill Daily.

The Daily has requested that the full increase be given to them to maintain the frequency and size of issue. However, the Council felt that the other dollar would be essential for the maintenance of the Student's Union and other expenses.

Students May Pursue Free Program Plans

Two students, who were forced to charge for programs to Maple Leaf Gardens Hockey games which they were planning to give away, have succeeded in their drive. From now on they may give them away free.

The two, Harvey Silver, I UC, and Syd Steiner, II UC, were granted permission to give away the programs by the Board of Police Commissioners.

"We just want an opportunity to carry on business in a legal, ethical manner to carry us through University", they said. They get their revenue from advertising.

They sold programs at the Argo games last season for twenty cents, underselling the official programs, printed by the club, by fifty cents.

Mayor Allan Lamport, himself a member of the Board of Police Commissioners, said in January, before the case was adjudicated, that the students' activities were unfair to the Gardens and other organizations which pay heavy taxes.

Steiner said, "I am sure our little enterprise will not bankrupt Maple Leaf Gardens."

McGill Carnival Shows Two Varsity Musicales

Varsity students received an invitation to McGill Winter Carnival this year. A special "Football Rate" train is being provided to Montreal, for the Carnival which begins Thursday night and continues through the weekend.

The largest Ice Castle ever built on this continent will be featured at the official opening of the Carnival, on Mount Royal night, reports the McGill Daily. As well as a torchlight parade, a skating show and a sleigh ride are planned for the evening.

An International Ski meet and an Athletics afternoon are planned for Friday. In the evening will be the ice festival, with an intercollegiate hockey game (between McGill University and the University of Montreal) and a skating show. That night the Winter Carnival Queen will be crowned.

Two campus shows from Toronto, the Vic Bob and UC's "Where on Earth", will take part in the intercollegiate Carnival Revue, Saturday afternoin. The Carnival will conclude with a ball Saturday night.

"Although our Carnival has attained something of an international reputation, we have felt that more emphasis on the Canadian is necessary in any true Winter Carnival," said J. A. Robb, President of the Students' Society at McGill University. He emphasized the invitation to Toronto students.

Sam Clasky Will Address Socialism Ia

"Agrarian society inevitably leads toward co-operative action," will be the theme of a talk by Sam Clasky, at the "Socialism Ia" meeting on Thursday at 1 o'clock in Room 4, UC. It is sponsored by the UC CCF Club.

Mr. Clasky, who comes from Estevan, Saskatchewan, the heart of Canadian agriculture, has been raised in rural environment.

Mr. Clasgy says that he considers the CCF movement in the west to be an outgrowth of agrarian protest against big business exploitation, finding its first expression in the Co-op movement, and then turning to political action. He maintains that there is a community of interests between the farmers and workers who both will achieve their ends through socialist political activity.

In The Beginning . . .

The Making Of England

(This is the first in a series of articles designed to acquaint students with the History of England.)

By RICHARD HOBSON

In the beginning, or not long after, the Roman sway had pased over the bulk of the country. The clause of the passovr was Clausius. Britain became indeed, and in action, little more than a military colony. The unarmed mite was transformed into an armed might; civilation, hindered by the fens wasting down to the woodlands, was pict apart by scotch and sexons. Sidonius, abhoring the slave-hunting pirates, maintained, in the Near Eastern tradition, that four were enough. It ended up, that the Saxon Shore, juted too far out into the sea, was pict by the East-Sexe. After this, the middle-age spread of the Engle swamped the marshes in all areas. This movement was called "The March of the Men of the Marsh." So with the passing of time, Britain became English, and England was made in the end.

ROBERTS GALLERY

Painters Eleven

Placed in the front window of the Roberts Art Gallery, 759 Yonge St., just above Bloor, is a rather violent, too violent perhaps, but very colourful painting by Harold Town, "Tumult for a King." It will hang there presumably until the 27th of this month. If you stand outside for a few minutes you may observe the young, the middle aged, the elderly, pause, and shake their heads, and pass on. You will near murmers of "who would pay $400 for that," for as one urchin carefully explained to another in my hearing, "that is modern art." In sooth it is. The slogan of these eleven painters who have gathered together is this: "This exhibition is not a compact to agree, but rather the expression of a long repressed desire on the part of eleven painters to disagree harmoniously in terms visually indiginous to this age."

The critic, the enthusiast, will turn in and find what will probably be the most exciting exhibition and perhaps the most discouraging, seen in Toronto this year. One cannot but feel almost all of these artists have a tremedous personal vision. Few enough people today have vision of any sort, and it is seldom personal, so we should be thankful that there are those who are gifted with such a forceful expression. But too often the expression is so powerful, and so personal, so much a part of the inner soul of the artist, that the old problem of communication confronts us once more. and we too must shake our heads and pass on.

Perhaps that is too harsh. One does not need an experienced eye to observe that in Hortense Gordon's paintings, "Ribbon Building," "Blinking Lights," and "Animation" the vision is weak and we are shown little more than a dull pattern of colours, that in most of the paintings by William Ronald, Harold Town, and Ray Mead, we find much in their sense of composition that we can admire, but seldom any strong relation between title and painting. "Back Through Sound" by William Ronald, for example, is not nearly as successful as his "Back Through Noon" in the Water-colour show in the Dundas Street Galleries. The canvas is too heavily laden with form and colour to allow the mind to indulge in any metaphysical contemplation.

Perhaps the greatest value of this exhibition is simply that of seeing the younger ("How avauntgarde can you get?") artists in a group of their own. Cahen, to me, though still a very strong figure, was not as forceful when compared with his contemporaries as he is alone. Then, too, the delicate composition and fragile forms of Kazuo Nakamura were not at all diminished, but rather seemed to show a vigour and strength of quality. I found his two paintings, "Morning Mists," and "Forests," among the very best of the collection. Nakamura, more than any other, is able to convey to the laymen a sense of purpose, a knowledge of the direction in which the artist is heading. Another very interesting member of the group was Tom Hodgson. In one of his entries, simply intitled "Painting" there is again a sureness, and also, perhaps Hodgson is alone in this, a sense of enjoyment. A stranger to me was Alexandra Luke. She had one work in the Water-colour show, an abstract "Dark Accent" which struck me at the time as having little more than a superficial grasp of her medium. However, in two oils at the Roberts Gallery she shows considerable talent, and one which I think will develop.

The Roberts Gallery is only ten minutes walk from the campus, and there is always the Wellesley Bus and the Bloor cars. A visit there is well worth the effort.

By MOISHE REITER

Rip Van Winkle was a legendary old lush who went on a tear and stayed stoned for twenty years. When he finally woke, eyes bleary and head splitting, he found that the world had passed him by — which just goes to prove that Grandma knew whereof she babbled when she said that Time waits for no man. This old tale was thought the ultimate in suspended animation yarns but modern progress has put poor Rip to shame.

With Our Eyes Wide Open . . .

. . . we're sound asleep here at Varsity. Like Winkle the Ripper we had ourselves a ball some twenty-five years ago when Hart House was completed and we had the best Athletic facilities in the Nation. Now that the years have left us in their wake the time has come for us to wake up, but we're still secure in our dream of Hart House's adequacy.

The fact is that Varsity has the worst Athletic facilities of the five big Universities in the East. Down at McGill the Currie Memorial Gym seats nearly 4,000 people and has a playing surface that matches pro standards. Marv Tile, Blue hoopster, can probably remember when, as a YMHA Juvenile, he went down to play in a Dominion playoff and that gym was stuffed. Remembering that Juvenile ball has nothing of the attraction of Senior University competition it's sensible to expect that Varsity could do as well here.

Tri Bells, Toronto's Senior club have little trouble filling St. Mike's for their games and Varsity, with a student body of potential customers numbering about 9,000 can hope for about 1,000 of these to support them. Put the followings of the two teams together and we have almost enough to fill a large auditorium say Mutual or Varsity Arena.

A plan to combine the week-end programmes of the Varsity Blues and the Tri Bells, moving both into an arena for a Saturday afternoon Basketball Doubleheader would give hoop fans in the town a chance to see their very best athletes play the tops from out of town. With Varsity boys like Pete Potter, Leo Madden, Art Binnington, and Ed Maynerick in the Tri Bell lineup there seems to be a real tie between the two clubs.

Our U. of T. has tried staging Basketball games in Mutual Arena. They were promotional flops, but that doesn't mean the idea was a bad one. With only the Blues as an attraction the drawing power was limited. Match the Bells with, say, Tonowanda, and the Blues with Western for a bill and by simple arithmetic we see a big crowd coming out. Hold the affair on the campus (by taking Leo Madden's suggestion for a portable floor being laid in the Arena) and there might even be a full house.

Masterson's Two Cents . . .

. . . could be worth a great deal more in this matter. Bob dislikes the idea of bringing in outside outfits to work with the Blues. Rather, says he, let's think along the lines of College double-headers such as those run off down in Buffalo every Saturday. The schedule (now being made up) could, if we were to accept Bob's idea, be so arranged that Western and Assumption would play Varsity and Mac in Toronto Friday night, then hop down to Mac for the next night switching opponents. It could be a good idea with the league broken into three parts in each of which the afore-mentioned arrangement would apply. There might be a saving of money and an increase of spectator interest.

But all these ideas look good on paper, and will mean nothing really until they're tried. So the next steap is for the Intercollegiate Athletic Union and its members. If they don't come through then what about Mr. Fisher and his Bells.

Engineer Harding Sets New Record

Skule's Dick Harding continued his record-breaking yesterday as the interfaculty indoor track meet continued on the Hart House oval. Harding clipped seven-tenths of a second off Eric Kofmel's mark for the 440-yard dash, running the distance in 53 seconds even.

Harding had broken the indoor 220-yard mark two weeks ago, as he keeps SPS in contention in the team competition, which is being dominated by Victoria College.

U.C.'s Doug McEnteer ran second to Harding, followed by Vic's Pete Watson.

Another Skuleman, John Graham, won the junior 440-yard event with a time of 58.3 seconds. Vic's John Sopinka was second, with Ron Murphy of SPS picking up third money.

Victoria College won a very close two-mile relay, as the first three teams finished very close together. The Vic team of Sopinka, Gord Banks, Norm Williams and Watson turned in a time of nine minutes and 45.9 seconds. University College was second, just two-tenths of a second ahead of Meds.

Varsity's tracksters have their first intercollegiate activity of the winter season Saturday afternoon, when Wayne University of Detroit, sends its team over for a meet, which is carded for 3.30.

Assumption Cagers Here Play Blues Friday Night

The Purple Raiders of Assumption College, top team in Intercollegiate Basketball this season, are coming to Hart House this Friday, February 19th, as the feature events of the Athletic Night to play the Varsity Blues. A preliminary to the main event will set the Varsity Baby Blues against the OAVC Aggies, while down in the pool Varsity's aquamen paddle about with the boys from Niagara. Important things will happen on the wrestling mats as Varsity's best men will be able to represent their Colleges in the Intramural Wrestling Meet and in the upper gym the Senior Intramural Gymnastic Meet, also an open competition will be held.

Rated the best club in College ball this year, the Purple Raiders have a starting lineup that includes such American stars as George Joseph, Lou Veres and Matt Borowiec as well as a fine bunch of Canadians like Dick McKenzie, Chuck Collini and Hugh Coyle. Last Saturday the Blues went down to Windsor to meet the Raiders and lost by the finest of margins, 59-56. Here in the smaller Hart House gym the Varsity zone is expected to have more strength and should bottle up the Winsdorites quite nicely.

Varsity will have to go some to restrain Assumption's George Joseph who thus far in Intercollegiate play has scored 85 points in four games and established himself as something of a legend. Working for the Blues to offset Joseph's threat will be mighty George Stulac, Toronto's pride and joy. Down in Windsor George controlled the defensive backboard for the Blues and up here will probably do the same. If the rest of the team gives him more support the Blues can probably outhustle the Assumptions and win.

Finals In Women's V-Ball Between UC And Phys Ed

By JANE KELLY

Last night saw some very keen competition and fine play in the semi-finals of the women's interfaculty volleyball league. In the first game UC I, winners of the second group, met Vic II's who topped the fourth group; while Phys Ed who won the first group took on St. Mike's, the best team in the third group.

The first game was marked by long rallies, good spiking ad hard serves on the part of both teams and the Vic gals certainly gave UC a run for their money. But Vic was just not able to equal the superior play of the UC aggregation and were downed 47-25. Outstanding for UC were Pat Dugit and Helena Weisman at the net and Loraine Rotman in the second line. Judy Strickland played her usual fine game in sparking her team on to victory.

In the second game St. Mike's put up a good fight, but finally bowed to PHE to the tune of 58-15. The score, however, is no indication of the competition as St. Mike's really did make Phys Ed play their best. As she has in all their games, Beryl Lewis starred for PHE with cross-court spikes and tricky serves. Little June Rathbun was a standout in the back line as was Barb Wilson at the net. Anne Kotz was by far the best player on the floor for the girls from St. Mike's.

The finals on Thursday should be well worth watching.

Saint Hilda's Down UC 2-1

Monday afternoon was one of those occasions when UC II's met St. Hilda's II's in a game which was not the usual fiasco. After five minutes of play Pauline Shaker skated the whole length of the ice on a breakaway and pushed the puck past UC'se Mary Southey for the score. Then as the Saints tried to clear the puck from their end, Val Godsoe took advantage of a poor pass and slammed a shot at St. Hilda's goalie Nancy Banks, which tied the score.

Kay Grier put the St. Hildians ahead when her shot found the mark after a scramble around the UC net with three minutes to go. The game ended with the score standing at 2-1 for St. Hilda's and a well-deserved win it was.

Senior Skulemen Wallop UC 6-1 Now Aiming For Jennings Cup

Senior Skule, looking more powerful than ever, established themselves as definite threats for possession of the Jennings Cup, by waloping Senior UC 6-1 on Monday.

The Enginers' high-scoring first line accounted for four goals, two by Jack Mollenhauer, and two by Bob Cruise. The third member of the trio, Sandy Davidson, set up three of the tallies, as the Skulemen rolled to their sixth win to finish out the regular season in first place in Group I, two points ahead of Senior Meds.

Senior UC played with only seven men, and were noticeably tired in the second period, after holding the Engineers to a 2-0 lead in the first frame. Cliff Lawrence subbed in goal for the Red and White, and turned in a spectacular performance while the defence was still able to keep up the pace.

Doug Geekie notched the lone UC tally early in the second stanza, on a pass from Carl Yakimoff. Al Chisolm and Ken Woodruff scored the other Skule goals indicating strength in the big Blue and Gold club on the other lines as well.

It looked very much as though John Tolton's boys didn't much care whether they won, lost, or drew, and Pete Nichols was the only interested party as the Engineers took an easy win.

The Skulemen, on the other hand, seemed to be taking it easy also, we're going out on the limb, and picking Senior SPS as one the finalists, if not the club to carry home the Jennings Cup.

Other Monday action saw the theologs from Emmanuel cement down third place in Group II of the second division with a 4-1 win over the Forestry B's. Strapp, Gamble, Davies, and Frazer got the Emmanuel goals, while Armstrong tallied for Forestry.

In a ten-minutes re-ply of an earlier game which Pharmacy won 3-1, and which Forestry A's protested, no goals were scored, enabling the Pharmacists to hold on to first place in Group I of the second division.

The Trinity B's and the SPS V's went into sudden-death overtime in their last scheduled game, as the score was tied 1-1 at the end of regulation time. Splitting the points meant sharing first place in Group IV, and to facilitate the playoff schedule, overtime was suggested as only one team enters the playoffs from that group. Crick Ketchum scored the lone Trinity goal, and Oliver and Wong tallied

Baby Blues In Hockey Finals

While the N.H.L. and all the other hockey leagues in Canada are still going strong, the intercollegiate hockey schedule is fast drawing to a close. Championship time is here again, and this time it's the Intercollegiate Intermediate Hockey title that's in doubt.

On Thursday afternoon at 4:30, in Varsity Arena, the Baby Blues will face-off with the Western Mustangs for the crown that has been absent from the Varsity campus for several years now.

Just a few weeks ago, the Seconds were edged by the Mustangs 8-6, on the miniature ice surface in London. At the time, Coach Jack Wheldrake figured that the Baby Blues would wallop the Mustangs on our own fair-sized ice in the Arena.

"However", says Wheldrake, "We'll beat them if the boys want to won." That's just about the way it is too; if the Baby Blues play a poor game, they'll have to work about twice as hard as is necessary.

Behold, The Pure Of Mind

Even Local Imposters

A day doesn't pass but that press releases of some form don't come to this office to be printed. Some are factual account of some very innocent event. Others, originating both from communist organs, and western news agencies, are complete, unpardonable misrepresentations of a situation.

These people do not mix up or change the facts. They just do not give all the facts. They do not give the answers to questions that crop up immediately in the mind of a critical reader. Innocent misconstruing of a situation in this same manner is inevitable, but the intentional misleading of a reading public is probably the most significant factor in the cold war.

It seems to be about time we realized that we are not adults till we can be trusted to make up our own minds about both sides of a story or movie on the Korean War. But we are so mentally immature that we do not even ask about the other side.

As would-be leaders of a free world, it is about time all of us, yes, even the imposters on this University of Toronto campus, grew up, and asked for both sides of the picture.

Before Action, The Facts

Reprinted from the Minnesota Daily, University of Minnesota, when it was postulated that some of the staff there would be let go for political affiliation.

A neighbor of ours made some pretty rash statements in a Minneapolis speech the other day—and the remarks apply to this University.

R. F. Patterson, a dean at the University of South Dakota, said "It is the duty of governing boards, presidents and deans to rid our colleges of both Communists and suspects.

"I repudiate the assertion that academic freedom gives American teachers the divine right to be irresponsible fools," Dean Patterson said.

We have at this school two people whom, we suppose, Dean Patterson would consider "irresponsible fools." They are teaching assistants who have been accused of being former members of the Communist party.

But they have not been dismissed merely because they are "suspect." The president has appointed a faculty committee to make an objective study of the accusations. If the men are innocent, their names will be cleared and the integrity of the University will be protected.

"Discipline on the basis of irresponsible accusations or suspicion can never be condoned," says a statement of the Association of American Universities. "It is as damaging to the public welfare as it is to academic integrity.

"The university is competent to establish a tribunal to determine the facts and fairly judge the nature and degree of any trespass upon academic integrity, as well as to determine the penalty such trespass merits."

Dean Patterson said that if college administrators do not rid their institutions of "Communists or those suspects who hide behind the fifth amendment, then I welcome investigation and action by a responsible agency of the state or federal government."

Decisions on tenure are properly the concern of the university involved, and not any governmental agency. The only exception to this can be if a faculty member has violated a law. There is yet no evidence of any law violation by the two assistants on this campus — only the accusation made before a congressional committee.

When all the facts are presented by the faculty investigating group, an intelligent decision can be made. But meanwhile, nobody has been fired because he is "suspect."

Hindu, Bantu, Colored

And Outdated Overlords

By TOM VIRANY

A man was jailed yesterday in the Union of South Africa. The crime he committed was that of entering a section of a city without being able to produce sufficient evidence of having previously obtained permission from the proper authorities to do so. He may have been a Negro, a Cape Colored, or a Hindu.

THIS SORT OF THING has been happening regularly since Premier Daniel Malan had his racial segregation laws approved by the legislature. Mixed marriages are forbidden and if contracted broken up. After that, the punishment for "illicit relationships" is five years imprisonment for the male and four for the female. Premier Malan says occasionally that the purity of the white race has to be maintained.

In a number of his speeches he said that the Bantus are constitutionally inferior, and will never, however, civilized or educated be worthy of having the franchise extended to them.

HAVING THUS EXPLAINED his position, Premier Malan found it just to deny the education from the natives, as much as it was possible. A year ago, he withdrew four bursaries established by the Smuts government for the benefit of Bantu Medical students from the University of Whitwatersrand. Enraged students protested, and when nothing was achieved, they voted an increase in their Students' Society fees to make up for the loss.

To native medical doctors, many of them educated in the United Kingdom, he refuses to extend the privileges of public libraries, barring them from making full use of their profession.

THE GREATEST DANGER of Malan's premiership is not segregation, which was there before his time. The danger lies in the trend which he establishes, that of reducing previously extended privileges, in effect trying to reduce the population to a hopeless level, lower and lower, making the time needed for an eventual equalization of social status always longer.

His principles are perversions of the doctrine of the chosen people, perversions of the Calvinist doctrine of predestination. They are literal misinterpretations of the scripture producing apartheid and the notion of inferior races. In a country where the churches other than his own Dutch Reform Church, have decried him this is significant, because it offers some hope of alienating his supporters to some extent.

A MAJORITY OF THE WHITE POPULATION did not support Malan in the last general elections. True, he gained sixty percent of the seats in the lower house, yet it was because of a particularly advantageous distribution of the electorate. His majority although substantial, is precarious.

Two weeks ago the leader of the opposition United Party, Johannes G. N. Strauss, attacked the nationalist government in the parliament for restricting white immigration, which, he claimed, was the only way to save Africa for the White race.

MALAN HAS GOOD REASONS for restricting white immigration. Immigrants would have to be given the franchise in accordance with the South Africa Act, and could hardly be expected to support the Nationalist party. What Strauss perhaps did not realize, was the probability that these immigrants would not likely support his party either with its similar platform.

A further charge was introduced by Strauss. He claimed that while the government was preaching segregation, it was nonetheless integrating the natives into the economy of the nation. He had facts and figures to prove it.

It might be concluded then, that Malan is not doing what he would like to do. He is, with his parliamentary majority and all, not quite as powerful as he purports to be. The Universities, which are the only in South Africa who have encountered nineteenth century liberalism through books, are putting up resistance.

THE NATION UNION OF STUDENTS issued a statement warning the public that academic freedom is threatened by the Malan government. The president of the University of Capetown drew up a Freedom Charter, in which he proclaimed the right sof Universities to "open its theatres and laboratories to all who can show they are intellectually capable of benefitting by admission." He maintained that the staff should teach as they see the truth, and not as told by others for purposes of furthering sectional, political, religious or ideological dogmas or beliefs.

There is also a significant British minority in the Union, one that was strong enough to keep Malan in the Commonwealth. This group, although supporting apertheid nonetheless looks at Malan with suspicion. It is undoubtedly the group which could be influenced by the West, especially by British statesmen to bring additional pressure upon Malan.

IT IS STRANGE that the United States, which usually likes to enforce its ideals abroad to prove to the world its cleanliness at home, does not protest louder. The answer probably is the fear of Communism in Africa.

At present, however, it is quite inconceivable for the Negro population to overthrow the Malan government. The danger would certainly not be increased by forcing the South African government to compromise its racial policy. Premier Malan said last August that he attached great importance to the maintenance of a base for British troops in the middle East to keep Africa's northern door closed to communist aggression. This northern door seems to be the only way through which communist influence might come to the Union, according to Malan's conceptions but it is questionable whether the Americans realize this.

AGAIN THEN, IT SEEMS THAT PRESSURE brought on Malan from the outside in addition to the one from the inside would not endanger the western hemisphere. Here then, is the chance of the west to accomplish something within its own sphere.

By appeasing Malan on grounds of communist danger, the western powers can't solve the problem. They can only increase the probabilities of eventual bloodshed and as time rolls by, with an increased probability of communist-inspired bloodshed.

THE PARAMOUNT QUESTION IN this respect will probably be answered soon, when the status of the Gold Coast will be determined with respect to the Commonwealth.

Should the Gold Coast not be made a self-governing part of the Commonwealth, South Africa will be pacified, and India alienated.

IF, ON THE OTHER HAND, as is likely because of Indian insistence, the Gold Coast is admitted, Malan will have to show his cards. Should he secede from the Commonwealth, he may not be able to maintain himself at home. Should he stay, he will lose face at home. The solution is to a great extent in the Hands of Britain.

Bearing these facts in mind, by taking a public stand against Malan and keeping the issue in the open, we can certainly do no harm. We may, on the other hand convince part of the South African White population that their present way of life is outmoded.

SPS, Thank You —Physots

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We should like to thank the School of Practical Science very much for the lovely Valentine present (namely the return of a new P.O.T. trophy.) It nearly broke our hearts when you smashed the old one!

We are now fully convinced that the Faculty of Medicine does not appreciate us as it should, and we are taking the necessary measures to become part of good old S.P.S. The reception we receive when we walk past the old red "Skule" house far surpasses that which we receive from those up-and-coming "DOCTORS". But as the saying goes, "What the Meds learn in class, the Engineers learn out of class!"

Three cheers from the "Engineering" P.O.T.'s of 5T6.

Residential Rivals

U of T Juliettes no longer need be serenaded from the damp, bare earth. Come September, 1954, the UC Romeos can croon across from the comfortable third floor window sashes of their own men's residences. No second Hart House this, the girls have obviously just been assured that liquor and sex are to be permitted, of course.

Ultra Posh

For UC Monks

By BOB BROWN

Want to get away from it all? Want to escape those boarding-house blues? Behind on your rent? Don't despair, just switch to UC if you're not already a member of this august body of apathetic atheistic invalids.

For the new ultra-posh, ultra-swish University College Men's residence will be ready for occupancy by 183 superior-type, swished and poshed UC men this fall. Thils building, which has been abuilding since last September, is the Kat's Meow in men's residences. Come to think of it, it would be the last word in women's residences if a few friendly females could be smuggled into it . . . hmmm.

But gack to business. The new cell blocks have been constructed to fill a long felt need at UC — a place to sleep one off. They will also be an excellent place to store comnolent professors during the summer months. Previously, the professors had to be stacked in the JCR, and the students always complained of a strong stale tobacco and mouldy beer smell in the fall when the professors were first taken out to their classrooms to air off. (Not that UCers have anything against beer and tobacco—they just like them fresh.)

The interior of the penitentiary has been carefully designed to provide each inmate—oops, student—with the maximum of privacy. Each man will have his own spacious monks' cell—22 by 26. (Inches that is.) The Residence will be divided up into self-contained "houses" — each with about thirty students. This is done to provide the warden—(euphemistically called a Don) in each house with a better opportunity of keeping his charges innocent and free from contamination. Liquor and sex will, of course, be permitted, but there will be absolutely no more than three "reefers" allowed to each student daily.

The men from this jail will dine sumptuously in their own kitchen where all their food, with the exception of coffee, will be prepared. The coffee will be specially flown in at each meal from the JCR Ptomaine-Bar in order that the students will not feel lonely or strange in their new surroundings. The fee for all this luxurious living will be only $550, but UC authorities are not sure whether this will be charged a year or a week. "It depends on the amount of graft the profs want," stated one highly placed authority in UC (The Gargoyle).

The location of the monastry has also been carefully planned. It is on the east side of UC where it will be at once in the most inconvenient place for the student, and serve to protect the main building of UC from a flanking attack by the Engineers. After the new UC co-sexual combination coffee bar and cocktail lounge is constructed on the front campus, UC will be safe from all danger of attack from SPS types.

Another feature of the new reformatory is the wild beer drinking parties that will be held there every night. It is expected that the Girls from Whitney Hall will be invited to attend these social and recreational evenings. The gambling concession has already been contracted for by three professors from the UC Mathematics Department.

All in all, this new Residence promises to be the closest thing to home ever yet devised on this campus.

Gold or Beauty Important Unless Love Make Blind

"Only in blind love can we in our society ingnore the fact that our fiancee has big feet, a moustache and an IQ of six.In any other case, however, we attach a value to things in terms of their attributes such as money or beauty." Such was the opinion expressed by Professor E. Carpenter in an address to the Philosophical Society last night as he compared our language and behavior which he claimed was really our basic philosophy, to that of the natives of the Trobriand Islands.

Although the conviction is not stated, it is generally accepted in our society, that, "that which is new is better, that which is old is inferior." The Trobrianders, however, explore nothing. They have no interest in the new but find safety in repetition.

"We have a philosophy which is stated and defended; something which should be believed," said Carpenter. "Our philosophers, however, do not deal with the homeless man on the street; on the other hand, the Trobrianders do not have a dogma of belief but stress only the status quo," he said.

In The Middle . . .

The Making Of England

(This is the second of a series of articles designed to acquaint students with the Mistory of England.)

By DICK HOBSON

In the middle, or shortly before, there was much wailing and gnashing of teeth; for the land was divided and King Arthur was sorely pressed to keep peace. The problem became acute as the Black Knight was roving the countryside and removing the color from the landscape. The tourist trade was declining. Conditions were further complicated when Sir Launchalot made off with Queen Gwinniveneer. This was incidental, however, since Sir Pursueval caught the bounders and had them exhaled. Under the frugal leadership of the grave Sir Galahead, the unrest tired and times returned to normal. The Black Knight was washed and pardoned. Things seemed on the up and up. In fact, Merlin was so bigh that he let Sir George kill the dragon; the tourist trade really went to pot. Yet the day was not lost as Sir Trustem heard from ruddy Phoebus and got the clue. It was decided that Macbath should bring back the Gorgon from Morpheus. Armed with no-nods and nescafe, they had no trouble bringing the Giorgi-on to court and placing it on display. With the return of the tourists, conditions stabliized. This great era remained until Ribinhood shot a hole in the round table and was accused of being a communist. This is the muddle of English history.

McGill Daily Gives Issue To US Views

Montreal (CUP) — One half of the McGill Daily of 11 February has been devoted to "journalistic bandying-about of a rather large subject: the United States of America". The main theme of the issue is the "Anti-Americanism" feeling which is prevalent in some countries of the world and in some parts of Canada.

The Daily calls Anti-Americanism the 20th century version of "Anti-the-man-on-top-ism" and says that "with so many things going wrong in the world" we get "emotional relief" from blaming the acknowledged leader.

The issue is composed of signed articles expressing different viewpoints on the success of US leadership, the American cabinet, the wisdom of criticising US and the state of friendship between US and Canada.

Hart House

Committees Still Short Nominations

With one more nominating day to go for the annual Hart House Committee election, only 20 nominations have been received for the 40 available positions on the five major committees in a tally made last night.

Tonight at 6:00 p.m. marks the deadline for nominations, which are being received in the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor, next to the telephones.

"Particularly lacking are nominations for Art, Debates, and Library Committees," Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden, said last night. "The House and Music committees are also in need of nominees." Response has not been as active as hoped this late in the week, he added.

Interested members may secure nomination forms in the Undergrad Office today, keeping in mind the Committee on which they would like to serve. As names are received, they are posted on a large placard in the Rotunda.

"Aside from the academic purposes which any male undergraduate has in coming to this University," Warden Joseph McCulley said last night, "I know it is one of the truly educational and rewarding experiences to serve in some capacity on a committee.

Serving in such a capacity generally means some hard work, he added, but it also means picking out some of the best traditions, thoughts and purposes of the University.

"Hart House enjoys the physical benefits of a structure designed to encourage the widest variety of student activities," he said. "There is also the subtle strength and cameraderie of men sharing a common aim in the power and association of duty."

"To govern, to direct, and to sustain this purpose is the duty of the Hart House committees and clubs. In short, to maintain actively the responsibilities of self-government which is a complex thing, won with difficulty and lost with ease, the tasks of the House government must be shouldered by student members."

Smith Awards 4 Honors For Social Work School

President Sidney Smith announced yesterday's action of the Board of Governors in the appointment of Dr. Nicholas Pansegrouw as the first Cassidy Research Visiting Professor of the School of Social Work.

At the same time Dr. Smith announced three other Cassidy Memorial Research Fund awards in the form of grants-in-aid. Roger Marier of the faculty of the School of Social Work, McGill University, has been awarded a research grant for a pilot project in community planning in the province of Quebec. David Donnison, on leave of absence from the University of Manchester, England, has been enabled to undertake a study of social needs and services in a small Ontario community. Dr. Albert Rose, Associate Professor in the School of Social Work, University of Toronto, has been given assistance in completing a comprehensive research monograph on Social Aspects of Housing in Canada.

D. V. DONNISON

In announcing the awards the President said, "The University of Toronto is encouraged by the generous initial support that has been given to the Cassidy Memorial Research Fund. It reflects a growing recognition of the need to direct greater attention and more systematic study to the conservation and development of human resources. I am proud that a pioneer venture of this kind is being financed almost entirely by Canadian funds and focused on Canadian problems. I am pleased also that in keeping with its national character, one of the first awards has been made to a French-speaking colleague from the province of Quebec."

Chairman of the Cassidy Memorial Research Fund, Dr. A. E. Grauer, President of British Columbia Electric, and one-time director of the University of Toronto School of Social Work said: "The research program under the Harry M. Cassidy Memorial Research Fund is a pioneering effort and opens up a fruitful avenue of endeavour which will be valuable not only to those directly in the field of welfare but to those indirectly connected as contributors and taxpayers."

Dr. A. ROSE

The Cassidy Memorial Research Fund represents the first all-Canadian undertaking of its kind in this country. It has aroused considerable interest and attracted commendation from research and welfare leaders in various parts of the world. Areas of research supported by the fund are: social problems, social policy, the economics of social welfare, social welfare administration, the practice of social work, and social work education.

From BAgs To Riches

To Althea From Prison

Once upon a time there was a Princess. As all Princesses are, she was beautiful. Her blue eyes, and long golden hair (with a few black streaks at the roots) were the most perfect in the whole world.

From the age of sixteen she was on the lookout for a prince, or a millionaire. Her parents, of course, were in favor of the millionaire. For this reason they sent her to university.

After much argument they decided to send her to a co-educational establishment in the suburbs of Oshawa. "Here," they said, "she can find the most blue-blooded millionaire in Canada."

Our Princess was then registered in General Arts, and put in residence in University College, because there they had a curfew. Her timetable called for fifteen hours per week of lectures in the daytime, and thirty hours of labs at night.

She soon settled down to this grind, and started to look around. She thought she'd have a much better chance as a cheerleader, so in her spare time she learned to do cart-wheels.

By now, our Princess should have a name, so we will call her Althea.

Althea was an extremely clever girl. She portioned out her time so she wouldn't go out with the same man more than twice a week. She kept to a rigorous schedule for the number of kisses, and their duration, at each date.

Every male, whether rich or poor, blue-blooded or red-blooded, chased her. She was deluged with invitations, flowers and candies. The candies she sbold to her friends in the residence at special reduced rates.

There are only two of her boyfriends of interest to posterity. The one was a rich, tall, rich, good-looking, rich, football player, in Healthful and Playful Education. He as the son of a titled wrestler, and is the villain of our fable. The other was a poor engineer who occasionally wrote for Toike Oike (our hero).

To complete the cast of characters theer was a horible old witch who roomed next door to Althea and her pet dragon Cedric, called Seedy for short. Also there was a mysterious dark stranger (from Western) and a plain girl in Household Economics who fell in love with somebody.

Nobody is quite sure what happened, but everyne probably lived happily ever after, except the villain, of course, who met his just deserts.

Student Prayer Day SAC-SCM Sponsored

This Sunday will be celebrated throughout the world by Christian students of all denominations as the World Student Day of Prayer. The purpose of this special day, called by the World Student Christian Federation, is to seek to remind the students of their responsibilities in the University, and to remind the community at large of its responsibility to the University.

To observe this occasion on the University of Toronto campus, the Students' Administrative Council and the Student Christian Movement of the University are jointly sponsoring a University Worship Service. The service will be held this Sunday, February 21, in the Great Hall of Hart House at 7:30 p.m.

This will be the first time that the SAC has co-sponsored this annual day of prayer, and the first time that Hart House has been used for the World University Day of Prayer.

The preacher at this service will be the Reverend John Rowe, Hart House Chaplain. He will be assisted in the Service by John Stalker, President of SAC; Manfred Stephany, exchange student from Germany; and P.M. Mathia, student from India.

For the first time the Coronation Bible, presented to Hart House by the Massey Foundation, will be used in a service of divine worship. This bible is one of a special printing of 25 on the first of which the Queen made her oath during the coronation ceremony.

The World Student Day of Prayer is also being celebrated by various Churches in Toronto. Over thirty have speakers from the faculty or student body taking part in their services or addressing church groups.

It sems that it takes a neon name to stir up Toronto. For th first time this year Massey Hall as squirming with humanity for the second of the subscription concerts. Heifetz is the name.

It was a stringy program. There was Handel's Concerto Grosso in G minor, No. 6 followed by Mozart's Symphony in C Major, both of which are scored mainly for all kinds of strings, and there was Brahms' Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77. One very sharp contrast was the Scherzo Capriccioso of Mozart.

The Concerto at the outset was characterised by an easiness and incisiveness, with some finesse in weaving the melodic patterns, but as it progressed it become heavier and heavier. The cake of Mozart's Symphony was also made of a rather heavy batter. The Scherzo of Dvorak, capricious in its sequence of church-like and circus images, was lively and well defined.

Heifetz easily lived up to his name and the expectations of his "Fans." He not only overcame the tremendous difficulties of this concerto, but also gave a rare distinction to a piece that has too often suffered a mass massacre. The themes, especially, were well-stated with adept double-stepping, also evidenced in the magnificent cadenza. The Adagio was sustained by the vibrant sweetness of his tone. Unfortunately space does not permit a fulled appraisal of his excellent performance.

Critic In The Dark

Forever Female

Every so often a motion picture is issued which has been poured from a standard mould originally made by Joseph Mankiewicz under the title All About Eve. It consists simply of constructing a plot around some fairly vulnerable aspect of our society — usually the theatre — and using it as a framework on which to superimpose a cast of devastatingly witty characters. Every line must be a chunk of meaningful satire and every character, no matter how dull he is supposed to be, emits a steady flow of quips and witticisms.

The only real necessity, actually, is a good writer or a contingent of good writers who can dream up 70 minutes of wisecracks and bon mots. Fortunately that's where Forever Female (University and Eglinton) improves upon the usual product of that mould. I was speaking of. Like so many of its fellows, it tends to get a little wearisome — you get somewhat tired of chuckling incessantly — but it contains enough interest to make you stick around for the finish.

For one thing, it has another of those "refreshing new screen personalities". Pat Crowley is undeniably new and, while refreshing is an unfortunate word, she's that too. She plays her part energetically, with a good deal of honesty (considering the lengths to which it is carried) and with a lot of charm, much of which springs from her unusual but unquestioned good looks. If they can find a succession of bouncy young girl parts for her to play, she'll go far.

To be as curt as possible about it, the story deals with the attempts of a determined young actress to get a part in a new play. Since the part calls for a girl of 19, she feels she is cut out for it, at least more so than the one who has it, a fading and also brittle actress, who happens to be ex-wife and close friend of the producer. You can take it from there.

Outside of Miss Crowley, who chatters away cheerfully, William Holden as the playwright and Paul Douglas as the producer, are excellent. They deliver their lines—all funny—as though they saw the thing in its proper light. Ginger Rogers fits the part of the fading actress rather well, with several flashes of the familiar glamor still apparent.

A very entertaining picture, Forever Female. The writers deserve a great deal of credit for turning out such a thoroughly funny script. The funniest thing, though, is that I can't recall a blessed one of those brilliantly satirical lines And some of them would have made a big impression in conversation, I'm sure.

Crime At The Crest

The Crest Theatre has adopted a policy which looks to me very sensible and worthwhile, besides having the definite appearance of something which is going to pay off. They are choosing ordinary plays and doing them very, very well instead of beginning on a lofty scale with snobbishly difficult dramas which leave them nowhere to go but down. By beginning not too dangerously near the top the Davis brothers have left room for a development of acting and drama which may lead to discovery in the realm of theatre and will certainly establish a solid and ever-growing reputation for good work.

Lord Arthur Savile's Crime fits in nicely with this policy—good but not unusual—produced from one of Oscar Wilde's short stories by the manipulations of Basil Dawson and St. John Clowes and crammed full of brilliant epigrams and unexpected nonchalance culled from his other works. The plot begins in a deceptively simple sort of way and rapidly becomes confusing but it remains consistently entertaining.

Lord Arthur Savile, a model of sweet behaviour, is informed on the eve of his wedding that he is destined, whether he likes it or not, to commit a murder. The bearer of this disturbing news is an enthusiastic chiromantist named, naturally enough, Mr. Podgers. Lord Arthur, horrified at the though of presenting his lady love with a husband involved in a murder (because of the embarrassment, of course) bravely postpones his wedding (bravely because his lady love's lady mother is insisting on the date) and carefully selects a relative (Mr. Podgers said it had to be a relative) as victim.

Unfortunately the road to Hell is not so broad and primrose-strewn as moralists would lead us to believe; despite his brother's assistance, the super-human efficiency of his butler and the kindly help of a chemist and a conspirator, Lord Arthur has to make three tries — and finally succeeds in a desperate attempt with an umbrella. Since he is unwilling to marry until he has fulfilled his destiny, all these failures make his plans considerably uncertain; as soon as each proposed murder is ready Lord Arthur departs, or threatens to depart, for, say, China. This distresses Sybil, who prefers a placid life; after all, as Lady Coniston points out, nothing is so disturbing to a marriage as a husband who suddenly leaves for China whenever he hears the words "plum cake."

Donald and Murray Davis, as Lord Augustus and Lord Arthur, are immaculately handsome and indestructably poised. Mary Laura Wood as Sybil, Lord Arthur's betrothed, is very pretty and properly coquettish; Lady Coniston, played by Betty Leighton, is cynically gay in the faintly surprising fashion common to Wilde's heroes and heroines; both are frivolously exquisite in the airy gowns which Hutchinson Scott had designed for them. Josephine Barrington's Lady Clem is as wittily gracious as ever a dowager could wish.

In excellent small parts this play is, to say the least, prolific. The Very Reverend Dean of Colchester, a positive old gentleman in gaiters played by Max Helpmann with explosive assurance; Mr. Button, the detective, a role which Harold Burke, with admirable restraint, refrains from playing as a straight character part, giving a fine stylistic performance instead; Flora Percy, daughter of the Dean, played by Norma Renault with charming angularity; Herr Winkelhopf the bomb-making conspirator, to whose innocent enthusiasm for murder (by explosion, of course) John Blatcherly gives a merry glee; Mr. Pestle the dog-loving chemist, played with wispy determination by Eric House; and Baker, whose perfect-butlerishness is endowed by George McCowan with a haggard boniness suggestive of a friendly undertaker—appropriate consideration.

Flaws in the performance were few — the set was too small for the majestic opening tableau although it worked well thereafter; one or two speeches were badly twisted—because it was an opening night, no doubt. In everything else the production had the assured smoothness which we are coming to expect of the Crest.

The artificiality of speech and situation in a comedy of manners must be equalled by artificiality of style on the part of the actors; and in this the Crest company, under the light, sure hand of director Pierre Lefevre, succeeded admirably. Moving gracefully around Hutchinson Scott's elegant drawing room, speaking with crisp clarity and vivacity, the cast created a happy illusion of impossibility and a little world of their own—and ours — in which Mr. Wilde would have been very much at home.

Nancy Donnell.

Although exams may have you in a snit, musical activities have not yet ended on the campus. Someone once said that music was an excellent form of relaxation, that is if you've done any work after which to relax.

Pianists in particular have not petered out. Vic will be featuring one, Boris Roubakine next Sunday night at nine o'clock in the Music Room of Wymilwood. His program will include Bach's English Suite in A Minor, two Brahms' Intermezzi, and his Capriccio Opus 116 No. 1, several numbers by modern composers, and Beethoven's piano Sonata, Opus 110 in A Flat Major.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Cressy McCatty had ample excuse last fall for feeling that fate had dealt rather harshly with him. Only a few months earlier, he'd enjoyed probably his greatest success when his Varsity swimming team made a joke of the intercollegiate meet. Now he found himself with only half a team. And that's no reflection on the remaining swimmers but an estimation of the value of Hart Devenney and George Stulac who weren't going to be around for the 1953-54 season.

Devenney, as just about every one knows, was stricken with polio last summer and is still recuperating in Winnipeg. Losing him would have been bad enough for Hart had set Canadian records for the 220 and 440-yard freestyle splashes and was money in the bank everytime he entered a race. Then George Stulac had to quit swimming and he was another consistent winner, as well as record-holder at 50 and 100 yards.

As a matter of fact, Stulac must have had a tough time deciding whether he wanted to play basketball or swim. Neither team could get along without him and, while he was able to do double duty last year, he had to pick one or the other this season, since he was entering his graduating year and, besides, one major sport is enough for any person.

There was at least one point in favor of swimming: a season of concentration on it would almost certainly have made George one of Canada's top sprint swimmers and he'd have been a pretty safe bet to represent Canada in the British Empire Games at Vancouver this summer. But on the other hand, basketball is obviously a more satisfying occupation. And besides, Stulac has an amazing aptitude for playing the game well. "I advised George to play basketball," Cressy McCatty told us this week and you could tell by the way he wept that it must have hurt him to do it.

But justice always triumphs in the end and Cressy's reward came one day last fall when he was supervising the Hart House pool during a recretional period. He perceived a man ripping up and down the tank smoothly and speedily and before long he had signed up the chap who may fill George Stulac's trunks when the College meet comes up later this month. The guy was Bruce Taylor, who is highly accomplished at propelling himself through the water.

Bruce hails from Sydney, Australia, and studied dentistry at Sydney university. Another thing he did at Sydney was swim and he was chosen on the all-Australian team four seasons in a row. He held the down under intercollegiate record for the 55 and 110-yard events (they swim peculiar distances down there, possibly because they're upside down all the time) and won the national championship at least once. He also won himself a fellowship at the University of Rochester last year for post grad work in the art of tooth-repair and then decided to try Varsity for a year. Induced to return to the pools on a competitive basis, he's already got his times down to 24.8 seconds for the 50 and 56 even for the 100. Both times are interestingly close to Stulac's intercollegiate records.

"Say, I'm not sure whether I won that race more than once or not," Bruce cautioned. He didn't need to worry. The Varsity's Australian circulation is very slight so the chances are no person will check up on it. Anyhow, that time of 24.8 is a pretty good reference.

BLUE NOTES: The Varsity swimmers have their second and last Hart House meet of the season when they compete with Niagara university on tonight's athletic night card . . . Tonight's Assumption-Varsity basketball game ought to be a duel between the two Georges, Stulac and Joseph. Stulac has averaged 15 points a game and has a shooting average of 43 per cent. Joseph has scored 85 points in four intercollegiate games for an average of more than 21 a game.

Badminton Femmes After College Title

Varsity's women's volleyball team is off to Hamilton for the week-end for the intercollegiate championships. Hoping to improve on last year's placing (a second-place tie with Western), the team has been practising hard all term and has improved greatly in the last two weeks.

O.A.C., McGill, Queen's, Western, McMaster and Toronto will all be represented at Hamilton. Because of the lack of substantial financial support for women's intercollegiate sports, no league schedule has been set up; consequently, no idea of the strength of any of the teams except McMaster is known.

The Toronto girls are quite aware of the power of the mountain-city team, after Mac crushed them in an exhibition game here two weeks ago. Since then the Varsity squad has played two games with Etobicoke, whose team is considered to be the best high school team in the Toronto district.

In spite of her small enrollment and her inability to dress a football team to meet the intercollegiate financial standards, McMaster has been the perennial volleyball champion and has soundly defeated the larger universities like Toronto and Western. Last year, however, this win-

Two Flashy Tallies by Fisher Pace Blues To College Title

By JOHN WILSON

The Intercollegiate Intermediate hockey crown returned to Toronto for the first time since 1951 yesterday afternoon as the Baby Blues pushed by a fighting crew of Western Mustangs for a 4-1 verdict in Varsity Arena.

Clare Fisher was the outstanding player on the ice, potting two of the Varsity goals unassisted, and turning in a great two-way game, his best of the season. Ted Rogers and Don Wright put the second line into the picture, accounting for the other goals, while George Pond notched the lone Western tally.

The Seconds held the margin of play in the first period but couldn't seem to get the puck past Western goalie Farrell Crook. After a season with the St. Michael's juniors last year, Crook had plenty of experience to throw in the way of the Blue forwards, and it wasn't until the eighteen-minute mark of the first frame that the Baby Blues could hit the scoreboard, when Ted Rogers gave them a 1-0 lead with a high drive from fifteen feet out.

The second stanza gave the best hockey of the afternoon, and the feature was Clare Fisher's first goal at 15:35. Starting from behind his own net, Fisher went through two Mustang forwards and outskated the defence to sweep in on Crook and score with a neat backhand shot.

Along with Mert Wright's tally at 11:34, that gave the Intermediates a 3-1 lead. Fisher put the game on ice in the middle of the third frame with a slap shot from the corner that deflected in off Crook's stick.

Despite the Blue's 2-1 advantage in goals in the second period, Western controlled most of the play, and were threatening to take the lead in the first ten minutes. Both Gene Robillard and Fisher missed scoring opportunities in the first few minutes on breakaways, but were foiled by Crook. Only the brilliant performance of the little Western goaltender kept the Blues from running the score at least twice as high.

However, although he had much less work, Varsity's Hugh Currie turned in another cool effort and only had his third shutout marred early in the second when Pond flipped a loose puck over him into the top of the net.

From the Blue Room . . . the Mustangs didn't get a shot on Currie until the seventeen minute mark of the first period . . . Mustang captain Pete Lindsay has been high man with fourteen goals this season, but seemed ineffective, while Jim Peters did most of the work . . . Farrell Crook held Bob Primeau in the crease early in the first, to draw a minor . . . Western neglected to bring the Cup that they won two years ago with them—Overconfidence? . . . Coach Wheldrake had nothing but praise for the Baby Blues as they added another Intercollegiate championship to the University's already long list.

Assumption Game Hurdle For Blues

All year long we've been waiting to see a ball player to match Varsity Blues' George Stulac. To-night may well be the night, for the Purple Raiders of Assumption College are coming to Hart House and with them will be hoopster extraordinary George Joseph.

This laddie, originally from Rochester N.Y., is a sophomore out at Assumption and, though he has two years more to play ball, has already astounded fans and confounded opponents with his skillful dribbling and shooting. Last season, ineligible for Senior ball because he was a freshman, Joseph nonetheless joined the big club for their exhibition games and was sensational. In eighteen games, the American import averaged twenty points a game and outstarred the best veterans he met. This year, finally up with Assumption's senior team, Joseph has scored 85 points in his four league games to date.

Last week, the Blues hopped down to Windsor to play the Assumptions for the first time this year and, though they lost by a 59-56 score, Varsity's team showed themselves well-matched against the Raiders who had previously been considered something superhuman. Fighting from behind an early deficit, the Blues came within a fingertip of winning the works. This time, playing at homee with This time, playing at home with courage them, the Blues stand a better than even chance of taking top honours.

Most of the Varsity load will ride on the broad shoulders of one George Stulac, a laddie who dunked 19 neat points against the Raiders in their meeting last week. George is the leading Blue scorer, having totalled 223 points in his last 15 games for an average of almost 15 a game. At Windsor, despite the long reach of Assumption's Matt Borowiec—who stand a mere 6'5", Stulac controlled the defensive backboard for the Blues and took his fair share from the Purple Raiders. To-night even bigger things could happen. Supporting George in the fray for dear old Varsity will be Jim Russell a set shot artist with an average of over 13 points a game.

GEORGE STULAC

After hooping 18 points last Friday night against the Western Colts, Baby Blue Ruby Richman swiftly came of age and was elevated to the Seniors for the Assumption game. A smooth ball handler with great drive, Ruby will go with the Blues to-night.

Heavies Gun-Jumpers Rest Wrestle To-Night

Although the heavyweights jumped the gun yesterday by fighting out their final, there will be action a-plenty on the wrestling mats at Hart House tonight. The occasion is the University of Toronto championships.

Veteran Harry Robinson of Wycliffe College defeated another experienced spine-twister, Bill Chykaliuk of University College, in the heavyweight final yesterday. Robinson pinned Chykaliuk in the first round. Although that bout is out of the way, finals in eight divisions are scheduled for tonight.

This is an interfaculty meet with a difference — intercollegiate athletes are now allowed to compete in tournament type sports, with the result that some of Varsity's top grapplers will be doing their stuff tonight.

Tonight's bouts will be: 123-lbs— Fred Wood (Vic) vs Jim Loree (Vic); 130-lbs — Ned Grossberg (Meds) vs. Murray Berman (Pharm); 137-lbs. — George Patenaude (Dent) vs. Blyth Brown (UC); 147-lbs. — Paul Phelan (SPS) vs Pat Eagan (St. Mike's); 157-lbs. —Ray Smith (SPS) vs. Mike Ratuski (SPS); 167-lbs. — Bill Bush (SPS) vs Paul Walters (SPS); 177-lbs. — Al Miller (UC) vs. Dick Martin (Trin); 191-lbs. — Harvey Salem (UC) vs. Al Freeman (SPS).

Also on tonight's Athletic Night card are the interfaculty gymnastics meet and an intercollegiate swim meet between Varsity and Niagara.

Skulemen Win

Junior Skule's hustling hoopsters put a stranglehold on their group championship as they defeated their closest opposition, Dents A, 60-36 this week. The Skule boys played their fifth game without a loss and set themselves up as definite threats for the Sifton Cup.

The Dentsmen, a fine club lacking only in height, gave the Engineers a real battle. Jim Floyd was the big gun for the Engineers, hooping 16 points. Hank Galka, got nine while the best the Molarmen could do was Aaron Lampert with eight.

St. Mike's Win PHE, POT Tie In Gal Hockey

Wind-up time in women's hockey this year has caused a lot of stiff competition. Two games played in the past two days have seen a couple of meets that were both well played and which meant a great deal to all teams concerned.

Wednesday afternoon came close to giving the Vic seconds their first win of the season. Playing against St. Mike's seconds, Vic's Marlene Mason smashed through two goals for an early lead. St. Mike's, however, had other things in store and the game ended 3-2 for them.

Yesterday, PHE and POT seconds faced off for a do-or-die effort. A win would have given either squad the lead in its league but as it happened the match ended in a 2-2 tie. Nearly two periods passed before PHE came through with the opener, courtesy of Gloria Pegg. It looked as if PHE had it all over POT's in the third as Jackie Varcoe smashed one past the POT goalie.

With five minutes left, POT's Jane Russell shortened the deficit by one. Time was running out quickly. POT's mustered all their strength and Carol Creelman smashed through the tying goal.

Icemen Travel South

One league game in five weeks. That's the schedule snag upon which Varsity's hockey Blues are caught.

Coach Jack Kennedy admits that this makes things tough for his players. "It's hard to keep the boys keen," Jack says. In an attempt to shake off the staleness in time for the stretch run in the college league, the Blues are journeying to Canton, N.Y., for a Saturday night game with St. Lawrence University.

Coach Kennedy is trying some more new forward line combinations in this exhibition game, since he wants to find his most powerful team for the final four games of the season. Reason is that the Blues could conceivably win the league championship with four straight wins. On the other hand, a poor finish would keep them where they are now — in last place.

Don Cossar is moving up to the first line to make the plays for left-winger Harry Boyd and Red Stephen, who will be skating on the right wing for this game. During workouts this wek, Ernie Bednar has been centring Johnny Akitt and Ross Woods and this trio will likely play together in this game.

Clare Fisher's play with the intermediates has earned him this trip with the Blues and he'll likely play on the third line. Right-winger Jim Wilkes will also be with the team, as well as Johnny Adams.

Track Meet

The intensive training program which has been going on at the Hart House track will start to show results tomorrow afternoon at Hart House. Varsity's senior tracksters will be hosts to Wayne University of Detroit.

The meet is scheduled to start at 3.30, with a high school meet serving as a preliminary.

Facts, Mr. Blackmore?

You may be tired of hearing it and we are surely getting tired of saying it — but every time a potential danger to our civil liberties rises we will try to do our bit to slap it down.

Currently, a Social Credit MP from Alberta has taken advantage of the cold-war tensions, has jumped on the bandwagon in the company of an American senator, and has spouted sweeping statements about the danger of communism in Canada. Among the centres of Communist intrigue he has cited the Globe and Mail, the Windsor Star, the CBC, and, of course, the University of Toronto.

We are not criticizing the right of this gentleman to express his opinions freely on what he calls the dangers of communist influence in this country. What we disapprove of is the fantastic absence of logic in his statements and his insidious appeal to the emotion of fear.

The one criterion this gentleman is using to decide where Communist influence lies, resolves itself around the question of McCarthyism. Anyone or anything that is anti-McCarthy is being charged by this MP with being sympathetic to the Communist cause.

The Globe and Mail has been critical of McCarthy. The headline it ran on President Smith's report read: "U of T President Scores McCarthyism." The Social Creditor has felt this was too anti-McCarthy and therefore, automatically, pro-Communist.

A CBC program stressing the strict discipline of an ant colony was labelled by the Alberta MP as "having a Communist slant" because the commentator suggested that some day man might find himself living in similar colonies.

The University of Toronto faculty came in for a tongue-lashing because certain students had burned an effigy of McCarthy. The faculty was accused of brainwashing the students and "indoctrinating the boys and girls in falsehoods". The Social Creditor declared this incident definitely indicated Communist sympathies among the staff of the University.

The viciousness of such vague charges is apparent. They are all the more threatening when the MP, Mr. John Blackmore, asks that a Royal Commission be established to investigate Communism in Canada.

Behind the attacks of Mr. Blackmore there are no names, no facts. The Globe and Mail can hardly be accused of being sympathetic, in any shade, if more than just the headlines are read. To contend that ants are Communists is stretching the point a little too far. And to charge this University with being a Communist hotbed is to ignore the very strong Conservative and Liberal elements that exist in it.

We have consistently held that to be anti-McCarthy is not to be pro-Communist. We have believed that Communist professors can be allowed to teach certain subjects. We declare freedom too precious to be smeared by vague generalizations.

If Mr. Blackmore has any facts, then he should make them known to the authorities, not the headlines. Guilt by association, wild suspicion and the political smear will be, we hope, left below the 49th parallel.

As the Harvard Crimson once challenged Senator McCarthy, so we challenge Mr. Blackmore — either put up or shut up.

Willmott—A Communist Or An Innocent?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Recently two articles dealing with the same controversial "Behind the Iron Curtain" subject appeared in The Varsity. The Lofft account (written by Grif Cunningham) was as spectacular as one could expect, when the author is a westerner whose aim is publicity, and who does not care very much about ethical principles.

Thus his article is a sort of mixture of ideas partly expressed by the people (although I doubt that they spoke to him so freely), partly by the communistic leaders.

The other article, written by Bill Willmott, is nothing but an insult, an insult addressed to those who suffer, in the countries dominated by communists, the most barbarous treatment ever recorded in history, since the invasion of the Huns under Attila.

The tragedy is that, apart form some false statements, (like that which claims there was no free education in Roumania before the war which can be sustained only by a perfectly shaped communistic mind, and which is as true for the "before the war" Roumania as it is for any other western democratic country including Canada) the account by Bill Willmott is true. Namely the communists enjoy organizing festivals, congresses, mass meetings, and welcome for the comrades like Bill Willmott.

Who else, but a communist, could enjoy collaboration among Korean communists, Chinese communists and others, who are our bitter enemies, who killed so many Americans and other nationalities in Korea, and will kill more (for your pleasure Mr. Bill Willmott; thus, you will have occasion for another celebration) if they have the chance.

Speaking about the Congress of World Federated Democratic which was held in Bucharest, and at which he assisted, he writes as follows:

"It started with the Korean hugging and kissing the Chinese speaker, and it soon spread into a general celebration. . . ."

We know that they are joyful with millions of people their prey, but we do not understand how a student who claims to be the representative of the Christian movement could join them. What we need is to hear about the majority of the Roumanian people, the peasants who represent eighty percent of the Roumanian population and who in all villages throughout the country are beaten and jailed in order to deliver the last kilogram of their cereals, or in order to join the kolkhos, about Roumanian men of letters who are in jail only because they did not write according to the communistic prescriptions, about burnt libraries, about the leaders of the democratic parties as Juliu Manin who died in jail, and about those who are systematically killed in the camps of forced labor. One of the greatest forced labor camps is in the place where the Danube-Black Sea Canal is being built.

During that festival of Youth held in Bucharest in August, 1953, British and American guests received copies of an appeal signed by the National Committee of Young Roumanian Workers and Students in which the Communists are denounced as murderers of a whole nation. (I gave a copy of the appeal to one of The Varsity reporters to be published; but it was not.)

Industrialization, economic plans, heavy machinery are well-known propaganda which attempt to hide the armament and which have brought the people to the lowest living standard.

Judging from the point of view of a cold blooded spectator, one can conclude two possibilities regarding Bill Willmott. Either he is a communist, which is more likely, and then all is clear, or he is one of the most naive and ignorant of students, easily convinced by the communist propaganda, which is worse.

Whatever it may be, I would like to point out one thing. There are many people like Bill Willmott among us; if, by our misfortune, the communists succeed in conquering the world and in destroying our civilization, which their helpers among such men is their final aim, they will find their helpers among soch men as Bill Willmott. (For those who do not believe that the communistic aim is the world conquest, I recommend the reading of the works of Carl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Vladimir Ilyich, Ulyanov-Lenin, and Josef Visarionavich-Stalin.)

Moderately Grimm

Reprinted from the Manitoban, University of Manitoba

Once in a far off kingdom there lived a family of fairly intelligent Jackasses.

Their owner was a man named Brown.

He was a moderately good man.

Every night he brought grasses that they might be nourished.

Every night they ate these grasses for they knew them to be wholesome.

Every night they found among the grasses a certain veriety of noxious weed.

One day a leader rose among them.

Fellow Jackasses, he said.

Every night our master (a man named Brown who is moderately good man) brings grasses that we might be nourished.

Every night we find among these grasses a certain variety of weed which we know to be noxious.

Because we are Jackasses of superior intelligence we lay this weed aside and it does us no harm.

Someday however there may come a Jackass of inferior intelligence.

He will not lay the noxious weed aside.

He will be afflicted with awful bellyache and violent spasms and will endure great pain.

This will be a good thing.

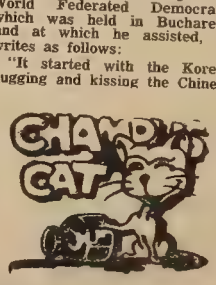
It is your duty, therefore, to appoint a Jackass of Very Superior Intelligence to sort out the noxious weeds before you begin to eat AND BURN THEM.

This will be a good thing.

And so it was done.

That night when Brown brought the grasses the Leader Who Had Risen Among Them carefully sorted out the noxious weeds.

Then he carefully ignited them.



It was very inspiring.

First the weeds burned.

Then the grasses caught fire.

Then the stable burned down.

Barbecued Jackasses anyone?

On Pawns & Sportsmen

Citizens from coast to coast last night tuned in on Olive Oil Ltd.'s Chess Broadcast. Fans from Oshawa to Omsk sat on the edge of their seats as Gloster Spewitt gave his gripping play by play commentary of the epoch-making game btwen the Toronto Checkmaters and the Russian Drawers.

The game was played on an international surface, and special men were used for the two squares involved. Though the Vatican protested against the indiscriminate use of bishops on both teams, good sportsmanship marked the game, despite a certain amount of checking. Coach Bondarevsky, interviewed in his Pawn room during intermission expressed confidence that his "white quen was showing good form this season" and was expected "to lead the boys to victory over the Canadian capitalists." Meanwhile, Coach Anderson of the Canadian squad claimed that the Russian club was "deliberately picking on his King." He did not claim, however, that this was motivated by political considerations.

Many players were foribly removed from the game, though the royal family showed unusual stamina, remaining in the line-up until the nd of the contest. The bishops early demonstrated an attitude of most unecclesiastical belligerency, having assaulted one another to such purpose that at the climax only one reminded upon his feet, mitre slightly askew. After the game, under questioning by the Quebec board of censors, both coaches denied rumours that "Arabian knights had been playing."

The Hunter

Michael Nimchuk

Jim stood on the ridge and watched the deer walk slowly, daintily down towards the pond. She was a small doe with a tiny white tail that bobbed up and down when her legs clicked upon the black slab stone. Jim raised his rifle. Sighting he followed gracefully the slightest movement of the doe's head. He squeezed the trigger, the stillness exploded into sound and the young doe fell into the cold pond, her red blood gushing out into the water's greenness. And the shot echoed through, back and forth, crackling between the high grey cliffs of the gorge, scaring the wild birds into chatter and flight.

A smile curled on Jim's lips and he glanced around to Muriel his fiancee and winked. She frowned, but Jim didn't see the frown for he was now absorbed with his gun. With his damp hand he swept moisture along the barrel of the gun, caressed the polished wood stock with his finger tips then eased the used bullet out of the well oiled mechanism. The shell flipped out into the air and fell to the slab stone ground, clicked through a crazy dance then lay silent. Jim spit at the shell and yelled to Muriel:

"Bring me my gun case."

"No," she said.

Jim turned and saw Muriel's good body, fine hair and small feet clothed in bush-wear sitting on a tree stump and her eyes watching all his movements.

"Why not?" he asked harshly.

Muriel got up and walked to Jim's half-ton truck. She opened the door and closed it, door slamming silence through the forest air.

"O.K.," Jim said, flung off his hunting jacket to the stone ground while he cradled his gun between his legs. "O.K." He dropped to his knees and with his right hand he made a little bed out of his hunting jacket. With his two hands he gently lowered his gun into the jacket-bed then rolled the jacket around it. He lifted the whole thing up and placed it on a patch of green moss that grew on the slab rock. He stood up and walked down to the pond, iron cleats clicking on the slab stone, stones slipping noisily to the bottom of the ridge.

At the pond he gripped the doe's legs, jerked the body and bleeding head out of the water, shook it for a moment then tossed it up and around his neck, water dripping with a sprinkling of blood down his hunting shirt. He struggled back to the half-ton truck, threw the doe into the truck-box, turned and walked back to his gun. He unrolled the hunting jacket from around his gun, lifted the gun up and with one hand put his jacket. He walked back to the truck.

"Hand me the case, Muriel," Jim said. She looked at him, his broad shoulders, square jaw and black eyes filling out the window frame of the truck door. The window was down. "Well," he said. But, Muriel looked away and down the twisting tote road. "Ahh," Jim growled, dove a hand through the window frame, grabbed the gun case and lifted it out of the truck. He gently slipped his gun into the case then notched the end cap securely with the leather thong. He opened the truck door and got in slipping the gun case into a fancy brass holder he had up in the truck. He secured the case to the holder, looked at Muriel, snorted, rammed the truck through its gears and took off down the narrow tote road.

At the highway he stopped the truck, looked up and down for traffic then geared through and drove out onto the highway.

"All right, what is it?" Jim said Jim and snapped on his lights. "Well," he said to Muriel.

"I shouldn't have come," Muriel said, voice shaking," I shouldn't have."

"Now what's wrong!"

"Please, Jim, please . . . Just take me home."

said to Muriel. The black pavement curved past some cottages, a few cars sped by—one blinked and unblinked its lights. "O.K., O.K., mister, it's not that dark!"

"OK, OK, what else . . ."

The trees got dark, clouds blackened and the moon whitened and grew, swiftly rising its glow bathed the pavement and forest with a dull glow. A white sign sped by. It read: Carson 12 miles. Jim pushed the gas harder and the half-ton truck purred more swiftly over the black pavement.

Jim eased the truck to the curb in front of Muriel's home with the wooden fence around it and the lights shinning softly in the windows. He braked with the emergency, got out and walked around the truck.

"Come out, you're home," he said flatly.

He took her arm as she stepped down to the sidewalk, but she recoiled ever so slightly and he let go, his face frowning.

"Still mad?" he demanded.

"No, Jim," she said, turned and walked to the gate.

"Now look here, what's the big idea," he said walking after her to the gate. But Muriel closed the gate quickly, leaving him on the sidewalk. He glared at her furiously and said:

"OK, what is it?"

"Goodbye," she said firmly looking into his eyes.

"Goodbye?" he growled.

"Yes," and she turned and half ran up the walk, head bowed, shoulders shivering with her sobbing.

"Just a minute . . . You'll—" yelled, but she was gone into her home and the door was shut tightly.

Jim stood for a moment thinking black thoughts, then spun around and walked to the truck. He glanced at the lifeless doe, noticing the good shot through the head. He smiled slowly, clicked his tongue self-complacently and got into the truck. He sat silently, lit a cigarette, started to whistle through his teeth then he turned on the ignition. He drove away, one hand gripping the steering wheel, the other hand resting on his gun case and he whistled louder, the smile broadened into a grin.

Judges Comment

Although a notably large volume of material was entered in this year's contest for the Literary Issue of The Varsity, the judges felt that the quality of the entries was generally low. They noticed good potential ideas in both the verse and short story competitions but thought both required greater discipline of style.

No prize was awarded for serious verse and only a first for light verse.

The first prize essay, Words From The Heart, by Joseph C. Glionna has already been published in The Varsity as an editorial article on Jan. 21 after entries had been accepted and made up for judging. Therefore we are now printing the second prize essay.

TV, Radio, Lecture Or Print? Anthropologists Experiment

By CATHIE BRESLIN

Apprehensive CBC officials prepared themselves last Saturday for an onslaught of 130 Univ. of Toronto undergraduates participating in an experiment in communications. The actual attack proved less formidable than the expectations; the CBC staff thawed under the charm of their student guests, and the venture ended happily.

The experiment was conceived and conducted by the Culture and Communications Project, an organization sponsored by the Ford Foundation "to study the impact of new media on existing cultural patterns, habits of speech, and the changing attitude to time and space". According to Dr. H. M. McLuhan, chairman of the Project, "this involves looking at each media not merely as a channel or link for the transmission of information, but considering each as a unique art form." The purpose of this experiment was, in part, to study the effect of modern media of communications on learning habits.

The enthusiastic guinea-pigs were II General Anthropology students. The group was quartered into groups of 35, and the matter of the experiment was communicated to each group through four different media: TV, radio, lecture, or the printed page. Dr. E. S. Carpenter, professor of Anthropology, delivered the lecture on the subject of primitive languages and their "magical character." The four groups then received the lecture through the various media.

Following the lecture, the groups wrote the same examination, consisting of short questions, a brief essay on content, and any comments the student wished to add.

A telecast of this experiment will be made this evening at 7:30, CBC-TV, on the program "Exploring Minds". Audience participation in the experiment is encouraged by the directors; exam blanks may be obtained at Box 500, CBC. The results will be analyzed by Dr. Carlton Williams, psychologist.

In two weeks, the indications and significance of the test will be discussed by the leaders of the Project, Dr. McLuhan, Dr. Carpenter, Dr. Wiliams, W. T. Easterbrook, and Jacqueline Tyrwhitt. These directors have placed private wagers on the outcome, and they are interested now to see who collects.

The Project hopes to continue these related experiments on a more elaborate scale. Subsequently, the special features of each media will be allowed full play; i.e., dramatization for radio and TV. The current test deliberately neutralized the characteristics of each media into a standard text, in order to provide a common ground for examination.

Quartets Plan Fourth Round For Tomorrow

By two o'clock tomorrow afternoon the fourth winner of the annual Hart House quartet contest will have been named.

Three preliminary contests have been held, producing three finalists who will sing tomorrow at 1.30 in the East Common Room of Hart House.

"Judging by past performances, there's very little to choose between these quartets", commented Garth McDowell, Assistant Warden of Hart House, who is one of the three judges of the contest.

The three competitors are the 5T5 Four, the Skulehouse Four and the Fourlorne Polecats.

The Varsity Criticizes . . .

. . . for taking up the time of the Students' Administrative Council's time with announcements of intra-university and inter-university social events.

Stalker, 1953-54 president of SAC, has also taken council time to make lengthy speeches about the Medical Society. He has in the past used the Council floor to "sell" Daffydill Nite tickets and to explain minutely amendments to the Meds Society Constitution.

Spring Fever

"In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to what the woman has been thinking about all year", is one of the many banal remarks which may be heard this time of the year. And yet Spring is always new to those who experience it.

Students feel their blood running fast again after the slothful frost of the winter. The "Oh, I'm so tired and fed up" look has gone from their faces, and they walk with a more sprightly step. There is more laughter in JCR. Twe fellow who has been playing dreary combinations of unresolved chords all winter has finally ended them in the major key. The engineer's whistle which froze on their lips for a few months has suddenly broken out, loud as ever. Bridge has busted out all over, especially in the Vic Coffee Shop; meanwhile the Buttery girls have found new company in the last rash rush of enjoyment. It's later than they think.

Professors crawl out of their academic holes and are surprised to find that their portentous decisions have not altered the course of the seasons. For a moment they experience that sensation of the unreality of words and long for action, even violent action. Once they were children walking out for adventure in rubber boots and dirty faces, a pocket full of licorice. They had tested the hardness of the ice; felt with excitement the power of the impatient waters under the crackling cover. And now they were professors walking out in shiny shoes and clean hands, their pockets empty. They dare not try the ice this year.

At the same time the administration pauses in its task of rewinding the antiquated machinery of examinations to gaze out on the smiling campus and then wearily cranks on.

The Case For Early Marriage

If, as some maintain, the main purpose of sex and marriage is procreation, then it is evident that in our society early marriage is definitely out of place, since the economic factors are adverse to early parenthood.

There are those who claim that sex is the foremost factor in our existence. All our efforts, they say, are directed to please the other sex, for the purpose of sexual relations. Others put marriage on a more "idealistic" basis, and claim priority for "spiritual values" and companionship.

While all these factors and more make an ideal marriage, there is inded a great deal to be said in support of the theory that marriage is primarily an institution for the satisfaction of our sexual needs. The facts are these:

The American single male, twenty-one to twenty-five years old of low educational level, is highly promiscuous", eighty-six per cent having heterosexual premarital relations, twenty-two percent having homosexual relations. The same age group of college level "are . . . highly erotic, often involved in social relations and petting with females, and highly aroused."

These facts suggest that the American male considers marriage primarily as a more convenient opportunity for sex relations than he had while single.

Women take a similar attitude. According to Kinsey, nine American girls in ten do engage in petting by their late 'teens. Fifty percent of all wives have premarital relations.

These facts teach that the normal human being desires a mate for the purpose of sex relations. It is, however, imperative that the mate should be not only the object of sex love in the physical sense, but also the object of friendship love; one without the other will result in an unhappy love-life and an unhappy marriage; there must be an indissoluble combination of the two elements. Nevertheless, it may be said that marriage per se is an institution for the satisfaction of our sex desires primarily, since friendship of a high degree may exist betwen a couple that is not married.

We see that sex relations, apart from being an expression of love, stand in their own right as the satisfaction of a natural impulse. The fact that something is practised by the majority of mankind does, of course, not prove its moral rightness. In the case of sex however, it is different, since sex is one of our biological appetites, the repression of which causes inconvenience while other almost universal manifestations, i.e., lying and wars are no appetites and their absence causes no inconvenience. All appetites are inherently good; their abuse only is evil. Thus, while above statistics do not necessarily prove, e.g., promiscuity to be morally good, they certainly prove the existence of an almost universal, persistent sex appetite which demands satisfaction in one form or another, with no immediate concern for offspring. We shall presently determine that marriage only is its proper form of satisfaction.

It is generally agreed that this sexual satisfaction, while not being necessary to maintain health, is more conducive to the general well-being and balance of the individual, than continuous continence with all the ensuing frustrations thereof. St. Paul upholds this view of the role of sex in marriage in I Corinthians VII, where he says nothing at all about offspring, but states that marriage is a

The Mutation

Nore Flynn

When Walter let Honoré into the kitchen, the Frenchman brushed the snow from his feet, and, opening his bulging overcoat, took a bottle of Scotch from his pocket. "It's no much, but we will drink at any rate," said Honoré. At this moment, Mrs. Mihalik strode in from the living-room, wheer she had been carrying out her pre-visit inspection of the wood-work and furniture, (even the picture-frames) for particles of dust.

She was a squat woman, who carried herself so erect that she seemed to be leaning slightly backwards. She stood, in her kerchief, worn print dress, and shapeless slippers, she stood grinning hospitably at Honoré, but shyly silent.

"This is my mother," said Walter. The expatriate lifted her limp hand and kissed it. Mrs. Mihalik looked abashed and rubbed her coarse peasant's hand. Honoré blushed; Walter winced, and grabbing the Frenchman's arm, tried to whisk him away to the living-room.

The Parisien and the Polish-woman stood looking in each other's eyes. Then Mrs. Mihalik began to chuckle in her warm, slow-bubbling heartiness. She shouted to Walter in rapid Polish. Walter smiled. "She tells me in Polish, that you are 'noble'. You've made a big impression on my mother." The woman positively beamed at the urbane, albeit ragged Frenchman. He bowed, grinned and followed Walter over the immaculate, wash-worn floors, down the ster the hallway, into the antiseptic living-room.

Walter put some Beethoven on the phonograph, and chattered about André Gide's journals, which had just then reached our public library and were enjoying some vogue. As the Pole busied himself with the drinks, Honoré noticed that his cigaret-ash was about to fall, and glanced surreptiously around the room. He could not locate a dirty ash-tray anywhere, although there were several sparkling little crystal receptacles within reach. He dropped his ash, feling that it was obscene to mar such an immaculate array.

The room that the Parisien saw was a decorative mongrel, product of the mating of two eras; and two ways of life. There was an ugly dark, little table sitting, ostracized, in front of a modern pastel chesterfield. There were lace and needlework cushions on a Laziboy chair, and all the furniture sat on a dowdy (but highly-polished) flowered linoleum rug. A crucified Christ stared with forgiving eyes at a ballerina of Degas, that gaily pirouetted on the opposite wall. A huge oval photograph of a nude infant sprawling on a table-top was hung above the chesterfield. Honoré guessed that this was a baby picture of his friend, and that if the gentle Pole could curse, he certainly must curse the doting maternity that displayed this stark outrage. He noted the Venetian blinds behind the bright chintz curtains, and the cream desk-phone on an end table — obtrusion of America into the life of Poland. "A domestic, Polish Mustapha Kemal, in Canada—" mused the Parisien, who found paradoxes amusing. His reflections were interrupted when Mrs. Mihalik bustled into the room, and without saying a word, bore his ash-tray away.

He could hear her washing it in the kitchen. She replaced it, in a moment, at his elbow. When she was gone, Honoré looked wondering at Walter. "It wasn't dirty at all!"

"You will have to forgive my mother," said Walter, laughing. "She likes you, and she is curious but she is shy; so she pulls all sorts of stratagem to get in here to see what we're doing. She doesn't mean any harm."

"Well why doesn't she come in and sit down with us?"

"Oh, she never sits down with the men," said Walter. "She can't change her ways. Why do you know that when I instituted the washing machine, she was terrified of it? She'll come in and take your ash-tray several times and wash it for you, and sooner or later, she'll land in here with cakes and coffee and you'll have to let her see you eating something. Please don't let it bother you, you have no idea how sweet she is, and how she loves to fuss."

"Does she drink?" asked Honoré.

Walter rolled his eyes and grimaced. "You've never seen anything like it. If you want to win her affection completely, offer her a drink." His tone was light, but Honoré felt that there was pain in it.

"Well," said the Frenchman lightly, "call her in, then!"

Walter called softly in Polish. His mother strode into the room. Honoré stood up, inclined his head and pointed at the bottle. "We would like you to have a drink with us," he said. She looked at her son, and he nodded. She began to chuckle, murmuring guttural sounds, but when Honoré started to pour into a glass, she shook her head violently, and sprinted into the kitchen. There was a rattle of crockery, the bang of a cabinet door, and she returned with a little jugger measure, her own, which she held to be filled. She smiled sweetly at both of them, there was an audible gulp, and the whisky was inside Mrs. Mihalik's solid frame. She smacked her lips.

Honoré laughed and proffered the bottle again. She drained the glass with the same gusto. Honoré looked hesitantly at the bottle in his hand and at the broad, pleasant face of Mrs. Mihalik, but she was shouting at Walter now, in a strident, harsh voice, with flashing eyes, and much gesticulation. "What have I begun?" though the Frenchman, in alarm. "What's wrong," he asked aloud.

"Nothing," said Walter calmly. His mother disappeared into a bedroom, and returned with a large iron ring from which hung a great key. She gave the key to Walter, with more loud Polish and an energetic push toward a staircase in the corner of the room. Walter excused himself and darted upstairs. Mrs. Mihalik grinned at Honoré and he grabbed the bottle and motioned for her to sit down. She frowned, shook her head and left the room. Honoré could hear her humming loudly in the kitchen. The Frenchman sat down on the edge of the sofa and looked about uncomfortably.

Walter came down the stairs with two bottles in his hand. "You have given a drink to my mother, and now it is necessary that you have a drink with her. She told me to bring the Benedictine and the brandy, which is the best in the house."

"Please—" began Honoré, confused and embarrassed, but feeling mellow and somehow inordinately touched by the gesture. "I thought she was angry by her tone."

"There's nothing to do about it," said Walter. "It means a great deal to her to give a drink.

Hart House

Election Free-for-all

"This lid is off this week as far as election hi-jinks in Hart House go," Don McKenzie, IV Meds, said last night.

From Monday to Friday nominees for the various Committees of Hart House will be campaigning in and through the halls of the House in an attempt to get the greatest voting turnout in years.

"Just about anything goes for campaign week and election days," McKenzie added. The big election day is Wednesday, March 3, with two advance polling days on Monday, March 1 and Tuesday, March 2.

"Candidates are reminded that they may display two posters 24 x 36 inches in Hart House during campaign week. These posters may be hung in the main hall and lunchroom corridor," McKenzie said. "And if they follow the pattern of past years, some weird, wonderful and imaginative advertising visions will be seen," he added.

Election speeches will be delivered by candidates beginning next Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. in the East Common Room, in order to acquaint voting members with the candidates. Speeches will be of a 2½-minute length. Election subcommittee members John Becker, III Eng.; Doug Christie, IV Eng.; Bill Harris, III Forestry; Bill Laing, III Pharm.; and Don McKenzie, IV Meds, will assist with the speeches.

Bill Laing suggested that candidates might find it to their advantage to hang an advertising poster in their own college, school or faculty. He reminded members that they may not distribute gum, cigarettes, women, match-folders or any articles of value to prospective voters.

The House Committee decided at a recent meeting that the Hart House membership cards will not be used for election day purposes. ATL cards will again be employed as certain weaknesses in the membership card issuing system had made it impossible to use them, the Committee stated.

This move will encourage all undergraduate members to vote whether they possess a Hart House membership card or not. "Under no circumstances should a member not be allowed the privilege of voting due to a technical hitch," Doug Christie said.

ART, MUSIC OR DRAMA?

At The Casino

Wow!

You can stop right there if you like because that word very neatly and adequately sums up my feelings regarding Miss Dorothy Dandridge who is currently singing songs as they were meant to be sung at the Casino theatre.

However, some elaboration may be in order. To take things, tion—she just sings. Of the six put first things first, Miss Dandridge is beautiful. That's your first impression as she undulates to the microphone looking tall, slender, shapely, golden and most interesting.

Then she sings. There's no preamble, no dramatic introduction—she just sings. Og the six numbers making up the program, four are upbeat songs done in a fine, rhythmic style—Fine and Dandy, Taking a Chance on Love, What is this Thing Called Love? (somehow I think she knows) and Just One of Those Things.

The other two, Talk Sweet Talk to Me and You'd Better Go Now, show you what the dictionary doesn't explain about the word subtle. An outright display of sexiness is generally vulgar or, even worse, boring. Miss Dandridge, however, sings these tunes softly and quietly, with a faint suggestion of body movement. Her smooth voice caresses the notes and lyrics of the songs with loving and faithful attention to each one. As you can guess, the effect is quite devastating. As a torch singer, she might have been expected to sizzle; instead, she smoulders away soothingly.

All that talent and beauty too. Some people have everything.

The rest of the current vaudeville fare at the Casino is pretty dreary stuff, with the exception of a little guy called Jimmy Casanova, who is a madcap master of ceremonies and has a couple of character sketches that are exceedingly well-planned and well-executed.

It is inevitable, of course, that Dorothy Dandridge must leave and that sad event will take place Wednesday. She'll be replaced in the spotlight by a vocalist whose voice will be several octaves further down. He's Vaughan Monroe who has a sexy voice too, I'm told.

From the Casino, you walk over to the Imperial and it's moving from the sublime to the ridiculous. The latest Dean Martin-Jerry Lewis epic, Money From Home, is being offered at Canada's largest theatre and it's nothing if it isn't ridiculous.

For M-L fans, of whom there seem to be quite a few, this is the very thing. Personally, I question whether utter stupidity can be funny for seventy consecutive minutes. Still, the moments when Jerry Lewis uses his rare talent as a mimic are almost worth waiting for.

Jim Proudfoot.

The Consul

Saturday night, the fifth annual Opera Festival opened with a big splash; a bright, sparkling one off-stage, and a dark gloom one on-stage. The Consul, which was the rage last year, has survived a degree of familiarity and the passage of a year, to become even more successful this year.

Gian-Carlo Menotti's "musical drama in three acts and six scenes" assumes the proportions of a Greek classical tragedy, with the old virtue of prudence replaced by the new inalienable virtue, freedom (or civil liberties). Destiny pursues the Sorel family in the shape of a red tape system and the secret police of an unnamed dictatorship. The unities of time and place are not strictly observed as the scenes shift from the Sorel abode to the consulate, while the drama takes a few months to reach its death. There is also a suggestion of comic relief in the scene in which the magician, Nika Magadoff, hypnotizes all the tragedy-struck people in the consulate's office into dancing together around the room. This comedy, though, is, like that of Shakespeare, so chosen that it heightens rather than lessens the tragic effect by grotesque contrast with the main theme. The purpose of the unities which was versimilitude is maintained in various small realistic touches, costuming, action and music.

The story in its particular aspects is one of suspense. Will a particular man and wife get help from the consul and escape the secret police? The question of men's rights too may not always be so pressing as in our century, but certain aspects of the opera have a universality which will retain its appeal after the story is well-known. There is, primarily, suffering humanity; there is motherhood, and there is love.

Some people do not consider this to be a "true opera." It depends, naturally, upon the meaning you take for this word, but in the end it resolves itself to a question of the function of the music. In my estimation, the music is absolutely essential to the effect of the story, both in its particular narrative and in its universal emotional aspects. Each speech is given its value relative to the musical scale and the peaks are marked by lyric passages which reach peaks impossible by words alone.

The performance, already excellent last year, has aged in the wooden corridors of the Conservatory, and surpassed its own record. Nellie Smith was a superb granny. In the warmth of her acting and her singing she portrayed everything that her make-up and posture implied in character. All the protective affection that is common to grandmothers was expressed in the scene where she tries in vain to amuse the sickly babe and sings of what she would do for her grandson.

John and Magda were sung by Glenn Gardiner and Theresa Gray. Mr. Gardiner kept down the melodrama of hobbling around in the opening scene, which became almost laughable last year. His performance was more convincing in every point except in the scene where he takes leave of Magda. They do not seem really heartbroken to part which prevents the drama of the situation from developing as it does later. Miss Gray begins restrainedly which points up the hysteria. As before she associates herself completely with the part. Suzette Nadon, as the foreign woman, also gave a very genuine and realistic performance.

It was a pleasure to hear an orchestra in the pit of the Royal Alexandra give a good performance.

Wendy Michener.

Boris Roubakine

Boris Roubakine's performance last night in Wymilwood clearly marked him as a pianist without a superior in this city. With clarity, rhythmic sweep and almost unfailing accuracy he rendered works in four contrasting styles, making up among them an interesting and well-balanced program.

The clarity he achieved through a bold, singing tone, and an extraordinarily even touch. The rhythmic sweep seems to be a part of his nature, while his brilliant technique allows him to bring it out to the full.

Consequently, the English Suite i in A minor of Bach, a virtuoso piece that easily degenerates into a mere rhythmic strumming over a few simple chords, had drive, and even a measure of passion. The lovely musette-like interlude in the Bouree made a delightful splash of color.

Three short works by Brahms, and four modern ones (including Mr. Roubakine's speciality — contemporary Swiss composers) introduced a little humor into the program, for example in the rhythmically contorted Brahms Intermezzo (Op. 119 No. 3), and in the melodically contorted Study on Finger Substitution by d'Alessandro.

The final work was Beethoven's sonata Op. 110, a work of pensive, lyrical beauty rather than rugged grandeur. Mr. Roubakine's performance of it was somewhat more coherent than the one he gave during a terrible hot spell last summer. The listener never failed to hear the long-drawn melodic lines, even in the deliberate Ariso and its introductory recitative, and in the more unpianistic passages of the final fugue. Here was a fugue as it should be: independent strands with every one of them in evidence at all times.

DUST ON THE TABLE

Miserable Miser

The New Society presented Friday a comedy called The Miser by Moliere. As the days of February drag on towards the days of March one cannot help but feel how inadequately this comedy meets the challenge of the season, this time of February mucking into March.

Although Moliere has been dead many years his spry ghost could be seen on opening night weeping. Turning over in the grave is an answer for only some things.

The New Play Society, operating with singular logic, save their best acting and directing for abominable plays like Duet For Two Hands. When a good play is presented, as in this case, the actors the directors, the stage designers, and everybody else, lay themselves benignly down upon the play, as upon the ground, like expectant seeds awaiting a glamorous sprouting. Weeds must grow, and weeds have their place, but they go against the etiquette of good gardening when they trespass on Moliere's tidy grave. Bad acting never appears worse than in a good play.

Robert Christie misdirected the play in this manner; he mixed the overripe bananas of farce with the underripe grapes of stylistic comedy, mixed together too violently in a little bowl called the Museum Theatre, added the gravy of lack of rehearsal and miscalled his confection after the French, The Miser. A more accurate translation (after the performange) might be The Misery.

Needless to say the acting was murky with a certain amount of shading both ways. The middle darkness was played competently by Peter Mews, Margaret Griffin, Neil Vipond, and Deborah Turnbull. The pitch black was played by Drew Thompson seconded by either James Pearce or Michael Globe. They achieved at moments a certain air of tired vaudeville, a dim land where no laughter is heard. What light there was came from Norman Roland, laying the miser. Roland is a fine actor but he did not have enough support to sustain an evening except from Edward Holmes as a servant. One felt that he had not been given enough rehearsal and was nowhere near the pitch of delightful and varied comic invention that he showed in The Play's The Thing some weeks ago.

The set was inadequate. An impressionistic treatment does not fit a stylized comedy, although on second thought, the set did reflect the mood of this play—a set after the fact rather than the ideal.

As a professional production this play was dust on the table; regarded as an amateur production it might be called amateurish; as a play by Moliere it is worth seeing because Moliere is better dimly seen than not seen at all.

Ricky Arnold.

THROUGH THE VIEWFINDER

Photographic Art

All the photographs on display in the Hart House gallery until the end of the month are technically competent. They represent clearly and directly a wide range of subject matter. Usually the composition appears something more than accidental. However, among these prints I found no really outstanding use of the imagination in subject matter and in composition.

The combination of competence and a limited imagination is particularly noticeable in the Karsh Trophy competition. The object of the trophy is to stimulate undergraduates to investigate the fertile visual field of campus activity and leave behind the sovery-predictable scenery and so on of the typical amateur photographer. The result— pictures of people on the campus but really not much more. There are a couple of good action sport shots, but off the basketball floor, college life is a static poised affair if we are to believe the evidence of these photographs. The Karsh Trophy goes to Ted Sparrow, noted for his work on The Varsity, for his orderly, well-composed picture of the JCR. As a denizen of the place I must complain. Surely the spirit of the JCR is more active, more noisy. Surely people arrange themselves every day in compositions more dynamic than the one Sparrow has chosen to represent. If the trophy has made undergraduates look around them it has accomplished something worth while. Perhaps next year we can expect a more vigorous response to the challenge.

The junior competition is dominated by several rather prolific contributors. Urquhart's contributions display a certain freshness, clarity and careful composition most successful in Wright Iron the winner of the Junior award. Dunn has a more lyrical imagination and a more varied aproach. The studied informality of P. Hallam's objective documentation of buildings and ocean about Nova Scotia is remarkably like his paintings.

Although there was less imagination, less action in the Senior group, Prelude by Huffman received the senior award. The balanced, static composition expressed complete quietness and perhaps that is appropriate to a prelude. Blackhall has done some good though rather literal reportorial work. His Beach Buddies is thought an excellent composition. D. A. Spratt must have remarkable patience to take his "nature" shots of which "Tiger of the Swamp" and What's Up are very fine examples.

It's worth bending your back and screwing up your eyes to look at the color transparencies. Even as small as they are, they seem more exciting and not only because of the added attraction of color. P. A. Tobias' neat little composition, First Snowfall, won first prize. There are a large number of honorable mentions, particularly worth your attention. One of the most dramatic is Great Blue Heron by J. D. McIntyre.

The most paused-over photo is that of a nude woman who just sits there and is a woman and nude. Every man who approaches this comes to a dead stop and stares in fascination. The remarkable thing is that he carefully examines the next several landscapes just to show his interest is purely artistic before resuming his walking-pace perusal of the show.

If every tenth photograph was one of this type, it would ensure that all the prints in the show would get the inspection they deserve.

Ingrs Lawrence.

IN THE HISTRIONIC LINE

Monosexual Mikado

I must admit that I dropped in on this show out of curiosity, but it was well satisfied. For the UTS Mikado is quite the most unusual Mikado I have seen. Inadequacy of a high school orchestra, and to some extent of high school voices is, of course, to be expected. And in this respect the performance was not unusual. The orchestra, in spite of capable conducting by Mr. Jones, was weak and out of tune, just as the voices were generally harsh and loud.

The curiosity of it, aside from the obvious fact of boys playing girls' roles, was in the histrionic line. Unable to achieve any great success with Sullivan's half, they cancentrated their invention on Gilbert's, and made of it something novel and entertaining.

In the first place the dramatic direction of Mr. R. J. McMaster and the choreographic contribution of Miss Margaret Dippell were combined to add a few fresh touches to the routine of chorus positions and slapstick. For example the operetta (one is tempted to think of it as a play) opened with two of the maids from school peeking out from the curtains and then walking across the stage talking Japanese (?) and giggling girlishly.

Added to this there were several outstanding individual characterizations. Garrick Hagon made the coyest Yum-Yum I have yet come across. Although he was not a very strong soprano, his portrayal of maidenly blushes and confusion was convincing and one felt that Nanki-Poo mattered to his Yum-Yum. James MacDougall gave an astonishing performance of that stern, but warm-hearted "elderly lady", Katisha. In makeup he looked every inch the part, and achieved with a good proportion of comedy and tragedy her paradoxical moods of anger, pity, proudness and sorrow.

Among the straight male parts, Peter Marsh as the Mikado of Japan, and James Cunningham as Ko-Ko were particularly successful. The former, instead of the usual benign dictator was a most frightening philanthropist with a cruel drooping moustache out of which emerged spine-chilling laughter. James Ko-Ko Cunningham looked little like a child ruler, but he brought all his dramatic and dancing technique into play to fulfill the comic possibilities of this part. Another important asset was his punctilious diction.

Although G and S fans were probably delighted at the new light thrown on the old favorite by UTS, the school might better, perhaps, follow the acting tradition wherein lies their forte.

BLUES DEFEAT ASSUMPTION MEET MUSTANGS WEDNESDAY

By MOISHE REITER

The Purple Raiders of Assumption College, suffering a severe case of claustrophobia on the tiny basketball floor of Hart House, suffered a 74-53 defeat as well at the sure hands of the Varsity Blues. Leading the Blues on their warmest night of a 'hot and cold' season was Leapin' Lou Lukenda, Varsity's 'Honey-suckle Rose', with 29 points on a 68% shooting average. Lou's title comes from the orange-juice and honey mess Bob Masterson had his Blues lap up before taking the court against the Raiders.

Varsity's zone, terror of all visiting teams at Hart House, was the buss of doom for the Assumption lads and may keep them from their championship this season. The Purples failed to break the Varsity zone even on the large Assumption court last week and at Hart House their efforts were pathetic. Fast passing, set shots from outside and fancy dribbling manoeuvers by the Purple's George Joseph were all tried to penetrate the Varsity defence but the Blues held tightly. Assumption, too, had a fair defensive setup but it didn't look as though anything could have stopped Lukenda who was hitting unconsciously from any spot on the floor.

George Joseph, the Assumption star, had an off night and showed little of the form for which he is renowned, scoring only 5 points, but whether this was due to the minute court or the relentless checking of Steve Oneschuk is a moot point. Joseph now has 90 points in five league games and is the League's top guard. One two-handed jump-shot, thrown from the corner, gave Varsitypes an idea of what this boy can do when he's on. Perhaps it's just as well the Blues he wasn't.

Assumption, with an almost all-American starting team, was rated the top College team in the nation. Friday night, though, it was a Canadian, Dick McKenzie, from Niagara Falls, that carried most of their load. Big Dick whipped in 19 points for the visitors and was the only real driver on the team. Best playmaker for Assumption was Ed Chittaro, a diminutive fellow with a neat set from outside and a talent for setting up plays. Lack of size didn't stop Chittaro much, as the Raider guard made up for it with speed, agility and brains.

While the point spread favoured Varsity by a 21 point margin, the play gave Assumption a better rating. An average of over 50% in their last half shooting, compared with Assumption's of under 20%, put the Blues well ahead in the final periods, but had the Purples shot more often they might have fared far better. Repeatedly they worked the ball in for good shots but instead of shooting the Raiders continued to work it while the Blues looked on calmly. One play had Hugh Coyle, one-time Torontonian, rushing down the centre, whipping one behind his back to Joseph cutting in, who came around flipping back out to Coyle who by that time was as confused as the rest of us and bobbled the pass into Jim Russell's hands.

BLUE BITS: George Stulac, who somewhat overshadowed Assumption's George, dropped a total of 17 points and received a great round of applause when he fouled out. The crowd of 1,200 roared its praise for several minutes. Stulac's team-play, Lukenda's fabulous shooting and Jim Russell's set-shot artistry supplied most of the Varsity power . . . Bill Corcoran, played his best home game of the past two years, snaring rebounds and scoring with ease. Hooping ten points, Corcoran made the Varsity attack a four-pronged deal, dividing the Assumption's attention between himself and the Big Three of Stulac, Lukenda and Russell . . . Jim Russell played solid ball, gunning for 12 points on long sets and running the Varsity offense skillfully from his guard spot . . . Lou Lukenda gave a display of faking and ball-handling the like of which we've never seen from him before. His sharp eye found the hoop but it was his clever play that shook off the Assumption defenders and put him in the clear for the shots . . . A clap of the hand to Steve Oneschuk for a tight checking job on George Joseph. Steve had the Windsor boy sewn up all the way . . . Red Nantais, Asumption coach was heard to remark, "Masterson should save some of these baskets for Western. Mr. Nantais could be right, considering the way the Blues blow hot and cold. When the Blues meet Western this Wednesday they'll be able to use all the points they can get.

Flying High

—VSP by Ted Sparrow.

Going up for a high rebound at the Assumption basket in Friday's game are Blues Marv Tile (24) and Lou Lukenda (23) against Assumption's Dick McKenzie (24). Ed Chittaro (15) waits in the vain hope that one of his men will get it. Anyone can plainly see that Tile and Lukenda have it snug in their mits. Other Assumption players in the picture, but not in the play, are Hugh Coyle (19) who played a good game and Dick Kennedy (16).

Western Girls Champs In Volleyball Tourneys

By FLO MIDDLETON

Western has again walked off with another inter-collegiate crown. In Hamilton over the week-end, the Western squad with superior team play and spiking captured the women's volleyball championships by defeating the teams from Toronto, Guelph, Montreal and Hamilton.

Although Varsity was awarded third place standing in the tournament, she actually tied for second place with Queen's, but because the positions, in case of ties, were awarded on a marginal score basis, Queen's came out on top.

Toronto's position is hardly indicative of the good playing by individual members of the team or the overall play. The blue and white "eight" was by the far the best balanced squad in the tournament, but because of several bad breaks the team was unable to retain last year's second place standing.

In the first games on Friday, while O.A.C. was downing McMaster 30-19 and Queen's was blasting McGill 36-17, Toronto was coming out on the short end of the score against Western, 36-26. Beryl Lewis and Helen Saarinen sparked the Blues ahead with their cross court spikes during the first half.

The second game saw Western defeat Queen's 29-11 and Aggies win over McGill 28-12. At the same time Toronto was humbling the McMaster team which had crushed Varsity so soundly here two weeks ago. The Hamilton girls seemed unable to make their second line spiking play work or stop the hard, fast spikes of Barb Wilson. Toronto won 28-21.

In the last round on Friday, U.W.O., McMaster and Queen's emerged victorious, defeating Guelph, Montreal and Toronto respectively by the scores of 23-12, 33-12 and 18-15. Norma Higgs was exceptional for the Gaels at the net with her powerful spikes but the steady second line playing of Helene Wiseman and June Rathbaum of Toronto prevented the score from climbing too high in Queen's favour.

Blue Trackmen Beat Yankees

By JIM PROUDFOOT

A soaring high-jumper from Detroit's Wayne University stole the show Saturday as the Motor City track and field team joined Varsity's squad in staging one of the best indoor meets ever seen in Hart House. While the Blues won the meet by a close 42-40 score, winning five of ten events, it was lanky Mark Smith who highlighted the meet by leaping six feet six inches into the air to win the high jump and come within half an inch of the Canadian open record.

Smith, who shared first place in last year's NCAA meet at Lincoln, Nebraska, by clearing 6'8", said this was the highest he had ever gone in an indoor meet. Closest to Smith was Varsity's Barry West, who jumped 5'10" to match the existing interfaculty record.

Three track records were broken and one tied in Saturday's meet as the teams split first places, each winning five events.

Norm Williams equalled the mark of 6.5 seconds in the 50-yard high hurdles and set a new time of six seconds even in the 50-yard low hurdles. Bob Hamilton of Varsity was second in both races.

Dick Harding was Toronto's other record-breaker, doing the 440-yard run in 52.6 seconds to snap the mark he set last week.

Harding also contributed to Varsity wins in both relays.

Wayne's Jim Clark set a Hart House record in the half-mile event, a time of one minute and 59.3 seconds. Clark also won the mile in 4:37.1, beating Varsity's Bill Eckersley, who finished second.

One of the better events was the two-mile run, where Herb Tilson was Varsity's only entry against three Wayne runners. Tilson put up a game battle, led the race for a few laps, but couldn't keep up to the solid pace of Joe Babb, who crossed the line in 10 minutes and 21.3 seconds. Wayne's fifth win was in the 50-yard dash, which Wayne's Joe Zucco won in 5.6 seconds.

Down at Montreal Friday night, the Carabins won the Birks Trophy for hockey championship of the McGill Winter Carnival. The win gave the Carabins 14 points, while the fourth-place Blues have five with four games to go, which means they could finish with 13. However, Varsity's chances of bettering their present position are good, as they have a game in hand over McGill and Laval, the teams immediately above them in the standing.

STANDING

Montreal	10	7	3	0	60	46	14
Laval	9	5	3	1	40	32	11
McGill	9	3	6	0	33	40	6
Varsity	8	2	5	1	23	38	5

Blue Icemen Cooled Again

Varsity's hockey Blues were victims of a close game again Saturday night as they were blanked 3-0 by St. Lawrence University at Canton, N.Y. And while the Blues were losing this exhibition game, they were mathematically eliminated from the intercollegiate championship as the University of Montreal Carabins moved out of reach by defeating McGill Redmen 9-6 Friday night at Montreal.

The St. Lawrence team used U.S. rules to bamboozle the Blues for their first goal. They don't use the red line at this school and one of their players got behind the Varsity defence for a long pass and a breakaway. Their third goal was fired into an empty net with ten seconds to go as the Blues had removed goalie Jack Ross in an attempt to get back in the game. The Blues held a wide margin on play in the third period, outshooting the homesters 17-6, but had their usual rough time around the goal. The line with Clare Fisher at Centre between Johnny Adams and Ross Woods was tops for Varsity.

Engineers Win In Mat Meet

Harry Robinson, who won the Intramural Heavyweight wrestling title on Thursday night, provided the biggest surprise of Friday night's grappling championships in an exhibition bout with Bruce Laird.

Robinson pinned Larro at 1:30 of the first period. Laird is the Australian Heavyweight champion.

Skule were the overall champions winning three bouts, while UC came second with two victories. Vic, Pharmacy, and Dents each collected one win to tie for third position.

Tom Hatashita, Blue captain, put on a masterful display to take a point decision from Jim Stohler of Cnetral YMCA, who is Ontario champion in the 137 pound class.

The 177 pound class gave UC their first win as Al Miller defeated Trinity's Dick Martin by a 10-0 point count. Miller has won seven of his last eight bouts, and Martin actually did quite well in preventing a fall.

SPORT VS. NEWS

This Is Love, And B-Ball

By MUSHIE WRITER

To-night, in the Victoria College gym, there will be held a contest of skill and daring such as will chill the hearts of the very hottest young blades. Despite the rattle of their knocking knees and the clunk of their quivering brains against their almost empty skulls, with a courage sublime and the bravery of ignorance, the befuddled gentlemen of the Varsity News Staff —better known as the NEWS BLEWS — will engage in mortal combat with their peers — The Varsity Sports Staff.

Beginning at 8 p.m., and lasting as long as the newsies can stand up under the invincible Sports onslaught, a basketball game will be played to give the has-beens of a jaded News Staff an opportunity to wrestle with the Sportsmen and try to win back the coveted George Porter Trophy for Athletic supremacy of The Varsity — which News has never held rightfully.

To support them in their base intent the Blews have gathered a depressing array of talent. In their lineup are such super-stoops as Richard 'Cur-de-Lion' Anco, decrepit wonder of a bygone day who attributes his remarkable height to having, as an infernal grandfather, Captain Tom Thumb; Orie 'The Osculator' Loucks, whose affinty for the dust of sawn Oak extends to the point of having a head filled with her stuff; 'Grifter' Grif Cunningham, a man of obvious skill who intends to wait till all attention is focussed on the game and then to apply himself to an earnest ransacking of the till, and E. 'Biddy-Ball' Bernstein, a young lady who has definite pro ambitions and hopes that there may be big-league scouts in the crowd to watch her perform.

Sports, on the other hand, will got it without any stars, sticking to their usual strong team-play. Starting team for the Athletes of The Varsity will be made up of such stalwarts, modest, humble and proud, as James 'Haughty-toes' Proudfoot, a simple fellow with outstanding faculties for getting to the bottom —of things? Also we have Lanky Jane Kelly, a petite lass, who, in the last News-Sports game did her bit by hooping 50 points, which is not bad for a beginner; Jittery Rat Jocliffe, a female who is expected to charm the Blews with her coquettish right upper-cut; Florie Middleton, a young lady who refuses to shoot till she sees the "whytes" of their eyes; Johnny 'Walker' Wilson, a Trinity type who is going to open a Cork exporting firm if he continues his present pace, and who has, for quite a while now, been on the look-out for a bottlewasher. There is also a secret weapon whose identity will not be revealed until game time and his name is Moishe Reiter. He will also have a ghost shooter to do his playing for him and this fellow, whose name is also secret, is Leo Madden, but he is not quite ready for this high level of play, so he probably will seldom get on the floor.

Sports wishes to apologise to the many aspirants who had to be refused because they weren't up to snuff. We hope that Tom Gola, Walter Dukes and Long John Palmer keep practising though, because they showed definite promise and could move up with us next year.

FLASH: The wires have just been consumed in a blaze bringing the hot news that Frigid Fred Ross, RMC Martinet-In-Chief and head Marionette on The Varsity for the last year, has agreed to terms and will accept a scholarship at News Mess Hall. This automatically eligibilates Fred 'The Frig' for to-night's big game. Sports Commanders were last reported to ben in special conference to plan new strategy to meet this new threat. Fearless Fosdick sent a telegram advising the Sportsmen that their only chance lay in getting the large economy size of Wildroot Cream Oil. There is little chance that this will be done as none of the Sportypes are named Charlie.

New Exec Is Elected For Skule

A new Engineering Society Executive was elected on Friday. Fifty-two percent of the eligible engineers turned out to vote for the men who will run their affairs next year.

Nominations were down about 40 per cent from last year, and eleven of the twenty-three positions open were filled by acclamation. There were no nominations for three posts, including Secretary of the Society.

The new President of the Society is Jack Rossall, III Chemical, who will replace the retiring President Don Fredenburg, IV Civil. One of this year's SAC representatives, Bill Deeks will be First Vice-President, and Gord Kelly, II SPS, will be the Second Vice-President.

Russell said, "the Engineering Society for next year shows every indication of upholding Skule's high standards."

The Chemical Engineers put seven men on the executive, a third of the total. The Civils came next, with three successful candidates. These two courses obtained half the positions on the exectuive last year as well.

UBC Holds Discussion On Canada

One week of this summer, from August 8th to 14th, will be devoted to an "International Summer University" at the University of British Columbia. Sponsored by UBC, the week will follow the British Empire Games in Vancouver.

The idea is to provide an opportunity for foreign students, either studying in Canada or visiting for the summer, to spend a week with Canadian students discussing the country and its people. The theme for the week at UBC will be "This Nation, Canada".

The programme will include lectures by UBC professors, seminar discussions and social activities. Total cost will be approximately $25.00 per tudent.

Without A Thought, As Usual

You probably woke up this morning. Just an ordinary, dull Monday morning, and you probably went about it as usual — without a thought. It's simply another short week in the year-long 52, you said.

But, believe it or not, this is supposed to be a special week. This is Brotherhood Week. In fact, we doubt if there is one week in the year which is not devoted to some special organization or idea. And we are willing to bet they all go by in like fashion — without a thought.

All this week you'll be told about the brotherhood of man and human rights. All this week you'll be told how unscientific prejudices based on race, religion and nationality are.

You will risk being labelled a fool if you so much as feel that the reasons for your hatred of the Negro, the Jew, the Pole, the Italian, the Catholic, etc., etc., are balanced by the facts. But you will not change. You will insist that you are right and science is wrong; you will insist that your prejudices are correct and that discoveries in the fields of anthropology, psychology and genetics are incorrect.

You will ignore the fact that science has proved untrue every myth you have heard about Negro. You will claim he is different and therefore inferior. And you will fail to see that you yourself are different from your friends — your hair, your eyes, your height, your weight.

There is no such thing as a master race, superior or inferior race, you will be told. The only recognized race or people on earth is the human race. There is no such thing in nature as pure blood or purest blood. There is only one pure blood in the whole universe, and that is human blood. Science recognizes no other.

But the odds are that this will not change you.

You will blindly go on not believing that all men, whatever their color and so on, are the same. You will not accept the fact that what hurts you can hurt the next individual as much; the food you need is needed by him; the freedom you desire is desired by him; that he can get as cold, as lonesome and as hungry. You will argue that your desires should be satisfied and not his. And by what right

The only basis for judgement is individual character. And sometimes you must be very tolerant there because you never know what kind of life has made the person what he is. But you will refuse this.

You will pass through these seven days and hear talk of tolerance and brotherhood. But will you live it? And after this week is over you will not even hear the talk, and you will continue to live the rest of the year as you always have — without a thought.

Bertrand Russell once said: "Most people would die rather than think". And he is probably right, for the chances are 100 to one that this week will end as an ordinary, dull week. Brotherhood is not a thing for one week only. But what's the use of saying it?"

This, we feel, is the traditional beginning of our annual Brotherhood Week.

The Case For Early Marriage

lawful institution for the satisfaction of human sex desires, which otherwise would be satisfied by means of fornication.

While in certain cases it is desirable to "sublimate" and even repress the sex appetite, if for some reason marriage is impossible, and while some people successfully do this (the sex appetite being comparatively weak)

Of course, in the long run, children are the ultimate desire of every normal couple; but considering the immediate object of marriage, they are only a secondary thought. As Dorsey puts it,

"The mate - impulse knows nothing of cubs, squabs, or children. The drive is for the mate."

Society frowns on the satisfying of the "mate-impulse" outside of marriage. Marriage is commended as the acceptable arrangement for the satisfaction of said impulse; and rightly so, for to live with one mate, enjoying mutual friendship and love, expressing this love physically, while at the same time deriving pleasure from satisfying one's natural sex appetites, is even in the temporary absence of children, a most rewarding and blessed experience, more satisfying and conducive to happiness than any other state could be. It is positive and commendable. The above fact is not well known nor appreciated by many university students.

Since it is a fact that many young men and women are sexually active before they are married, the next point that should be settled is whether promiscuity of any kind is a desirable alternative to marriage, and if not, what can be done to make it.

This combination distinguishes true married love from platonic love on the one hand and sex love on the other. The special quality of this love (the spiritual element in this combination (as contrasted with the same element in pure platonic love)) demands a physical expression which culminates in sexual intercourse and which enhances the spiritual love and of factions of the two males.

The case for chastity has been well stated in an article of the same title by Mrs. M. C. Banning in the Reader's Digest of August, 1937. It is argued that promiscuity in male and female is not conducive to a happy marriage, the latter still being regarded as something ultimately desirable by most North Americans, since promiscuity may well devlop the polygamous habit, which will be taken into marriage and finally cause its disintegration.

There is the danger of the girl becoming attached to the man who is not in any way obliged to her. He may leave her broken-hearted, and in a state of suspense which cannot find its normal satisfaction. If the girl is not fortunate enough to get married, this state of affairs often drives her into promiscuity, and a promiscuous woman may still easily forfeit the prospect of marriage, since many men still prefer virgins and would not marry a girl with the reputation for being "easy".

Petting, too, makes a girl unfit for a satisfactory adjustment in marriage, since there is danger of her becoming accustomed to finding satisfaction in "preliminaries", while intercourse may later become an anticlimax.

It is also pointed out that "each girl's chastity is the interweaving of her moral code, her nervous system, her physical being, and her mind. Does she realize how profoundly that interwoven fabric may be altered in a few yielding moments? . . . the guilt sense persists in a girl suffers shockingly."

Dr. Butterfield says, "The sexual adjustment is not a simple thing to make under the best of conditions, and when hampered by guilt and apprehension, it is almost impossible. At a time when man and woman may need expert advice, they are forced to hide their relationships. Premarital relationships can build up, incorrect, unsatisfying behavior which must be painfully unlearned after marriage."

Bertrand Russell states that men who have relations with prostitutes never learn the high art of lovemaking which is required for a satisfactory marital adjustment; they also look at sex as something low and actually dirty, with which they associate only a particular type of woman, while they dissociate sex completely from any women for whom they have some degree of respect. This, of course, makes a happy marriage, where respect, love and sex should be combined, impossible.

Promiscuity and sexual perversions of various kinds are sinful to the religious, (detrimental to the speedy achievement of marital success having established wrong habits, eventually and unsatisfactory in themselves if compared with an ideal marriage since they cannot convey the same supreme satisfaction that only ideally-married mates can give to each other and perversions prevent other members of society from securing mates for the purpose of achieving happiness and procreating).

These are some of the reasons why the present author considers promiscuity as unwise and advocates chastity.

Since chastity should be maintained on the one hand, on the other hand, however, the male nature, and to a lesser degree the female nature, demands sexual activity strongly in the late ten-age years. This is a dilemma which must be solved if we want to have sexually well-adjusted and emotionally stable mn and women.

The answer to promiscuity and other forms of perversion is, of course, to be found in the institution of marriage, viz., early marriage. Since marriage can be, at least temporarily, detached from its procreational purpose, the present writer advocates birth control in cases where it would be unwise to have children.

The fact that children are not welcome at a particular time should not prevent a couple from getting married early and from taking advantage of all the other benefits that marriage conveys.

Early marriage should not be regarded only as a convenient prevention of promiscuity and a lawful opportunity for sexual gratification, but our spiritual potentialities which distinguish us from the anmals should be fully developed in marriage, be actually the leading factor!

A happy marriage is the summum bonum this side of heaven, and the earlier men avail themselves of it the happier they are.

While society and wisdom, having the final happy goal, viz., a satisfactory, lasting marriage in mind, regard marriage as the only proper outlet for our sexual desires, the fact is that marriage is not very common among those who are most in need of it, i.e., the age groups from their late 'teens to their early twenties. In quite a few cases the results of this privation are well known and are shocking and alarming; they are, for all practical purposes, inevitable. If society wants to confine sex relations to marriage, it must give its approval to early marriage and make it financially possible, or reap more of the undesirable consequences of "illicit affairs" than is necessary.

The present writer advocates and urges young people in their late 'teens and early twenties, just as soon as they feel themselves mature and responsible enough, having cogent reasons for this conviction of their own maturity and responsibility, to enter into marriage, provided that they are as certain as is humanly possible that their spouse-to-be has a good character and that genuine mutual love exists.

Our present economic system makes a marriage, where the main occupation of the wife consists in taking care of the household and having children, impossible for younger people. Every young wife must help making the living, and save enough money to set up the new home and eventually to make the rearing of children in a decent environment possible.

This kind of marriage, in its initial stage, could be called "companionate" marriage. But it differs from the marriage arrangement advocated by Judge B. B. Lindsay and Bertrand Russell in that it would not be a "trial marriage", but a permanent union. The companionate element of this type of marriage would consist in mutual friendship, assistance and sexual satisfaction.

Even though a young woman may not have a sufficiently strong sex appetite to prompt her to marry, she may rest assured that, once married to the right partner, she would be in a short time prepared physically to enter into highly satisfying sex relations which, combined with the other elements in marriage, would make the latter highly desirable for any young woman.

Late marriages are often the cause of many vices prior to marriage. Thus the policy of late or postponed marriage is a vicious one and should be abolished by a re-evaluation of our mores and other attitudes.

She wasn't angry. She always speaks violently, because she is our domestic police force and in our home, loudness is generally the equivalent of reason".

"Of course," said Honoré, "I shall be honored."

They called her and made her pour the drinks, and because she would not sit down, they stood with her and clinked glasses, making a great deal of ceremony. Honoré felt her eager eyes upon him as he drank. He smacked his lips loudly. "Tell your mother," said the Frenchman, "that I love Benedictine and brandy." Mrs. Mihalik's hearty chuckle filled the room.

Later, when the bottles had been restored to the huge padlocked chest upstairs, Walter put Ralph Bellamy's recitation of the Rubaiyat on the phonograph, and they relaxed over the Scotch. "My mother," said Walter after some time, "is a blunt peasant. She lives and loves and hates with a terrible simplicity. I'm not apologizing for her, understand, but I am sorry if, when we meet here, she obtrudes too earthy a—"

"Nonsense," cried Honoré seeing the embarrassment of his friend. "Your mother is fundamental. She is a fine woman whom I am delighted to know. She has a great love of life, I can see; and any woman who likes Benedictine is not insensitive to beauty." The Frenchman felt that his words were a trifle outré, and he felt himself becoming effusive from drink, but he was amazed and warmed at the look of gratitude and love that sprang into Walter's eyes.

morning, Toronto defeated O.A.C. 30-22, Mac won over Queen's 35-31 and Western crushed winless McGill by the score of 47-13. In the first half, it looked as if Toronto would win by a large score, but in the second half, the Aggies fought back making the game very close.

Western assured themselves of the championship when they defeated Mac 32-18 in the last round. Meanwhile Queen's was winning over O.A.C. and Varsity was defeating McGill 35-25. Although McGill did not win one game during the tournament, they certainly won many new friends because of their wonderful spirit and good sportsmanship.

Congratulations are in order to Mary Haza for the outstanding job which she did as manager of the team and to Miss Helen Stewart, Toronto's excellent coach, for the time and valuable coaching she has given to the team.

Skulehouse Team Wins Contest Four Hundred Hear Quartet

"For this outstanding contribution to Canadian culture . . . " was the way Warden Joe McCulley prefaced his presentation of the Hart House quartet trophy to the Skulehouse Four, who were winners of yesterday's final by a wide margin. Hart House rocked to the cheers of a packed crowd in the East Common Room, a mob of some 400, who were jammed right out into the corridor and were in thunderous accord with the judge's decision

The Skulehouse Four — Don Elliot and John Rumble from first year, sophomore Bob Hill and Neil Irwin of third year — were given 550 of a possible 600 points, based on 100 for each song by each judge. The 5T5 Four from third year Medicine were awarded 496 points, which gave them an eight-point edge over the Fourlorne Polecats.

Bob Hill, spokesman and bass for the Skulehouse Four, was a great favorite with the audience and did much to gain his group almost full marks on the stage presence category. The quartet fared as well in each of the other sections: harmony accuracy, balance and blend, arrangement and voice expression.

Hill introduced the first number as "I've Been Working on the Railroad or run for the roundhouse Nellie; they'll never corner you there". It turned out to be a smooth and rhythmic coupling of You Had a Dream and After Dark. They followed this with Hello My Ragtime Gal.

After chief judge Chappie Chapman, official representative of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, announced the totals reached by himself and his cohorts, Garth McDowell, Assistant Warden of Hart House, and Jim Proudfoot of The Varsity, Bob Hill waited for the applause to die down and then smugly said "Well—we won". Later he announced an encore: "That old boardinghouse favorite—Don't get up, Mrs. Murphy, I just came to clean my teeth". This title was a disguise for the old standby, Coney Island Baby which concluded the final session of the most successful in the four-year history of the contest.

The second-place 5T5 Four, having acquired a new member since winning the first preliminary last month, earned their points by singing Faraway Places and the Sidewalks of New York. The hill-billy group, the Fourlorne Polecats, drew heavy applause for their two numbers, Old Paint and Betsey Lou.

Warden McCulley, who presented the four winners with replicas of the permanent trophy, complimented the House Committee on efficiently promoting the contest and remarked that, if it continued to improve, it might be held in the Great Hall next year.

Artsmen Counteract Semi-literate Class?

By CAROL HOFFMAN

There seems to be some slight confusion over plans for the forthcoming Hart House elections. The problem is one of slates for the election. (A slate is a list of candidates presented to one faculty for their support in the elections.) The question is, who will ally with whom?

Certain definite facts have emerged. One is that the Engineers have in the past years had a slate, reported to be quite effective and intend to have one this year. Another is that Medicine intend to have a slate and support for their candidates, by one method or another this year.

One rumour flying round the campus was that the four Arts colleges were to combine to produce an Arts slate. Roger Bull, president of the University College Literary and Athletic Society, said that this was the first time in recent years the four colleges had combined to present a slate. He said that with the change in rules this year (three members from any faculty can be elected to a committee) an Arts slate was necessary to get a better ballot.

"In the past there has been an unfortunate tendency for those among us who hail from the very deep South to rather monopolize Hart House committees," said Bull. "Not that I have anything against Engineers; when I need a plumber I call one; but I see no reason why this campus should be ruled by plumbers, or indeed by any semi-literate class. As a result I am all for getting the big battalions on our side."

"The Arts slate is to counteract the Engineering slate and the Meds slate—those of all the professional faculties," said Martin Friedland, III UC Music Committee. "We have been forced into it. The Arts slate won't be too effective, because it is a counteracting force."

Another view of the Hart House slates was given by Alec Langford, IV Vic, a member of the present House committee. He stated that Meds, Victoria, St. Michael's, and Law were combining to present a slate of six members. This slate would be supported by the members of the faculties and colleges concerned. The slate was for the House Committee only. Trinity was excluded from this, he said, because it would be difficult to get Trinity to go in with Meds. UC was excluded because it has no school spirit and would not unite to support one slate.

"The Engineering slate gives an unfair advantage to Skule in the Hart House elections," said Langford. "Therefore the only answer for other faculties is to develop slates of their own. However, since Skule is biggger than all the other faculties, they will have to combine to be equally effective."

"The Medical Society has presented a formal petition to the Engineering Society, requesting Engineering to combine in a slate with the Engineers," reported Bill Deeks, SAC rep. for Engineering. He said that the Engineers had their own slate, and Meds their own slate but that both slates would be issued together, according to present plans. Thus both faculties would support SPS and Meds candidates. He said one reason that this was done was because of a rumour that the Arts colleges were going together under Langford.

The Medical Society denied that anything definite had been agreed yet. Lowler Louden, vice-president of the Medical Society, said that any official decision would come through him, and he had heard nothing decided.

"There was no formal petition presented to the Engineers," he said. "Vic has approached us and also Trinity." However, he said that the only alliance discussed officially was that with the Engineers. "There will definitely be a Meds slate," he said. "We will make any alliance along suitable lines. But if necessary, we will run our slate by itself."

U of T Men In Debate At Carnival

Toronto debaters John Roberts, III UC, and Leo Gray II SPS, placed second in the International Debating competition held last weekend in conjunction with the McGill Winter Carnival.

The winners were two debaters from McMaster. The pair from Toronto were debating against competition from McGill, Dartmouth, Harvard, New York University, Saint Xavier, Bishop University, Ottawa University, Loyola College, Rochester, and McMaster.

"Resolved that this House deplores the American leadership in World Affairs", was debated by all the teams. Each team debated four times and they debated on one side throughout the whole series. Toronto met and defeated Saint Xavier, McGill, Dartmouth, McMaster proved too much for the Toronto team.

Toronto and McMaster were the only undefeated teams until the last round.

In the final round the McMaster team, upholding the resolution defeated the Toronto team by a 2-1 vote of the judges. The competition was for the Buckhart Trophy. This was the second annual competition.

Once A Month . . .

Fire!

By WENDY MICHENER

A shrill shrieking of the sirens echoed throughout the long corridors of the Red Building on the south side of Hoskin yesterday at 10:00 a.m. Students in the class rooms hustled out clutching onto their venerable black robes and shivered on the front steps.

The sirens shrieked on, although there was no sign of smoke anywhere around the building. On the sidewalk in front of Wycliffe a man stood calmly ringing the bell in the red box marked with the reward sign for information leading to the arrest of somebody who gives a wilfully false alarm.

Said the anonymous man: "I'm just testing. We do it once a month, you know."

Cornell Students Here For Week-End Visit

Six Cornell students will arrive tomorrow evening for a week-end of discussion groups, lectures and receptions. McGill was supposed to send ten delegates, but was unable to do so.

The Cornell students will meet their hosts from Toronto at a reception in Brennan Hall, Thursday night, and will register for the week-end. Friday morning they will attend lectures of special interest, and Friday afternoon they will participate in a student discussion group. Friday evening the Warden of Hart House will entertain the visitors at a reception, and then they will go out for dinner with their hosts. Afterwards there will be a party.

Saturday morning will be free to sightsee, and Saturday afternoon there will be another discussion group. That evening they will see the Hart House production of "The Merchant of Venice".

Sunday morning they will attend the church of their choice, and after a farewell tea, they will leave for Ithaca.

Characters Are Around Smith Told

Dear Dr. Smith, we actually do have characters in Canada, says author Rapide del Garcia, in a letter to President Sidney Smith, which appeared in this month's Mayfair magazine as an illustrated article. He was answering the President's annual freshman address in which Dr. Smith said, "I am not praising eccentricity for its own sake, although Canada could easily support more characters."

Del Garcia said "The country, sir, is literally crawling with characters." He even used the "stodgy old University of Toronto" as an example. "How about Professor Satterly, the man who puts on the steel helmet and gives that wonderful, wacky lecture on liquid air every semester?"

University presidents weren't disqualified either. He mentioned such men as UBC President Norman McKenzie who "faced with a campus housing shortage, literally swiped twenty-five barrack huts from the army."

"The millionaire tycoon, president of a giant manufacturing firm, who, at the stroke of five, used to don his Homburg, leave his office, go up to Hart House, put on a flamboyant costume and appear each evening in amateur theatricals" was none other than the Right Honorable Vincent Massey.

"It is not Canadians who lack flamboyance; it is the people who write about them," said del Garcia. He felt that Canadian writers weren't publicizing the more colorful aspects of the Canadian people.

Del Garcia, (a pen name), has a reputation for being a character in his own right although his hobby is collecting eccentricities of other people.

The Case For Early Marriage second prize essay (Concluded)

H. L. Wipprecht

Bertrand Russell's theories on this subject are found in his book, "Marriage and Morals". In it he sates that "owing partly to snobbery and partly to the belief that marriage ought immediately to lead to children, is difficult for a man to marry young. Moreover, divorce is very difficult; early marriage has great danger, since two people who suit each other at twenty are quite likely not to suit each other at thirty. Stable relations with one partner are difficult for many people until they have had some experience of variety. If our outlook on sex were sane, we should expect university students to be temporarily married, though childless. They would in this way be freed from the obsession of sex, which at present greatly interferes with work . . . they would be free to experience love without the concomitants of subterfuge and the dread of disease which at present poison youthful adventures."

There are some points in Russell's statement which need closer examination. First, while it is true that there are many young men and women who would like to get married, but who think that they cannot do so because of financial reasons and public opinion, there are many young people who positively refuse to enter into an early marriage, because they do not want to be "tied down". As a rule, they (especially the men) lead promiscuous lives. To remedy this situation must be the task of the educators of the youth, i.e., teachers and ministers. Also, college students should be told that according to Judge B. B. Lindsay.

"Young students who are married do better work than such who are unmarried." In other words, marriage must be made attractive to young people, and the education of home, church, and school should mold their characters so as to help fit them for it by teaching them to accept responsibility, to be dependable and to choose a proper mate.

Another problem is this question: "How does a young person know whether he or she has found the right partner?" This question, being of paramount importance, should receive the utmost attention of every young person contemplating marriage. There are certain criteria which should make an ideal match for life possible with a very slight margin of error. In order to achieve satisfactory results, a young person must be well trained by parents and other educators to discern desirable traits in another human being which make for happy, life-long companionship. Love is very important, but the young person should let reason rule emotion. If this is not the case, then it is better not to marry, for, in the judgment of the present writer, divorce should be avoided at all costs.

Where genuine love, and the other essential characteristics of an ideal spouse are present at twenty, there is no danger at all that the two persons would "not suit each other at thirty." As a matter of fact, their love will continue to increase and become sweeter as the years go by.

What B. Russell calls "some experience of variety" before "stable relations" is openly advocated by many. Some insist that without it, an intended permanent union is very risky. Since, as stated above, premarital sex relations are likely to be dangerous, the present writer opposes such contentions. Instead he is convinced that the emotionally healthy, well-brought-up boy or girl, who receives the proper sex instruction will find it not at all difficult to make a quick satisfactory sexual adjustment upon entering marriage, without any previous experiments.

Finally, as stated above, most college students cannot afford even a childless marriage because of financial considerations. If warranted, the situation is sad indeed. Where there is the desire and the necessary maturity for marriage, the lack of money ought never to make marriage impossible. Where college students, especially women, cannot finance themselves and are to some degree dependent on parental support, the parents should adopt a new attitude toward their children and continue supporting them even after they are married. It would be money well invested, for it might preserve the virtue of their children and contribute greatly to their happiness. Tuition fees should be lowered and the Colleges should provide low-cost residences for married couples.

Concerning the unwarranted considerations it must be remembered that two persons — while single — have to live on whatever money they have. Provided they do not want to live above that to which they have been accustomed while single, which is quite unnecessary, they could live on the same money being married.

Is it proper for an engaged couple to have sex relations? They may regard themselves as married de facto, if not de jure.

The term, marriage, has been used so far to signify a contract between two persons of opposite sex to live together as man and wife, the public having taken due notice of the fact. For various considerations it is not, as a rule, wise behaviour to have sex relations before the marriage is contracted. Even though there is nothing standing in the way in terms of psychological inhibitions or fear of desertion, it is often true that such relations must be carried out in secrecy. This may be detrimental to a satisfactory sexual adjustment, because of fear and nervousness.

Society is justified in expecting us to make our marriage known, since marriage plays an important role in society. Furthermore, every woman has the right to be protected by the law concerning matters of marriage before she gives herself to a man.

If therefore sex relations are not advisable during the engagement period, it is essential that the latter be short.

"Sociologists point out that long engagements are often unwise, sometimes subjecting one or both parties to great strain . . . We would not encourage improvidence, but on the other hand, an excessive caution may lead to endless procrastination."

Since, in the opinion of the present writer, the engagement promise, like any other promise, should not be broken, it is really superfluous, because it should not be given without previous thorough investigation of the "boy friend" or "girl friend", which investigation should be assigned to the "going steady" period. But once the couple arrive at the conclusion that they are meant for each other, then they should as a rule get married at once, not bothering with a long or even a short engagement, which may lead sooner or later to all-out sex relations.

Though marriage in its beauty can be compared to a rose, it is, like the rose, not altogether without thorns.

While early marriage is known not be a panacea for all moral problems, it would undeoubtedly improve the present situation somewhat. At the present, not many can be expected to find ideal mates, and many are not mature enough to be satisfied with one woman. Thus, of the lower educational level of the age group sixteen to twenty, one-half of the males have extra-marital intercourse. This group is "often irresponsible, many quickly deserting their wives . . . becoming drifters, many promiscuous and having extra-marital relations; VD rates are high." Of the whole age group twenty-one to twenty-five, one-fourth of the males commit adultery. But the same age group at the college level is known to commit adultery in only one case out of seven.

Thus if we compare the frequencies of extra-marital intercourse with that of pre-marital, we reach the conclusion that, while (early) marriage is no universal remedy for immorality, it reduces its occurrence considerably. The present writer believes that, if, in future, more and better instruction is given at the high school and college level, young people would be better fitted to choose a spouse at an early age. We shall never be able to save all from immorality; some will always defiantly engage in it, even against their own better judgment; but through early marriage, we can save some.

There is evidence that a large section of the younger generation takes a more healthy attitude toward sex than their elders did. It is to be hoped that the new generation will guide its sexual impulses aright, that is, into marriage, which is as "a fountain of living waters", rather than seeking satisfaction in the "broken cisterns" of perversions and promiscuity, and thus debasing something most beautiful —the capacity of a man and a woman to love each other.

"Man is a marrying animal", writes Dorsey. Then let him marry when his nature demands it most vehemently; let him marry early, provided that he is not just an "animal", but a "rational animal".

Marriage Correction

The following paragraph which appeared in the first part of this article in Monday's Varsity as: "Since it is a fact that many young men and women are sexually active before they are married, the next point that should be settled is whether promiscuity of any kind is a desirable alternative to marriage, and if not, what can be done to make it," should have read:

"Since it is a fact that many young men and women are sexually active before they are married, the next point that should be settled is whether promiscuity of any kind is a desirable alternative to marriage, and if not, what can be done to make it unnecessary."

Legal Beagles Have Good Case

The Legal-Beagles, those dashing fellows of the Intramural League, added another volley to their barrage for the Reid Cup last night defeating the Knox College lads 5-1.

The Beagles were unlike their uusual suave selves, forgetting that the pen is mightier than the sword —or swinging hockey stick—still they managed to make quite a case for themselves. R. J. Gray struck deftly for a double and Art Binnington got another. The other scorers were too modest to announce their names over the loudspeaker.

Everest Conquerors Will Climb HH Stairs

The co-conqueror of mount Everest will be on the University of Toronto campus today. Sir Edmund Hillary, one of the two men to climb the highest peak in the world, will be guest at a Hart House luncheon today, with three of his associates an dhis wife.

Sir Edmund Hillary, George Lowe, and Dr. Charles Evans, all members of the expedition that succeeded in climbing Everest last May, are in Toronto on a continent-wide lecture tour. James Morris, correspondent for the London Times who climbed with the expedition, is also accompanying the mountain-climbers.

The three expedition members will be speaking today at Massey Hall at 8:30 p.m. They will be giving an illustrated talk on "The Conquest of Mount Everest."

Hillary has already been on tour to New York, for a Carnegie Hall lecture, and to Boston. After this he will go to Vancouver, California, and Honolulu.

The Everest climbers will be the guests of the Hart House Exploration Society and the Alpine Club of Canada. They will be entertained in the Great Hall of Hart House. President Sidney Smith, Warden Joseph McCulley, members of the university staff and club members will be present at the luncheon.

Before the luncheon, there will be a reception by the mayor. As well as the lecture tonight, Hillary and his wife will be on the CBC trans-Canada network and Tabloid television show.

St. Michael Plays Host To Visitors

St. Michael's College last weekend was host to a literary and dramatic group from Asuumption University. The visit was arranged "to promote drama, creative writing and an interchange of ideas between the two colleges."

The visit began badly for Assumption with the defeat of their basketball team. In his greeting next morning President Smith apologized for this and stressed the double nature of the bond between the the colleges: through their university status and the Basilian Order which directs both.

After the usual House tour the visitors discussed "The Student Writer and His Audience" in a forum chaired by Dr. H. M. McLuhan. The issues dealt with went from the process of artistic creation to the mythical movement in modern prose.

Saturday evening aws devoted to the reading and criticism of original student works, including two modern poems by Louis Podgornic, a Yugoslavian who has been writing in English for only two years.

The weekend ended with the presentation of one-act plays by the Colleges, despite the difficulties of a makeshift stage and the absence of lead actresses at the McGill Carnival.

Prof. Visits In England

Professor John S. Morgan of the School of Social Work has been appointed the Simon Visiting Professor in the Department of Government and Administration at the University of Manchester for the Michaelmas term, President Smith has announced.

This professorship was founded in 1944 by Lord Simon to enable distinguished scholars in the Social Sciences to do research and teaching at Manchester University. While in England, Professor Morgan will concentrate on comparative research welfare administration, and will study problems relating to the needs of the aged.

Professor Morgan was educated at the Universities of Oxford and Durham and was with the British National Council of Social Services when he came to Toronto in 1946. Since coming to Toronto he has served as vice-chairman of the Public Welfare Division of the Canadian Welfare Council, and on committees for the needs of the aged, Public Assistance, and Health Service. He is chairman of the National Disaster Committee of the Canadian Red Cross, and is a member of the Civil Defence Advisory Committee of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

In The Parlour

The Making Of England

By DICK HOBSON

(This is the third and last in a series of articles designed to acquaint the student with the History of England.)

Romance was the greatest innovation in the English way of life, developed during the Elizabethan Age. Elizabeth, who never married herself, was the ideal monarch to spur on this great movement. The founder of show business, Shakespeare, promoted the romantic angle throughout the country. His most important assignments were referred to MacBeth, the greatest actor of all time, who was expert in the art of "putting it over". MacBeth's associate, Falstaff, picked up the humourous parts and spread his jokes on romance across North America.

Two partners, Romeo and Juliette, toured the southern part of Britain giving lessons to the unlearned and disclosing some of their newly-developed methods to the masses; however, their most secret discoveries were reserved for the Queen. But this was to no avail since Lord Leicester jilted her when he found that the Earl of Essex had stolen her boudoir.

Chief minister of state, Cecil, was perturbed when Mary Queen of Scots lost her head over Philip of Spain and sent Sir Francis Drake to intercept the Spanish Armada. With the help of Hamlet, who, in the face of duty left Jean Simmons to drown, Sir Francis scuttled the whole dumbed Armada.

With these setbacks to the development of romance removed, the movement continued with great abandon. The only relics of this wonderful age which remain to this day, are a few cloaks of the Raleigh type, designed to cover larger puddles, and some of the writings of Bacon on "The Fourteen Inch Waist and True Love".

Disclose 3 Staff Appointments

Appointments to three major posts on the University of Toronto staff were announced today by President Sidney Smith. They are: Herbert R. Rice, as professor and head of the Department of Mining Engineering; Burton S. Keirstead, as professor of Political Economy; and George E. Britnell, as the first Harold Innis visiting professor in the Department of Political Economy.

In making the appointments, Dr. Smith said: "Staff, and again staff, determine the welfare and progress of a university. Toronto is indeed fortunate in attracting distinguished graduates of Queen's, Oxford, and the London School of Economics."

Rice is a graduate of Queen's. He has had broad experience in mining operations, including seven years in Ontario gold mining fields, three years on copper mining operations in Northern Rhodesia and six years in India.

Keirstead, a native of New Brunswick, had a brilliant undergraduate record at the University of New Brunswick, and at Exeter College, Oxford, where he obtained BA degrees. He was professor of economics at the University of New Brunswick from 1931 to 1942; visiting professor at the University of Arizona, 1937-38, and has been since 1942 Dow Professor of Political Economy at McGill University. He is also the author of many articles and of several books.

Professor Britnell, now professor of Political Science and head of the department at the University of Saskatchewan will be the first Harold Innis visiting professor. This is possible by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for studying the economic, political and social life of Canada. This is primarily a research appointment. He will work on the study entitled "Perspectives of Change in the Prairie Economy".

Besides teaching at the University of Saskatchewan and the University of Toronto, Britnell has been special adviser to the Government of Saskatchewan since 1946, and has acted in special advisory capacities to that Government and to the Federal Government on many occasions. From 1941 to 1944 he was economic adviser to the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. He was Canadian delegate to the International Conference on Food and Agriculture in 1943, and in 1950-51 was chief of an economic mission to Guatemala appointed by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Why Wilt In Paris?

The World University Service offers some suggestions on how to pass your summer in Europe this year. Instead of dissipating in Paris they suggest a summer session at several European universities. Sessions last from one to three weeks, and cost from six pounds five shillings a week to 900 francs a week.

Session topics vary. At Alpbach in Tyrol the theme is "Our Age and Science". At Crofton Grange, Hertfordshire in England students will discuss "Tensions in our Time". At Utrecht in Holland the theme is "Trends in Modern Civilization".

Most of the sites for these sessions are in some of the more spectacular beauty spots in Europe, and tours of the region have been arranged for participants. Various languages will be used so that no one will be left out.

All students are eligible and further information is available in the SAC. These sessions are taking place in countries all over the world so that no matter how far you travel there is a possibility that there will be a session near at hand.

Monotypes By Goldsmith

Formal art at its best is unsurpassed in the expression of human emotion. Early Christian art is the classic example, an art which managed to be moving because its strict economy of detail focussed attention on feeling. Sidney Goldsmith's monotyps, in my opinion represent formal art at something like its best. There is no illusion of depth or realism about this work. It is frankly two-dimensional, a flat reorganization of ordinary forms to produce a strong design and emphasize the feelings of the little men and women thus cratd.

or do the little men and women remind you visually of the maw and paw of the neighbours' kids. They are grotesque gnomes with heads like flattened melons and huge exaggerated hands. But those distorted faces and those nubby fingers can express a range and a delicacy of human emotion —perhaps best a pathetic tenderness and a childlike wonder as well as something of the mighty emotion of a man crushed by a cross.

Goldsmith's choice of colour emphasizes the blunt intimacy of his work. He uses earth colours, subtle in themselves, without much mixing. Blues, when he uses them, are softened, muted and the complete effect is relaxing and disarming. He applies the colour in flat areas moved and governed by black lines and the whole carefully related in a simple strong design. However strong the pattern the emphasis is always on the man and his relationship to his environment, to cats and birds and music or the fact that he is blind.

You will probably understand something of the artist's purpose and the nature of the medium, from the prose nailed up beside the door (if you read it twice). To discover something of the variety of textures which monotype makes possible without the heaviness of oil painting, you might examine Woman With Cat, a print which demonstrates the effect of varying pressure on three different types of application. The suitability of the formal approach to religious art is not too well exemplified by Goldsmith's Pieta where the pitiful lifelessness of the white body and its tortured hands is emphasized to the exclusion of the grief which is to me the essential element of this theme. The monochrome series, Via Dolorosa, becomes especially effective when the tortured blind creature with the head of thorns is crushed by a weighty impersonal cross.

Go to see this show. At very least Goldsmith represents "cartooning" at its very best.

St. Mary Magdalene's

The choir of St. Mary Magdalene Anglican Church gave a recital of liturgical music in the church last Monday night. The singers who are well known to University audiences for their annual Christmas concerts in Hart House performed with their usual impeccable ensemble style, marred only occasionally when particular passages proved too difficult for amateur voices.

After an organ chorale prelude by Dr. Willan the choir sang its first piece — the Kyrei, Sanctus, and Benedictus from Byrd's Mass in F Minor which struck the writer as being quite as good as such well-known Byrd works as the Latin Masses for three, four and five voices. The performance was distinguished by a wonderful clarity and precision of tone, but I feel that it called for more vigorous interpretation and a greater variety of volume and phrasing.

A good portion of the rest of the programme consisted of plain song, some very good and some dull, and of quiet, unobstrusive harmonized pieces written by Dr. Willan and clearly intended as parts of religious services rather than musical ends - unto - themselves. The overall sameness of the choir's interpretative style was well suited to these pieces.

The highlight of the evening as far as this reviewer was concerned was Dr. Willan's stunning motet, O Trinity, Most Blessed Light. This powerful work features extraordinarily fascinating modern harmonies carefully built up in a contrapuntal style. The choir's performance was appropriately loud and energetic.

The concert ended with Dr. Willan's Organ Prelude on the melody, Vexilla Regis — an excellent piece which works up slowly to a very powerful ending. It was quite well played by Dr. Willan, although it proved too much for the church's small organ.

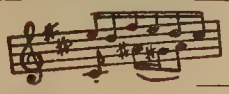
Plastic Body Will Not Dent

Students at Manitoba Technical Institute in Winnipeg have come up with a plastic auto body that won't dent, even when pounded with a heavy timber. Using cheesecloth, some fibre glass mats and liquid plastic, they produced a sports roadster in coral red, later mounting it on a standard small-car chassis.



The weight of 12 men standing on the body causes no strain. It is now on display in a department store window downtown. It was built by students in the Institute's body repair class.

art, music and drama

La Boheme

Puccini's La Boheme has been performed more often than any other opera by the Royal Conservatory Opera Company, five times this season, and also during two previous ones. The fact that the production, though essentially unaltered, still proves satisfying and gripping is evidence of its original worth, as well as improvement with maturity.

The most striking musical change that has come over the performance is in the scale of the solo voices. A few years ago the vocal music, and especially the ensembles often sounded rather unmelodious and strained; more powerful singers, and in some cases the same singers with more powerful voices have remedied this defect.

Now Puccini's lush, dramatic score sings out as a melodious unit, and such numbers as the ensemble at the end of the second act are a delight to the ear as well as to the eye. Not once did one feel the orchestra was submerging the singers, even though the conductor, Ernesto Barbini, drew from it a thrilling volume of sound, without any necessity for closing down the swell-box. The result was an excellent balance of vocal instrumental forces.

Outstanding among the singers was Irene Salemka in the part of Mimi. Her voice is a little shrill, but this quality seems to give her music a youthfulness it does not inherently possess. To her credit, one never felt tempted to associate her with Cio-Cio-San (her part last year), a danger that might be expected with a less competent actress.

James Shields, on the other hand, while vocally satisfactory, was not really different in his part as Rodolfo from what he was last year as Pinkerton. Neither characterization was particularly strong, and he has to rely on rehearsed (though admittedly well-rehearsed and well-performed gestures.

Among the smaller parts, Jacqueline Smith's rendering of the part of the coquettish shrew, Musetta, was a memorable and brilliant one. Her voice has broadened since last year, and her acting was easily the most accomplished in the show, at least in the shrewish and coquettish bits. However, in the last act a little less charm and a little more sense of the pathos, if not tragedy, of the situation is called for. Surely not even a Musetta would smile while praying for a dying friend.

Gilles Lamontagnes' Marcello and Jan Rubes' Colline were vivid, easily distinguished figures — in an opera where identification presents a problem, with three similar parts given to bass voices. Andrew MacMillan's Schaunard was less successful in this respect.

The real genius of Herman Geiger-Torel's stage direction was revealed in the numerous extra touches he has added since the last performance of this opera. One would not have thought that so much more detail could be added to the already full picture without cluttering it. But that is what Geiger-Torel has done, with an ingenuity and imagination that is utterly overwhelming. I particularly liked the group of school-boys that appeared at the beginning of the third act, and Musetta's preposterously flirtations business in the second. The mock duel in the last act (not a novelty) was also superbly done. This is versistic opera at its best. There is no attempt at realism in a strict sense, but the overall effect is one of a startlingly sharp, true-to-life picture.

The thought that remains with one on the morning after the show is not so much that one has heard great singers or seen great actors, but that one has seen and heard a magnificently organized and unified production of an opera that merits and thrives on close integration of musical and dramatic talents.

Walter Gieseking

Among the first-class pianists of our day, Walter Gieseking is probably one of the few who warrants wholesale attention in the Concert Hall. There are many men and women who have a natural flexibility at the keyboard, who have musical energy, interpretative ability, etc., but there are few who have so consciously and so fully realized all these aspects of their musicianship. Gieseking's concert on Thursday night drew a large crowd to Massey Hall, but there were as many Europeans, sympathizers of the German art traditions, as there were Torontonians in attendance. Toronto hardly proved its awareness of a great international artist.

The program opened with a delightful Mozart Sonata in D major, K. 576. This Sonata is often played to draw attention to a good Mozart technique. Pianists know that audiences will recognize the familiar Allegro and Allegretto themes in the first and the third movements, and tend to use it as a convenient show-piece. In Gieseking's playing the audience, perhaps for the first time, recognized a sincere attempt to put back into it the maturity of Mazart's conception of the Sonata. Paderewski did the same thing with the Moonlight Sonata. And the second movement, instead of sounding like a long transition between these two wall-known themes, had an interesting depth and variation in tone that always kept the audience really listening.

Perhaps on of the most difficult Beethoven Sonatas came next, the E major, Opus 109. Gieseking last year performed four of the Beethoven Sonatas on one programme and so much has been said about his Beethoven playing, as could be expected of a man who plays "Beethoven programmes", that there is probably little to add. Gieseking reproduced the experiences and emotions that Beethoven, musically mature at the time the work was composed, seeks to communicate.

Two Brahms Intermezzi from the Opus 118, and the familiar Schubert Impromptu, Opus 90, completed the first part of the programme. He gave to the Intermezzi a special decisiveness in attack, and a clarity in the enunciation of sub-themes that contrasted with the sparkle of the Impromptu.

Five selections from the Debussy piano works, and the Jeux d'eau by Ravel were chosen for the second group. Gieseking has recorded the Debussy Preludes, and similar to his Beethoven fame, he has received wide acclaim as an interpreter of Debussy. He stopped the audience from applauding between these selections with a gesture of his hand, and only paused briefly and carefully between each one. The impression after all five was of a tableau of vivid color and subtle movement, very French and very precise, with each one helping to contribute to the effect of the other. And the Jeux d'eau, without changing out of the French idiom, ended the programme with a crashing, well-calculated climax.

Mr. Gieseking walked back on stage for several "curtain calls", and played four encores, notably the Debussy Ondine, and the Scarlatti Sonata, more often heard in the transcription, The Pastorale.

Intercol Wrestling

Varsity's wrestlers will lie themselves to Queen's this weekend for the Intercollegiate Championships and expectations are that for the first time in several years the Varsitypes will become College champs. The men of Kick Whipper form an outstanding team and have already proven themselves to be at least the second best group in the University competition.

Earlier this year they defeated teams from Queen's and McGill and, though they lost in a dual meet with Western, are confident that they can beat the Mustangs in the Championships. There are strong indications that the Varsity confidence is well founded and that the Western boys will have to be sharp to best them.

Doug Hamilton, reigning Intercollegiate Champion at 191 lbs. has won every bout in his schedule this year and is a safe bet to retain his title. Footballer Bob Waugh, a greatly improved wrestler, will be the Blue representative at 167 lb. while Al Miller who has won eight of his nine bouts this year should give good showing at 177 lbs.

Starting Late UC Still Wins

Monday's hockey game between UC II and Phys Ed II, was supposed to get under way at four o'clock. UC finally managed to get a team on the ice about 4:30. It was unfortunate that the game had to be cut short by so much because it meant something to the PHE team. UC hadn't won a game all season; so it was just another game as far as they were concerned. In spite of all this, UC eked out a 1-0 win.

The girls seemed to have trouble getting started and the whole first period was a succession of scrambles at either end of the ice. There were no direct shots on goal in this period and neither team had the advantage. At the five-minute mark of the second period, Val Godsoe of UC scored with a flip shot which Phys Ed's goalie, Ann Johnson, couldn't see because of a maze of players who were blocking her view. Phys Ed came back fast and kept the puck in the UC end for the rest of the period, but just couldn't manage to score. The third period was hard-fought all the way with PHE having a slight edge. The Phys Ed gals always finish with a flourish and it looked as if this game was to be no exception; however, time ran out and PHE was left on the short end of a 1-0 score.

If Phys Ed had won the game, they would have also won their league. Before the game they were tied for first place with POT II who had played all their games. PHE not only lost the game. They also lost their league. As we said before, it was too bad that the game had to be cut short because one team couldn't be there on time. Had they had more playing time, PHE might very easily have won, but then again they might not. They should have at least been given the chance.

Blues Meeting Mustangs To Tussle For Top Spot

Varsity Blues, out of the running for this year, could still decide the Intercollegiate Championship when they meet the Western Mustangs to-night in the Hart House Gym. Another Basketball title will be settled when the Baby Blues meet the Western Colts in the preliminary game at 7 o'clock.

The Blues, fresh from last Saturday's upset victory over the much-touted Assumption team, seek revenge for an earlier defeat at the hands of the Mustangs and are an even bet to do it on their home court. Last year the Blues spoiled an otherwise perfect season for the Mustangs by defeating them on their home court, the only time it has been done in the past eight years. There will be the slight matter of the Varsity zone for the Mustangs to cope with and no Canadian team has managed to break it this season.

Thanks to the Varsity Blues Western now stands at the top of the list in the Intercollegiate League. Previous to last week Western and Assumption shared the lead but by reason of the Varsity victory over the Purple Raiders the Assumption club dropped into a second place tie with the Blues. Varsity will be out to set the Mustangs back on their heels in to-night's meeting.

Varsity is riding the crest of its hottest streak of the season. Their play against the favoured Assumption team marked them as a strong club and upset the predictions of many self-styled experts who had already given the game to Assumption. The Blues promptly went out and crushed the Raiders by a 21-point margin.

In 16 games this year George Stulac is the Varsity's top man with 240 points and Lou Lukenda, the lad from the Soo who hit for 29 points against Assumption, has improved greatly and will doubtless go all out in this, his last game against Western, Varsity's fiercest rival.

Varsity's Baby Blues have a chance to salt away their Intercollegiate title when they meet the Western Colts in the opening game. Both teams have only one loss on their record for the year and should the Baby Blues win to-night they would have to win only one more game, that against the OAVC Aggies, to gain the championship. Now that Ruby Richman has moved up to the Seniors Intermediate, coach John McManus has signed Frank Palermo, former Blue Basketballer, to replace him and there are possibilities that Ed Skrzypek, Blue quarterback last fall, may play for the Baby Blues. Regulars Al Vaichulis, Zoli Janverry and Norm Reynolds will lead the attack.

Chris Ellis, who was top Mustang scorer in the last Blue-Western game will receive special attention from the Varsity defense to-night and may have trouble scoring. The Mustangs will have an edge in height at centre where tallish John Girvin carries the Mustang colours. Coulter Osbourne, another high scorer for the Mustangs will be in action as will ex-Humberside player Bob Ford and former Toronto high-school flash Walt Karabin.

By LEO MADDEN

Canada's best basketball team. —Bah!

After Friday night's game at Hart House, it will be a long time before anyone goes out on a limb like that again. I realize that Assumption has the best basketball team they have had for many years, but they hardly deserve that rating. Nor did they deserve it before the game with Varsity.

Prior to Friday's game, the Purple Raiders had been on top of the league with victories over McGill and Queen's, and a three-point decision over the Blues. They hadn't played Western at all, and they still had a game with Varsity at Hart House. Yet, they were rated as the best in the nation.

I don't mean to take anything away from the Assumption team that they don't deserve. But let us not give them more than they deserve. They have four of the top ballplayers in the league in Joseph, Coyle, McKenzie and Verres. But this does not make them the top club. They found out Friday night that they weren't good enough to take Varsity's "Hart House zone". Many say that if Varsity hadn't been so "hot" with their shooting, the outcome might have been different. Perhaps it would have been.

I am not saying that Varsity has a better team, even though they did beat Assumption. Nor am I saying that Western is the best team. Rather, I say that we should wait until the season is complete. Then maybe one of these teams could be considered the best. However, they would only be the best "university" team. They would still have to prove themselves better than the Canadian Amateur Senior Champions.

A word can be said in regard to tonight's game with Western. If it is possible for the Blues to have two nights like the one they had against Assumption, they could give John Metras and company a lot of trouble.

Western is still undefeated, and they would like to keep things that way. However the boys in "blue and white" have other plans for their cousins from London.

Congratulations go to Lou Lukenda. He set a new scoring record for Hart House Friday night . . . A nod of approval goes to Steve Oneschuck and Jim Russell for their constant hustle during the Assumption game. . . . Bill Corcoran, the Blues captain, played his best game to date, as he combined with George Stulac to help Big Lou control the backboards. Nice going, fellas!

Team Of Senior Stars PHE Girls Champions

What started out as a final match in the volleyball circuit yesterday ended up becoming a battle within the intercollegiate teammates on the PHE and UC squads. PHE, the squad with the most intercol teamsters, five to be exact, won 46-22 over their opponents who were at a disadvantage with three.

After beating off a Saint Mike's squad, the PHE gals entered the final series while UC took care of Vic firsts. The teams were far from evenly matched, UC lacking a couple of intercollegiate calibre. PHE's net line was filled by Grace Robinson, Beryl Lewis and Barb Wilson all of whom were from the intercol squad and who played accordingly.

Facing this line was UC centre Helen Wiseman, also intercol, and as it happened the last half of the meet became a spiking tourney between the two centres Lewis and Wiseman. At the ends of the first half, Physed was in front 28-9. UC's back line was more than stumped by Lewis's spectacular serves and at one point in the opener she was able to volley a series of eight, only two of which were returned.

UC's outstanding player of the afternoon was centre, Helen Wiseman. Though her serves were only average for her team, she was quick and powerful on the spikes and was a constant threat to the worthy Physedders throughout.

The college gals began to pick up early in the second half. Pat Dugit and Marg Penman were good but not good enough to beat the PHE team. With one or two stronger players in the backline, the UC gals might have done much better but their weakness lay here.

Physed's judging of distance was far more accurate and some of the recoveries were spectacular. Their real strength lay in the net line. Service was good and a more connected teamplay was most noticeable.

Blue Rackets Squashed

Marty Friedland, by defeating Western's Bill Duffied, 3-2, became the only Varsity player to win a match in the Intercollegiate Squash competitions held last weekend at McGill. Playing ten matches, the Varsity group dropped nine for an average of 90%. McGill, led by Ham Quain, winner of the Molson Cup for Individual Play, the Redmen won all of their ten matches to keep well ahead of second-place Western who scored only four victories in their games.

The McGillians had an easy time of it against the Torontonians, winning all their matches by 3-0 except for some difficulty with Bill McLelland who extended his opponent to 3-1.

Quain who has played squash competitively for the past thirteen years is nationally ranked. Part of the reason for his development as a squasher may be the fact that McGill as well as having 12 regulation-sized courts for its players also has a full-time coach for its team. Mr. Molloy has trained his team to eight consecutive College Championships.

The toll for Varsity went this way, with the Blues on the short end in all cases except for Marty Friedland's single victory:

Ham Quain (M) beat Tom Crerar 3-0.

Dick Tafel (W) beat Tom Crerar 3-1.

Tony Lafleur (M) beat Jim McLelland (V) 3-1.

Bourne (W) beat McLelland 3-1.

Pete Slater (M) beat Don Montgomery 3-0.

Dave Luxton (W) beat Montgomery.

Pete Walsh (M) beat Marty Friedland 3-0.

Marty Friedland (V) beat Bill Duffield (W) 3-2.

John Ensinck (M) beat Pete Larmour 3-0.

McLintock (W) beat Larmour 3-1.

The Sportswoman

By FLO MIDDLETON

Having seen the intramural and intercollegiate volleyball refereeing, one cannot help coming to the conclusion that the time has come for a review of the qualifications of referees.

At Hamilton, at the intercollegiate games, the officiating was confusing. Not only were the officials continually mixed up, but they were also incapable of giving any definite decisions. It hardly seems credible that the intercollegiate league should be plagued by referees of that calibre.

When the athletic union goes to the expense of bringing officials from distant points and paying them to do the games, it is not right that the teams should be subject to such poor refereeing. Besides being a financial burden to the league, it is also a waste of time and money for the individual universities to send squads to the championships.

The most flagrant abuse of the rules seems to be "holding." No referee is sure whether to call this for a five-minute catch or for a split-second tap. Some clear decision must be made on this point, and soon before volleyball games are completely ruined.

The officials are still in the woods when it comes to calling the most obvious of fouls, the net foul. One minute, the official will be very particular and the next appear quite blind when some front-line player goes falling into the net.

The worst example of officiating was seen on last Saturday morning in the Toronto-McGill game, when the referees took it upon themselves to help the winless red and white team win. It is not up to the referees to decide who shall come out on top. Fortunately, the Varsity "eight" were strong enough that the score was not affected, but at the same time it seemed to cost Toronto a second-place standing.

Blue Pucksters Travel Again Play Laval, McGill This Trip

Three guesses what the hockey-type Varsity Blues are going to do this week-end. That's right; they're going on a road trip. For the third time in the last five weeks, the Blues are out shopping for train tickets.

This time they're heading east to the province of Quebec, hopeful of bringing third place home with them. They play tomorrow night in Quebec City against the second-place Laval University team and then return to Montreal Friday night for a game in the Montreal Forum against the McGill Redmen, current custodians of third place.

The Blues, who admit to a record of two wins, five losses and a tie in eight games, are presently in last place but the prospects of vacating that position are bright. They have a game in hand on the Redmen, who are only one point ahead. As far as the championship is concerned, the Blues haven't a chance of overhauling the first-place University of Montreal Carabins. However, that doesn't rule out the possibility of their finishing as high as second. All they have to do is knock off Laval tomorrow, then McGill, then the Redmen here a week Friday and finally the Carabins here on March 12. That's all.

Last intercollegiate game the Blues played was in Varsity Arena on Feb. 5, when they tied Laval 2-2 in overtime and then last Saturday they dropped a 3-0 game to St. Lawrence University in Canton.

Medsmen, Jr. Skule Take Lead Men's Interfac Hockey Playoffs Near End Of Sparkling Season

Monday

Senior Meds and Senior Skule advanced into semi-final interfaculty hockey action on Monday, by virtue of twin 2-1 victories over the Dentistry A's and the Skule VI's.

In the earlier game, the Senior Engineers found a hustling bunch of puckchasers from the lower groups, and had plenty of trouble while scraping by to a close decision. The big punch for the Seniors was again supplied by the first line, as Jack Mollenhauer and Sandy Davison collected tallies, while Don Long potted the VI's lone goal.

However, the First looked singularly ineffective, and were continually tied up in their own end by the scrappy Sixths, despite two games last week, in which they eliminated Pre-Meds.

After such a disjointed showing by the Seniors, there seems little opportunity for them against their kid brothers from Junior Skule, or Junior UC for that matter, unless they snap out of the sudden slump.

The second game saw Senior Meds tie up the hard-fighting but shabby Dentistry A's, to advance into the smi-final round with Junior SPS.

Chuck MacDougall scored both the Medsmen's goals, and turned in one of his best games of the season playing alongside George deVeber. Pete Vernon's boys seemed to have come out of the dying streak in which they finished the regular schedule, and had little trouble holding off the Dentists.

Cook counted the lone tally for Dentistry just as deVeber returned to the ice from an interference penalty. Meds netminder Benny Walker, didn't have a chance on the long screened shot from the blueline.

Despite their superiority in Monday's game, the Medsmen will have to look as sharp as possible to get by the marksmen from Junior Skule when they meet on Thursday afternoon.

Tuesday

St. Mike's teams suffered double defeat in Tuesday's playoff action, as Junior Skule nipped the A's 3-1, and the B's took a 7-1 shellacking from Junior UC.

The Engineers took a 3-0 lead in the first period of their game on goals by Al Topping, Don Hewson, and Al Brian, while completely outplaying the Double Blue Seniors. A sloppy and ragged defence on the part of the Mikemen gave the Blue and Gold crew plenty of opportunities to score, while George German, in the SPS net, had little work.

With Skule's Bill Pollock off for crosschecking in the opening minutes of the second stanza, Ron Shepherd struck for St. Mike's lone goal, beating German with a clean shot from ten feet out. The Engineers still held the advantage however, and although putting up a furious fight, the Double Blue couldn't get past the calmer Skulemen.

After potting only four goals all season, Stu Pasmore suddenly clicked to double his total, and lead the Red and White Juniors to their lopsided victory.

Leading by a slim 2-1 margin at the end of the first frame, UC struck for five goals in as many minutes to salt the game away while showing a power that could very well be Senior Skule's downfall on Friday afternoon.

Chris Wansborough picked up a goal in the stormy second session, while turning in his usual stellar game along with Bob Nadin Red and White blueline. Jack Rogers and Bob Standing got the other UC tallies while Yvon Girard scored for St. Mike's.

The semi-final series has turned into a battle between the clubs that ran one-two in Groups I and II during the regular schedule. Senior Meds will face off with Junior Skule at 5:30 on Thursday afternoon, and Senior Skule will meet Junior UC on Friday at 12:30 to decide the final berth in the race for the Jennings Cup.

'F' For Effort

The Literary issue of The Varsity for 1954 has come and gone. It was, we felt, widely publicized during the fall, and early part of this winter. Still an award could not be made for serious poems.

Entries were more than adequate in all classes except the Essays. Even in the serious poems there were more than a score of entries — but few of them, according to the judges, were much more than amateur.

The Varsity does not want the privilege of being the only Canadian University newspaper able to print professional poems in a literary issue. But what is printed must at least be worth reading at least twice.

Many of the poems showed good ideas, but needed just a little improvement. It would appear that this need for improvement could have been seen by the average student, and most certainly the author of the poem. But he just didn't take the time to make a few simple revisions.

From the judges' comments, apparently the same was true for the short stories.

Disinterest in student affairs seems to extend even to academic incompetence. We repeat: We would very much like to have found more space, and indeed we would have found it, to publish more prize winning articles, written by students of this university. We don't think very many students would have wanted their name on an article that wasn't their best, and on those grounds we were unable to publish more than one of all the entries in the light and serious verse.

We don't think the students who contributed to the competition should justify themselves with cheap excuses of not enough time to work on the articles, and too high a standard in The Varsity. These students deserve credit for the effort they have already made. But their efforts were not wholehearted, and did not deserve the credit of being published.

OUR HATS OFF TO:

—The Editors of The Varsity for the terrific job they're doing this year. The aim of a campus newspaper is to stimulate and sensitize the students. This year's Varsity has certainly been accomplishing this purpose. And what more worthwhile issue than McCarthyism? It is a pleasure to work on a campus which boasts such a courageous newspaper.

Technology vs The University

Education Aims

By JAMES MacLACHLAN, OCE

How is it possible to reconcile the two major conflicting aims for education that we encounter today? The first suggests that in our modern world of complex technology, the maintenance of our present position and any possible advancement require the training of large, new laboratories, and the granting of extensive funds for research. This view is countered by those who support the humanistic disciplines. Only by the study of literature and history, they say, is it possible to preserve that liberalizing influence which education must surely have. They often express the opinion that mere technical education has no place in the university.

THIS EXPRESSION IS MADE without the realization that from its inception, a university's main purpose has been to train men for the profesions, traditionally medicine, law, and the clergy. It is only within the past two centuries that the ancient Greek disdain for practical pursuits has begun to reassert itself in the university. The humanists fell that if, perchance, technology is here to stay, the specialists must be liberalized with courses in history, philosophy, and literature.

While agreeing that a freeing influence is necessary in specialized technical studies, I do not consider that it is valid to suggest that particular subject-matter will achieve it. Is it proper to maintain that any historian is more liberal than any engineer simply because of the nature of his discipline? An historian can become narrowly specialized just as surely as an engineer. And a course in the history of the United States need not, in any sense, make an engineer more liberal in his outlook.

BUT THERE IS A NEED to broaden the specialist's point of view. I think it can be done without sacrificing his needed specialization, and without the injection of a specific subject-matter whose value for him is doubtful. Toike Oike's recent forum made much of the engineer's contribution to society. Since such contribution is most likely to be in the field of engineering, let's consider a possible approach to the study of enginering itself. The engineer's appreciation of the methods of science and their limitations would be broadened greatly by a study of the history of science. His understanding of economics could best be improved by an economic study of the contributions of engineering to society.

It is my contention that more important than WHAT is studied, is HOW it is studied. An engineer could more easily see the value of the methods of the philosopher, historian, and economist if they were applied to subject-matter with which he is acquainted. This procedure would also improve his understanding of the methods of engineering.

STUDENTS OF THE HUMANITIES, too, could profit by a realization of the power and limitations of the methods of other disciplines. Their energies would not be dissipated over a broad range of disconnected data if they studied the accomplishments of (say) the methods of science in their own particular field. By seeing the implications of various methods as they applied to their own particular interests, they would be better able to judge their validity and limitations.

It is important that we be competent in a particular specialized area, that we appreciate the applicability of our methods, and that we realize the contributions made by the methods of other specialities.

Torontonensis Price Prohibitive

The Editor,
The Varsity:

This year the Torontonensis was raised $1.00 from $3.50 to $4.50. Last year, so we were told, only 1,100 copies were sold and now it is priced out of the reach of even more — we for two. This, we feel, is a deplorable situation. Out of 11,000 students less than 10% (many are bought by fraternities, etc.) were willing to buy a copy. This is supposed to be a university year book yet many do not even see one let alone own one. Being among the few fortunates that happened to own last year's issue we feel it is an excellent book and advocate no change in the book. What we are against is the prohibitive price. We feel that if it was included in our incidental fees every student would have the privilege of owning one of these excellent memoirs of his university life. Using this method the price would be only a fraction of the present cost. If this is similar to any of the publications we have known then the setting up of the book is a large part of the cost. By dividing the cost over10 times as many copies it can be easily seen that the price will be reduced considerable.

At this time of the year each dollar seems far more than when paying our fees. This could be one of the reasons so few buy the Torontonensis. At McMaster they pay for the year book in their fees (at least $4.50 which would be far more than we would have to pay) and to our knowledge no complaints are heard there. Why couldn't this be done here?

We hope the people who are concerned with this will give this suggestion serious consideration.

Re: A Thought

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Yes, I did awaken this morning thinking it was just another ordinary Monday, but not a "dull" Monday a.m., for no time is dull unless we ourselves are dull. And be this Brotherhood Week or Hate Your Enemy Week, it will not pass without a thought.

But then, as far as Brotherhood Week is concerned, must a prejudice—if it must be called this—be based on science? Science, as referred to here is based on the materialistic and therefore on a plane far inferior to the mind. Thought should not be affected by the superficial. If a mind thinks of the "Negro, Jew, Pole, Italian, Catholic, etc.," with hatred, then the thought must be balanced by facts, else the thought would not have been originated.

Has the editor not heard of the German Master Race? Hitler was practical enough to follow Nature's plan which permits the strongest of animals to survive over the weaker and to relate it to human development. (We take for granted that the editor will accept the dogma re superiority of humans over animals.) In mating his physically and mentally superior S.S. men with carefully chosen women, undoubtedly a swarm of healthy bastards were developed. Can we argue that a continue straining such as this would not create a master race?—they are all around us.

Another stabbing question—are all men, whatever their color, the same? Those who have undergone persecution in varied forms come to accept it and after many generations of acceptance are affected psychologically to such an extent that they feel themselves inferior and subnormal. And if these persons will permit themselves to become impounded in this status, will a normal self-thinking individual risk his throne to save the mired? No, the self-preservation instinct will reign and he will believe that he has the right to satisfy his desires while those of others remain unsatisfied, depending of course upon the hand which fate plays. He may be right.

No, this week will not pass without a thought, for even editors must see that discrimination has risen to such heights of grandeur that a Brotherhood Week is deemed necessary.

PICK BATTEN EDITOR IN CLOSED MEETING; COMMISSONER QUITS

EDITORIALS

We Must Know

The SAC has done queer things this year, but they went to the bottom of the bucket Wednesday night when they called for a closed meeting to discuss the appointment of the 1954-55 Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity.

In a move which was never once adequately explained they forced the removal of guests and Varsity staffers from the Council room in Falconer Hall. While it was generally agreed that the applicants for the editorship should be asked to leave the room, no one answered why the reporters (and there were about ten) had to leave.

What is the Students' Administrative Council anyway? Is it or is it not an organization of and for the students of this University? Are the SAC reps ashamed of the reasons for a decision they make? If their arguments are sound, reasoned arguments and acceptable to the entire SAC, then they are surely good enough for the rest of the campus to hear. The Council is no specially "understanding" group — they only represent the students and the students have a right to know what and why they are taking a particular position.

If the SAC threw out The Varsity staffers because they had some criticism of Varsity policy, then they are being childish and acting like cowards. Who would better benefit from any criticism directed towards the paper than the staffers themselves? We suggest that the students connected with The Varsity are mature enough to take criticism — and they have taken it all year.

What the SAC reps had to say — if it was well-thought out, clear and reasonable — would hurt no one's feelings. But the reps were afraid, yes afraid to let the students know why they voted in the way they did.

We suggest that the reasons for the choice of editor must be made known to the student body. Indeed, the student body must demand this from their reps.

Enough of closed meetings and secret decisions. The Council has a direct responsibility to the students, and they have failed this in refusing to disclose the motivation behind their actions in Wednesday's case.

Whims Of SAC

A decision was made by our SAC Wednesday night, and it was a very serious decision. We disagreed with it and still do, because the issues considered in the decision were off balance and some were ignored.

The SAC has a right to approve or disapprove anything they wish, subject to majority support. But that does not mean that the majority can never be wrong.

Two years ago the SAC took upon itself the responsibility of deciding the editor of its major publication. Its decision then was the same as its decision Wednesday — an outsider was appointed to fill the editorship. There is, however, one difference of vital significance which separates the two cases. We know and are aware of the results of the appointment two years ago. The Council showed

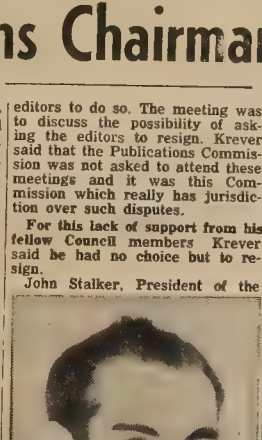
Claims SAC Usurping Position Publications Chairman Resigns

SAC Publications Commissioner, Horace Krever, III Law, resigned his post at last Wednesday's meeting of the SAC for what he claimed was a pure lack of confidence vote in him and the work he did this year. He resigned in an open meeting after the SAC chose Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds as the editor-in-chief of next year's Varsity.

Krever also claims that there were irregularities in the way in which several members of the Publications Commission kept their pledge of secrecy. This was not to divulge the results of the Commission's recommendation to the SAC that Tom Virany, III SPS be next year's editor.

Krever charged that the results of the Publications Commission vote were known by several people on the campus, several of whom he named. One of these, not even on the SAC, told him exactly how the vote went. The results were not to be made known until the Publications Commission report was presented to the SAC on Wednesday night.

Krever also charged several members of the SAC, including the President, John Stalker, IV Meds, with "highly unethical behavior". He said that these members of the SAC met with Clyde Batten, on Tuesday with the idea of interviewing Batten and finding out what his policies for next year's Varsity would be. Krever asked why the other two candidates for the editorship, were not also asked to the meeting to present their platform.



Krever also charged that Bill Deeks, SPS representative, after meeting with Batten, went to the Engineering Executive Meeting (also closed) that same night and as a result Skule Reps to the SAC were given instructions on how to vote. Krever said he had heard that a prominent Vic student was assuring various faculty representatives of representation in the Hart House Committees if they supported Batten.

"My policy this year has been to befriend Varsity and help to rebuild its staff", said Krever, "but Council has expressed complete dissatisfaction in all my work this year by electing Batten".

There were also several attempts to go over the heads of the Publications Commission, said Krever. He said that on several occasions Special Executive Meetings were called to discuss the SAC. One of these recently, when the Varsity Editors failed to drop the "Sneer" column after the SAC gave special instructions to the editors to do so. The meeting was to discuss the possibility of asking the editors to resign. Krever said that the Publications Commission was not asked to attend these meetings and it was this Commission which really has jurisdiction over such disputes.

For this lack of support from his fellow Council members Krever said he had no choice but to resign.

John Stalker, President of the SAC admitted calling the special Executive meeting but he said he did it in complete ignorance of the error he was making. He said that several important members of the SAC had expressed disapproval of policies of The Varsity and for these reasons some of the conflict had arisen.

HORACE KREVER

Stalker also admitted meeting with Batten on Tuesday along with "four or five" other SAC reps. He said that at the meeting Batten only outlined his proposed policies and answered questions. Stalker said he was sure that Batten did not know the outcome of the Publications Commission meeting. Krever said he was not too sure.

Scott Symons, Trinity Rep., said he himself had no knowledge of the report "and at no time in the last two or three days did he hear that anybody had heard of the Publication's Commission Report."

"I am convinced that students outside the Council knew how that vote went," said Krever.

Bill Deeks was immediately nominated for the position of Publications Commissioner. Rich Anco, Associate Editor of The Varsity, when Deeks declined nomination, said, "I regret that Deeks will not accept this nomination as he has taken such a keen interest in the Varsity to date."

Drop Commision Vote Non-Staffer Is Elected

In a move to break the editorial continuity of The Varsity, the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night appointed a non-Varsity-staff II Pre-Meds student, Clyde Batten, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity, for 1954-55.

The appointment was a reversal of the recommendation of the Publications' Commission, the Editors of The Varsity, and the staff vote. The decision was reached at a closed session of the Council.

Members of The Varsity staff present at the meeting considered the action of closing the meeting and the appointment of a non-staff editor as a vote of no confidence in this year's staff of The Varsity.

Speaking to the recommendation of the Publications' Commission, SAC President John Stalker stated that he felt the SAC should have a newspaper printed in the best interests of the students who pay for it. The Varsity staff must respect their employers, the Students' Administrative Council," he said. "Has this year's Varsity been good enough to warrent its continuity?" he asked. "I feel it is not," he answered.

SPS rep, Bill Deeks, stated that he felt international politics had no place in a university newspaper. "The Varsity," he said, "should stay away from flash journalism or imitation of the downtown dailies. It should express a more mature attitude."

"I feel," he said, "that the editors of The Varsity should cooperate with the Council, and with the Council's activities, and promote the SAC whenever possible. The Varsity," he said, "should stay away from digging up dirty campus scandal and running cheap journalism on the front page."

In defence of the recommendation of his commission, Horace Krever, III Law said he thought the present Varsity staff should be given a fair chance. "After breaking them down two years ago," he said, "we are now disatisfied because we haven't a strong Varsity, and are considering breaking it again. This is no way to get ourselves out of trouble," he said.

Varsity Visitors To SAC Evicted Before Votes Cast

At a closed meeting last Wednesday night, the Students' Administrative Council chose Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds as Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity for 1954-55. Batten defeated Tom Virany, III SPS, who was recommended by the Staff and the Masthead of The Varsity and also recommended by the Publications Commission, a sub-committee of the SAC. The vote of the Publications Committee was a close one, the chairman, Horace Krever, III Law, cast the deciding vote.

Aubrey Golden, II UC, the present Assistant News Editor of The Varsity, was also a candidate, but he withdrew his application for the editorship in favour of Virany before the discussion at the SAC meeting had really began.

The decision to make the meeting a closed one met with considerable opposition, Don Lowe, Engineering Rep suggested that the candidates for the editorship be asked to leave along with The Varsity Staff that were present. Rich Anco suggested that the staff members present were as adult as any of the other guests there, so it was suggested that the meeting be a closed one and that everyone not on the SAC be asked to leave.

Publications Commissioner, Horace Krever said that as the Publication Commission had also recommended Virany, members of the the Commission should also be asked Commission should also be asking of some of the members of the SAC seemed to be that The Varsity had sometimes printed the news with a certain amount of biss, and this would not be the time to give Varsity newswriters the opportunity to print an undesirable report of the SAC meeting.

The vote to evict The Varsity guests at the meeting was passed by a 12-7 count.

To choose the editor of The Varsity, the Council used the representative vote. This meant that a faculty such as SPS had better than 1600 votes. Voting in favour of Virany were Law, UC men, Emmanuel, Knox, and Wycliffe. Dentistry and Social Work were absent. This means that all of Virany's votes together would be only about 1000 votes. Miss Parkes, Associate Secretary of the SAC said that Batten won by at least a 7-1 vote of the council. No actual count was taken.

UN Secretary-General Stresses Mutual Trust

The most important role of the United Nations is in the maintenance, rather than the enforcement of peace, said UN Seretary-General Dag Hammarskjold in Toronto yesterday. Speaking before a joint meeting of the Empire and United Nations Clubs at the Royal York, Hammarskjold stated that th. worth of the UN is not based upon the principle of police-power imposed by a super-national authority, but in the recognition by all nations of their over-riding common interest in avoiding a third world war.

The Secretary-General also spoke of his admiration of C.nada's Secretary of State for External Affairs, Lester B. Pearson. "(Pearson's) term as president of the Seventh Session of the General Assembly was not the first occasion, nor will it be the last in which he has exerted a signicant influence on the side of positive and constructive approach to world problems."

Hammarskjold told the meeting that it is natural that questions should be asked about the value of the United Nations — such questions as "Has the UN become merely a symbol of frustrated hopes . . . (something) to be put away on a shelf." He stated that the present disharmony of the world is very different from that envisaged by the founders of the UN. "But disharmony is the very reason why a centre for harmonizing is necessary. We may regret the frequent bitterness of UN debates, but we should never make the mistake of thinking that we would be better off (without them). For the differences and conflicts exist. We cannot escape them. We have to live with them and deal with them."

Not until the common and basic interests and ideals of all mankind are mutually recognized, however, said the Secretary-General, will there be any real hope of a lasting and perfect peace.

40 Simultaneous Chess Games As US Master Plays Club Here

One man will play forty simultaneous chess games this Monday in Hart House. Samuel Reshevsky, one of the two Grandmasters in the United States, will play forty members of the Hart House chess club at one time.

Forty boards will be set up in the Debates room for the games. Reshevsky will move from one to another. It is expected that the total match will last from an hour to an hour and a half. The games start at 7:15 p.m. and the public (the male portion, that is) is welcome to attend.

Reshevsky learned to play chess at the age of five (from watching his father play). At six he travelled Europe, astonishing people with his simultaneous exhibitions. When he was nine, he arrived in the United States and defeated some of the most talented players in set matches and in simultaneous play. He has won the United States Championship Tournament five times, and finished among the first three in international tournaments. Someday he hopes to bring the world's championship to the United States.

"This year the membership of the Hart House chess club is at an all-time high," said Jim Forward, secretary of the club. "Matches like this are a result of the increased interest shown." The chess club arranged for Reshevsky's visit as part of his trans-continental chess tour.

Campus Hears US Lecturer

"The church and the princely courts were chiefly the channels through which Byzantine influences penetrated into the Ukraine," said Dr. I. Shevchenko of the University of Michigan last night. It was the final lecture of a series presented by the Ukrainian Students' Club on Ukrainian Life and Culture during the month of February.

He discussed the Byzantine influence on the Ukraine between the 6th and 15th centuries, after which time Byzantium ceased to exist officially. The 12th Century in particular was the period of animated Byzantine activity in Kiev, the capital, he continued.

"Up to the 16th Century, the art of the Ukraine was influenced by Byzantine sources, which also introduced stone architecture. From the 10th Century point of view, Byzantium was the epitome of the civilized world. Civilization meant Christianity, with the first Christian temples erected after Byzantine models. Matters of dogma were referred to Greek prelates and settled by them," he concluded.

SAC Thru Periscope Behind Closed Doors

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night besides making everyone leave before appointing a Varsity editor "in camera" and receiving Publications Commissioner Krever's resignation:

—Heard that there probably would be no Torontonensis next year if sales did not improve; Regi Mori, editor, promised a concerted drive the next two weeks;

— Learned that Forestry had again captured the Skule cannon for blood contributions with a 72.6 per cent contribution; Wycliffe was second, followed by Knox and Emmanuel;

—Were told that the UTDU debate team of Gauthier and Morris had won three of five debates with one loss being a bad decision by a rather deaf judge; the debaters went to New York, West Point, Boston and Harvard;

—Tabled an All-Varsity Revue report which concluded that production of an all-campus show next year would not be a financial success; two applications were considered for the positions of both producer and director but both were considered inadequate;

—Approved of expenses in connection with women's debating;

—Learned that the Cornell weekend today and tomorrow, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 26-27, would be a more modest program with Cornell sending only six students and McMaster, McGill and Royal Military College unable to send any.

Trot Discreetly – Do Not Canter, To Your Nearest Polling Booth

Music Committee nominees running in the Marsh 3 Hart House elections will make their speeches today at 1:30 sharp in the East Common Room.

Inaugurating the speeches last year, most of them turned out to be strictly for laughs and several skits and quartets turned up to support candidates. The speeches, 2½-minutes in length, can be cut off in the middle of a joke by a gold ship's bell ring.

This is an opportunity for candidates to use any means they can to publicise their names for the election, to be held Wednesday, March 3. "Anything this side of mayhem goes," Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden, said last night.

Besides the regular election day, March 3, two advance polling days have been arranged for Monday, March 1 and Tuesday, March 2.

Sir Edmund

On Top of Old . .

Once upon a time,—in the days of chivalry, men were knighted for deeds of bravery and daring. Today, it is more common for knights to be found in the ranks of politicians and scholars. However, Sir Edmund Hillary is a knight of the old school—the order was conferred on him this summer in recognition of his being one of the first two humans to set foot on the highest point in the world, the peak of Mount Everest, 29,002 feet above sea level.

Sir Edmund was a luncheon guest at Hart House Wednesday with the Alpine Club and the Hart House Exploration Society as hosts. He arrived in the morning to make his Toronto call on a world-wide lecture tour, in which he has already described his Himalayan adventures to audiences throughout Europe, the United Kingdom and now North America. Accompanied by the attractive Lady Hillary, George Lowe, photographer with the Everest expedition, and Dr. Charles Evans, a British newspaperman, the troupe will complete its tour in Seattle on March 12.

"I'm going back to New Zealand and then back to the Himalayas again", he said. The lanky, tweedy bee-keeper from New Zealand plans an attack on three 24,000-foot peaks, 50 miles southeast of Everest.

"This area is completely unexplored," Sir Edmund remarked. "Technically, they are more difficult than Everest but you can go up there with no oxygen. That makes it simpler".

"No", he said, "there's no feeling of anti-climax now that we've climbed Everest". Hillary explained that mountain-climbing is a hobby first with him. Everest was the toughest in the world so he tackled it. He agreed that it was much the same as an athlete seeking the world championship.

Sir Edmund explained that he had become interested in mountaineering on skiing trips during his stay at the University of New Zealand. Now he's a bee farmer; his brother is looking after the 1,300 hives.

It was obvious that accomplishing the impossible had become dull in repeated recountings as he recalled in a matter-of-fact fashion the months and efforts leading up to the moment when he and his Nepalese guide, Tenzing, planted the Union Jack on the peak of Mount Everest.

There were two extremely difficult stages on the ascent, after the extensive preparations leading up to the attempt. One was the "cwm", a valley of loose ice, and the "Ihotse", a sheer face which extends from the 22,000-foot point up to 26,000 feet. Then they reached 28,000, the farthest point any previous expedition had attained.

"The last 1,000 feet weren't too difficult," Sir Edmund reflected, "except for the feeling of lethargy brough on by the thin air. Your oxygen can't help you all the time."

The Hillary troupe's stay at Hart House was short. They had a brief reception in the Map Room before lunching in the Great Hall and leaving shortly afterward. One of the souvenirs Sir Edmund picked up while on the U. of T. campus was a copy of The Varsity. "Oh yes, The Varsity", he said. "I've got a copy".

Canadian Poet Will Deliver Library Talk

Wilson MacDonald, popular Canadian poet and public lecturer, will lead the year's final Hart House Library Evening Talk next Tuesday.

Once again the Library Committee has invited interested co-eds to attend.

Wilson MacDonald is a much-sought after public speaker, making regular calls at private Canadian and American schools and Yale University. He said that he was "anxious to meet the undergradutes at the University of Toronto."

His widely-read poems fill several volumes. One of the most popular verses among young people is "Song of the Ski".

Cello-Pack Double Back

Hart House could not have been said to be packed for the Pack recital on Wednesday afternoon, but an' enthusiastic group turned out to hear this cellist and his wife-accompanist. This recital is, in a sense, an encore of an earlier one given this year at Victoria College.

Rowland Rack demonstrated right away in the Sonata in E Minor of Vivaldi the best qualities of his playing. He produces a mellow tone over a large range, and in the highest section the tone is mostly smooth and sweet, resembling that of a violin.

There followed a progression of Seven Variations on Mozart by Beethoven; progressing in intricacy and difficulty. He was quite successful in mastering the difficulties and in bringing out the continuing melodic line, although the pitch wavered in the higher register.

The Fantasy Pieces Op. 73 of Schumann are marked "with expression" and "with fire". In the main Pack lived up to the requirements. There was always an impusion moving him onward, even if the movement sometimes slipped.

In the final Mann Sonata, Op. 5, the cooperation of Rowland Pack and Carol Pack at the piano was most evident. Together they achieved an impelling interpretation of a Sonata which uses modernities that seem logical and attractive upon first audience. It contracted vividly with the Vivaldi and Pack underlined this in his variegated use of tone color.

WESTERNS DOWNED TWICE

Varsity's Matmen At Queen's For Intercollegiate Wrestling

Varsity's Wrestling Blues left by train Thursday afternoon for Queen's where they will grunt and groan for the Intercollegiate Championship against comers from Western, McGill, Queen's and OAVC.

Three of these opponents have already felt the heavy hand of the Varsity matmen in exhibition meets and have little hope of beating the Blues come tonight's events and tomorrow's finals.

Veteran wrestler Tommy Hatashita is out to regain the 137-lb. title and is a strong contender. In his last year at aVrsity as he graduates from Architecture this spring, Tommy is captain of the Blues and has long been the outstanding figure in Varsity wrestling.

Fighting alongside Tommy for the honor of the U. of T., are such men as Al Miller, Harry Robinson, Bill Busch and Bob Waugh. They form a strong group and though they lost an earlier dual meet to Western are confident of winning their matches with the Mustangs and taking the Championship.

Women Hoopers Playing At McGill For Bronze Baby

All previous meets in which the Toronto team has participated this year have been strictly exhibition. Last year the girls managed to play a few more but this season was limited to two games with Mac. In the last game, played here, Toronto laced the McMasterites 45-17, but then, Western took care of them too.

Toronto is fortunate having a fairly experienced squad on hand this year. Sally Wallace, Shirley Roberts, Carol Dobson and Jane Duff are all forwards back again for a second season (in some cases three) with the team. June Hansford, playing guard, is back as well for a second term.

Pat Swazie, Lou Martin and Meredith Robinson were all moved up from the ranks of intermediates this year and Pam Miles is the sole first-year gal with the squad.

This weekend, McGill ladies will be playing host to the women contenders for the intercollegiate basketball championship. The Toronto squad left yesterday, complete with manager and coach—and also the coveted Bronze Baby.

There are only four squads competing for the award, Western, Mac and OAC formed a "West-O-Mac league so that the winner of this travels to play the intercol competition. This year Western will be representing the southwestern universities of this province.

Three years ago, the Toronto squad was assisted by such fine sportswomen as Beth Wade and Sally Searles. After a three-year recess these two girls have come back once more [illegible] in the ranks of the intercollegiate squad.

Blue Seniors, Juniors Triumph Double-Whammy On Mustangs

By RIM

Varsity Blues, out of the picture for the Intercollegiate Basketball playoffs but still doing their bit to spoil the championship aspirations of their competitors, defeated the Western Mustangs 77-60 in Hart House Wednesday, while in the preliminary match their Juniors, the Baby Blues completed the Varsity sweep easing by the Western Colts 70-63 and making sure of the Intermediate title for this season.

Playing himself into exhaustion George Stulac scored 27 points against the Mustangs despite the unusual double-shadow bequeathed him by Western coach Johnny Metras. Though the Mustangs stood well above him George managed to get the jump on them, consistently pulling down rebounds, tipping others in, all while at least two men hung on his tail. Stulac teamed with Leapin' Lou Lukenda, the man who set a scoring record for Hart House in the Assumption game by hooping 29 points, to pace the Blues as they ran wild over the Western lads. Lou, who is making this, his last season in the League, his best ever, had Western's number and combined fine teamplay with deadly shooting, getting 19 points and many rebounds. Stulac was still the pick of the players with his neat outside shooting, something which left us wondering whether or not he knows there is a rim on the hoop; he has yet to hit it. All his shots just cut the netting cleanly.

Led by Chris Ellis, one of the night's best men, Western came out fast and looked as though they had the fast passing and accurate shooting to crack the Varsity zone. With Walt Karabin, another Western man that will bear watching by the All-Star selectors, hitting well from the corner and Ellis dropping his one-handers from the outside, the Westerns managed to hold the Varsity lead to three points at the first quarter break, but a fantastic scoring drive by the Blues in the second period, during which they scored 73% of their shots put them eleven up on the Mustangs and ended the half with the score Varsity 38 — Western 27.

Western had the fast and well organized passing that was needed to break the Varsity zone but every time they made their opening, instead of driving right in, they seemed to hesitate, as though to wind up, then rushed in. ut that time the Varsity defenders were on them and the lads in Purple weren't going anywhere. John Girvin, Mustang centre, was the big man in this Western attack. His mates would pass the ball around, spreading the defence, then into John, sucking the Blues in with it. John would then whip the ball back out to the corner but just then, when they seemed to be away the Mustangs just stalled and the Varsity defence regrouped so that Western had to start all over again.

Most impressive man for Western was Chris Ellis, young man with a dead-eye, who hooped 19 points and worked with Girvin in directing the Mustangs' attack. Ellis and Walt Karabin supplied the shooting power while Coulter, Osbourne and Girvin set up the Western plays.

The loss left the Mustang record at six wins and 1 loss while the Blues have 5 wins and 4 losses.

BLUE BITS: George Stulac threw up some shots that still have the Westerners puzzling over what hit them. All they could see was George faking. He certainly didn't look at the hoop but he consistently put the ball in it. . . . Walt Karabin, whom we last saw starring for Western Tech in Toronto when they won the City Senior title five years in a row, hit for 16 points and played his heart out. . . . Ruby Richman, up from the Baby Blues for the last three games, scored three beautiful baskets in four tries. . . . Jim Russell played a strong game supervising the Blues offensive and hooped 13 points on swishing long ones. Jim gave an excellent defensive effort as well. . . . Bill Corcoran and Marv Tile worked nicely on the backboards for the Blues against the taller Western men.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity Blues haven't a hope, even by the slide-rule, of winning the Senior Intercollegiate Championship this year but when the College Sports Editors pool their heads to pick an All-Star Team, Toronto should take honours. Varsity has two men, George Stulac and Lou Lukenda, that have yet to see their matches this season. Lou made made the Star Team last season and George missed only because he played too few games to qualify.

Jim Russell is another Blue that has received few raves from the press but has persistently outdone the much-praised guards on other clubs. A short fellow, 5'10" Jim has a set-shot that seldom misses and drives in on the basket with frequent success. We haven't seen many to match him this season.

Puddle Polo . . .

. . . are laddies who splash about in a pool full of water flinging a ball at a large net or pushing it over the ripples with their snouts. Varsity has produced a succession of teams that have left the other Intercollegiate outfits puffing vainly in their wake. The Senior Varsity boys have won the Intercollegiate championship already this year but lost to Hamilton in the Ontario playoffs. Lloyd Fogler manager of the puddle poloists called in to report that, while the Big Blues are out, their Junior brethren are going strong, in fact, so strong that within the next two weeks they'll be hopping down to Montreal for the Canadian Championships against Montreal YMCA. The Junior Varsitys don't play in an Intercollegiate League but are eligible for the Dominion titles. To get where they are now, Fogler informs us, they had to beat Hamilton Aquatic Club—the defending Canadian Champs. This however is not as good as its sounds because the real defending champs are the same Senior Hamilton Club that defeated the Big Blues. The rules of competition demand that a team, once having gained a Canadian Championship in their class must move up to a higher level of competition.

Who, we asked, are the top players on your team. All-Stars-Hell! was Lloyd's answer. This, he continued, is a team all the way—no stars, just a winning combination.

Coach of the club is Warren Clayson, a man who has obviously done a good job with his group this season and could repeat next year. All the boys will be around for at least one year more.

Basketball Champs — Varsity? . . .

. . . We've got our fingers crossed but it looks like it could come true. John McManus' Baby Blues look like the club to win Varsity its hoop title this year. The Junior Varsitys are a good, well-balanced team and after Wednesday's defeat of Western Colts they are sure of at least a tie for the Cup. Should they go on now and beat OAVC Aggies the Baby Blues will be Champs . . . Oh well, they'll just have to make room for this among the other trophies in Hart House.

This will make two in a row for John. His Baby Blues won the Intermediate Intercollegiate Football Championship, the Shaw Trophy, with ease last fall. The man rates a tip of the Varsity hat.

Meds To Finals In Jennings Duel

On Monday at 12:30 in Varsity Arena, Senior Meds, by virtue of yesterday's semi-final win, will face-off with either Senior SPS or Junior UC, in the first game of a best two-in-three series for possession of the Jennings Cup.

Presented to the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering in 1898 by William T. Jennings, the trophy has been up for competition every year since. The Varsity of January 11, 1899 states, "The scientists, good sports that they are, have placed the cup at the disposal of the University Hockey Club, to be competed for after the manner of the Mulock Cup.

Now in its 55th year of existence the Jennings Cup has been won by Senior SPS fourteen times, and by Victoria thirteen times, as well as an even spread among the other faculties. Junior SPS were last year's title-holders along with the Forestry A's from the Second Division. The Second Division winner now shares the honors with the First Division champion.

It wouldn't be going too far out on the limb to pick Senior Skule for the other playoff berth, but Junior UC are a hustling crew, and could well make trouble for the Engineers in today's tussle at 12:30. At any rate, a final between Meds and Skule would be interesting; they've tied both meetings so far this year.

Medsmen Victors Ousting jr. Skule

By JOHN WILSON

Completely outhustling a supposedly better Junior Skule club, and taking advantage of an avalanche of penalties to the Engineers, Senior Meds yesterday romped into a berth in the Jennings Cup finals with a 6-0 win over the Blue and Gold marksmen.

Meds' first line accounted for half their goals, two by George deVeber, both assisted by Robin "Eagle Eye" Arnold, and the other by Chuck MacDougall with the help of deVeber. Rearguard Bud Doray counted two goals for the winners also, one a high, floating shot from beyond the red line that George German lost sight of; while John Duff potted the other.

Junior SPS were hampered by a total of twenty-six minutes in penalties, from eight minors and a ten-minute misconduct to Al Topping. Three of the Medsmen's goals were scored while the Engineers were shorthanded.

The Doctors counted two goals in each of the three twenty-minute stop-time periods, and constant backchecking by the forwards, along with a defence that gave Walker more than enough protection, enabled the Meds goalie to rack up his second shutout of the season. An SPS tally was disallowed in the first frame after a whistle had stopped play before the puck found the net.

Law and Pharmacy set themselves up as Division Two finalists in games earlier this week. The Legal Beagles trounced Knox 51, while the Pharmacists scrapped by Wycliffe for a 4-3 win. John Gray notched two for the lawyers along with one from Binnington, Hughes, and Luck.

Ed Staughton with two, and Francy and Currie led the Druggists to their victory over the Theologs. Wycliffe's ace marksman John Hubicki picked up his thirteenth and last goal of the season, while Sargent and Banks fired the others.

On The Sidelines

By JO RATCLIFFE

This weekend will be the last chance for the ladies of this fair establishment to bring home the bacon, the bacon being a hand-carved effigy of a small child which has been housed in the sheltered cloisters of Falconer Hall for the past year.

If experience means anything, this child will be making a rather unnecessary trip to Montreal because an experienced squad will be representing us in the games which begin today. It seems this poor little baby has been traipsed across the country for the past five years only to return home to Toronto each time. Last year McGill nearly dragged it away from its habitual guardians but right after the games (she) was placed back in the U. of T. showcase.

A monopoly? Well, it's the kind of monopoly we'd like to keep for a while—just as long as the others don't give up. Just the same, what we've done in past years can't determine this year's results. If they had any bearing at all, Toronto would have done considerably better than it did in the '53-54 intercol meets.

Out of five intercollegiate tourneys this year, Toronto has won one. By this time last year she had come forth with three out of the same five. The sole win this year was early in the fall when the gals went down to Mac to take over the tennis match. Last year it was not only tennis but swimming and badminton as well.

Though we did lose several excellent sportswomen last year, the university has not lost any strength in women's athletics. The potential is here and experience (plus a bit more studying) should get us back on our feet by next year.

Championships have been shared, so far, by four universities this season. Western is the only double winner with swimming and volleyball top spots. Queen's took over the archery in the fall and threatened Toronto with a third-place tie in the badminton finals. McGill, of course, won this event while Toronto came forth with first place in the tennis.

Basketball is the only thing remaining to be seen and one of the four mentioned universities is out to claim the title. At any rate, this weekend will tell the tale. And if that baby knows what's good for it, (she'd) better stay right where she is.

Saints, POT Score Wins In Ice Play

St. Hilda's, by defeating Vic yesterday, 3-0, gained possession of second place in league I and assured themselves of a play-off position in the women's hockey schedule. Soon after the first whistle, Penny Ketchum scored for the Trinity gals from a scramble in front of the Vic net.

Throughout the first and second periods, the "Saints" had the definite advantage in the play and were sparked on by the aggressive play of Scotty Mathews. Although the second period started in typical Varsity hockey fashion with the St. Hilda's goalkeeper not yet in the nets, the "blue and grey" team remained undaunted and continued its powerful attack.

With great stick handling form, Scotty Mathews went in alone and beat the Vic goalie, about half-time in the period.

Shortly after, when the Vic team took its goalie out of the nets, Penny Ketchum scored again for the Saints.

In the second noon game POT defeated St. Hilda's II, 2-1, and eliminated them from a play-off berth. Betty Kempton was the powerhouse for POT banging in two goals behind Nancy Banks, the Trinity goalie. Kay Greer got the lone tally for St. Hilda's team.

they did not, and we are left to suspect they did not care one iota.

A newspaper, especially one with a fairly small staff, requires continuity if it has any hope of improving and strengthening itself. This is, we feel, of great importance if the paper is to mean anything to the people who are devoting so much time to it. The very same issue was brought up at last year's NFCUS conference when it was suggested that delegations strive to get some continuity in their representation if NFCUS was to be developed.

What does the Council decision mean?

It means that the feelings of the staff, the recommendations of the editors of the paper, and the recommendations of the Publications Commission (which interviewed all the applicants) mean as much as a raindrop in a rainstorm. It means that the future of young reporters on this paper is subject to the whims of the SAC.

One does not need work on the paper; one does not need to gain newspaper experience; all one is apparently required to do is get to know as many Council members as possible — then the position is assured.

The effects of such a pattern of appointing an editor are evident to anyone who wishes to look for them. Important and experienced staffers do not continue working on the paper, birth pains again develop and, as a result, a very weak paper greets the students every morning. The weakening effects of the Council move of two years ago are still being felt.

To argue that this year's paper has been poor, its policies unacceptable, and to follow this up with the contention that anyone associated with this year's paper should not be the new editor, is to reach the height of the ridiculous. To question whether continuity is desirable among the staff is to be downright foolish.

The question of policies of this year's paper should not be the issue in the choice of editor. Neither should personality of the applicants.

The only real criterion for appointing a new editor is his ability to turn out a good paper. The greatest part of this undertaking involves, we feel, a knowledge of the technical problems confronting the paper. This knowledge comes from, and can only come from, working on the paper and getting the experience it offers.

There are a number of people who have worked hard on the paper. They have been extremely loyal to the paper. But working on the paper involves something more than just working. It carries with it the questions of "working with whom" and "working for what".

What's the use of having anything to do with staff elections and recommendations if, in the final analysis, they are not worth the time nor the consideration given them. If this paper owes responsibility to the SAC then, by the same token, the SAC owes some responsibility to the paper. We have looked at this question in the light of the general good of the paper as a whole. We cannot feel that the Council has — for they have made personalities the issue.

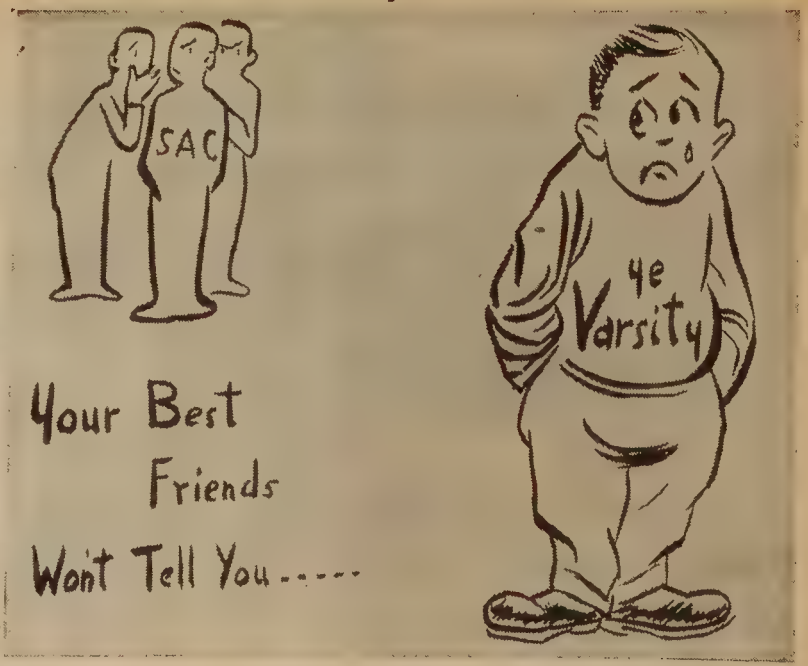
While the Council has every constitutional right to do what they did, they should pay a little more attention in the Future to what the Staff, the Editors and the Publications Commission have to say. Failing this, they should take over the operation of this paper themselves.

Protest Plus

Wednesday's SAC meeting did more than introduce its new members and appoint an editor for The Varsity. It accepted the resignation of its Publications' Commissioner.

His main reason for tendering his resignation was that he felt the SAC, in its choice to appoint a non-staffer as Editor of The Varsity, had indicated its lack of confidence in him as Publications' Commissioner.

This year's SAC has consistently shown its readiness to ignore the purpose and importance of the Commissioner and his Commission. At its last meeting it saw fit to reverse a considered decision of that Commission.



The Publications' Commissioner believed that the authority of the Commission had been usurped by certain members of the Council throughout the year. And he was right.

Twice, a meeting of the Executive Committee was called to discuss The Varsity, a direct violation of the constitutional jurisdiction of the Publications' Commission.

The policy of the Publications' Commissioner this year has been to befriend The Varsity to help rebuild its staff; a staff crucially weakened by an identical decision of the SAC, two years ago, to override the Editor's recommendation and the staff vote in the appointment of a new editor.

The Publications' Commissioner resigned because he deplored the dirty manoeuvring of certain Council members to override his Commission's recommendation. We deplore it too.

Our Readers Write:

Illiteracy of the Literary Issue

The Editor,
The Varsity:

A quick glance at the front page of the literary issue produced a distinct feeling of trepidation. In a small box appeared a short paragraph in apology for the literary quality of the entries submitted, in which they were described as of "generally low" calibre. May I amend the remark to read "unbelievably low".

In support of this statement let me direct the reader's attention to portions of the Second Prize Essay. On page eight let us take a look at the first paragraph of the continued essay. What a lucid, sonorous subordinate clause — without a main clause! Again let us examine the last paragraph in column two, page eight, of this prize-winner. Undoubtedly this is a fine example of avant-garde literary effort, but there is sometimes a difference between valid experiment and muddy-minded incompetence. St. Swithin and all slow-bellies! If this essay deserves a prize, what sort of garbage must have been passed over? Let me add here that space prohibits enumeration of all the illiteracies contained in this essay, for a complete criticism would be as long as a politician's speech and decidedly sick-making as well.

In passing let us donate a hearty shudder to the authors of the two published short stories whose common denominator seems to be a passion for fuzzy expression and emasculated ideas.

With the exception of Anne Larmour and her little lamp "amid the encircling gloom" the fears suggested by the front page apology were completely realized. In the light of this, then, may I make a suggestion?

Treat it all as a noble experiment, realize that it died of galloping incompetency, charge it to experience and print market quotations.

Bearing in mind your motto that begins "Suffer yourself . . . ", I remain,

A. D. Stephen, UC II.

So now it's finally come tuh this!
The quiet, cute an' jolly miss
That looked jus' sweet enough tuh kiss,
Has patched her pretty puss with paint
To make it look like what it ain't.
I'm so surprised I'm scared I'll faint!

What was wrong with the one she had?
'F you ask me it warn't too bad.
This parafernalia makes me mad!
An' them there pants she wears behind —

'VARSITY' STAFFERS ON STRIKE IN PROTEST

Several Staff members of The Varsity went on strike last night in protest of the actions of the SAC in secretly appointing a new Editor-in-Chief and brushing aside their feelings on the matter. Other masthead members openly resigned and will no longer continue to draw pay from the Council.

All those resigning and striking made it clear they were not acting against the present Editors, Rich Anco and Orie Loucks, but against the Students' Council, their actual employers. They insisted that the boycott would only be for one issue and that they would give as much help as they could to publishing whatever issues still remain.

The action by the staff was precipitated last Wednesday when the SAC appointed Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds, 1954-55 Editor of The Varsity in a closed meeting of the Council. The SAC has since not made known the reasons for its appointment.

The SAC decision reversed the recommendations of The Varsity staff, The Varsity editors, and the SAC Publications Commission.

"Because we are under obligation to turn out a paper, we are trying the best we can under the circumstances and with the material we have," Orie Loucks, associate editor, said. He made it clear that all the staffers were not connected with the walk-out.

A spokesman for the strikers said the walkout was a firm way of expressing their displeasure with "the mess the SAC created last week." He emphasized that it was in no way a reflection on this year's editors.

In the resignations of the masthead members it was stated that because of the vote of non-confidence the SAC has shown in the staff of the paper they would no longer continue to take the money of the students. However, they will work on the last two issues of the paper in a non-official capacity.

Printed Page Outdated? TV Brings Top Mark?

The modern mind is losing touch with the printed word, was indicated by advance reports on the experiment in communications conducted last Saturday at the CBC by the Culture and Communications Project of the Ford Foundation. The subjects of the experiment, 130 second General Anthropology students, showed a distinct "orientation" to modern audio-visual media of communication, such as TV or radio, and a correspondingly weak response to the medium of print. This relates to the remedial reading courses forced upon levels of education where they do not belong, and to the complaints of university professors concerning the near illiteracy of some of their students. We are losing our mastery of the printed page, and according to this experiment, the effect of modern media of communications may have a definite connection to this loss.

This preliminary indication is determined from the gradings of the examinations, which are now being analyzed by psychologist Carlton Williams. As a preliminary result, its importance lies in its indication of the "remarkable" developments which the leaders of the project are confident that complete analysis will reveal. It now appears that the significance of the exeriment will exceed previous expectations; a complete report is not yet available.

The project, whose purpose is "to study the impact of new media on existing cultural patterns, habits of speech, and the changing attitude to time and space", conceived this experiment as the first of a continued study to determine the effect of media of communications on learning habits. In this experiment, a baseline for future work, the individual features or "gimmicks" of each medium were rigorously controlled so that a basic comparison of the media could be drawn. The group was quartered into four sections, and each section received the same matter through a different medium—TV, radio, lecture, or the printed page. Each section was then given the same examination, consisting of short questions and an essay on content.

Sly Arts Slate

Hart House Hellections

More hi-jinks, more campaign posters and more slates all indicate keener competition and avid interest in tomorrow's Hart House elections for 1954-55 committees, according to Don MacKenzie, IV Meds and House Committee Secretary.

Arts have countered the professional faculties by publishing a slate of candidates for the Hart House elections of their own. Representatives from the four Arts colleges met Sunday night to consolidate a list of Arts candidates for Wednesday's vote day.

Candidates have hung more election campaign posters in the Hart House hallways than candidates have for many years. Attendance at committee speeches has increased some 400 per cent over last year. Debates Committee nominees have their turn today at 1:30 sharp in the East Common Room.

Members of Hart House who will be unable to vote in to-morrow's poll may cast their ballot in the Undergraduate Activities Office, first floor, today in an advance poll being held between 9:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m.

Candidates' ambitions range from keeping busy on a committee to keep out of the poolrooms to "driving the big monied interests out of Hart House". Two Art nominees claim they qualify because one was a grasscutter near the Banff School of Fine Arts while the other claims to have studied 'art' while on a tour of Europe last year.

Campaign hi-jinks this year are expected to top 1953-54 goings-on when candidates encouraged voting interests by such things as escorting five scantily-dressed women around Hart House, by trios and quartets and one aspirant placed a 5-piece jazz band in the Rotunda to woo voters.

This year's House Committee has aimed for a plus 50 per cent turnout of voters. Some 32 per cent of undergraduates members turned out to vote in last year's election, a 100 per cent increase over the 1952-53 turnout.

Balloting will take place in Hart House East Common Room from 10:00 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. tomorrow. Additional voting will take place in

Behind The Headline

This issue is being published at the decision of the Editors-in-Chief of The Varsity. Though we feel the SAC has left no holds barred in their expression of no confidence in the present editors, and though the staff of this paper has realistically expressed their dissatisfaction with the reasoning and actions of the Student's Council, yet we feel obliged to both the University of Toronto student body, and our advertisers, to print this issue.

Staff members who have resigned, have made it clear that their action is not taken as a result of the final decision by the SAC, but a protest against the methods used to attain that result.

Not Garbage At All

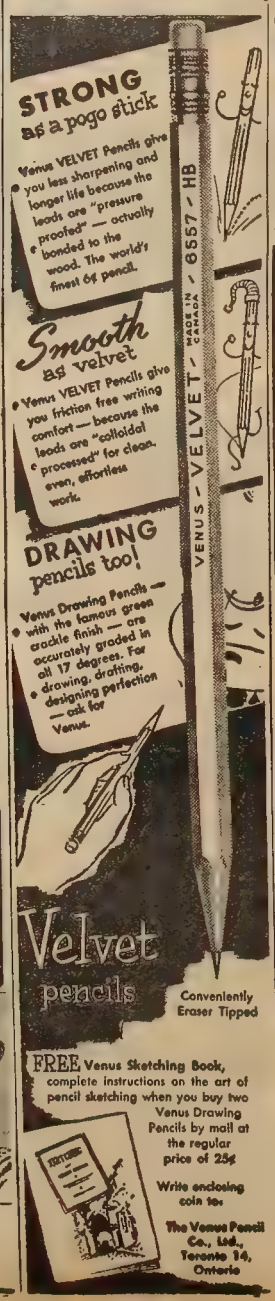
The Editor,
The Varsity:

Since during the last year The Varsity has been subjected to much unkind criticism, I for one, would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation and gratitude to the editors for such a fine paper. The ideals they stand for are of the highest importance and value for mankind. I am glad that freedom and racial equality have been among their main concerns.

I know that liberty is like the air we breathe; we appreciate it only when we don't have it. Today when freedom is threatened from all quarters, left, right, secular and religious, we must stand on guard and keep Canada a free country. Thank God that we enjoy freedom in this country!

No matter what our own ideas regarding Truth are, whether we are absolutists or relativists, we must never question the right of others to express their views, no matter how silly and unorthodox they may appear to us. The golden rule applied to freedom would save us much trouble. To try to prevent unorthodox opinions from being voiced is a sign of weakness and immaturity. Why should one be afraid of other opinions if one's own arguments are the strongest ones?

Having lived for many years under a Nazi dictatorship I cherish our freedom here more than anything else; my thanks to The Varsity for doing its share to preserve this priceless possession.



I'd like to take this opportunity to clarify another point, not in connection with freedom but in connection with The Varsity.

Having read Mr. A. D. Stephen's criticism of the Literary issue and especially of my essay, I feel that not only my reputation is at stake, but also that of the other students who submitted entries which were nothing but "garbage", if MY eassay won a prize. Furthermore the reputation of our High Schools who gave us our Senior Matriculation, that of the U. of T. who passes us illiterates every year, and last but not least that of The Varsity judges who gave a prize to such nonsense, is at stake. Well, it's all very simple.

Believe it or not, but I did not put such "garbage" into my manuscript. I can't blame the editors for it, so I must blame the printers who actually made quite a few mistakes, only the worst of which were corrected. Since I had to edit my essay, reducing it to about half of its original volume, this may have had a confusing effect on the printers, but I can't find an excuse for some slips that were made. However, printers are human and "errare humanum est"

Cheeer up, Mr. Stephen, all is not lost, students are not just. "garbage collectors" and our teachers do not condone this "garbage collecting" if it occurs. The great Canadian novel may yet be written!

Not Unethical Just Quick

The following letter is submitted by the President of the Students' Administrative Council as an explanation of the Council's action at last Wednesday's meeting. President Stalker has asked that in view of the great importance of this matter to the students of the University that this letter be published in full.

The Editors,
The Varsity:

I write in reference to Friday's editorials and news stories on the recent election for the position of Editor-in-Chief of the Varsity, held by the SAC last Wednesday evening.

I feel that The Varsity has misinerpreted the stand taken by the Council on this issue. I also feel that certain actions of SAC members, including myself, which Mr. Krever referred to as "highly unethical", have been misunderstood both by Mr. Krever himself and by The Varsity.

In the first of Friday's three editorials the Varsity criticized the SAC for closing the meeting to discuss the appointment of next year's Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity. It seemed to me that this perhaps was not the best course for the Council to take. However the Council members who voted in favor of closing the meeting had sound reasons for doing so. They felt that in taking this action, which was their privilege, they would express their opinions more freely, and they would guard against the risk of being inaccurately reported in the paper.

I can assure the students of the University that the Council had nothing to hide from them. No council representative would hesitate to tell the students who elected him, what he said during the meeting, and why he voted the way he did. The statements made during the meeting were, in my opinion, well thought out, clear, and reasonable.

Personalities were not discussed and nothing was said which could hurt anyone's feelings. Actually, the strongest statements made during the closed portion of the meeting were reported in one of the front page news stories in the Varsity on Friday. The Varsity has suggested that the reasons for the choice of editor by the Council must be made known to the student body. Certainly that is a reasonable request. However, since the Varsity chose to disclose some of the statements made during the closed portion of the meeting, it seems to me hardly necessary now for the Council to explain further why it reached the decision it did. It is obvious, from the statements quoted, that the Council was dissatisfied with the policies of this year's paper. The Council felt that there would be little change in these policies next year if the Publications Commission recommendation was accepted. It therefore rejected the Commission's recommendation. This is my interpretation of the Council's action.

In the second editorial in Friday's Varsity entitled "Whims of the SAC" reference was made to the action taken by the Council two years ago when it elected a non-staffer to the position of Editor-in-Chief. The immediate results of that decsion were in the opinon of many, not as serious as the Varsity would like to have us believe. The paper last year was a good one. It was reasonable to suppose, therefore, that this year's Varsity should be at least as good, and perhaps even better by virtue of the previous year's experience. The Council felt it was not as good and indicated this in its vote.

I agree with the editors that continuity of the staff of a newspaper may be important as a means of improving and strengthening the paper. When I questioned at Wednesday's Council meeting the desirability of having continuity of the staff, it was in reference to one of the chief arguments put forward by the present Varsity Editors against the election of a non-staffer to the position of Editor-in-Chief. They contended that an outsider would not receive the support from the Staff that a candidate recommended by the Staff would.

Now the candidate nominated by the SAC in his interview at the Publications Commission meeting, outlined editorial policies which he would follow if he were elected. His policies are based on principles which are, we believe, in the best interests of the student body and of the University. Members of the staff of a paper who are genuinely interested in the success of the paper will, I believe, work for any editor whose policies are sound and whose primary objective is to produce a paper worthy of the institution which it represents. Those who will not support the editor, because he is not the person they recommended for the position, show a lack of proper interest in the paper and its function, and perhaps it is better off without them. This was the reasoning behind the statement I made regarding the staff of The Varsity.

It is my feeling that our undergraduate daily this year has not been of such a quality that we need not seriously be concerned if we should lose a few members of the present staff who are not prepared to work with the new editor. It should be pointed out that Mr. Batten has stated that wherever possible he would like to appont members of the present Varsity masthead to masthead positions on the paper next year. I do not believe that the problem of continuity will be as acute as the editors state. Continuity for its own sake is not something to be desired. The goal is the thing, regardless of the continuity.

Much stress has been laid on the Council's disregard of the Publications Commission recommendation. I think it is of the utmost importance to point out to the students that the Commission was very much divided within itself when the vote was taken on its recommendation to the Council. In fact, there was such a division of opinion on the matter that the vote was a tie—a deadlock. The deciding vote had to be cast by the Chairman of the Commission. The significance of this cannot be overstressed when the SAC's subsequent action is considered. I feel it must also be explained that apart from the Chairman, of the eight members of the SAC on the Publications Commission, three hold appointed positions on the Council (these include both Varsity editors and the editor of Torontonensis), the remaining five being elected SAC representatives. Surely, then, one could hardly expect the Council to regard this recommendation as a strong one.

I very much regret the resignation of the Publications' Commissioner, particularly if certain actions I took throughout the year, with respect to matters concerning the Varsity, and recently, with respect to the election of the Varsity editor, contributed to his decision to resign. However, as I have stated, I believe Mr. Krever has misconstrued what I have done, assuming it to be an indication of lack of confidence in him and in the Publications' Commission. It was certainly never intended to be so.

I have always considered it the right of a president to call an executive meeting, or for that matter any informal meeting of the members of the Council, to obtain opinions on any problem which may present.

On two occasions this year I did this to discuss the Varsity, never suspecting that the Publications' Commissioner would view these meetings as deliberate attempts to violate the constitutional jurisdiction of the Publications' Commission. The Commissioner himself was invited to attend the meetings and was present when they were held. There was no thought on my part of taking any definite action without first consulting the Commissioner. These meetings were called only to ascertain from the council members present their opinions on what actions, if any, should be taken by the Council on the matters concerned with Varsity policy.

Mr. Krever also took exception to the meeting I held in my office last Tuesday afternoon, which was attended by Mr. Batten and three SAC representatives. I do not and did not feel that there was anything unethical about allowing these representatives to talk to Mr. Batten and to ask him questions about his policies for the Varsity if he were elected Editor-in-Chief. An election was to take place the next day for one of the positions in the University. It was only natural that at least some of the members of the Council would be interested in meeting and hearing something about a candidate with whom they were unacquainted. In the case of the nominees of the Varsity staff, they were known to the Council members through their work on the paper and their presence at SAC meetings. Most of the Council members had never seen Mr. Batten before.

I thought it only right that those three members who were particularly interested should have an oportunity of meeting the non-staff candidate. By the same token I thought that both candidates should be allowed to speak at the Council meeting to let those Council members who did not know them have the opportunity of hearing them. I cannot see how a person can vote intelligently on a candidate whom he has never met or heard.

Mr. Krever was also disturbed by the fact that the recommendation of the Publications Commission had been made known to persons not on the Commission before Wednesday's meeting. The members of the Publications Commission had by general agreement decided to keep the recommendation secret until the S.A.C. meeting on Wednesday.

I freely admit that without thinking I told another Council member of the recommendation before the S.A.C. meeting. I apologize to Mr. Krever for this unintentional disclosure. Perhaps I should say that I might have been more careful in keeping the recommendation a secret had I felt that this decision by the Commission had any real merit. Regardless of what I thought of the decision, however, I admit I was wrong in divulging the information to another council member. I can assure you that not one of these actions of mine was carried out with any intent of using underhanded means of having Mr. Batten elected.

I therefore strongly object to the last paragraph of the last editorial in Friday's Varsity which reads "The Publications Commissioner resigned because he deplored the dirty manoeuvering of certain Council members to overstep his Commission's recommendation. We deplore it too". Those of us on the Council wh were supporting the new Editr were strong in our convictions that we were acting in the best inteersts of the students of the University which we represent. We did not hesitate to express our opinions on the matter to those who asked us for them. But to refer to this as "dirty manoeuvering" is, to my mind, a gross distortion of the truth and is most unfair.

Respectfully yours,
John Stalker,
President of the Students' Administrative Council.

OPERA NUMBER ONE

School For Fathers

Apart from the witty little overture to The Secret of Suzanne, the music of Wolf Ferrari (1876-1948) is very little known, at least on this continent. The production by the Royal Conservatory Opera Company of School for Fathers is a welcome novelty, and the music fully lives up to our expectations, based on the one morsel we had heard.

School for Fathers was first produced in 1906, but the music is innocent of any modern trends, and the opera is really an adaptation of the opera buffa of many years before — lyrical, witty, utterly charming, and almost completely devoid of deeper significance.

Wolf-Ferrari has almost eliminated the arias of the older comic opera, and has concentrated on elaborating the ensembles, which he does with a facile and engaging use of counterpoint. Appropriate to the Venetian setting of the opera, there is a persistent barcarolle rhythm to much of the music. An original touch is the poignantly quiet ending, in which the bickerings of the previous scenes dissolve.

There are no star parts in School for Fathers; it depends on first-class ensemble work to achieve its charm. This has always been the strength of the Conservatory Opera, and they upheld their traditions nobly. I am not going to list individual singers, for none was outstanding, and that is as it should be in this opera. The fact that many of them could make (and have made) a success of star parts in other operas merely shows that the discipline of the company is strong enough to quell personal ambition for the sake of artistic unity.

The orchestra played with assurance and lucidity under the direction of Ernesto Barbini, who made the glittering score come alive with a masterful touch. The setting was typical Geiger-Torel, who again emphasized the artificially ephemeral quality of the comedy by turning it into a kind of puppet play behind a second curtain, opened and closed by Columbine and Harlequin.

School for Fathers makes perhaps the best evening's entertainment of any of the four operas produced this year at the Royal Alexandra. It is pure entertainment, raising no emotional whirlwinds; if one is tempted to shed a tear, it is because it is all far too lovely to be true, or ever to have been true.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Glenn Miller

A movie critic without something to criticize is in an embar- easier to take the negative view- easier to take thenegative viewpoint than it is to write praise that is worth the reader's while. Nevertheless, it's the pleasant truth that there was nothing significant that I could find to criticize in The Glenn Miller Story, which opened last Thursday at the Uptown theatre and is likely to be there for several weeks. Therefore, this is liable to be a poor review but you understand my position right from the start.

The Universal-International studio, which spasmodically emits such wonders as the Ma and Pa Kettle and Abbott and Costello series, apparently decided to do a good job for once. They went to great length to capture both the sound and spirit of Gleenn Miller's music and his own story besides. They've carried off a worthy effort successfully.

Naturally the music is the most important part, just as it was the most important part of Miller's life and an important part of U.S. culture in the late thirties and early forties. The U-I people worked diligently to bring together as many of the former Miller musicians as were available and secured the original orchestrations. The result is a next-to-flawless duplication of such Miller classics as Moonlight Serenade, Little Brown Jug, In the Mood, String

OPERA NUMBER TWO

Rigoletto

Even a bang-up performance of Verdi's Rigoletto, such as the one the Royal Conservatory Opera put on at the Royal Alexandra last Thursday, may leave a non-opera lover rather cold, or even slightly amused. For it is neither old enough nor dignified enough to seem classical, nor new enough that its absurdities do not seem very absurd and old-fashioned. Not the least of these is that to present-day ears the tunes often recall Gilbert and Sullivan's burlesque of this style of writing, and leave the listener chuckling at crucial points in the tragedy.

I am not suggesting that other opera is any less absurd, or any better (for all opera is absurd in the extreme — that's why I like it) but only that the conventions which bind Rigoletto are of such an age and such a quality that it takes a little effort to see the situation as the composer intended.

Thursday's performance was emphatically an all-star show. In the past critics have tended to play up the general excellence of the productions by this company to excuse individual singers from too much scrutiny. Here there is no need for such slanting of the review; each of the principals would easily bear individual appraisal.

In the title role, Gilles Lamontagnes as the violent old man gave a portrayal that seemed more restrained and thoughtful than the one he gave some years ago. The result was a Rigoletto who was embittered rather than just demented.

With Jon Vickers (the duke) the Conservatory Opera appears at last to have found a powerful heroic tenor who can with confidence play the parts assigned to this type of voice in a multitude of Italian operas. His huge voice and flamboyant acting are exactly suited to this type of role: one could believe (as one could not in the last production of this opera) that the man was a successful seducer.

Patricia Snell was a rather tremulous-voiced Gilda whose most positive quality seemed to be tenderness. Jan Rubes and Joan Hall as the assassin and his sister (I'm tempted to call her a moll, but that wasn't quite their relationship) gave vigorously-drawn performances.

If it was not all entirely credible, that is hardly the raut of the production. This is an opera for those who are willing to sacrifice credibility for good singing and powerful, if impossible situations.

Claude Harrison.

Glenn Miller

of Pearls and Tuxedo Junction, to name a few. Reproduction is in stereophonic sound, which enhances the effect hearing this music is bound to hav on any person who enjoys Miller recordings (and who doesn't?).

James Stewart and June Allyson underplay the roles of Mr. and Mrs. Miller to just about the extent you'd want. I understand the script rewrites the Miller life story here and there (making it a quest for that certain 'sound', which is somewhat different and probably true to some extent) but the average viewers isn't going to know that and will be left to enjoy the good humor of the screenplay. Henry Morgan, a fine though relatively unknown actor, plays the part of Miller's friend, Chummy McGregor with a good deal of sincerity. The real McGregor, by the way, acted as technical advisor to the producers and probably deserves a good share of credit for the film's accuracy.

The Modernaires are around to sing Chatanooga Choo Choo and Louis Armstrong and his all-stars appear in certainly the most genuine jam session ever filmed.

There have been some pretty unfortunate screen biographies of show business characters; this may be a prototype for some thing better.

Since I may not get another review printed this year, let me recommend Top Banana, whilch is a filming of the stage play from somewhere in the orchestra seats, and The Eddie Cantor Story, in which Keefe Braselle mpersonates Cantor.

VARSITY RETAINS BRONZE BABY

Hoop Blues Fare Badly Meet Buffalo, Alfred Lose Both Meetings

By LEO MADDEN

The Varsity Blues travelled to the other side of the border last weekend to play two games against their American Cousins. On Friday night, they were in Buffalo to play the University of Buffalo Bulls. The Bulls, still angry over the beating given them at Hart House last season by the Blues, roared to a 82-57 victory. The next day the Blues travelled by bus 100 miles to Alfred University. At Alfred, in southwestern New York State, they fell 63-45 to a team who had won only two of their games this season.

The Buffalo game was not completely a one-sided affair as the score may imply. At the end of the first quarter the score was 21-13 in favor of the Bulls. During that period the Varsity ofefnse was confused by a close-checking, switching man-to-man defense. However, in the second quarter the Blues came back with some good rebounding by George Stulac and Lou Lukenda. At the same time Jim Russell and Steve Oneschuck dropped a couple of 30-foot set shots to open the game up a little. By halftime they had cut the Buffalo lead to two points 35-33, and had the boys from Buffalo on the run.

But, after the intermission, the Bulls came back with new life and stopped the Blues cold. Led by "Jumping Jim" Horne, who stole the ball twice in the Blues' backcourt for two easy baskets, the Buffalo team slowly pulled away from the two-point spread. Horne and Scammurra were the big headaches for Varsity during this period. Horne, who is the Bulls scoring power, was popping his one-handed shots from in back of the foul circle, while Scammurra employed a hard-driving one-hander from left side to give Varsity double trouble. By the end of the third period the score was 57-47 in favor of Buffalo.

In the final quarter, the Bulls pulled away as the Blues rebounding fell apart and they were getting only one shot at the basket each time down the floor. Throughout this quarter, the Blues tried to get back into the ball game but the Bulls, remembering the 20-point humiliation they suffered last year, kept pouring coal on the fire and the game ended with the score 82-57.

At Alfred the Blues took another one on the chin as Alfred jumped to an early lead in the first quarter. A six-foot-six centre, Bob Corbin from Rochester, spelled defeat for the Blues. Exhibiting a fine turning jump shot from the bucket, Corbin led the Alfred attack.

Both teams used a zone defense for most of the game. But in the third quarter when the Blues found the big boy hard to stop, they changed to a man to man defense. They found the change profitable as they cut the Alfred lead from twelve points down to five and then to two. But they never went ahead. George Stulac was the steadying influence for Varsity. However, the Blues were outplayed in general. The Alfred squad concentrated their attack around Corbin. Time and time again the other players passed up their chances for shots to feed the Alfred giant. And it paid off, as he scored 31 points to lead all scorers.

The intermediate team was down to Buffalo playing the preliminary game against the Buffalo freshman team. In the first half of their game they had several chances to go out in front of the freshman squad, but they failed to come thru for John McManus. During the third period they were outplayed as the Buffalonians showed their strength.

Blue Girls Beat McGill, Gaels Win Intercollegiate Basketball

Once more, the U. of T. has gained possession of the Bronze Baby, symbolic of the women's intercollegiate basketball championship. The trophy remained in the hands of the Toronto ladies after they battled a final match with McGill to win 44-30, Saturday at Montreal.

Last weekend, McGill opened its doors to four contenders in the annual intercollegiate tourney. Games commenced Friday evening with Toronto edging Queen's by a slim 26-24 win. Both sides played a terrific brand of basketball. They drove hard and guarded tightly but Toronto's shooting was sharper and their ball handling smoother. Norma Higgs of Queen's and Toronto's Shirley Roberts were the best gals on the floor. That same evening, McGill edged out Western, winners of the 1954 West-O-Mac series.

This left the two winners to battle it out in the all important final Saturday while the losers played a consolation match for second spot. In the consolation game, Queen's bowed to a 27-20 defeat by Western in a slow, poor shooting match.

The final game of the tournament saw the U. of T. and McGill take to the courts. Both teams played their hearts out but, according to McGill spectators, the team that won deserved every point it got. The two squads were tied 18-all at half time. At this point the Toronto team pulled ahead. They capitalized on most of their shots while the Red and White women missed a good percentage.

The Torontonians got in for most of the rebounds and showed great accuracy in their passing. And so they took the match and the championship 44-30. High-scorers of the contest were Sally Wallace of Toronto with 14, Jane Duff with 12 and Shirley Roberts with 8. Dorothy May of McGill sank eight followed by her teammate Ganna Kunce, who netted eight points.

Had the Toronto team taken the championship in 1952, this would have been its sixth win in a row. Unfortunately Queen's interrupted the winning streak that year, only to lose out in the '53 series held in Toronto.

BLUES DUNKED IN SWIM MEET

Dethroning the Varsity Blues, kings of Intercollegiate Swimming for the past year, McGill's splashing Redmen stroked their way to the Dougall Trophy in the College Meet held at Western last Saturday. The McGillians ran up a total of 42 points while the defending champions, Varsity, were held to a mere 20, and third place. A 31-point effort won second spot for the men from University of Western Ontario.

The 50-yard free style record of 24.2 seconds, held by Varsity's George Stulac, was smashed and dropped to 24.1 seconds by McGill's Dave Hedberg, a former All-American at Harvard. Hedberg had to beat Varsity's Bruce Taylor and Western's John Girvin to set his record.

Though he was the only entry from Mac Chris Wooley won both his events and scored a perfect average in the Intercollegiate Meet.

Hamilton, Hatashita Lead Blues To Share Of Title

Kingston, March 1 — The University of Toronto had two individual champions and four other finalists in nine divisions to tie Western for the intercollegiate wrestling championship here Saturday. Varsity and Western totalled 42 points each and Ontario Agricultural College was close behind with 40. The host team from Quebec's finished fourth and McGill was fifth.

It was one of the closest intercollegiate meets ever and Varsity coach Kirk Wipper said, "It was the best showing Varsity has ever made". The Blues haven't won the title since 1950, but this year get at least a share of the newly-donated Porter Trophy.

There were two surprises in Friday night's preliminary bouts as two of Varsity's top men, heavyweight Harry Robinson and 167-pounder, Bobby Waugh, were eliminated. Paul Phelan, a 157-pounder, was also eliminated in the opening round, and he, along with the other two, won consolation contests for third place.

Varsity's champions are Tom Hatashita and Doug Hamilton. Hatashita, who is winning his Bronze "T" this year, regained the 137-pound title he lost last year with a fast decision over R. Adams of Western. Hamilton won the 191-pound championship with a quick reverse after J. Cronin of Queen's almost had him pinned. Hamilton flattened his opponent with six seconds to go in the first period.

Varsity actually had a slight lead in points up until the 177-pound bout, when Al Miller, who was leading in the fight, slipped and was pinned by OAC's H. Brightwell.

Varsity's two rookies, Murray Berman at 123 pounds and Jack McQuat in the 130-pound devision, lost their bouts. Jones of OAC took a decision over Berman and McQuat was pinned by defending champion L. Weeden of McGill. At 157 pounds, Varsity's Bill Bush gave defending champion R. Preston of Western but dropped the verdict.

Other champions are: G. Leyshon, Western, 147 pounds, L. Thomson, Western, 167 pounds, and H. Andry, Western, heavyweight.

UWO Raiders Are Still Tied

The senior intercollegiate basketball schedule has only a handful of games to go but the championship, which Western has held since 1937, is still hanging in the balance. Its fate depends on the forthcoming two-game series between Western and Assumption.

Both the Mustangs and Raiders won games on the road over the week-end to maintain their two-way tie for first place. Their only losses have been to Varsity.

Over at Hamilton, the Mustangs finished with a powerful drive to defeat the McMaster Marauders 75-65 after trailing by seven points with five minutes to go.

In a preliminary game at the McMaster Drill Hall, Western Colts defeated McMaster Buccaneers 72-54 and tied Varsity Seconds for first place in the intermediate league. The Baby Blues, however, can win the title by beating OAC here Saturday night in the prelim to the McGill-Varsity game.

Meanwhile, at Montreal, Matt Borrowiec fired 22 points to lead Assumption to a 64-51 conquest of the McGill Redmen. George Joseph got 11 for the Raiders and Mel Mikalachki hooped 21 for the losers.

Blues Regain Third

Varsity's hockey Blues brought a souvenir home from Quebec last week-end. It was third place and, while they could lose it again in the near future, they intend to keep it for good. What elevated the Blues to their present dizzing heights was a 5-4 decision over McGill Redmen last Friday night. That allowed them to nose one point ahead of the Tribe.

They started the week-end trip on an unhappy note by losing to Laval 8-4 in Quebec Thursday night. The two points moved the Lavalians to within one point of the first-place University of Montreal Carabins.

Ernie Bodnar and rookie Don Cossar turned out to be the scoring stars of the two games. Bodnar fired the winning goal with less than five minutes to go against McGill while Cossar had a four-goal week-end, rapping home three in vain against Laval.

In the Thursday night game, Varsity got away to a quick 3-0 lead on two goals by Cossar and one by Ross Woods but Laval had tied it at 4-4 by the end of the second period and rolled up four more in the third. The Quebeckers enjoyed a wide margin of play, outshooting the Blues 51-22, but goalie Jack Ross kept Varsity in the game for most of the distance.

Cossar put the Blues ahead in the McGill game after only seven seconds of play but the Redmen broke out with three goals before the end of the first period, which with Jim Wilkes' goal, left it 3-2. Lou Appleby tied it at 3-3 but Dick Baltzan scored his second goal of the game to put the Tribe in front again. Dan Tovey tied it early in the third setting the stage for Bodnar's payoff goal.

Varsity plays host to the Redmen in Varsity Arena Friday night and third place will again be at stake.

SPS Beat Meds Davidson Out

Senior Skule, while gaining a two point advantage in the Jennings Cup finals with a 6-4 win from Senior Meds yesterday, today find themselves with a manpower situation that could cost them the title.

In addition to losing centre Ken Kent with a broken thumb in yesterday's contest, a ruling of the Intramural Sports Committee last night made clever playmaker Sandy Davidson ineligible for the balance of the series. Davidson has played part of the season with the Aurora Lumbermen, in the O.H.A. Junior 'B" league, but has made himself very valuable to the Engineers while centering high-scorers Jack Mollenhauer and Bob Cruise.

Things are no better in the Meds camp, where only two defencemen remain in shape to don uniforms. Burly rearguard Bill Shaw broke his wrist yesterday, and this added to Bud Doray's sprained ankle and Tom Longo's separated shoulder, leaves the Doctors with a problem as bad as Skule's.

Freddy Walsh notched a goal for the Medsmen in the first period, while Don Worth potted two for Skule, to give them a slight edge on the scoreboard as well as on the ice.

A four-goal splurge by the Engineers in the second frame with only two answers from Meds just about put the game in the cooler, as the Doctors were flagging noticeably. Martin, Mollenhauer, Cruise, and Kent scored for Skule in this stanza, while George deVeber and Don Marshall tallied for Meds.

Penalties were the keynote of the third period, Skule collecting four minors to Meds' one. However, the Medsmen could only strike for one goal in this stanza, that by deVeber, who completely deked Al Chisolm to skate in on Pete Geiger all alone.

SPS suffered two other penalties, and Meds three, in what turned into a very rough game late in the first frame. The second game on Wednesday should provide a change in the power that Skule showed on Monday, and Meds could conceivably come through with a win to extend the series to next week.

Pharmacy and Law fought to a 3-3 draw in evening action in the first game of the Division II final. The Druggists were leading 3-1 in the third period, but goals by John Walton and Heiki Auvinen afforded the Legal Beagles the tie.

John Gray notched the other Law tally, while Bill Parish, Jim Carrie, and Bill Laing scored for Pharmacy. Each team now advances with one point in the series.

DRAMA REVIEW

The Merchant Of Venice

The production of Shakespeare with an amateur cast is always a problem; the list of characters is so long that many parts must be played by actors - untrained in speaking verse — inexperienced actors tend to feel ill at ease in the unaccustomed medium and appear more inexperienced than ever.

The current Hart House production of The Merchant of Venice grapples with thees problems and emerges with only partial success. The real difficulty with Shakespeare's comedies obviously lies in the pacing which is also the greatest hurdle for young actors. Most of the players moved with awkward caution and spoke too quickly or with complete inaudibility especially in the opening scenes. A notable exception, to be sure, was John Douglas as Shylock; Mr. Douglas exhibited a great deal of theatrical experience and maturity; it will be interesting to see his Shylock when he is closer to that gentleman's age.

Suzanne Cousland as Portia was colourless in her opening scenes—Shakespeare was not over-generous to his female characters — but in the court scene she achieved much greater strength and conviction.

James Mainprize as Gratiano was most diverting and rescued several scenes which were flirting dangerously with dullness. Thomas Daly's Launcelot Gobbo was an excellent Shakesperian fool and certainly a very graceful one; Morris Fine as Salerio was relaxed and poised; Bruce Evoy was a pompous Prince of Aragon; Roger Bull was a model of kindly dignity as the imposing Duke of Venice.

Claire and Elizabeth Endicott and Wendy Mitchener, once alone and once with a back-g[illegible]d of grotesquely gay masts, r[illegible]dered charmingly those haunting songs of which the lusty, lively Elizabethans were so strangely fond.

It was the trial scene, the real meaning of the play, in which Mr. Gill's actors were most successful. The comedy of errors scene was sprightly and humourous; other scenes tended to drag and bog down in heaviness. However a great deal of heaviness may be forgiven for the sake of the ever-moving trial scene, for Shylock's broken acceptance of his fate and for his proudly bitter exit.

The Board of Directors of the Boulevard Club, TORONTO, have been advised that many Varsity students interested in tennis have difficulty in finding adequate facilities. At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Club, it was decided to offer a special student membership for bona fide University of Toronto male students, up to a maximum of 50. Club house facilities and full playing privileges on the 7 hard courts would be available during the tennis season for successful applicants. Students interested are invited to make application by getting in touch with the Secretary-Manager, Mr. Russell, either by calling the Club House on Lakeshore Blvd., or telephoning Lakeside 3108, when full information will be given to those interested.

Editorial Note

On page three of this issue some explanation of the SAC's actions of last Wednesday night is attempted by John Stalker, President of the Council. However, we submit that this in no way accounts for the drastic steps taken by the Council reps; steps Mr. Stalker readily admits were perhaps "not the best course for the Council to take."

The question of the risk of an inaccurate report was offered as an explanation for the closed meeting. Yet, a Varsity report of the meeting could have been okayed by certain members of the SAC before it was printed. (The Varsity did not go to press until the night after the Council meeting.)

Failing this, an acceptable statement by and from the SAC itself could have been printed in full. In fact, one of The Varsity editors asked that a statement be given to the press. No action was taken.

"No Council representative would hesitate to tell the students who elected him, what he said during the meeting, and why he voted the way he did," Mr. Stalker writes. Then why have a closed meeting; why not issue a campus-wide statement? Mr. Stalker even suggests that "this is a reasonable request."

"The Council felt there would be little change in these (unsatisfactory) policies next year if the Publications' Commission recommendation was accepted. It, therefore, rejected the Commission's recommendation. That is my interpretation of the Council's action." So writes the President.

This brings up two interesting points. First, it reveals that the Council was NOT voting on the ability and the merits of a potential editor, but on the policies of this year's paper. This, we submit is the wrong basis for a decision.

Second, it supports the argument that the meeting should have been open. If the Council has some honest criticism to make of The Varsity this year — some constructive criticism — who would be more concerned to know this than the students who have given their time all year to make this paper as good as they possibly could.

Mr. Stalker, in his letter, indicates his total ignorance of the conditions on the paper last year and this year. A "good" paper can be put out easily or it can be put out with great difficulty. In the past two years it has been put out with difficulty. If it is "good" it is because of the extra heavy load certain staffers had to carry when the SAC decided to bring in outsiders. We contend that we know about this, Mr. Stalker, because we have worked on the paper.

If this paper has not been good — and there is no explanation of this vague generalization — it is because it has been suffering the delayed-action effects of a situation where it was impossible to train people for the following year. However, posterity, seeing this year's paper in its wider manifestations may reverse the opinion of Mr. Stalker.

Continuity is not only desirable but essential on a student newspaper where staffs are re-arranged yearly. Mr. Stalker, however, puts it this way: "It is my feeling that our undergraduate daily this year has been of such a quality that we need not seriously be concerned if we should lose a few members of the present staff who are not prepared to work with the new editor." This, we suggest, is being rather smug.

In the very next sentence Mr. Stalker contradicts himself. He says that next year's editor "would like to appoint members of the present Varsity masthead to masthead positions on the paper next year." Therefore, on the one hand, Mr. Stalker complains of the "quality" of this year's paper put out by this year's staff. On the other, he approves the action of bringing this very same staff back to the paper, presumably currying the "quality" to which he takes exception.

As for the meeting arranged by Mr. Stalker to acquaint Council members with one of the candidates, it is suggested that the whole thing has been misconstrued. But, we ask, would this special meeting have taken place if Mr. Batten and not Mr. Virany had been the Commission's recommendation? We think not.

It is argued that The Varsity nominees were known to the Council members through their work on the paper and their presence at SAC meetings. This is an untrue statement, and is only being used to cover up a serious mistake.

First of all, most of the articles by Varsity staffers are unsigned. At most only two or three articles by both The Varsity nominees have carried by-lines. Is this sufficient to "know" them? NO!

Secondly, at SAC meetings Varsity reporters simply sit and report. ..Is this sufficient to "know" them? NO!

We feel Mr. Stalker has not cleared the SAC of charges of "dirty manoeuvring;" his letter shows an ignorance of the problems of The Varsity; and he still, in the name of the Council, owes the students an explanation worthy of a student government body.

Our Readers Write:

SAC — No Political Integrity

The Editor,
The Varsity

At the last meeting of the SAC, the Council voted to go into closed session to discuss that part of the report of the Publications Commission which dealt with recommendations for the position of editors-in-chief of The Varsity. The reason for this move was to enable the members of the SAC to "let their hair down," and to enable them to speak freely without fear of having their views published. The members of the Council felt that the decision was so important that the general student body had no right to know why, and in what manner the decision was arrived at.

I have no wish to go into a discussion of who should be editor-in-chief of The Varsity; still one cannot but doubt the motives of a Council which would arrive at such a decision behind closed doors, after pledging all members of the Council to secrecy. The student would be justified in feeling that capability and merit figured little in the decision, and that behind the whole situation petty politics and petty prejudice played a large part. Certainly such an opinion would be confirmed by the content of the resignation speech of the Publications Commissioner, Horace Krever. As a Council member I am supposed to be bound to secrecy concerning what was said and done during the closed session. Yet, I cannot feel myself completely bound by a motion which I beleive to be unethical, and which I am convinced was initiated and passed, more to further a political maneuver and less in the interests of the students. I do not wish to convey the impression that, "Well, well, we know," or "We could, and if we would," but I feel that two factors can and should be brought out. It was stressed during the closed session, as it has been stressed all year by several individuals, that The Varsity did not represent the interests of the students this year, and that a Varsity man would probably carry on the same policy next year. It was pointed out time and time again that The Varsity was an undergrad paper for the undergrads and that as such it should represent the interest of the students. Assuming that the Council could show reason that The Varsity did not represent the students this year, then the Council would have the right to change the policy of the paper, after giving a full explanation to the student body. This obviously has not been done. To go on, after the vote had been taken to decide the editor-in-chief, one of the Council members who had stated all year The Varsity did not represent the students, asked that only the recision of the Council be published, and that no breakdown on the vote be given. The implication was that the students did not need to, or did not have the right to know how their Council had voted. It is doubtful, if this is the way that the interests of the students are represented.

The constitutional validity of a closed session is undobted; however, there is an ethical evaluation which also must be considered. The last time the Council went into closed session, it did so to hear a progress report on negotiations between the CBC and the AVR. No decision had to be made for the Council had already approved the televising of the AVR. The Council went into closed session at the request of the CBC who did not wish the financial negotiations revealed until they were more complete. The final sum was agreed upon in open session. By going into closed session last Wednesday the Council laid itself open to the charges of dirty and petty politicking. As the first Council on campus it has failed to maintain any kind of political integrity by carrying out important decisions in secret. It has placed itself and next year's editor-in-chief of The Varsity in difficult positions. By its actions it has lost the right to demand respect, or to claim to represent the students of this University. It has placed next year's editor-in-chief of The Varsity in the position to prove his worth not only as an editor, but also as an individual who achieved his position because of his ability and not because of shady deals.

Prefer Journalistic Illiterates

The Editor,
The Varsity:

As one who worked for four years on The Varsity, please accept my commendation for your issue of last Friday. The situation which has arisen as the result of the action of the SAC in choosing an "outsider" as editor of The Varsity for next year could well be disastrous, and it is only by means of such presentations as you prepared that the situation will be remedied.

The reasons themselves for this decision are apparently open to question; are they so weak and invalid that the council does not dare expose them to the light of the criticism of the students they allegedly represent, but must rather screen them by the device of a closed session?

Several critical questions arise from the choice. First is the point that The Varsity represents a $35,000 a year business to the Council and the students. What possible motive could lead the managers of this business—or rather the trustees, for such is their position—to prefer one as manager who has nothing to offer but a statedly self-written recommendation to one whose loyalty, competence, and ability have been proven virtually daily through the publishing season for the last three years?

Once again, as a matter of business, what will the relations with advertisers be? Are they going to continue to rely on luck for the very production of the paper, and blindly hope that perhaps the paper will appear, and perhaps hold sufficient matter of interest, presented with adequate technical competence, to ensure that their advertisements are not misdisplayed, unpublished, or at best even if published not ignored by students who no longer think the paper worth the bother of picking it up? What will the reaction of these people be to management by a virtual journalistic illiterate—these people who pay far more than half the cost of the production of The Varsity?

And how are staff to be recruited? Are they to be told that they will have the unique privilege of working long and awkward hours, for no pay, with antiquated equipment under shameful conditions, bossed by an individual who they have specifically rejected by their votes, and in full knowledge that no matter that, no matter how worthy they may be, they have not the slightest hope of a senior position? Is this to be the reward for loyalty, efficiency, interest, competence? If nothing else, is this the way to secure the future of the business which The Varsity is?

Let us beg for the moment the question of the ability of a group whom the students of the campus, or a small percentage of the students, have elected to administer their campus-wide affairs, to judge the qualifications of candidates for this important post. They are, or so the Constitution states, to be presented with certain criteria whereby the choice may be made. These are the staff vote on The Varsity, the recommendations of the editor (s), and the advice of the Publications Commission. But the choice of the staff was ignored (though these are the people who are most competent to judge, and are expected to work on the paper in the years to come), the verdict of the editors was over-ridden without consideration, and the Publications Commission report was rejected—the reasons being kept secret from both those who produce The Varsity and those who pay for it—the students.

And what of continuity? The Varsity has a tradition of service to the students of the campus which predates even the days of such noted former staffers as B. K. Sandwell, the late Stephen Leacock, and the late W. L. M. King. It is a tradition which, despite the break of two years ago, still has some strength among Varsity workers; a tradition of service, objectivity, and responsibility to the campus community which the paper serves. Is this to be so lightly rejected for an uncertain, unworthy and only with good fortune ephemeral novelty?

But let us ignore the injustice, the dishonor, and the irresponsibility of the act. There still remains the prime consideration: The Varsity is a business, small but thriving, operated by the SAC as trustees for the students of the University of Toronto. The decision made, though serious, is not by any means irrevocable; the time is come, now, for the "stockholders" to take a hand.

Mistake Perpetuated

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The action of the SAC in appointing the new Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity is, to say the least, frightening.

Wednesday's Council meeting took two decisive steps towards what I consider a very dangerous goal. It first chose an editor behind closed doors, and it has perpetuated a mistake which was begun only two years ago.

As for the first point, the SAC has shown itself to be completely unconstitutional in that it has made a major decision in secret and has refused to let the students, to whom they are responsible, know what the score is. We want a democratic Council, not a handful of conniving student politicians.

Mr. Stalker feels he has some disagreement with this year's Varsity, but I would suggest he clean up his own dissatisfying house before he finds fault with another body. I, one in many, feel the SAC itself has been poor, quiet and of generally low calibre this year. Wednesday night only confirms this.

On the second point, it appears as if the Council is trying to make The Varsity only a mouthpiece of the SAC. I have always hoped that this campus paper could be independent, its policies expressive of itself, as an autonomous body, and not play the role of the Izvestia or Pravda of the SAC.

If there are criticisms of The Varsity, let them be heard. No arguments have been brought out against this year's paper, and I feel that, generally speaking and after considering the problems which the editors have had to overcome this year, the paper is pretty good.

No paper ever hopes to satisfy everyone. No paper ever attempts to do this. But newspaper policy should never be the issue for deciding upon a new editor.

Is the SAC trying to tell the editors that if their policy (whatever that is) had been different this year, Mr. Batten would not now be editor? If so, this is the height of stupidity.

And to hide this behind a closed door is the ultimate in cowardice.

the exam; radio next; lecture and print last. The lack of success of the lecture group is partially explained by the studio distractions; the failure of the readers has deeper reasons.

The next experiment, which will probably involve a similar group of university students will treat the matter for each medium in an individual way. By comparing the results of both experiments the directors of the project will be able to evaluate their relative significance.

Pamphleteer

Politicians in the outer world might take a lesson from this candidate from outer space who won a berth on the House committee of Hart House in this week's elections. This is the guise that Mike Davies, a successful nominee from St. Michael's used in his campaign.

Phony Engineering Slate Puzzles House Electorate

"Engineer? This is the official Skule slate." Don't be misled by the counterfeit," two students were saying side by side as they handed out almost identical pamphlets to engineers who entered Hart House to vote yesterday. Both pamphlets bore the reading "Toike Oike Special", but one was a counterfeit.

The counterfeit pamphlet was put out by Alec Langford, IV Vic, and Hal Jackman, II Law, who had the bogus slates printed at the same firm by the same press, set in the same type. They deleted some of the engineering names and added Jackman, M. N. Davies, II St. Mike's, and G. H. Guy, II Vic, to the House Committee list. All five on the ballot and Alec Langford are members of the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity. The three pseudo-engineers were all elected.

"Jackman knew the other two who were put on the ballot well, and although they did not know about the slate, expected that they would split the cost, which came to about ten dollars," said Langford. As it turned out, the two Artsmen, Guy and Davies wouldn't pay, but agreed to use the publicity, he added.

The two engineers, he said, were left on the list to make it more true. "We chose these two because we knew them and did not know the others. They were never told about it, and when they found out Monday night, too late to cancel the order they were very irate, and refused to have anything to do with it", he said.

"I deny that there were any fraternity implications involved in this. Often in Hart House committees you find several in the same fraternity. This is not done by design," Langford added.

The editor of Toike Oike, T. A. Branson, IV SPS, (and a member of the same fraternity), said that the Toike Oike staff had printed the first slate but were not responsible for the second one.

Langford said that he happened to go up to the Howell Printing Co. with Jackman, where both slates were printed and was shown the Engineering slate. It was Jackman who suggested that they print another one almost the same, said Langford.

Jackman, Guy and Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds, had a meeting two weeks ago, Langford said in a signed statement, to prepare publicity for an Interfaculty slate, which, Langford claimed, was to have the backing of the Medical Society according to a promise made by Batten.

Batten last night denied that he had at any time promised Langford Medical support, but said that he did meet Langford, Jackman and Guy, and paid them about seven dollars for publicity.

Langford claimed that he was approached by Batten for support in his campaign for the editorship of The Varsity, and was promised support for his candidates in Hart House elections.

Ubyssey Hits Residences As Disgrace To Campus

Vancouver — (CUP) — A special issue of The Ubyssey, the campus newspaper from the University of British Columbia has condemned the student residences as "a disgrace to UBC." The paper quotes the assistant fire chief of UBC as saying "The huts at Fort Camp would burn to the ground in ten minutes if a fire went unchecked."

The huts are army barracks which were taken over by the university as residences when they were vacated after the war. Some of the rooms in the huts are about six by eight feet in size and provide less space per student than the minimum amount specified for standard bunkhouses. These rooms provide a ratio of space to weight only slightly better than guinea pig cages.

Dr. MacKenzie, President of UBC stated that "we desperately need to replace the army huts with fire-proof, permanent residences." He said that the government and citizens of the province should make a start so that they will be able to replace the huts and increase accommodation.

A survey of the furnishings and facilities of the huts was made by a Ubyssey reporter. The survey noted that some windows of rooms open only nine inches and steam pipes are in the way of exit thru the windows; four huts are 20 by 80 feet in size, have corridors 3½ feet wide, and house 14 to 18 students each; two wash basins, two mirrors and one toilet are the sanitary facilities to serve 65 students in the section; and there is no ventilation in most of the huts other than by open window which causes draught and loses heat.

A front page editorial in the issue discussed the housing problem with particular reference to women students. In short the editorial charges that "the university cannot even provide enough proper housing for the women students on the campus, let alone accommodating any increased enrolment." The editorial points out that only 900 of 2500 out-of-town students can find accommodation on campus and that this accommodation is "the decrepit shacks" with their lack of sanitary facilities and fire precautions.

Berger Mandated

UC Lit Society Leads Way Asks Special SAC Session

In the first move to combat the SAC decision to appoint Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds, editor of The Varsity, the UC Lit. has mandated its representative to request the SAC to hold a special meeting. Although there was a heated discussion the motion was passed unanimously at the open meeting last Tuesday.

Earl Berger, SAC rep. for UC described the appointment of Batten as "a direct censure of The Varsity this year." He added, "They're trying to start anew with inexperience leading the way."

Although footing is high in most colleges and faculties no positive or official action has been taken, except at UC. Since the decision was made in a closed meeting of the SAC, Wednesday, February 24, the campus has been split on the issue.

"I myself was approached and asked to support Mr. Batten by Mr. Batten himself" said Berger in commenting on the conditions which surrounded the appointment. "I would hope that the council will try to keep this as clean as possible," he added.

The decision was not based on personalities. "We're just saying we want it done in a democratic manner," said Martin Friedlander, Third year Pres.

"The SAC didn't represeent the students when they voted," said next year's SAC rep. Ron Gould. "They voted from personal opinion."

Lit. President, Roger Bull commented on the "palpable falsehood" that the paper's operation at a loss motivated the decision. "They are operating in the black," he said.

The Varsity operates on the funds of the SAC which come from the student's fees. It covers approximately two-third of the cost of the paper with advertising income.

Since the controversy has started, three Varsity staffers have tendered their resignation. The remainder protested with a one-issue strike, forcing the editors of the paper to put out last Tuesday's issue by themselves.

No Comment

President Sidney Smith, on being introduced to a Varsity Reporter, (and evidently in reference to recent resignations and conflict over the elections of the new Varsity Editor)— "Well, there are still some (Varsitytes) left, are there?"

UBC Paper "Approved" By Council

Vancouver (CUP)—The students' council of the University of British Columbia has given the campus newspaper a resounding vote of confidence. The council voted almost unanimously against a motion to form a three-man committee to decide on the standard of material for the undergraduate faculty issues.

The proposal to form the committee arose after the home economics faculty of UBC complained to the council that the editor of the paper "had rejected the copy in an inappropriate manner." Part of the copy submitted for the issue was rejected by the editor as being below the standards of a university paper.

Editor Fotheringham had warned other faculties that they would get the same treatment if their copy was not of normal university standard.

Communication Via TV

Culture's Latest Crutch

By CATHIE BRESLIN

TV is the most effective of our modern media of communications, according to a recent experiment conducted at the CBC by the Culture and Communications Project of the Ford Foundation. The purpose of the experiment was to study the effect of the various media on learning habits, and 130 II General Anthropology students participated as willing subjects.

The class was quartered into four sections, and each section received the same Anthropology lecture, given by Dr. E. S. Carpenter, through a different medium—TV, radio, lecture or print. The various sections then wrote the same examination, consisting of short questions, and a brief essay on content. The results of the experiment have been based on this exam.

The average scores were: for TV—77 per cent; for radio—69 per cent; and for lecture and print — 65 per cent. (The interest and cooperation of the students participating in the experiment help to explain why the scores are so impressively high. The marks could raise, but not lower, their term standing—they had everything to gain, and nothing to lose.)

Those of "high" academic ability in the TV group climbed head and shoulders above the others, in the most pronounced divergence of all the results. Those academically "low" among the TV's scored higher than any level in any other medium. The "highs" in radio and print scored worse than the mediums, and almost as badly as the lows.

The studio group registered a result that can best be described as crazy; their lows were lowest of all, their mediums climbed to a par with the TV mediums, and their highs dropped back to the level of their lows. Little significance is attached to this result, due to the many studio distractions under which this group was tested.

Since the customary medium of communication for the student is print, it is surprising that these results should stand the lowest. Some of our modern educators recommend a return to the old system of the three R's—but if this is least effective medium for this generation, the wisdom of such a move is highly questionable. According to this experiment, learning comes easiest to us through TV. This does not suggest a revolution of the university system, but it is possible that some of the advantages of TV and radio could be adapted for university use. It does suggest that TV producers could better utilize this potent medium for the education of the general public.

Lunar Trip

Rocketship Crashes

By RALPH BERRIN

An expedition to the moon failed when the lunar rocketship "Rosie" crashed and burned after take-off at Physics lecture with Professor A. C. H. Hallett aboard. In an experiment designed to illustrate the possible use of liquid air, Space Captain Hallett saturated cotton wool with liquid air as fuel for his rocket, donned a space helmet and blasted off.

Rocketman Hallett's tail-like aerial atop the red dome of his space helmet quivered with anticipation and dismay as he watched through the helmet's plastic-glass window, his "Rosie" reach half-way to the cardboard moon high on the wall before crashing in flames. Two further attempts in the "Susie" and the "Mary Lou" saw them burn as bright as Spaceman Hallett's hopes to reach the moon, both descending with a crash.

An atomic bomb cloud was recreated when Professor Hallett commenced the lecture by pouring liquid air into a large pan of water on the floor. From then on everyone had cold feet. A flowing commentary accompanied by the Professor's abrupt movements and the liquid air kept everyone 'frozen' to their seats.

Professor Hallett froze and pulversized parsley "for those who like it crisp" and a series of other vegetables. Flower-lovers turned gray when they saw a beautiful bouquet of roses frozen and crumpled to dust in his hands.

With a hammer of frozen mercury Professor Hallett nailed to the wall a notice that the next Physics test would be on Monday. A hook of forzen mercury supported a weight which Professor Hallett lifted easily, marked 100 pounds and a rope tied around the neck of a replica of a student who fails his Physics test.

A long metal container filled with liquid air and hammered shut with a cork was aimed at cardboard targets representing the students of three faculties present at the lecture. Professor Hallett's score in five 'shots': three Foresters hit the dust plus a Dents and Pharmacy student. A rubber snake, thawing after being frozen solid wriggled along the desk scaring two girls in the front row.

With the liquid air all boiled away, the lecture ended. Professor Hallett was last seen in his space helmet trying to quell the lusty fires burning brightly along the littered lecture desk.

Debaters Defeat Columbia Communist Staff Rejected

Toronto's ace debaters, David Gauthier, IV UC, and John Roberts, III UC, last night defeated a team of debaters from Columbia University. Columbia was represented by Jim Shatto and George Christie, both of Pre-Law.

The topic was, "Resolved that Communists should be allowed to teach in Colleges and Universities." Father Platt of St. Mike's was the sole judge, so the decision was unanimous.

The Columbia team will eventually meet most of the universities in this district. This is the last debate of the Intercollegiate type that will appear on on the Toronto campus this year.

Due to an unfortunate mishap the Toronto team discovered five minute before the debate that they were taking the negative side of the debate rather than the positive. This provided some interesting moments for the Toronto team.

Shatto, speaking for the positive, said that "if we cannot allow freedom of expression to minority groups, we have not a true democracy." Gauthier replied with the Communist is incapable of teaching in a University because he is not able to seek the truth as he feels he already has it."

Christie felt that "Communists should be allowed to teach, providing they are not plotting to overthrow the government." Roberts said, "We are faced with a life and death struggle and we must not indulge in theoretical abstractions. We must be practical."

Snow Stops Poll Turnout

Although Hart House officials expected a better than 50 percent turnout, only 28 percent of the eligible voters turned up in the elections Wednesday.

Last Six Colleges Pass Scholarships

The last six of the twenty-two college and faculty groups have passed the recommendation concerning the national scholarship of the Massey Report. This brings to a close the student movement concerning the implementation of the Massey recommendations, sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council.

Pharmacy, Social Work, Trinity, St. Hilda's, Physical and Occupational Therapy, and OCE ,have now passed the resolution.

When Therapy passed the resolution, a students' committee of recommending the professional faculties especially be given extra scholarships.

In connection with the SAC resolution, a students' committee of John Stalker, IV Meds, Scott Symons, III Trin, Bob Montgomery, III Law, and Earl Berger, III UC, went last week to see President Smith. "The purpose of the interview," said Montgomery, "was to inform the President of what the students have done, and ask for suggestions towards further action."

He said that the President had stated the administration was behind the implementation of the Massey recommenations, and suggested as much publicity as possible.

At the interview with President Smith, the students were told that Dean Bissell was chairman of a special committee concerned with financial conditions of universities. This committee, a branch of the National Confederation of Canadian Universities (NCCU), deals with publicity and public relations.

The student group was told that the committee was not merely considering the universities' financial position, but was also concerned with the position of the students. This meant that it would be interested in the national scholarship campaign.

"Our report to the NCCU will be divided into two sections, statistics and the philosophical and ideological approach to the problem," said Dean Bissell. "We can handle the statistics ourselves, but we would appreciate the aid of the students in preparing a brief for the reasons why scholarships should be granted."

He said he was definitely interested in the co-operation of the students. After the briefs were presented at the NCCU, a publicity drive was to begin, focusing the public interest on the campaign in the fall.

Polish Arts HH Feature

The firt scheduled event will be an evening of Chopin's music, to be held on Sunday, March 14, at 8:30 p.m. in the Music Room. The concert will feature Miss Janina Bittner, a Polish soprano, recently arrived from Sweden, and Mr. Walter Buczinski, a young Toronto pianist.

Color slides of Polish Art Treasures by Yousoff Karsh which have been shown in Life and Macleans will be on exhibit in the Art Gallery at Hart House for the second event. These will be rotated in groups of five, until March 17.

The third event will be the display of paintings of Polish contemporaries between March 17 and 31. Some of these have been painted in concentration camps and some in Canada.

It's Real

Cornell Comes

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

"It's been real," said Bill Angus, chairman of the Cornell Exchange Week-end, and real it was, agreed the five guests from Cornell and their fifteen hosts. Although slightly swamped with eager hosts, the Cornellians went gamely about the U. of T. campus, led by approximately three hosts per guest.

After lectures in the morning, and a tour of the Legislature, where they were given a jigsaw puzzle of Ontario, the group attended a discussion group at Falconer Hall. Despite repeated efforts on the part of the Toronto delegates to get into a fight about McCarthy, the Cornell visitors insisted on agreeing that he is a bad lot.

After the Warden's reception at Hart House, the party adjourned to a small foreign restaurant and ate vast quantites of food. The Toronto delegates said; "At most dinners some of the people like to talk and some to listen, but on an exchange week-end everyone talks." Certainly every topic from dating to religion was discussed at enthusiastic length. After dinner dinner there was a typical exchange week-end party.

Saturday morning everyone went on a tour of Hart House. The Cornell students were particularly interested since their Willard Straight Hall was modelled on Hart House (we only reminded them of this two or three hundred times). The female delegates from Toronto were quite interested to see all the ins and outs of Hart House also for some strange reason. That evening a certain select group introduced their guests to the noble art of eating snails, and frog-legs (guess where we were?). After "The Merchant of Venice," the party adjourned to a home to continue talking (be the end of the week before they finished).

Sunday morning a few brave souls arose early and struggled down to St. Joseph's to bid their guests a last farewell. Still talking the delegates from Cornell left after a week-end enjoyed by all. This is one student exchange where there really was international understanding instead of international misunderstanding. And I still haven't heard the Cornell song.

Library Rids Self Of Books With Auction

Books by such distinguished authors such as Fry, Russell, Thackeray, Scott and Newman, discards from the Hart House Library, will be on sale Tuesday, March 9 and Wednesday, March 10, from 12:00 to 2:00 p.m.

The auction, which will be run by the Library Committee of Hart House, will dispose of the surplus books. They are at the present time on view in the Hart House Library, where they may be examined before the auction.

The choice of book subject is wide. Fiction, religion, mystery, history, science, politics, poetry and philosophy are among the subjects.

Last

The last issue of this rag will appear on the newstands next Thursday. This will be a jumbo sized issue containing 16 pages jammed with interesting tidbits of campus activities. Anyone seeking free publicity is advised to get his copy in by early Wednesday night, for sure.

HART HOUSE CLUB SINGS GLEEFULLY

The spotlight turned on home ground for the final Hart House Sunday Evening Concert. The Hart House Glee Club upheld the tradition of good performance which has been set this year in this series.

Under the leadership of Ward McAdam they performed an exacting program free from the usual sungout favorites. They opened with the University of Toronto anthem, Alma Mater, which becomes more attractive as it becomes more familiar.

In the first section were two religious numbers rendered with a strength often lacking and the general precision of pitch, timing, phrasing and vocal control which they maintained all evening. The Ave Maria by Vittoria, is an old setting with a new unfamiliarity which in its quiet polyphonic way reinterprets the words.

art, music, drama,

My Bonny Lass She Smileth of Morley although a bit heavy-handed was delightfully playful. How many madrigals sadly sung miss the light-hearted Elizabethan spirit of "kill then and bliss me, but first come kiss me."

Three solo sea songs with chorus by Stanford closed this first half. Peter Tobias sang with good control and some artistry. In spite of clear enunciation I doubt if he could have been heard the length of the hall. James Wood also of the tenor section gave a heartier, but less subtle performance of the Old Superb.

The second half demonstrated to a greater degree their achievement in the popular vein. They met all the demands placed upon them by their conductor with the same vim, vigour and vitality. Even in such sentimentally soft songs as I Love My Love they did not fall apart or lose ground. The tour de force of the evening which they managed to accomplish twice was Lvovsky's Hospodi Pomilui which follows a progression of chords and of speed as in Dem Bones".

The two final spirituals Little Lamb (innocent) and De Animals A-Comin' reached that ideal of concert situations — where the performer and the listener are sharing an equal enjoyment. This can only be achieved when musicians have the measure of competence to realize in practice what the spirit holds in theory. The Hart House Glee Club are to be congratulated on achieving such a standard this year.

AT THE CREST

Evening Of Suspense

The double bill at The Crest on Tuesday night was a rewarding and provocative evening for a number of reasons.

To begin with the plays themselves were interesting (of which more anon); the acting was uniformly good and the technical side of the production was excellent. In fact, the company had realized the possibilities of the two plays and exploited them to the full. Extra surprises were added to Sorry, Wrong Number for instance, by the clever trick of spotting the supporting players about in odd places — looming in mid-air or lounging against a fire. In Miss Julie the lighting changed subtly with the mood as well as for more prosaic reasons; exact authenticity in props added further conviction.

Since both productions were so all-round good, since the evening was so eminently satisfying, I cannot but feel that criticism from an amateur theatre-goer is not only unnecessary but undesirable. However, the evening provoked me to some serious thinking in the light of some recently acquired knowledge (as is ever the way with students).

Aristotle (writing of Sophoclean tragedy) said that the most important thing in a play is the motive power behind it; that true drama is not episodic but consistent and held together by a sort of cohesive plan. With this in mind, close upon its heels came the coherence theory of truth which states basically that an idea is true only if it does not contain in itself the seeds of its own destruction.

Sorry, Wrong Number has a simple, straightforward aim — to present a good story excitingly. It says nothing, either inquiringly or positively — it asks no questions and settles no problem. However, if it is not good drama it is certainly good theatre. And the Crest company produced it as theatrically as possible.

What Strindberg wanted to say is somewhat less than clear—

Miss Julie is the story of the daughter of a Scandinavian Count who is willingly seduced by her father's valet. Aware that all the villagers are maliciously aware of this, Miss Julie, unable to face the shame of staying among them, tries to decide to run away with the valet and finally kills herself.

There is a definite thesis here, a steady motivation — a young woman of aristocratic family, living in a semi-feudal society with rigid class distinctions is courting disaster when she oversteps the bounds.

So much for the motivation — now, what, within this framework, was Strindberg trying to say? All three characters, in different ways are dissatisfied with things and want to better themselves. The valet, recognizing in himself a certain superiority, is striving toward the goal of aristocracy and nobility—he has forced himself to believe that it is the highest good although whenever his belief slips he is left with the unprotected reality of not knowing what he wants. Kristin the cook, on the other hand, knows exactly what she wants and, firmly convinced that she, unlike the camel, is going to enter into Heaven, is fairly satisfied with her immediate circumstances (which the others are not) although she finds the world in general a highly unsatisfactory place and is really only reconciled to remaining in it by the fact that she is soon to leave it for a greater glory.

I still do not feel that I have reached a satisfactory answer to the question of the play's coherence, but I strongly suspect that Miss Julie meets almost all the requirements that go to making a good play into a great one.

ENGINEERS LEAD IN HOCKEY

Stranglehold By Ice Beagles

The Legal Beagles gained a stranglehold on the second division hockey championship yesterday, registering a 5-2 victory over Pharmacy in a late afternoon contest.

Now, with three points to Pharmacy's one, the Lawyers are in the same position as Skule are in the first division, and can settle for a tie in Monday's third game, and still take the title.

Frank Callaghan was the individual star for Law with goals in the first and third periods. Mal Hughes tallied in the first frame also to give the Beagles a 2-0 lead going into the second. Bill Laing brought the Druggists within striking distance in the middle of the second frame.

However, Bill Angus' tally as the third period opened put the Lawyers two up until John Francey connected for the last Pharmacy goal. Callaghan then added his second score, for insurance. Red Andison tallied Law's final goal in the last minute of play.

Medsmen Score Early Lead Skule Comes Back, Ties 4-4

By JOHN WILSON

There is a strange but justifiable rule of ice hockey that says that any player other than the goalie who closes his hand over the puck shall receive a minor penalty. Meds' Stu Sims did just that in Wednesday's Interfaculty hockey final, and while he was off the ice, Skule's Muff Martin dropped a screened shot behind Benny Walker to knot the score at 4-4.

This is not laying the blame on Sims, who played a solid game at the Meds blueline replacing the injured Bill Shaw. However, that goal came with less than three minutes left in a tense third period, and as a result the two teams split the points, giving Skule a 3-1 edge in the four-point series.

The Doctors rocketed to a 2-0 lead in the middle of the first frame on goals by Johnny Duff and Ollie King, but Pete Bannister put the Skulemen back in touch with the first of two goals moments later. The Engineers looked much less powerful than in Monday's contest, and the Medsmen were outhustling them throughout the first period.

Two goals by rearguard Bud Doray, who was playing on a sprained ankle, put the Doctors way out in front in the second but while Meds suffered an onslaught of penalties, Ron Drynan scored his first goal of the season, and Bannister notched his second tally of the game, as the Engineers came within one goal of the Medsmen.

Meds collected eighteen minutes in penalties in this period, an alarming total gained from a ten minute misconduct to goalie Benny Walker and eight minors. Skule took four minors in the same twenty minutes, and that was all. Rough-and-tumble hockey made the second period a little shabby, while both teams seemed to be suffering from the effects of three stop-time periods.

It looked very much as though Meds would take the game in the third frame, as time dragged on, and neither crew could get an organised offence set up. However Martin was able to supplement a strong game for Skule making sure of Mollenhauer's pass with a shot that Walker never saw.

This business of a four-point series could well extend the finals into the third week in March should Meds win the next meeting. The first team to obtain four points wins the title, and a Meds win next Tuesday would give each club three points, necessitating a fourth game.

On the other hand, Skule can be satisfied with a tie and still cop the Jennings Trophy. Overtime would certainly add a great deal of tension to each game, but there is the problem of whether the players could stand it after playing two straight-time periods all season. They've looked awfully tired in the third periods of these last two games. At any rate, the third game will be played at 12:30 on Tuesday, and a few more spectators would no doubt be in order, seeing as how it's pretty good hockey and an Interfaculty final at that.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

So now they may have to let McMaster back into the football league. As if things weren't confusing enough, the athletic directors of Varsity, Queen's, Western and McGill decided not to come to a decision at their meeting in Kingston ths week. They're going to take a telegraph vote tomorrow and the betting around town is that the Marauders may be returned for yet another one-year tryout.

Since the executive of the CIAU already decided to oust the Macs, this can only mean that they're thinking of reconsidering. The reason must be that McGill, which dissented in the original vote, is sticking to its guns in claiming that Mac isn't out as long as the vote wasn't unanimous (according to the constitution). Adhering to their original principle indicated McGill would be out of the league, leaving Western, Varsity and Queen's to fight for the Yates marbles. Or, in McGill's opinion, those three would be outlaws since the Mac ouster wasn't constitutional and McMaster and McGill would then remain to play for the Yates. Either outcome would be slightly ridiculous.

Therefore, it seems that the football league is about to make its second complete about-face within two months. All we can hope is that a few fans are going to be able to retain their faith in college sports while the whole mess untangles itsef.

Wait Till Next Year

"Just wait till next year." That's the watchword of Brooklyn baseball fans when their Bums lose out. Varsity hockey fans can say the same thing with much more confidence because, while the Blues haven't had a particularly good season, they ought to be a powerhouse next season, providing their present prospects pan out as expected. Goalie Jack Ross and forward Harry Boyd are the only certain losses. It's readily admitted that their departure will create a couple of big holes in the lineup. But Hugh Currie, the intermediates' giant economy-sized goal-tender is on the way up and Pogo Wheldrake's champs also have produced a fine player in Clare Fisher.

Dave Jackson, at present a Maple Leaf farmhand with Marlboro juniors, will likely turn to college hockey. While the big guy could probably turn pro with Pittsburgh, he's also interested in finishing his course. And since Varsity gave the Leafs Conn Smythe, maybe they'll reciprocate with a player for once.

Coach Jack Kennedy also mentioned that Paul Knox and Ken Linesman of St. Michael's College juniors are possible Blue material. There a couple of guys that would look good at Varsity Arena.

In the meantime, there's the matter of finishing this season. A win over the McGill Redmen tonight would give us a rather good record for the season. The Tribe's a team that should have won the title instead of floundering around in the cellar. A couple of games have shown just how dangerous they can be.

The basketball team is running in the can too but they've made a great showing. George Stulac and Lou Lukenda have had tremendous seasons and so have Jim Russell, Steve Oneschuk and Bill Corcoran, who have made the Blues as good a ball club as there is in the loop. Tomorrow night's game is the farewell appearance for Lou and Captain Bill and they're liable to take a couple of big score sheets with them as souvenirs.

Next year, it's going to be a scramble for every spot on the club. Besides all the veterans coming back, chaps like Al Vauchulis and Norm Reynolds will be moving up from the intermediates and Peter Potter and Leo Madden will likely be coming back from Tri-Bells.

McGill's A Guest Finale For Blues

Tomorrow night, in Hart House, Varsity Blues of basketball meet the team that started them on their road to ruin when they play the McGill Redmen, who handed them their first defeat of the season. Playing their last Varsity games will be Blue Captain Bill Corcoran and Leapin' Lou Lukenda. But before the Blues take to the floor against the McGillians there will be a college championship decided as the Varsity Baby Blues meet the OAVC Aggies in the final game of the season, which if the Varsitypes win will give them the Intercollegiate Intermediate Title.

The McGill game should see George Stulac go over the 300-point mark in this year's scoring, since he already has 298 to his credit. George will be the first Varsity man in recent years to hit that mark.

Leaping Lou, if he should duplicae his previous 29-point effort could also join the 300 club. He now has 272.

McGill will send their best men in—big Mel Mikilachki and Gord Edwards as well as Al Suarez and George Klein, former Redman footballer. These were the men whose sensational shooting in the first Varsity-McGill game sank the Blues.

For John McManus and his intermediates this game will be crucial. Should the Aggies win there will be a three-way tie for first place in the league, but if the Baby Blues defeat them, it'll be Varsity home free. In their last meeting the Varsitys mastered the Aggies by a single point and that was on the farmer-boys home floor.

John has a lineup of men that could show well in senior company. Men like Al Vaichulis, Norm Reynolds and Zoli Janveri will all be strong candidates for Big Blue berths next season.

Track Is On Blues Work Run Indoors

While, for most sports, the series of Intercollegiate meets and games for this year are almost completely finished, in contrast the Varsity indoor track team is just at the half-way mark in its busiest season to date.

The speedy boys in Blue and White went in their first competition of the season way back on Feb. 6, where six of Varsity's best runners were outclassed by competition from several American colleges. There was a reversal of form on Feb. 20, when the Blue trackmen overwhelmed visitors from Wayne University.

Latest honors were gained by the runners at the Armory meet in Buffalo and the Coliseum meet in Toronto, last Friday and Saturday nights. The Blues lost to Canisius College in the mile relay, but Varsity's Doug McEnteer won the 880-yard run. Later at the Coliseum, the Varsitypes did far better against the local clubs.

Dick Harding placed first in the open 500-yard run and Pete Watson fought off some tough competition to cross the line ahead of the field in the 1,000-yard event. Then, in a hard-fought medley relay event, the Varsity team of McEnteer, Eckersley, Harding and Watson won.

The Blue runners go again tomorrow at 3 o'clock on the Hart House oval track as they host the Gladstone AC, the East York Track Club and the newly-formed Toronto Olympic Club in an afternoon meet. Scheduled for this meet are events in the 50, 300, 600, and 1,000-yard runs and probably a mile medley relay.

Women's Hockey

Physical Education Firsts and St. Hilda's Firsts will be the opponents in the women' interfaculty hockey finals next week. The winner will be decided Tuesday in the two-game, total points series. In semi-final games, PHE I turned back POT 1 3-2 and St. Hilda's stopped PHE II 7-0 with Scotty Mathews scoring four goals.

Puck Blues Need Win To Clinch Third Place

You could take a look at the intercollegiate hockey standings which appear at the end of this story and decide that Varsity Blues won't have much at stake when they play McGill Redmen tonight at Varsity Arena. And that's the trouble with statistics: they're frequently misleading.

The Blues have a great deal at stake, none of which unfortunately is the college championship, which is out of reach. However, the Blues can clinch third place by beating the Redmen whereas a loss would drop them into last place, since they're leading the Tribe by only one point.

Looking back, it would appear that the three losses before Christmas killed Varsity's chances. In 1954, the Blues have won three lost three and tied one. Had they won a game or two before Christmas, they'd be in the thick of the title fight.

For tonight's game, the first two lines are pretty well set with the third trio something of a question mark. Tom Riley will likely go to centre, with Jim Wilkes on the right wing. On the left side Kennedy isn't sure whether he'll use Robin Logie or Joe Walker. Lou Appleby and Sam Ashton and Bill Moreay and John Tolton are the defence combinations. Harry Boyd centres the first line with Red Stephen on the right wing and Ernie Bodnar on the left. Don Cossar, the Blues' leading scorer makes the plays for Ross Woods and Don Cossar on the other combo.

BLUES NOTES . . . The Varsity reported that Ernie Bodnar scored the winning goal against McGill last Friday, whereas it was actually that fine fellow, Red Stephen, who sank that one . . . Montreal Carabins and Laval could decide the title this weekend when they tangle. The Carabins are one point up and each has two games to go.

Stokowski And TSO

Leopold Stokowski had three rehearsals with the Orchestra to prepare the programme presented on Tuesday and Wednesday night of this week at Massey Hall. It seems hardly enough time to account for the astonishing improvement in performance. The concert featured Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor, and also included the American premiere performance of a Suite for Orchestra in Four Parts by a Frenchman, not known on his continent, Claude Delvincourt. (Programme notes on the composer and his achievements were unsatisfacorily brief—information, perhaps, is hard to find — still, how seriously are we to take an AMERICAN PREMIERE PERFORMANCE of a musical work that is played without introductory remarks of any valuable sort?)

Stokowski is the permanent conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, but has appeared as guest conductor in so many American cities since he came here from England in 1905 that his amazing ability is well recognized everywhere. What he accomplished here in Toronto this week will be remembered by all those who were fortunate enough to get tickets for his performances.

Rehearsal time must have been largely devoted to the two major works mentioned above, although even the lesser works: the Vaughan Williams Suite on English Folk Songs and the Mussorgsky, Night on Bald Mountain, showed an obvious improvement in musicianship. The Mussorgsky, especially, perhaps because it was technically so well mastered, seemed to be the most strikingly well performed work on the programme. Notable also was the playing of a Canadian work by Francois Morel, which had impressed Stokowski so favourably at the Canadian Concert in New York this fall.

Stokowski had removed the bass viols and the cellos to stage right on a small platform behind the violins and violas, the brass and woodwinds to stage left in front of the drums. The appearance of the orchestra in these positions was much more "pleasant" to look at; the acoustics, notably in the Tschaikowsky Symphony, seemed to be improved by the concentration of the string sounds.

Dreams Of Glory

On Hot Air

Yes, we can do anything better than you. This seems to be the motto of almost everyone who plans to be something on next year's campus. Everybody who stands the chance of losing something, has countered with the same motto.

Only last weekend, we were pouring our troubles out to a friend in Hart House. We agreed that at least here in Hart House was one last stronghold of integrity.

Alas, even Hart House has not been spared the plague of verbal diarrhoea that has spread across the campus in the last two weeks.

In the last three days alone, nearly every organization of any strength on the campus has been slandered for some ill purpose.

A fad such as this may creep into a campus at any time. However there is no doubt but that it reflects the calibre of the students in executive positions around and among us.

The situation is now appalling. For our part of it, though we do not admit to similar charges laid against The Varsity today, or any other day, we, nevertheless, hang our heads.

Petty Politics

Wednesday's Hart House elections were featured by as blatant a case of misrepresentation and dishonesty as we have seen this year. Three candidates for the House committee were involved: one initiated action to have his name and the names of two other candidates placed on a bogus engineering society slate; the other two were told of the act after it had been done, but raised no audible protest.

The three candidates involved in this dishonest action were Jackman, Guy and Davies. Two are artsmen and the other enrolled in the school of law, but their names appeared on the false slate, printed on the identical format of an official engineering society slate.

All three were elected to the positions they sought.

The situation raises many questions. Should faculty slates be permitted? Do they destroy the main purpose of the committees? How much help was the bogus slate? How much does the action hurt the fraternity to which all three belong? Interesting problems.

But the only real question is one of ethics and morals. The three candidates lied and cheated in their triumphal march to a house committee membership. We hope they are satisfied, and we wonder if they are proud of their chicanerous behaviour.

We also hope that each time one of the three rises to speak in a House committee meeting, an institution heretofore unsullied by pretty campus politics, their colleagues on the house committee will remember their methods used to gain membership.

Our Readers Write:

End Of The Journalistic Elite?

The Editors,
The Varsity:

May I take this opportunity to commend the SAC on their decision to appoint Mr. Batten as Editor-in-chief for the coming year. This is in keeping with the decision previously made that The Varsity power shall never become concentrated in the hands of a small journalistic elite. The other candidates for this post have since indicated their immaturity by the childish antics they have been pursuing in opposition to Mr. Batten and the SAC. Their muddled strike of the last issue which was also described by them as a boycott and which saw them putting out the paper anyway has merely left a bad taste on the campus and shown them as the truly selfish people that they would seem to be. It would be well advised that next time they contemplate such an action that they have the courage to print the names of those who have resigned and not hide behind an overall anonymity. This action showed the campus that these people were themselves guilty of the very same tactics that they are so righteously accusing the SAC of.

Wally Reiter,
II General U.C.

Ed. Note: The boycott of the production of Tuesday's Varsity by the thirty-man staff of the News and Makeup departments of the paper was almost 100 percent. Of the three news stories in the issue, one was written by the Editor, and the others were non-staff. All the page production of the issue, except for A.M. and D. and Sports, was done by the Editors.

What Care

The Editor,
The Varsity;

Re this SAC-Varsity business, permit me, as an ex-newspaper man and member of the Grad. School, to try to pour oil upon the waters.

You and your staff have given the jobs you had the best you could. You learnt a great deal and you printed the truth as you saw it. You will now leave the paper and use what you have learnt. As long as you know that you have done your bit, what do you care whether your recommendation is followed or not? And since you printed the truth as you saw it, isn't it obvious that people aren't going to like you for it? Do you want your integrity and popularity? Isn't that asking too much?

Batten's nomination, I take it, had nothing to do with personalities. Virany was identified with this year's paper which wasn't popular (what do you care) and consequently the committee appointed the other guy. Fair, constitutional or otherwise: that's the way people work. Again, what do you care!

The best to you and to your staff. And, may I add, that Batten has the support of a large section of the students, including my own. Again, what do you care! But this time you should.

A. J. Frisch
Grad. School

Blundering

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It was with profound shock that I read in Friday's Varsity of the outrageous action taken by the SAC in their appointment of the new editor-in-chief of The Varsity. This is the culmination of numerous blundering actions taken by John Stalker and Co.

The latest action is a direct slap in the face to the student body and The Varsity staff. I regret that the apathy of the student body is such that the SAC would dare to use such underhand methods to gain their ends.

Such flagrant disregard for decency and common sense has never before been seen on the campus. It is high time that we had a sensible and representative SAC.

Richard Masuda,
I SPS.

Only If Hat Fits

Reprinted from the McGill Daily

We've heard complaints already !

Some people seem to think it unfair that The Daily should expect candidates for top student posts to know about the major issues and problems of the Students' Society. After all, they haven't been in office yet!

We feel that if a candidate does not have sufficient knowledge of student affairs to form an intelligent opinion on such questions as finance problems, Federal Aid, or McGill's policy towards NFCUS, he has no business running for office. We feel that these are problems on which a candidate must form an opinion, and those who will vote for him have the right to know what this opinion is.

To say that it is impossible to find out about student problems when not in office is blatant nonsense. The information is there for those students with interest to look at it.

In asking candidates questions on specific issues, we hope to ensure that their platforms say something. We hope to encourage those running to make their stand clear, rather than masking it in a veil of meaningless words.

It is high time that candidates for our student posts realized that there is more to winning an election than plastering one's picture around the campus, and allowing a string of platitudes to be strung after one's name. They must have opinions; let's hear them.

Three Masthead Resignations

The three masthead resignations printed below were not printed in Tuesday's issue because of shortage of space.

Editors:

Since I consider the action and decision arrived at by the Students' Administrative Council at their last meeting a clear vote of no confidence in the present staff of The Varsity, and since the President of the Council has stated in a letter to The Varsity that "it is my feeling that our undergraduate daily this year has not been of such a quality that we need seriously be concerned if we should lose a few members of the present staff", I feel that, as a paid employee of the Council, I must resign as Managing Editor.

In no way do I wish my resignation ot be considered as a lack of confidence in or support of the present editors and I intend to work on as many of the remaining issues of The Varsity as they wish to publish.

Elinor Bernstein,
Managing Editor.

Editors:

In short, I resign. Seems to me that if our employers think we have done a lousy job we are taking students' money under the false pretence that we are capable of handling our masthead position. Thus I quit.

The last lad who quit, by name of Bacon waltzed out and left the news staff in the position of a ball team without a pitcher. Bacon is one of Batten's supporters. I want no part of such chicanerous behaviour. Thus anything I can do for you as a CUP writer, head writer or copy boy I shall do.

Thank you for the privilege of working on your paper and give my best to the SAC.

F. E. ROSS,
CUP Editor.

Editors:

Please accept my resignation, effective immediately.

My action is prompted in protest, not of the unfortunate decision made by the SAC last Wednesday, but of the methods used in reaching it and of the reasoning which was used. Both were the product of illogical thinking.

I do not feel that I could remain in the employ of an organization which feels that I am not capable enough for them.

If the SAC feels that the logical criterion of experience is not important in producing a newspaper, let them. Personally, I don't want to be around for the funeral.

Staffers Get Varsity Pins For Labour

One cannot wear a by-line nor a word of praise from a department head of The Varsity on one's lapel. In order that a dozen or so persons who have worked consistently and have shown outstanding effort on the paper may have something more tangible, each March the SAC awards them pins.

They are awarded on the recommendations of the department heads of The Varsity.

The pin bears a blue V on a white porcelain background and has "The Varsity — The Undergraduate Newspaper" inscribed around the edge. Superimposed on the pin, between the arms of the V is the crest of the University of Toronto.

When the award was inaugurated in 1938 by the Publications Commission of the SAC, the recipient was given only the privilege of buying his pin. Then about seven years ago, the SAC took over the payment for the pins. Anyone on The Varsity staff is eligible for a pin.

The Varsity pin is now a familiar sight on the Canadian and International News scene. Ian Montagnes at Reuters in London, Ralph Wintrob, the Toronto Telegram's correspondent in London, Frank Moritsugu and Jack Gray of Macleans, Norman DePoe, news roundup editor for CBC, Mark Harrison of the Daily Star and Wayne and Shuster of radio fame are among the wearers of The Varsity Pin.

AVR Is Shelved Again This Year

The All-Varsity Revue has been shelved for another year. In accordance with a recommendation handed down by the AVR Investigation Committee last night's meeting of the Students' Council voted down an all-campus show for next year.

The decision came as a result of the committee's conclusion that none of the applicants for producer or director could make the show a financial success.

Ian Finnan and David Smith of Engineering had applied as producer and diretcor. The other applicants, all from UC, also applied as a team, and both were interviewed by the Committee. They were Norman Griesdorf, producer —to handle finances and publicity, Gerald Reding, co-producer — in charge of music, and Leon Major as director.

Both teams wished to confine participation to campus talent with the possible exception of a professional choreographer, the report said. Finnan produced Skule night last year and will do the show next year if he is not working on the AVR, Bill Deeks, SPS rep. said.

"The decision of the SAC not to have the AVR next year is a serious blow to the unity of the campus", Griesdorf told The Varsity after the meeting. He said the absence of an All-Varsity musical production for two successive years makes the probability of any future venture of this kind exceedingly improbable. "They're stifling outlets on the campus," he claimed.

Although Griesdorf said that his estimated budget was approximately 2,000 dolalrs under that of last year's show which made a profit, Finance Commissioner Don Lowe said that 80 percent of Hart House would have to be filled for seven nights to break even. If attendance was any lower, the AVR stood to lose 1,000 dollars, Lowe said.

Earl Berger, UC rep said the Council should overlook minor criticisms to regain continuity in production of the show. "We should support the AVR with slight misgivings so we won't have misgivings again," he said.

The Committee felt that if there was no applicant qualified to produce and direct the show now, the Council could not afford to take the financial risk, Valerie Spence, Vic Rep said.

SAC Is Reprimanded For 'In Camera' Choice Of New Varsity Editor

Several colleges reported through SAC reps that they were either displeased with the SAC's choice of next year's Varsity Editor or with the closed meeting that chose the new editor.

Earl Berger, UC rep reported that the UC Lit would like the SAC know that they disapproved of the SAC choice. He said the Lit thought "it was poor policy on the part of the Council."

Jennifer Rickard, St. Hilda's rep let Council know that the St. Hilda's women were displeased with the closed meeting. Don Lowe reported that Skulemen were quite content both with the closed meeting and with the SAC's choice of an editor.

Liz Scroggie, UC women's rep. admitted rather sheepishly that UC women were displeased both with the closed meeting and with the SAC's choice.

Doug Hamlin, Vic's choice on the SAC, presented three resolutions pertaining to the choice of The Varsity Editor. These resolutions, he thought, should be used as a guide for next year's SAC when choosing the editor in the future.

The resolutions met with considerable opposition from various SAC members. Horace Krever, Law Rep., thought they were useless and unconstitutional. Most people thought Krever was right. Hamlin's resolutions consisted of ways and means of choosing The Varsity's Editors. He recommended that applicant's qualifications be the most important criteria and not whether or not they were the choice of The Varsity staff. He said that candidates not the choice of the Publications Commission should be given a chance to speak before the SAC; finally he thought the candidate's policies toward The Varsity should be considered of primary importance and his qualifications regarding newspaper technique be a major but secondary consideration.

The opinion among most SAC Reps was that Hamlin was a little too, too.

Hamlin also proposed that the price of Torontonensis be included in the fees of all graduating students. Due to the greater sales the price would be reduced from $4.50 to $4.00. Dick Davies, Publications Commissioner said that Simcoe Hall has been unwilling to force students to by Torontonensis, and he did not think their opinion would change.

Britta Fredrickson, POT rep., said that the POT girls passed a resolution asking the SAC to consider the possibility of making Torontonensis a year book for all the students of the University, and that the price of it be also included in the fees. Due to the large circulation she said that the book would cost about $2.30.

Further discussion was postponed until the next meeting of the SAC.

Final Big Whingding Friday For Varsity News Staffers

Members of the Varsity staff are invited to dispose of their multitudinous sorrows at the party to be held Friday night after the year-end banquet. All who have worked on the Varsity this year are invited to attend this last fling before the exams. Information as to time and place may be obtained from any masthead member or senior member of the staff. Come single, come double, or more, but don't miss the last chance.

What's news at Inco?*

Pumping ore through a 7-mile pipe

IF you were asked to transport more than 12,000 tons of ore 7 miles every day, you would not think of using wheelbarrows. You might think of trucks, or you might use trains, as we did for many years, but that would require 400 big railway cars per day.

Inco engineers came up with a plan to separate the ore at the mine-head into two products—valuable material (concentrate), and waste rock (tailings). The concentrate is pumped 7 miles through wood stave pipes to the Copper Cliff smelter. The waste material is pumped 4 miles to waste beds.

Why pump the waste so far? Because we must not fill up valuable lakes and streams.

This new transportation has helped make it possible to mine low grade ore. It has saved trouble too. These materials in ore cars would freeze solid in the sub-zero temperatures of this district. Freezing has not occurred in these B.C. fir lines since they were first put in operation.

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book fully illustrated, will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

Characters, Anyone?

Year Of Political Pills, Panties, Pranks, 'Progressives', Prizes

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

This story presents the highlights of the news events on the campus this year. It would appear that Varsity students took no particular heed of President Smith's request for more "characters", as this story will probably amply prove.

VACATIONING IN FLORIDA

The influence of McCarthyism in the United States was felt very strongly after Christmas when two Varsity students, Ted Rogers is a member of the Campus Pro-Forestry, were stopped in Florida while on their way back to school after vacationing in the Bahamas. They were detained by immigration authorities for a few days as they were suspected of Communist affiliation.

The case backfired in the face of the American Immigration officials as tremendous support was mustered for the two students. Some students from the University even took time out to picket the US consulate here in Toronto. The case was made even more ridiculous as Rogers is a member of the Campus Progressive Conservative Club.

At the same time it was announced that Roger Bull, IV UC, had been chosen as one of Ontario's Rhodes Scholars. The other genius was a student from Queen's.

SAC FAN CLUB

The Students' Administrative Council went out on the limb on several occasions. The most important of these, as far as an important part of this campus is concerned, was their selection of next year's Varsity Editor. The choice of a non-Varsity man in Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds, almost started an insurrection in The Varsity office. Several Masthead members resigned over the choice and others will not come back to serve on The Varsity next year. The SAC felt that The Varsity needed a shot in the arm and new blood was the logical method of bringing this about. As it is now, old blood will be almost completely lacking on the paper next year.

A more popular action of the SAC was the attempt to bring back the All Varsity Revue. A plan is under consideration at present to bring back the AVR next year, after one year's absence, provided there is sufficient support from potential talented people.

LINGERIE DEPARTMENT

During the fall term, garment stores dealing in certain specialized female articles of apparel did a booming business. For this they have the Engineers to thank. For a short time in the fall there was a rush on panty raids. The victims were the female inmates of Whitney Hall and Annesley Hall. Besides these shenanigans the Skulemen were accused of one or two abductions, some plaque stealing, some fine art on several of the fences surrounding new construction on the campus, and also they were credited with aiding and abetting the disappearance of the cornerstone of UC's new residence.

On the credit side for the engineers: one engineer almost blew himself up with a home-made bomb at a football game; the United Kingdom Government presented Skule with two demonstration jet engines, and finally the engineers had a successful afternoon last fall when they made the Vic Bob Apple into an inter-faculty rather than an inter-mural activity.

Also to the credit of the engineers was their miserable showing in the Chariot Races. Although the engineers were favorites at the local bookmakers before race time, the strong Varsity entry carried away the trophy.

APPEAL FOR MORE CHARACTERS

President Smith's appeal for more "characters" in and around the campus met with a spontaneous reaction from various groups around the campus. The Engineers lived up to their reputation, but the other colleges and faculties about the campus did their share.

Vic and Trinity carried on a private feud for a few weeks that involved some archaic furniture, a demolished room in Trinity, and two abductions; Wycliffe and Trinity bricked each other up one night; the Medsmen in an effort to publicize Daffydil raised a bedsheet up the flagpole in front of Hart House. It cost the University $30 to get the sheet back down. BUT the kibitz to end all kibitzes was when a Whitney Hall inmate left her iron on and gave some of her fellow inmates a few anxious moments.

DIRTY POLITICS

College politics took a turn for the worse this year. In the Mock Parliament Elections there were several instances of shady political dealings. The Independent Progressive Association, a party made up of political non-conformists made an unsuccessful attempt to get representation in the Parliament for their members. However as it turned out other independent thinkers were granted the alloted seats over the fierce protests of the members of the IPA.

Again in the Hart House elections charges of dirty politicking were levelled against some of the candidates for the House Committee. The rub was that the three candidates gave out, on election day, a slate of candidates to vote for, that was identical with a slate handed out by an engineering group but for the substitution of three names. Oddly enough the three names inserted were the names of the candidates giving out the leaflets.

MISCELLANEOUS

The University has a new Chancellor this year. In place of our Governor General, Chancellor Beatty took over at the start of the school year.

Enrollment dropped again this year. This was felt in attendance at football games which was also down this year and in the reduction in the SAC budget. This budget cut resulted in fewer issues, as well as more four-page issues of The Varsity this year.

The recommendations of the Massey Report with regard to university scholarships were given unanimous support by all the campi organizations. The engineers took some prodding but they eventually came through. The University Law School continued its campaign for equality with Osgoode Hall. Student apathy seemed to increase. Both instances of this were felt in UC. This may be significant. Hart House meal prices went up. Hart House furniture became more modern. Hart House lost some more of its male exclusiveness as females made further inroads into this male sanctuary.

SAC Speaks Of Mice And Men Puts In Two Hours With God

By BOB BROWN

One of the most controversial issues to face this year's SAC was the discrimination charge levelled against SAC's Employment Service by Daniel Hill, a Negro graduate student.

After considerable discussion, SAC appointed a committee to investigate the charges. The committee reported that Mr. Halse, manager of the local employment service, had been guilty if inefficiency and illegal actions, but not discrimination.

However, the SAC considered other things during the year besides Campus Civil Liberties. The Council acts as the general managing board for a host of student services and activities. The student Housing Service, the Debating Union, World University Service, the Student Book Exchange and Torontonensis.

Local Deity ?

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods. They kill us for their sport.

Kink Lear

In January, an SAC-sponsored blood campaign succeeded in raising buckets of much needed blood for the Red Cross anti-polio campaign due chiefly to the efforts of the SAC Nursing Rep. Helen Blott.

Another highly controversial issue that was raised during the year was the question of student aid to striking miners in Northern Ontario. The SAC expressed official sympathy for the miners' plight, but said that it could not recommend a Student-Tag day for the benefit of the miners because of "Political overtones."

Horace Kreever, SAC Law Rep, dumped another hot potato into Council laps when he charged that the University Administration was causing unnecessary hardship to some students by withholding the payment of scholarships and bursaries until all student fees are paid. Krever stated that the University was dictating to the donors and beneficiaries of the awards how and when the awards should be spent. SAC decided to call a Caput Liaison Committee Meeting to investigate the matter.

SAC and The Varsity did not get along well this year. Several Council Reps expressed the opinion that The Varsity was being unduly critical of SAC and its activities, and was attempting to be too "sensational."

The controversy came to a head over the selection of the new Varsity Editor. The SAC rejected the unanimous recommendations of the Publications Commission, the present Editors, and the staff vote, and chose Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds, a non-staffer, as Editor for 1954-55. This decision, reached in an unprecedented closed meeting, resulted in the resignation of the Publications Commissioner, Horace Kreever; a one-day strike and several resignations by Varsity staffers; and scathing criticism of the Council's action in The Varsity and college societies.

Varsity Editors and staffers alike regarded the SAC move as a deliberate attempt to break the editorial continuity of the paper, and to muzzle criticisms of the Council.

The SAC consists of 24 representatives from the various faculty and college societies. Council reps are usually elected at the same time as the officers of the college societies, and generally speaking the post is not considered to be of primary importance to the sectional attitude of the college or faculty.

The SAC reps, once elected, owe little effective responsibility to the students they represent because students are usually remarkably indifferent to the great variety of SAC activities. SAC reps therefore are rarely questioned by their constituents, and a mandate are a usual occurrence.

On the SAC, as on the campus, there is a definite lack of interest in and knowledge of university-wide or broader problems. It is far easier to point this out than to suggest a remedy for it.

However, although much honest effort is put forth by individual SAC reps, and good intentions are as common (and as useful) as dirt, Responsible Government has not yet arrived on the U of T campus.

Hi-jacking Hi-jinx

These happy Vic types are returning in triumph from UC carrying the Vic Speaker's Chair. This was one of the events in the rash of hi-jacking high-jinxs which broke out last fall, involving UC, Trinity, Vic, SPS, and Wycliffe. Plaque-purloining, panty-raids, and brick-laying were a few of the highlights in the epidemic of inter-college skirmishes.

Fire Bugs At Vic "Shed Light" On Inflamed American Senator

The Pyromaniacs from Victoria College made the biggest news on the campus this year. The members of the Victoria College Senator McCarthy Fan Club made headlines all over the world by burning their favorite American Senator in effigy on the Victoria College Field late one Sunday night in the month of November.

The semi-spontaneous action was a result of the anti-McCarthy sentiment that was gradually building itself up on the campus until it burst out in the form of the action taken by the 65 Vic arsonists.

As a result of the burning the University of Toronto received both notoriety and compliments from various people around the world. American received the news with mixed feelings. The New York Times greeted the news as a good omen as to how Canadians feel about McCarthy. One student from New England thought it was a heinous crime to treat their favorite senator in such a rough manner. Other Americans asked us how we would feel if they burned an effigy of Canada's "pink-tinted" Mike Pearson.

In Canada the severest criticism came from Frank Tumpane of the Globe and Mail who thought that the Vic Students displayed in their action an insolence and immaturity that usually is attributed to "half-baked kids." Tumpane also objected to the garb of the students which he associated with "Jim Crow intolerance, religious bigotry, boll-weevil decadence, and depraved mumbo-jumbo."

John Blackmore of the Social Credit party accused the professors of the University of "brain-washing." He said that the effigy-burning was a direct result of the political indoctrination of students by their professors.

Student opinion on the campus was rather poorly expressed. Letters received by The Varsity were few and far between and expressed both pro and con. It seemed as if most students though it was a big joke.

CUP vs FLASH

All Burned Up

By FRED ROSS

Vancouver to St. Johns. (CUP) — Why read the New York Times, the London Economist, Flash or Wow comics? Whatever it is you want in journalistic stimulation can be found in the daily or weekly spasmodic production of Canadian university students.

This year the score reads something like this. There were two effigies burned, two hung, one Free Love Club formed and subsequently disbanded, one paper called illiterate and one phantom movie star, Winnipeg variety, imported to Saskatoon.

We've had beauty contests, editorial resignations, kidnapped engineers and panty raids. We've had blood campaigns, Red Feather campaigns and without exception each paper has campaigned for more unpaid help.

Letters to the editor flow thick and fast to every paper across the country and although it was a long time ago, I think I can actually remember one particular letter, back in October, which patted the paper on the back.

One of the most interesting sidelights of CUP editing is to read two reports of one sporting attraction. The story of any close or crucial game in the two papers concerned bears approximately the same similarity as the tale of the War of 1812 in the Canadian and American history books.

In general, the Canadian student papers showed two clear trends. First, President Smith's "characters" are disappearing and when they do rouse themselves, disapproval is their only reward.

Secondly, there is a definite avowal of the principles of academic freedom and a sincere core of opposition against the McCarthy bogey. Naturally some papers have gone farther than others, but all have deplored the methods of the communist-hunting senator.

For what it is worth, those who govern our country and those who watch with anxiety the attitudes and action this country uses, might well note this. If the college newspapers are representative of young Canada's thinking, we stand rather firmly opposed to the Wisconsin senator, closed tribunals, and the firing of professors and reputation-smearing.

In fact, we don't even mind burning effigies. It seems we rather enjoy it.

UC Birthday Is Highlighted By "Masque"

By AUBREY GOLDEN

The week-end beginning on Friday, October 16, 1954 was a big one for this campus, but it was one in a hundred years for University College.

On Friday, October 16, The Varsity came out with a pink front page. It talked of "The Gay Nineties" and "Ghosts and Gargoyles" and was htadlined "UC Hits a hundred."

Opposite his picture, Principal Jeanneret of UC wrote, "For one hundred years University College has sought to keep faith with its founders, to be a college with a university spirit, a community of teachers and students dedicated to ideals of higher learning."

The girls who didn't attend the Centennial Ball but stayed in Whitney Hall will remember the hundredth birthday of UC well, for when the pep rally broke up on Friday night the engineers made the residence one of their ports of call.

The new men's residence was an important innovation. Timed to coincide with the centennial year, the cornerstone was laid on Friday by His Excellency, the Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey.

The centennial also gave rise to more serious works. Edited by Dean Bissel, "University College, A Portrait" went on sale at the bookstore and in UC itself. It was written by both undergraduates and faculty and was illustrated by a UC grad.

The graduates who returned were pleased to see the Croft Chapter House exhibit of interesting pictures and articles, compiled by Prof. Haynes of the UC German Dept.

Prof. Finch wrote and directed a "Centennial Masque" especially for the occasion. Well received by the critics and playing to sell-out audiences it ran for two performances on Saturday evening.

To Stay In Means To Pay NFCUS Remains Problem

By MIKE ERDEI

To stay or not to stay? To pay, or not to pay? These were the important issues facing Toronto students about the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) this year.

The Federation held two conferences, a National one in Montreal in the fall, and a regional conference in Hamilton in January. In Montreal NFCUS decided to increase student fees to 50 cents. Eleven universities, including Toronto, agreed to pay this increase, and nine refused.

After the Montreal conference there were heated discussions in all the faculty and college councils whether NFCUS was a worthwhile organization or not. The SAC engineering and Law dissenting, reversed the Toronto stand on the fee increase NFCUS rejected a proposal to become an Associate member of the Communist-dominated International Union of Students (IUS), but empowered the executive to investigate the possibility of a qualified relationship with IUS. The Toronto delegates were the only ones to vote against this motion, more because of its tone than it content.

The NFCUS delegates then agreed to exchange information with the Spanish University Syndicate (SEU), although they did not in any way approve of the organization or structural policy of the Union.

The conference appointed the first full-time salaried President of NFCUS, Tony Enriquez. He gave up his studies at the University of Ottawa for one year, and visited all the Canadian Universities, including Toronto.

Toronto was mandated to run the NFCUS Art competition, and Bishops and Carleton Colleges were mandated for the Short Story Contest.

Rosewood Trays From India Provide Seminar And Gifts

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

The WUS "Treasure Van", held in Hart House in December, again helped to solve many a student's Christmas gift problems, and incidentally rasied a gross of approximately $5,100, in Toronto alone. On the national scale the van made just over $47,000, nearly $6,000 more than last year. The money will be used to further the World University Service's international programme.

The sale travelled from coast to coast with two voluntary workers, Mrs. E. Mylvaney and Mr. J. Walker. The Van was televised over station CBLT, with some of the priceless Indian Art treasures, which were not for sale.

Carved ivory, dainty filigree earrings, scarves, velvet purses, jingling brass bells, and elephant feet made into umbrella stands delighted the hearts of weary shoppers. There was a good supply of the ever-popular manchadi, small red seeds from the pods of the manchadi tree. The craftsmen of Travancore carve miniature elephants out of ivory chips and set them into the seeds, carving a top to complete the charm. To own a seed is said to be "ten times God's good luck." The sale included rosewood trays from Mysore, Bidri work (metal with silver inlay) from Hyderabad, table-cloths from Joora, suede from Bombay and oils and water colours by the Raj brothers of Jvi

The WUS, which has its headquarter in Geneva has national committees in 23 countries. Last year $4,600 was raised on the Toronto campus, which helped to send Elizabeth Scroggie (IV UC), Tim Armstrong (IV Vic), Mike Chubb (III Forestry), John Hastings to the Seminar, held in Mysore, India, last summer. About thirty Canadidans, at least as many Indians, and a sprinkling of American and Europeans discussed "The Human Implications of Development Planning."

The conference lasted for about five weeks, and was followed by study tours in India, Pakistand, Burma, Malaya and Indonesia. The students studied the Colombo Plan, and the Point IV Technical Assistance projects. They also visited a number of universities in India and Pakistan.

The seminar was made possible by a $40,900 grant from the Ford Foundation in New York, the same from WUS, and some provincial grants. The students paid their travelling expenses in India, and the Indians provided the hospitality, and organized the seminar.

Bastion Of Masculinity Bent Before Sex Topic

By TOM VIRANY

Sex ran rampant in Hart House debating this year. Although debate are usually stag, the sign on the washroom door said LADIES once, when Oshawan females invaded a debate, without advance notice.

They were not invited, however, to the debate which heard the Honorary visitor Professor H. M. McLuhan, define sex as "mechanical copulation." Although Sex conventions were resolved to constitute an undesirable limitation on members of society, they were held to be of divine origin by one of the debaters. Another one declared that the French and the Belgians were his allies. He did not think much of sex conventions.

He was told though, that without sex conventions there would be sex relations on every corner.

Debaters also decided in Hart House that the chequebook has replaced the textbook. A distinguished scholar, Dr. A. W. Trueman, former president of the University of New Brunswick implied that he didn't care too much. He said he didn't think much of textbooks, and had only meagre Professor Bagnani went all the aquaintance with chequebooks, way when he told the House that most chequebooks were written far better than most textbooks, anyway.

A motion of confidence in the Liberals was passed in Hart House, when they rejected the motion that "no party deserved the approval of the Canadian electorate." The Editor of the Montreal Star made the prediction that "The day is bound to come when the Liberals, worn with office, will start to make the blunders which in tradition it has been the privilege of the Conservatives to make."

"The Canadian electorate supported the Liberals in the last election", said Lowler Louden, III Meds, "not because they approved, but because they were afraid of the alternatives".

Probably for the first time in the history of the House, a debater proposed to the Speaker during the course of a debate. The debater, who advocated early marriage, said " . . . Mr. Speaker, I therefore suggest that we get married soon". Whereupon Horace Krever, III Law, the Speaker, replied: "I would like to remind the honorable member that he is hardly my type".

Short Campaign Stressed Gives SHARE Advantage

SHARE this year collected $5,000, more than in any previous campaign, announced vice-chairman Barry Cooke. The committee concentrated more on the short campaign in the faculties and less on special events to raise the money.

Trinity, however, held an auction which brought in $364.20 from the sale of St. Hilda's freshie, champagne, beer, an old-fashioned wind-up gramophone and even a carton of books!

Over $400 was raised in the fall by the parking campaign. The SAC granted permission to SHARE to use various suitable parking lots around the campus and to sell the space to people taking cars to the football games.

Further money raising activities were the sale of tickets to the Eaton Auditorium concert of the Helsinki University Choir, and the SHARE dinner.

The money from the U of T collection for SHARE went towards the building of the Delhi University Health Centre in India. This centre will be built to serve 8,000 students and will be a model for the development of similar health centres in other parts of India.

Social Credit Theories And Practice Explained By Professor MacPherson

Social Credit was given a thorough going over yesterday at the Political Economy Club as Professor C. B. MacPherson of the Political Science Club outlined the proposed policies of the Social Credit Club.

Professor MacPherson, who has written a book on the Social Credit Party in Alberta, entitled "Democracy in Canada", outlined the theory behind the Social Credit Party. He spent most of his time proving the misconceptions behind the party's theory.

He said the Social Credit party appeals to people who are anti-socialist, and small business men. The party promises a new social order based on free enterprise, no interference to private capital, and also offers a looser credit system.

It contends that our present technological development is "not tapped due to restrictions imposed by our present financial system. Natural resources should provide our needs with only 3-4 hours work a day per person and at this rate we could be 40 times more productive. But our present potential is not realized due to the lack of credit," he said.

Unfortunately, he said, the party also appeals to monopolists and financiers whom it is directed against. These feel they can direct political support away from the CCF by substituting Social Credit's radical appeal.

He outlined the proposed government of the Social Creditors. It would consist of a staff of experts that actually run the government. These are responsible to elected delegates that serve as a sounding board for popular feeling amongst the electorate.

Since the Social Credit has been in power in Alberta they have done nothing to bring in their party platform. In fact, said MacPherson, they no longer mention them in Alberta. Federal Social Creditors still spout the Social Credit thory, but this is only for publicity purposes.

Varsity Is Expanding

By CAROL HOFFMAN

Buildings have been going up all over the campus this year. Schools and residences have been moving around, as well.

Last year the Best Institute was completed and this fall it was officially opened, as a centre of medical research. The new School of Nursing, that modern-looking building on the corner of Russell and St. George Sts., was declared open this fall by Dr. Mackinnon Phillips, the Minister of Health for Ontario. After twenty years on Queen's Park Ave., the nurses have moved near the heart of the campus.

The newest addition to the campus this year was the Faculty of Pharmacy. The former School of Pharmacy, though still located at some distance from the campus (Gerrard and Church streets), has officially become part of the University of Toronto.

Despite a feud with the Ratepayers Association, the Blatz Institute of Child Study finally moved into its new quarters at 45 Walmer Rd. The feud brought forth the suggestion that the Institute be located in President Smith's present quarters, and brought Mayor Lamport personally to the defence of the University. The Department of Psychology has taken over the old home of the Blatz Institute.

Two colleges have celebrated centennials recently: St. Michael's College last year and University College this year. Last spring the work started on St. Mike's Centennial Building, a building to celebrate the centenary, which will be used for general college activities.

The men of University College are finally getting a home. This fall the cornerstone of the new residence was laid by the Governor-General. The laying of the stone commemorated the College's one hundredth anniversary. Until the residence is completed, the displaced men of 73 St. George are living in the former School of Nursing residence, at 85 Grenville (the School of Nursing students having moved to Hutton House, a UC women's residence).

As well as the cornerstone for the UC residence, two other buildings had their cornerstones "well and truly laid". In fact, Trinity College Chapel had its cornerstone laid twice. Officially one Sunday morning, the historic silver trowel used by Bishop Strachan in 1851 was used to officially spread the mortar of the Chapel. However, the night before, after the annual Trinity Grad dance, some enthusiastic students did some previous brick work of their own, and left a sign, "We declare this stone to be "well and truly laid at twelve-thirty a.m."

The new wing of the library also had its cornerstone laid. Dr. Sigmund Samuel the chief contributor towards the funds for the construction, performed the task in October. The library is well on its way to completion and will be ready for use, it is hoped, in September.

Another institution was opened on the campus. A telephone booth "located in the heart of the campus", was opened for the convenience of students. A cornerstone was not laid.

Mac Staying Out Directors Decide

The intercollegiate football hassle was finally settled Saturday after almost two month of confusion. McGill finally decided to reconsider their support of the ousted McMaster entry and throw in their lot with Western, Varsity and Queen's in the four-team setup of 1952.

McGill had dissented in the original vote of Jan. 20 in which Western, Varsity and Queen's decided to remove the McMaster team which had been admitted for the 1953 season. The Montreal school felt the ouster was unconstitutional since it was not a unanimous vote. However, the three colleges stood firm on their decision not to play McMaster. The four athletic directors met in Kingston last week to discuss the matter and it was decided to give McGill until Saturday to decide whether they would be in the league or not. Western, Varsity and Queen's wired McGill Saturday that they would not change their minds.

But when McMaster wired McGill to the effect that they should go ahead in the league rather than disrupt intercollegiate football, McGill decided to return to the four-team setup.

Each school will play home-and-home series with each of the other clubs this fall. McMaster determined to continue in senior football, will card an exhibition schedule which is expected to include a two-game series with Varsity Blues.

Final UC Parliament Suggests It Takes Two

"Resolved: that it takes two" will be the topic for debate at the final UC parliament of the year, to be held in the Junior Common Room of University College this afternoon at 4 p.m. Traditional special events in connection with the final parliament will also take place.

Speaking for the motion will be Tom Daly, III UC, and Charlotte Holmes, IV UC. In connection with the topic Daly stated yesterday, "I feel that the cultures of the Aryan civilizations and the metaphysical implications of contemporary art leave one no choice but to choose a dualistic philosophy."

Earl Berger, IV UC, and Margaret Fowler, III UC, speaking for the opposition, said that "the resolution is so fallacious that while it could obviously be refuted by one, it would take two to uphold it."

In addition to the lighter debate topic, features will include the traditional presentation of honors by the Governor-General of the Parliament to those who "have made contributions beyond the call of duty, i.e., mere attendance".

H. H. Debaters To Question UN Success

The final Hart House debate for this year will be held next Tuesday evening. At 8:00 p.m. in the Hart House Debates room, the United Nations will be under full-scale attack.

"Resolved that the UN has failed" is the topic facing the Hart House debaters. David Gauthier, IV UC, and Stan Schiff, I Law, will deplore the attempts of the United Nations, while Vern Turner, Grad studies, and John Douglas, I Vic, will attempt to uphold them.

The Honorable Paul Martin, Minister of National Health and Welfare for Canada will be the last Honorary Visitor to a Hart House debate this year. The Speaker of the House this time will be Lowler Louden, III Meds.

Veterinary To Lecture

Dr. T. L. Jones, Principal of the Ontario Veterinary College, Guelph, will be the guest speaker at the meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute, on Saturday evening, March 13, at 8:15, in Convocation Hall. Dr. Jones will speak on the subject "Advances in Veterinary Medicine" and will illustrate his lecture with motion pictures. The meeting will be open to the public.

'53 — Varsity Pho

Student stunts and campus activities kept Varsity photographers on their toes almost all year. They caught almost everything, including steeple-jacks on flag poles, parties on football trains, and snowmen in front of a Vic residence.

Above, left to right, we have the proud snow sculptors with their masterpiece, and next to it a scene on the McGill train. The Queen's game at Toronto found this old model car parked on the museum lawn, and top right, President Smith laughs heartily at the collection of characters this university produced this year.

o Flashbacks — '54

fall were the cornerstone layings, such as the Sigmund Samuel library here, though "Miss Sports Desk" wasn't really there to help.

Trinity Frosh made news when they defeated the Sophs in the annual cake fight, and all the colleges and Faculties made light of swiping chairs, engineering here, and plaques from other schools. Effigy burning, picture of the year, made the New York Times, and flag pole climbing gave the Daffydil Night publicity.

WITH TOM JONES

UC Music Club Returns

One does not expect great voices in a college operetta, but one does expect them to keep in tune. Tom Jones, produced by the University College Music club at Harbord Collegiate last Thursday and Friday did not live up to expectations.

The costumes and staging of Tom Jones were very well done. The costumes were attractive, with clever variations on a basic design. The groupings especially of the chorus, were balanced and fluid; at no time did they show the usual awkwardness of amateur chorus groupings.

The operetta itself, as far as one could judge, is not outstanding. Anyone that came expecting a touch of the vitality of Fielding's Tom Jones would be sadly disappointed. The only obvious resemblance to the novel is that both are distinctly on the long side. Tom Jones the operetta gives an impression of outdated, Edwardian simpering drooppiness.

As far as acting went, Patricia Riley, as the maid Honour, and Landry Stone as Benjamin Partridge were outstanding. Honour was pert and amusing, and moved with grace on the stage. Partridge was very smooth and cocky as the barber, even though the operetta seemed more Partridge than anything else. The best comedy touches were given by Gregory, Grizzle, and Dobbin (Jim Wood, Ronald Evans and Ross Prince) as Squire Western's servants.

In other words, all the successful parts of the operetta were those comic ones which took some acting ability, and which the singing could not mar appreciably. However, the UC Music club put on their operetta this year after a break in the year to year continuity, and if they build up their staff over the next few years, there will probably be a marked improvement.

A MIXTURE

At The Art Galleries

CURRENT SHOWS

Harold Town is enjoying some popularity in local galeries. One of the "Painters 11" at the Roberts Gallery, he has just opened a show at the Victoria College Alumni Hall and has a set of lithographthings lingering on at the Picture Loan Society.

His contributions to the "Painters 11" show seemed large, uncomfortable and red. The Picture Loan "lithographs" unusual in technique and effect, were completely liberated from any objective relation to reality, displayed great freedom and energy, useful exercises for artist and his public. The Vic Alumni Hall show contains a wildly varied selection of Town's drawings and paintings, sufficiently diverse to make me wonder what he is after. However, his apparent love of experiment may lead him in future to something more commanding.

The graduate show at Hart House contains a discouraging number of muddy horrors. Generally much inferior to the displays of undergraduate effort this year, the show contains several paintings of outstanding merit. Cecil Henry has contributed some competent portraits. A. H. Lacey's landscapes are pleasant. J. N. P. Hume noted for his amused approach to physics is the only man in the show with any strong idea of what he is after, and with the technique to achieve something of his purpose.

Paraskeva Clark and Carl Schaefer take over from the Ontario Society of Artists at the Art Gallery of Toronto after March 26.

Les Lawrence.

TORONTO ART GALLERY

There are several quite interesting exhibitions currently showing at the Galleries. From the permanent collection there is a group entitled Victorian Canada. Most of these will be familiar, but they are worth seeing, especialty for the comparison with contemporary French impressionists. Then, also from the permanent collection, there is the gallery devoted to modern Canadian and European Painting, including a few additions. Again very interesting.

Of greater value and certainly more impressive from some points of view, is the J. Sydney Hallam Memorial Exhibition. Hallam shows a remarkable versatility in subject and expression and seems to be equally at home in every field. Those pictures which have a sentimental nature are redeemed, if this is necessary, by the competence in technique, while in his more 'modern' works he shows a vigorous and original personality. But above all he gives the impression of being a happy man. His death is a loss to Canadian Art.

The main attraction, however, is the eighty-second Annual Exhibition of the Ontario Society of Artists, with a very nice catalogue to show you the prices. The latter are extraordinary. The paintings themselves are on the whole a disappointment. The Special Section this year was devoted to "Fine Art From The Commonplace", the subjects being chosen from the woodshed or the kitchen.

The "Special Section" last year was devoted to a study of a cane chair. That was very successful

WHAT A HOPE

College Shows

By MARY BURBIDGE

The result of this year's crop of college shows is a distinct impression that they are a waste of money, time and effort. This goes for all of them, from Daffydil, which is traditionally good, to the UC ex-Follies which is traditionally bad.

For one thing, all of the shows except Daffydil, and possibly Skule Nite, have something of a problem in filling Hart House Theatre for their run. They might as well realize that they can't hope to attract more than an infinitesimal part of their audience from any but their home faculty.

It seems to me that these shows would be more successful if they were produced on a less ambitious scale and put on in their own colleges (Daffydil excepted, since it fills Hart House Theatre for five nights each year). They would have to be much less elaborate, it is true, but might break even financially and would get more genuine college support.

If this plan were followed all the college show enthusiasts on the campus could unite to produce a bigger and better AVR, which would not be just another college show, slightly professionalized. The AVR itself would probably get larger audiences.

There have only been two operettas on the campus this year: Vic's Patience, and UC's Tom Jones. I am tempted to think that the Tom Jones and Where On Earth enthusiasts should have pooled their resources for one production. Surely the hort and long-haired types could have reached some kind of compromise in their selection. Patience, which had a long tradition of Vic Gilbert and Sullivan operettas behind it, was very successful. The idea of an all-Varsity operetta is.

There is one indisputable fact about colleges shows: the more you see of them, the worse they seem.

All's Well That Ends Well

By WENDY MICHENER

Like March we came in like a lion, a young lion, happily unsuspecting the dangers and difficulties of criticising the musical animal world; like March we will now make a lamb-like exit. It is rather presumptuous to try to sum up the university game of musical chairs and the game beyond the Ivory Tower which is not yet played out, or to seek to find trends in one short year of musical activity. Having said this much, we'll try anyway.

art, music and drama

HART HOUSE . . .

This year's democratically elected Hart House Music Committee did a very creditable job of organising both the Sunday Evening Concert and the Wednesday 5 o'clock series. In the former, the committee provided eight evenings of high artistic merit, of which we particularly enjoyed the Conservatory's presentation of Menotti's The Old Maid and the Thief, Perry Oboeman in a woodwind trio and the greatly improved HH Glee Club. In connection with this series, we might reiterate a plea that we have heard from many female students who have had to miss concerts because a young man's fancy did not happen to light upon them that week: could they be admitted by themselves as they are to the Wednesday 5 o'clocks?

The latter have brought into the limelight several young artists deserving to be heard, providing them with an audience and students with entertainment. The soloists, predominantly singers and stringers, often turned what started out to be a light, intimate, just-before-dinner affair into heavier, less digestible fare than the evening series, by their ambition to exhibit their powers in demanding works. The intimate atmosphere is well maintained in the music room by placing the artists in the centre of the room and having the audience on either side. However, this does not work so well acoustically; the balance of the sound goes to the south end, whereas the north end gets a predominance of accompanist with little solo. Maybe one of their engineers has a solution to the problem.

COLLEGES . . .

Vic and Trinity in their own respective corners have quietly had their own concerts on the alternative Sundays to the Hart House. There has been a good deal of enthusiasm at Vic, who cordially invites the whole university to attend, with a particularly large turn-out for Eli Spivak, violinist, and Boris Roubakine, pianist. Trinity, consciously or otherwise, has been more isolated, but there appears to have been a fair amount of interest within the college.

UTSO AND CO. . . .

Campus talent has been regimented into the official orchestra and chorus. In an effort to give these organizations a boost the university gave them each a present of a new streamlined conductor. On top of this 'they' have conscripted the people in the music courses into service. The chorus seems to have profited from this arrangement being one of the few choral groups in town with sufficient men. But the orchestra can still look back with green eyes on better days when Convocation Hall was filled with 'thousands turned away'.

OFF-CAMPUS . . .

On the municipal horizon there has been the usual conglomeration of good, bad, and indifferent. Among the good we might mention the improvement in the current TSO which has two outstanding sections in their flute and oboe players. The afternoon series of the Women's Musical Club of Toronto has been presenting first-rate talent, both Canadian and international. Much of the bad in Toronto's music may be attributed to the indifference and ignorance of the average audience and to the lack of healthy musical criticism. Too often good artists have been left high and dry by the Torontonian indifference masking as sophisticated skepticism while widely 'approved' artists receive the jot of indiscriminate enthusiasm.

TORONTO CRITICS

With the exception of the CJBC reviewer, Bill Craig, and John Kraglund of the Globe who from extraneous origins is consistently improving himself, a real critical appreciation has been abandoned in favour of a marketing of plugs for free passes. The AM and D department of The Varsity has tried to align itself with the former, but ours is only presumptous neophyte undergrad opinion.

TWO BOOK REVIEWS

HOLMES AND WATSON

By S. C. Roberts, Oxford University Press, $2.25

Holmes and Watson, a Miscellany, is a collection of essays on the life and career of Sherlock Holmes and also includes essays on Dr. Watson, the Baker Street scene, and two apocryphal Holmes adventures. The book is written in a scholarly and serious manner, with an utterly straight face.

Mr. Roberts discusses Holmes' family background, "'Art in the blood', as he remarked to Watson, 'is liable to take the strangest forms'," his education, and the details of his life as far as they can be discovered. Holmes fans may be interested to know that Holmes described his Practical Handbook of Bee Culture, with some observations on the segregation of the Queen as the magnum opus of his later years.

In the discussion of Holmes' temperament Roberts warns against "the insidious temptation to seek after novelty", and he points out that "Watson's record of his early impressions of Holmes' unconventionality . . . was hasty and not wholly reliable".

One of the most interesting of the essays is on Holmes' attitude to women. Certain playwrights' picture of Holmes as a husband and father are deplored; "in the eyes of serious students of the literature of Baker Street, they are a wholly unworthy tribute to the man who cried "Give me data"; furthermore they tend to obscure the more pressing problems of Molmesian scholarship. Holmes' interest in music is discussed (he was the author of a study on the polyphonic motets of Lassus), and so is his relation to Dr. Johnson.

The second half of the book includes essays on Watson, the Sherlock Holmes Exhibition of 1951, and two Holmes adventures. These stories, Christmas Eve, and The Strange Case of the Megatherium Thefts, have the distinct Sherlock Holmes flavour, even if this flavour is a little weak.

FRAULEIN BO-PEEPER

FRAULEIN BO-PEEPEN, by Dave Morrah, Clarke-Irwin, $1.35.

Dave Morrah, the author of "Fraulein Bo-Peepen and More Tales Mein Grossfader Told", has become well-known for his Pseudo-Teutonic dialogue. Most of his past articles have depended in their entirety on the use of a Germano-English dialect, but Fraulein Bo-Peepen offers more than that, and will stand up on its own merits as a very painless way of killing time. Here the humor relies much more on the unexpected, on purposely changing the ending of stories everybody knows. There is that mischievous glee of the older boy telling the small fry that there is no Santa Claus. The familiar plot is made more amusing by der Englishen Languitcher as Grossfader ben usen van der Unexpecteden Bangund Zoomers on der readerer.

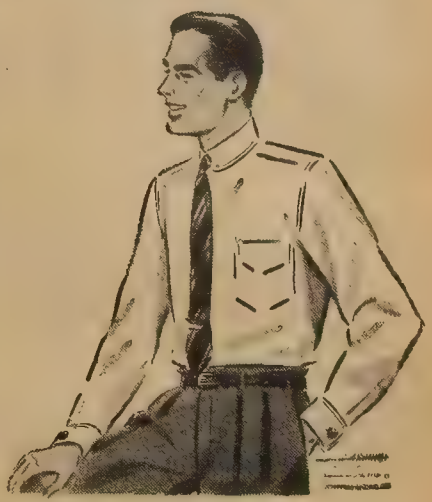
and leads one to question whether this year's rather varied subject was altogether A Good Thing.



In any event very few of the artists took a particularly fresh approach to their task and there was a common lack of order in their compositions. Tom Hodgson has an interesting study of pans hanging on the wall. His use of white in this canvas will be a welcome relief for those who have tired of his red compositions, excellent though they may be. Sydney Watson excels himself in his own particular style, turning out a delightful exercise in utensils. Also very good were Peter Haworth and Alan Collier, the latter turning in a very competent and imaginative study.

The remaining pictures had few duds in their number, but on the other hand there were none ethat were particularly outstanding. Young King and Dead Bird by Gustav Weisman is a hesitant but promising turning to a less abstract composition and has a delicate strength. Ann MacIntosh Duff has a lovely work entitled "Rain" which shows her ability as a water colorist (I apologise for the clumsy phrase) to its fullest.

For the future: those who feel aweary during the early weeks of April may find the Guggenheim collection of Modern Masters very refreshing.

GAY SWAN SONG FOR SPORTS

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

"If you're going to do something, you're crazy if you don't do it as well as you can." That's the hackneyed but logical explanation one of Varsity's most accomplished athletes gave us for his devotion to his chosen sport. What he means is that, since he went to the trouble to turn out for the team, he intends to play the game as well as he possibly can, and to use all the capacity he has for that particular field of endeavour.

In the same vein, one wonders why the University of Toronto goes about winter sports in such a haphazard manner. Since we go to the effort of having basketball and hockey teams, why don't we do a good job of it? Where we could do a great deal for the university, the student body and the athletes concerned, we're content to let Varsity athletics curl up and die at the end of the football season.

Basketball is the worst example of this attitude. Here is a game which exploits team play, intelligence, speed and co-ordination to a greater extent than any other, a sport with tremendous fan potential and more participants right now than any other. And still our intercollegiate representatives are operating at about fifty per cent efficiency. Two things hold us back: (1) facilities, which are unbelievably bad (unbelievable when you see what other universities have) and (2) the competition, on which our team is supposed to develop its game.

It is little short of ridiculous to ask intercollegiate teams to play on the Hart House floor. You could realize that when you saw what happened to top teams like Assumption which were bewildered by the postage stamp they had to play on. It works both ways, too, when the Blues get lost playing on a full-sized court. And, then, you have a big game like the one with Western and the fans are heaped three deep up on the track, craning to get a glimpse of the game. We're hardly coming up with a brand new idea when we say that a field house would solve the problem. Even a floor to be put on the ice in the arena would serve the purpose.

Then, too, it would be senible for the Blues to play a brand of competition similar to that engaged in by Western, for example, who play some very good U.S. teams. Any person will tell you that competition has a great deal to do with the calibre of a team.

But our attitude toward basketball looks downright businesslike compared to the approach to hockey, a game which we don't think enough of to charge students for watching. Hockey is supposedly Canada's own game, despite what you read of Russia's inroads, and yet it is third among team sports on the campus.

Although a new field house is clearly impossible, it is to be hoped that the athletic directors will consider a new basketball floor, perferably in the arena, and a sounder hockey policy. Both could be done with an eventual profit, which makes the hesitation difficult to understand.

Blues Missed A Championship Still Were A Power In League

By MOISHE REITER

Two victories and one championship were gained by the Varsity Basketball Blues last Saturday night when the Seniors defeated the McGill Redmen 74-33 and the Baby Blues won the Intercollegiate title by drubbing the OAVC Aggies 66-48. For both Varsity clubs it was the end of the season.

The strong play of the Junior Varsitys promises a powerful team for the Blues next year. Several Baby Blues have already shown their ability by playing games with the Seniors this past season and have excellent prospects of catching on permanently with the Big Blues come '55.

For Varsity the victory over Mcpionship hopes. Following that de- this same Redmen squad that, back at the season's start when the Blues had won their first two matches easily, humiliated the Varsitys and killed their cham- after winning their next game with the Golden Gaels of Queen's, lost twice more to the Western Mustangs and Assumption's Purple Raiders.

The Blues picked themselves together for their last three games, defeating the Purple Raiders, Mustangs and McGill in order, but it was just for fun.

Playing his first full season in Senior ball, George Stulac became the first Blue in years to join the "300" Club, scoring a total of 312 points through the season. Surprising thing about this feat is that George didn't get more.

Two men leave the Blues for academic reasons this year. The reasons, in this case, are graduation and the victims are Blue captain Bill Corcoran and high-scoring centre Leapin' Lou Lukenda. Lukenda was the dead-eye, hitting well on his one hand jump shot and grabbing rebounds with the best of them, while Corcoran, also a power in pulling down the rebounds, was more of a playmaker and team man. Though there are good men coming up from John McManus' Juniors it will take some time before Bill's and Lou's places are filled adequately. Lou's 29 points against Assumption set a Hart House record.

The Baby Blues lost only one game in their league schedule of pionship hopes. Following that defeat the Blues, before they could regain their balance, lost another to McMaster Mauraders and then, play, that to Western Colts down in London. In the return match at Varsity the Baby Blues rubbed the Colts' noses in the dust and then their victory over the Aggies gave them the title.

For John McManus it was his second championship this year. Earlier his Baby Blue Football team won the Shaw Trophy.

Should anyone want predictions for the coming season, we'll quietly slip away and say only that One-eyed Benny likes the Blues and their Baby brothers.

Intermediate Pucksters Walk Away With Title

Varsity's Intermediate Hockey Team kept up the year's record in Intercollegiate Intermediate competition bringing home a championship, a trophy that has been absent from the campus since the season of 1951.

Playing in a league with O.A.C. and Western, the Baby Blues racked up four wins against no losses, and compiled a total of 34 goals for and only twelve against, to walk away with the title.

As well as their official league, the Seconds engaged in homeand home series with the Ryerson Institute of Technology and Osgoode Hall. Here the team batted .500, splitting contests with each club. The lawyers gave them the most trouble, edging the Intermediates 1-0 near the start of the season, but returning to Varsity Arena later in the year when the Blues turned the tables to in 5-4.

Ryerson gave the Seconds their first loss of the season in the opening game with a 3-2 win. But the Intermediates walloped them 8-0 in the return engagement.

Robillard led the team in the goal-scoring department with eleven tallies during the season. He also collared the individual scoring performance in one game, potting four goals in the league opener against O.A.C. The other members of the first line, Primeau and Fisher, scored six and seven respectively, for a grand total of 24, almost half of the team's total.

Netminder Hugh Currie played an excellent season, while gaining two shutouts. Besides the 8-0 shellacking handed Ryerson, he also kept the Aggies at bay in their first meeting while the Seconds went wild with their highest single score and won 12-0

Finis For Hockey Carabins At Blues

In 1954, Varsity Blues were as good as any team in the intercollegiate hockey league. But three losses before Christmas were too much to overcome and they were quickly eliminated from the championship race. The title has yet to be decided, with Laval holding a one-point edge over the defending champs, the Carabins, with each team having one game to go. The Blues could win it for the Lavalians by beating the Carabins here tomorow night, although if Laval beats McGill in their last game, they'll clinch it anyway.

Since Christmas, the Blues have won four games and tied one against three losses. Had they even split those first three games, they'd be in the thick of the championship scramble, instead of finishing third which is what they're going to do.

The Blues would enjoy winning tomorrow night and stopping Montreal's victory string at two straight seasons. The Carabins beat the Blues three times.

Goalie Jack Ross was a tower of strength all year for Coach Jack Kennedy's squad. Although his average exceeded four goals a game, he stopped more than thirty shots in every match.

The freshman combination of Don Cossar and Johnny Akitt proved Varsity's best offensive asset. Cossar led the team in scoring with 17 points on nine goals and eight assists in the first eleven games including a hat trick at Quebec against Laval. Akitt got six goals and eight assists for 14 points. Rod Stephen got 11 points and Harry Boyd 10.

Football Blues Come Close

By JIM PROUDFOOT

For six games and 59 minutes of a seventh one last fall, Varsity Blues were champions of the intercollegiate football league. But they wound up losing the Yates Cup and the title went to Western for the sixth time in eight seasons since the war.

Whether or not the 1953 season was a moral victory for the Blues, the record book will show the Mustangs as winners for that year. And it was a 50-yard pass from Don Getty to Murray Henderson in the last minute that transformed the Varsity Stadium playoff game of Nov. 21 from an 8-7 Varsity win to a 12-8 victory for Western.

Steve Oneschuk was Varsity's scoring star, as he picked up five touchdowns, a field goal, a safety touch and 11 converts for a total of 40 points which earned him second place behind Western's great halfback Gino Fracas, who totalled 44

Bill McFarlane was a standout for the Blues, especially on defense, where he excelled both in its most valuable member. Bob Pinkney was another effective backfielder, sprinting around the end for big gains in every game. The reason the ends were open to be circled was that the defenders were bunched at the middle in a generally futile attempt to stop Varsity's fullback Phil Muntz, who slammed through the middle consistently. Pete Maik was another star in the defensive backstopping the opposition's plays and in running back kicks. He found time to score three touchdowns and for his all-round worth, was named winner of the Johnny Copp for being adjudged by the team as field, and Mandryk got into most of the games and seemed to do their jobs with a good deal of success, since Varsity's offensive was good enough to win five of seven games.

The Blues had two preseason exhibition games, losing 23-16 to Balmy Beach of the ORFU and topping Western 11-1. Fullback Bob Kimoff was sidelined for the season in the Beach game. The first game of the season saw the Blues come from behind to down Queen's 16-7, as Mandryk threw payoff passes to Oneschuk and Pinkney. Then came the 13-10 loss at London, as the Blues blew a 10-point first-half lead. Then they were off on a four-game winning streak that saw them blank the opposition for 239 minutes before Frank Geard of Queen's broke the spell by kicking a single. At home, they downed a weak McMaster crew 24-0 and then went to Montreal to hammer the Redmen 34-0 as Oneschuk counted three majors and five converts.

Then the Blues tied Western for first place by topping them 12-0 on a snow-covered Varsity field. That set the stage for the final game of the season as Bill McFarlane scored the only touchdown in a 6-1 decision over the Gaels at Kingston.

The post-season playoff for the Yates Cup was a great disappointment to the Varsity fans after so successful a season, as the local held a one-point edge into the final minute before Getty's long, game-winning pass.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

We had a beautiful farewell column all planned for this issue. We were all ready to gush and moan about how wonderful it had been all year and how sorry we were to have to leave all our faithful readers. All these fine plans of mice or men, however, were knocked away when there came a loaded phone call from our dear friend and booze-companion One-eyed Benny.

Benny, as we reported earlier this year, is enjoying a slightly involuntary holiday at a State Institution down south. This incarceration does not, in any way, interfere with his many activities and Benny working with the assistance of his warden, who has received a junior partnership in Benny's publishing firm, has prepared a list of predictions for the use of the Varsity Sports Desk in the coming year. Because of the fact that many of these calls are top-secret in nature, we are unable to reveal them, lest we take the thrill of suspense out of next year's games. We can, though, give a general picture of what Benny's one-eye sees for Varsity.

"While I make no claims to infallibility, leaving that kind of stuff to the eggheads, I am sure that the stars are on the ball in what they show for your dear little old alma mater, my good men," bubbled Benny. "Now, getting down to brass tacks, I will tell you that Bob Masterson is gonna have it nice in Football and also in Basketball. Likewise I see good news for John McManus in the Intermediate field. Robert and John have much talent on their teams and with such men as Buddy Obal and Steve Oneschuk in the Blue band I can see a Yates Cup resting on Blue and White cushions. Nobody is around that is strong enough to give Varsity Baby Blues a run for the Shaw Trophy so I will feel safe in betting on McManus' men for that, making it a sweep for Varsity in that line."

"In fact, my lads, I see a clean sweep for Toronto in all the fall competitions. Soccer, which team is likely to be almost intact, Track and Field, another Varsity power squad, and the Harrier people are all teams that figure to win out in my book."

"Speaking of Book, which as you may know, happens to be my line, I am open for any wagers on the Varsity winter sports. These Toronto lads look like a clean sweep there too. Take Hockey. Why there are so many stars coming up that this year's team, strong as they are, will have trouble making Senior. In Basketball, with guys like these Yankees Leo Madden and Jim Russell around, not to mention the natives like Pete Potters, Art Binnington, George Stulac, Al Vaichulis and some other good ones, that Varsity may even be accused of using pros. I hope they avoid that though, because I already had enough trouble with those American boys in the Garden with that point-spread business."

"More than that I can't reveal now, laddies, but I will keep you posted on the exact scores for all your games, so that you can relax and just watch the poor oafs try to buck the fates as I control them. So good-bye kiddies, till next year." And with that the soft screech of Benny's voice drifted off as he was borne back to his royal suite in cell block 13.

After Benny, there's little to be added. So cheerio and pip pip. Give us a reading next year, it's been real.

Blue Matmen, Pugs Tops

When Varsity boxers and wrestlers went to work this winter they did well and brought home two championships for the Hart Trophy case. The Wrestlers managed to match the hardy gentlemen from Western for the Mat title and are co-holders thereof while the boxer performed nobly to win the Intercollegiate honours.

The Varsity Matmen lose two of their best men through graduation, and maybe a third. Tommy Hatashita, Blue captain, graduates from the School of Architecture and Doug Hamilton finishes his stint at Skule while Al Miller, completing his term at UC, is considering which Law School to attend. Tom was reigning Intercollegiate Wrestling champ at 137-lbs. and after losing his title alst year to a miscreant from McGill regained it this year in masterful fashion, to leave the University competitions as he deserves—a champion. For Doug Hamilton it was his second title in a row this year and last, enabling him to leave in the same way as Hatashita.

Boxers Russ Reilly, John Whyte, and Harry Nightingale won their division championships for Varsity and the added points won by Bill Clarke and Pete Young were enough to give the Blues a one-point edge over McGill Redmen and thus the title. Other outstanding Varsity Boxers were John Iglar, heavyweight, who dropped a really close one to McGill's Martin Puhlvanen in the preliminary, and Lee Bernardis, a boy who lost a very unpopular decision in the prelims, but who looked better than anyone else in the ring. Both these men are expected to do far better next year. Combined with the defending champs they should retain the title for yet a third year and give coach Canzano virtual ownership of the championship.

Junior Gridders Are Champs

The Baby Blues of Football gained much gridiron glory for the U of T last fall when they won their third Shaw Trophy in as many years to maintain Varsity supremacy in the Intercollegiate Intermediate Football League.

In winning their title, the Baby Blues thoroughly trounced all their opposition. Beginning with a close 19-16 squeaker over the Western Colts in Varsity Stadium, the Junior Varsitys then went on to crush the Ryerson Rams under a 57-0 avalanche. Next on their list were the OAVC Aggies who just missed beating the Baby Blues as the Varsity lead of a single point held and the Varsity men won 14-13.

The second round of play in the schedule saw the Varsity Juniors increase their superiority over the opponents as they beat the Ryerson Rams 27-0, then took the OAVC lads by a 24-0 count. The Western Colts, strongest competitions of the year for the Bluebabies, were next and last on the list. In that game, deciding one for the Shaw Trophy, the Baby Blues went down to London and playing on the Colts home field, won the title by a 31-17 decision.

For Coach John McManus it was a most successful season and for some of the boys it meant moving up to the Blues. Linemen Kefer, Levine and Bill Beamish also lok good and Backs Al Wong, Bob Smart and John Sopin' a all have shown that they have the goods and should go a long way towards strengthening the Big Blues backfield next year.

Hockey Title Still Undecided

Now that Interfaculty hockey has just about hung up the skates for another season, it's time to take an overall look at action throughout the year.

Only three teams ended the season undefeated, and two of them, Senior Meds and Senior SPS are now engaged in the first division finals. The other, SPS VII, was also untied in six league games, to walk away with its group. However, they were eliminated in the first playoff contest by St. Mike's A's 6-0.

The SPS VI, Group V champions, had the best goals against record, allowing only five in six league games. They managed to upset Pre-Meds in an early playoff tilt 3-2, but were edged out of further competition by Senior Skule. Dentistry A's, with only six goals against in six games, slipped by SPS V 2-1, but were eliminated by Senior Meds 2-1 three days later.

Junior SPS and Junior UC, the two top teams in Group II, advanced into the semi-finals with double wins, eliminating St. Mike's A's and B's on the same day.

The semi-final round saw one upset as Senior Meds outhustled Junior SPS, 6-0. Senior Skule brought home an expected win, overwhelming Junior UC 7-1.

On Tuesday, Meds knotted the four point series at three each, as they posted a 3-0 shutout over Senior Skule. Goals by Chuck MacDougall, Jim Wheeler, and rearguard Bud Doray set the Doctors up for the crucial win.

The Legal Beagles from the School of Law took their share of the Jennings Cup and enough points to clinch the Second Division Reed Trophy championship by tying Pharmacy 2-2 on Monday.

Pharmacy opened the scoring in the second period on a goal by Bill Laing, but the Beagles retaliated with two tallies by John Gray and Bill Angus. A late Pharmacy drive in the third frame which netted them one goal by Jim Carrie didn't get the necessary extra goal.

A man from the second division shared the regular league goal-scoring championship with a first division player. Wycliffe's John Hubicki scored twelve times during the season, and once in the playoffs. Trinity B's Paul McTaggart was the other 12-goal man.

Incidentally, that fourth game will be played today at 12:30 in the Arena. Overtime will be played in case of a tie. This will be the one to see; somebody has to win it, and after watching Tuesday's game, it could be either one.

Skule, Law Reed Leaders

Although the winer sports season is not quite finished, possession of the T. A. Reed Trophy, awarded annually for the interfaculty high-point championship, has virtually been settled in both divisions.

SPS, in the first division, with 11,081 points, and the School of Law, but again Pharmacy could 11,274 points are both well out in front of their nearest competition.

In the second division, Forestry has no opportunity of overtaking Law, but again Pharmacy could catch Forestry. The extremely large total compiled by the School of Law is mainly due to their winning two major championships, soccer and hockey.

Only the squash and basketball titles are yet to be decided in the second division, while squash, basketball, and water polo are unclaimed in the first division.

return engagement in Varsity London Arena, the Baby Blues Arena turned into the championship game. The Blues played heads-up hockey and took the contest and the championship 4-1, while leftwinger Clare Fisher turned in his best performance of the year.

There is no doubt that there is a wealth of future Blue material in the crew that Jack Wheldrake so cleverly moulded into an Intercollegiate championship team. Fellows like Ted Rogers and Mert Wright, Clare Fisher and Paul Newman, all first-year men, will be around for bigger and better games with the Blues when winter rolls around next year.

On The Sidelines

By JO RATCLIFFE

It only stands to reason that some years are better than others for the girls of the campus as far as intercollegiate sports go. This years was one of the poorer years. Nevertheless there's no use crying about it and besides that, who's crying?

It's not as if we were beaten at our own sport (as has been the unfortunate case in Canadian hockey circles). We have only been beaten by people who practise and love the same sports as we. And that's the way it should be too. Right from the beginning of the 1953-'54 season our doubts were aroused, mainly because we had lost a lot of our most valuable sportswomen such as Mary McDonald and Peg Walker. But it's not a matter of personalities that make up the year in sports, it's the way the kids go at it and, sometimes, the way they come out.

This year they didn't come out so well. Unlike last season when the gals came home from far and wide with four out of the regular six intercollegiate championships, this season they only produced two. The reason for this is quite simple — the others were too much for us. And here's the true state of events. Some years you see one University coming out with all the honors — last year it was Toronto. This year no one cleaned up. It was a general muddle with Toronto and Western winning two each.—Just as long as we're not on the bottom!

The boys had their year too — at least in the "minor" sports. Toronto lost the Yates cup, etc. etc. But who won the Bronze Baby, (i.e, the women's equivalent) — none other than the old U of T. Who won the intercollegiate swimming—Ho hum, (Western U). And we didn't kick any teams out of the league either. We also talked about pep rallies. This didn't go over too well.—For that matter, neither did the pep rallies.

As far as interfaculty sports events, there were more openings for teams other than PHE. This year, the Physedders started a system whereby they entered teams from each year in the big sports such as basketball. The most unusual thing happened in that league! Earlier in the season, we discussed the reasons for ousting PHE from the ranks of interfaculty sport. Perhaps one of the most striking reasons was that PHE was dominating the field in 1952-'53.

PHE hit the finals in softball so who won? — Vic firsts! They also hit the swimming finals — and won. They also won the volleyball finals. But, when it came to basketball there was a cataclysm. PHE's three teams hit the finals. PHE's three teams lost the finals —and Meds won. It was the first big ball win for the lady doctors and it was rather nice to see such a fine team hit the top, especially for the first time.

A women's athletic paradise came into the picture around last Christmas when it became known that the women of the Toronto campus would be given an athletic building within the next two years. There were revisions in the credit system which allowed for further specialization in certain fields of athletics. Extensive swimming classes were conducted and a few more swim refs were added to the ranks.

We did our best to push for an intercol ski team but this is a thing for next season. It should be a good season too next year. We've got quite a few good athletic minded gals on the campus.

Even if '53-'54 wasn't the best, it was fun, and after all that's what counts in sport.

Puddle Babies And Montreal Still In Race

Though The Varsity stops printing with this issue, the Varsity Water Polo team just keeps splashing along on their merry way to what could be a Dominion Junior title. With the Senior Blues out of the runnin gfor the Canadian Senior title, the Baby Blues still have an excellent chance to win their championship.

Having disposed of the Hamilton Aquatic Club with disgusting ease in their last series, the Varsity men are now in preparation for a series with Montreal YMCA which will be in this coming Saturday in Montreal. The return game of the home-and-home series is scheduled for the following Saturday in Toronto. The first game to be played on March 13th and the return on March 20th.

The Varsity Swimming team fared not as well as the Water Polo-ists, placing last in their competitions at London this month. Though favoured to win the title, as they had done the year before, Varsity's aquamen failed to make the grade and the title went to McGill while the Intermediate championship was won 41½-40½ by a hard working band from Western.

STUDENT REPS TO UTAA BOARD

Five outstanding Varsity athletes were elected to the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate this week to serve on the board for the coming year. The men are Edward "Sandy" Davison (SPS), R. "John" Gray (Beagleville), Bruce Johnson (Vic), William McIlroy (Meds) and Stephen Oneschuk (OCE).

Four of the successful candidates, Oneschuk, McIlroy, Gray and Davison are experienced men on the Directorate, having served through this year that is just passing.

It Is As It Is

There have been two issues this year that we have particularly enjoyed putting to press. These were the Christmas issue, and now the final issue — the two times we have felt compelled to put away the thorns, and drop responsibility by the wayside.

Granted, we have had a good deal of satisfaction out of raising the issues we felt we had to, but the responsibility of bringing campus activities to the attention of the student body has not been any joke. We have tried to make ourselves as familiar as possible with the 'n' plus one activities on the campus, and when propblems arose we have tried to make a responsible analysis of them.

Sorting the wheat from the chaff, one of the functions of a university newspaper as we see it, has been no simple problem this year. The size of the campus, and the diversity of activity, and opinion, has made it even harder. Generally, one would be doing well to know half the answers to questions we have raised this year.

But taking a lead in the problems of so many student activities has been an agreeable burden. The mud we got in return has not been as bad as we had expected. In fact, it has been interesting. And we do not say interesting because we think we have parried all the blows this year, for we have not.

However, it is more than a little relief to us to 'come clean' as it were, and admit that we are only students. Admit that no one writing the news copy, making up the pages, or deciding editorial policy, is really any different from any one of the thousands of students reading the paper. The one possible point might be that we are members of a team, which pulling together, is The Varsity. Criticism or praise falls on the whole, and affects the individuals but little.

Your opinions of The Varsity are what they are. Teams come and go too. We have not spoken as individuals all year, and we do not need to now, for any team knows when it has tried.

Year Of Controversy

Issue number 88 brings The Varsity publishing year to an end. It ends a lot of hard work done by a lot of sincere and hard-working people who have turned out the best paper they could.

And it has been a good year.

We have tried to make The Varsity more than just a bulletin board this year; we have attempted to make it a thought-provoking publication. Looking over the past issues, we think we have been fairly successful on this point.

As is always expected, The Varsity came in for a good deal of criticism on the questions it discussed. This was indicative of how thought-provoking it was to many students. It was also indicative of the fact that The Varsity could never satisfy all the students on the campus all the time. But no publication ever hopes to reach that virtuous height.

We have discussed McCarthyism, NFCUS, British Guiana, the SAC, education costs and a score of other vital questions. We are content in the belief that they somehow brought some thinking from some students — be it pro or con.

While we have discussed questions concerning students as members of the student community, we have also tried to bring up the problems facing students as members of society. Perhaps this has been the reason why this year's paper has had more of an international tint to it. But we have done so because we firmly believe that it is about time the student widened his horizons beyond Bloor and College Streets.

In the controversies we have stirred up we were frequently challenged by the student body. We have not always been right, and the steady flow of "letters to the editor" verified this. But at least we have prodded some students to come out of their ivory towers.

This year we crossed swords with the SAC. But surely that is no crime, for the SAC is certainly not above making mistakes. We pass on the hope to future editors of The Varsity that this campus daily will never become the mouthpiece for the Students' Council.

Now we have come to the final editorial. It is not just "the end" to another back page column; it's "the end" to a whole year. Already the lights in the editorial and news offices are dimming.

In the last breath, we should like to express our appreciation to a fairly cooperative student body, a fairly understanding Council, and a tremendously loyal staff who have worked into the early morning hours producing "our Varsity."

With that, we quietly put volume LXXIII to bed.

Our Hurt Pride

The most talked-about event of the past few days has been the World Hockey Tournament in which East York Lyndhursts were beaten by the Russian Dynamos, 7-2. Almost everyone has expressed their own precious opinion as to why Canada lost the title, but too many have forgotten our own Lyndhursts.

Just recently one player hid himself in the women's dressing room at Malton airport to escape the embarrassing questions of the reporter. Generally speaking the public has looked upon the East Yorkers as a losing team, has criticized them and the CAHA for it, and has subsequently and rudely forgotten them.

If they had won they would have been civically feted; they would have been the heros. But they did not win, so let's kick them around.

But the fact is that they tried; they did their very best — and they did win all the games except the final. They were favored to cop the title, but everyone conveniently forgot that fact after they lost.

Why don't we put aside some of our hurt pride and welcome the East York Lyndhursts as we should — as a team that made a good showing, tried their best, and took defeat like good sports (not like the rest of us pseudo-hockey geniuses).

* * * *

SAC representatives of the UC Women, Trinity Women and UC Men last night expressed the displeasure of their student bodies concerning the action the SAC took in holding a closed meeting to appoint a new Editor for The Varsity. But it was like water off a duck's back, for the Council members went merrily on ahead without trying to rectify their mistake. The students of this campus still do not know the reasons behind the Council choice of Editor. The SAC still owes them a worthwhile report.

Our Readers Write:

The Weak "Link" Must Go

The Editor,
The Varsity:

You don't have to study engineering to know that a body is as strong as the weakest section in it nor can it ever be any better than the material it is made of. The same holds true for committees. The success of the group will depend on the quality of the men who are on it.

I have serious misgivings about the quality of some of the members elected in the last Hart House elections. They show a complete lack of integrity, honesty and show themselves to be completely irresponsible. Anyone who can sneakingly forge their names on documents to procure votes will not hesitate to use other cowardly actions to obtain their wishes in other fields.

Are their actions any worse than if they had forged names on ballot sheets? Certainly not! They make a mockery of our whole way of life. Can you imagine the state of affairs in this country if Liberals were free to add their names to the Conservative lists and vice versa.

Is this the sort of example we at universities are supposed to set for the rest of the country? If we can sit idly by and allow cheating and skulduggery to run amok on our own campus what right have we to criticize anyone else?

No one on the University should condone actions such as these. They should not and need not be tolerated. Every possible measure should be taken to voice the University's disapproval of such scandalous behaviour. Action should be taken immediately from every level of University life to oust these usurpers from their position. The chief responsibility must lie with the House Committee itself. If they refuse to take action, fumble about and shift the responsibility from one to another then they are no better than the others. They must act now, at once!

Campus Clubs

Fellow-Travellers Lead The Way

The focus of campus activity this year has shifted from clubs such as UN and IRC to the political ones, more explicitly, the CCF and LPP. Heightened by the controversy over the IPA and its application for admission to the Model Parliament, the political scene on campus received much attention.

The UC CCF Club sponsored a series of noon-hour lectures entitled "Socialism 1a". Subjects discussed ranged from the principles of Socialism to the impractical aspects of Capitalism.

The LPP Club entertained such speakers as Mr. Leslie Morris and J. B. Salsberg, MPP.

Solicitor-General and Associate Minister of Defense Ralph Campney spoke under the auspices the Liberal Club and outlined the reasons for the "resounding success" of the Liberal Party in the last election.

The IRC had an active year which required an itinerary more than a schedule. They visited New York, 43 strong, and saw the UN in action. They also spent an interesting and highly successful weekend at Caledon Hills discussing India with the delegates from the Indian Seminar.

A new organization on campus is in the throes of creation. Known as the Forum Club, it is for the purpose of increasing ability in public speaking and debating. It will be under the sponsorship of the Hart House Debates Committee.

The UN Club, like the IRC conducted a tour to New York in the fall, seeing the UN in action. The chief activity of the year was the Model UN Session which was held in the fall.

The annual meeting of the Swimming Club will be held on Thursday, March 11th, at 1:00 p.m. in the Fencing Room, Hart House.
